The allegation—and I call especial attention of the House to this fact—is that ballots which were cast for the contestant were counted for the contestee. This allegation is specific, meeting all the requirements of the act of Congress. How could this allegation of the contestant have been legally and properly proved? Does any one doubt that the best evidence to establish the allegation, if true, would have been the production of the ballots themselves? Those ballots are in the ballot-box as they were cast; and if they had been produced and counted they would have demonstrated incontrovertibly the contestant's allegation, if it be true, that he was defrauded out of votes cast for him.

But this ballot-box was regarded by him with something like superstitious awe. I suppose he looked upon these ballot-boxes as so many infernal machines, for he never went near them; he never touched one of them. He never produced the ballots of a single election precinct. To establish the allegations in his notice he calls numerous witnesses whose testimony is to this effect: that they delivered one, two, or three hundred ballots to the voters; saw the voters go to the polls and deliver those ballots to the inspector. Now, we are asked here to presume the candor and the honesty of the voter, instead of presuming, as the law prescribes, the faithfulness and honesty of the officer.

This whole case is based upon the claim that leaders of the party, as they are called, delivered ballots to the voters, whom they say they saw go to the inspector and hand to him their ballots. This is the height and depth and length and breadth of the greater part of this case. We are asked, Mr. Speaker, to resort to the extraordinary anomaly of substituting parol evidence for record evidence. I say this can not be legally done. No authority or precedent can be produced to sustain a position so extraordinary.

But it is useless for me to waste the time of the House in referring particularly to all these precincts and describing all this evidence, for the minority of the committee themselves abandoned the position taken by the contestant. Having seen the fallacy of this position, they have resorted to another, not advanced by the contestant. They undertake to raise a new case for the contestant, one which was not specifically set forth in his notice—ay, not set forth at all. Finding themselves unable to sustain the contestant's case as made by the record, they raise, in violation of the act of Congress, a new ground of contest which was not set forth or thought of by the contestant or suggested in the argument of his counsel before the committee. They have said that all this evidence, and some other evidence that is referred to, which I will read, presents "conclusive"—I believe that is the word, conclusive—proof of a conspiracy in the district to defraud the contestant of his election.

In connection with the other evidence which I have described, three witnesses are relied upon to establish this conspiracy. When I shall have read this testimony, I think any unprejudiced person will see how utterly baseless is this charge. On page 26 in the report of the minority we find the evidence of E. D. Morrill, a witness who was called on the last day on which testimony could be taken in rebuttal, but who was examined in chief in the absence of the contestee or his counsel, and whose testimony therefore has no business in this record. This witness, whose testimony was taken, as I am reminded by my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], when the contestee could not, under the act of Congress, rebut or meet it, is mainly relied upon to support the claim of a conspiracy.

Q. State fully any and all conversation you had or heard by leading Democrats of Wilcox County to show, or tending to show, a disposition to commit frauds at the ballot on said November 2 last.

A. I had a conference with J. F. Foster, chairman of the Democratic executive committee of the county, on the day after the meeting of the Democratic executive committee, with reference to the appointment of Federal supervisors. He stated in words to the effect that they were indifferent as to whether supervisors were appointed or not, and if they did not have the naming of their (Democratic) supervisors ours (Republican) would not be allowed to serve. He said positively that they were going to carry the election—they would carry it peaceably and quietly if they could, but would carry it by force if necessary, and had the arrangements made to do it. I reminded him that we (Republicans) had rights guarantied to us by the constitutions of the State and United States. He replied that those constitutions were forced upon them and they did not consider themselves bound to abide by them, or words to that effect.

Q. State whether or not during the count, after the closing the polls, if you stated to A. D. Pitts, if you don't give McDuffie more votes that they will take us to the Big House, and that A. D. Pitts replied that Uncle Aleck might as well have it as McDuffie.

A. Yes, I said that; and A. D. Pitts the reply as stated in the question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to one fact which strikes me as peculiar in all this record. In my short experience in the practice of the law I never saw questions put uniformly as leading as they are in this record. In nearly every instance where a material fact is desired the witness has nothing to do but to say "yes" or "no."

Frank C. Powell, a Democrat, testified as follows (page 64) as to election in Lowndesborough precinct, Lowndes County:

Q. Is Shelley Powell your brother?

A. He is.

Q. Did Larry Hunter come a few days before the election and ask you if your brother, Shelley Powell, was going to serve as an inspector of that election; and what was your answer?

A. He did ask me, and my answer was, my brother would not serve.

Q. Did Larry Hunter then and there say anything further about acting as inspector; and, if so, what? State fully.

A. Larry Hunter said then he would act as an inspector, and if could get two others to act with him, he liked to see McDuffie counted out, but did not state he (Hunter) would do so.

Mr. Speaker, this is all the direct evidence in all this record on the question of conspiracy. The main witness, I have already stated, was not legally qualified to testify in chief, and therefore could not testify to the declarations contained in his evidence. At best, however, it applied only to one county in the entire Congressional district. The testimony of the other witnesses can not be tortured into any evidence of a conspiracy. In fact, it is all utterly worthless as evidence of a conspiracy.

We are asked to believe that in this Congressional district two hundred and sixty-four sworn officers, committed willful and corrupt perjury, subjected themselves to the pains and penalties of the law of Alabama, and entered into a horrid conspiracy to defraud the contestant of his election on the testimony of a hundred witnesses whose means of knowledge is of a most deceptive and speculative character.

But, sir, the minority of the committee again abandon their position. They first set up the conspiracy charge, and now, when we come to the end of their report, what do we find?

The committee's final conclusion is set forth as follows:

This review of the testimony seems to the minority to show conclusively and overwhelmingly that a conspiracy to carry the election of November 2, 1886, in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama existed and was carried out successfully in four of the five counties of the district. They have no doubt that if the vote had been honestly counted Judge McDuffie would have been returned by a large majority.

They have no doubt of that fact.

Inasmuch, however, as it is impossible to tell what the exact vote was in the precincts where the returns are contested and obviously vitiated throughout by fraud, they believe that the vote from all such precincts should be thrown out and only the uncontested precincts of Lowndes County counted.

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, if the testimony upon which the minority of the committee relied is not valuable to establish the votes the contestant received, it is valuable for nothing. The theory was that if a witness can swear he gave to a voter a ballot and saw him go to the polls and hand it to the inspector, that is one vote established for the contestant. What do they do now? They abandon this position and advance an entirely new claim. Their report says:

Judge McDuffie lived in that county, and the conspiracy broke down among the neighbors of a man generally respected by all, without distinction of party. The uncontested precincts of Lowndes County give Judge McDuffie 2,014 votes and Davidson 362.

Twenty-three hundred and seventy-six votes in a district containing over 20,000 voters, the minority of the committee maintain, shall determine who shall be elected. They have failed to produce a single authority for such an extraordinary proposition.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to accept the proposition of the minority. Their proposition is that the contestant, having clearly a majority of the votes in the uncontested precincts, therefore he is elected. Let us accept this proposition. But, Mr. Speaker, the minority of the committee doubtless forgot when they advanced this idea that there were thirty-one precincts in that Congressional district which were not contested and which gave contestee a majority.

A MEMBER. Outside of Lowndes County?

Mr. MAISH. Outside of Lowndes County and with Lowndes County.

A MEMBER. Including it?

Mr. MAISH. Including or excluding it, as you please, the contestee, on the proposition of the minority, is elected a member of the House. In the seventy precincts which were contested twenty-six of them were abandoned and in four of them no contest was made.

Now, as the official returns of the uncontested precincts of these four counties give to the sitting member a larger majority than the contestant received in the uncontested precincts of the county of Lowndes, it follows inevitably that, in accordance with the conclusions of the minority, the sitting member is elected.

The uncontested precincts of the county of Lowndes give to McDuffie 2,014 votes and to Davidson 362. The uncontested precincts in the other counties give to Davidson 2,986 and to McDuffie 209, which gives Davidson a majority of 1,125 over that of his competitor.

Now, will it be pretended, will the minority of the committee stand up here and ask, that precincts in this election district shall be thrown out when not a witness was called to impeach the returns or to show that any fraud was committed in them?

Well, Mr. Speaker, they do not say that that is their position, and they will not take it, I assume, unless in their extremity they are required to do so. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MAISH. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, from a strictly legal standpoint there is not enough in this contest to entitle it to the serious consideration of this House, and I apprehend if all the arguments which will and which can be made in its support are analyzed and traced back to their true and logical premises, they will one and all be found to rest upon the untenable assumption that this House, in the consideration of such matters, is bound by neither rules of law nor principles of evidence.

The most cursory examination of the evidence presented by the record in this case will disclose to any mind possessed of a knowledge of the first principles of law the obvious fact that the great mass and bulk of the testimony upon which contestant does and must necessarily rely is obnoxious to the most elementary rules of evidence and would not be received in the most inferior tribunal in the land invested with power to hear and determine the smallest and most insignificant rights of property.

From such an examination it will also be seen, should this mass of incompetent, so-called evidence be received by this House and accepted by it as the utterances of men who believed every word they had spoken, that from its nature and character it is wholly inappropriate and inadequate to establish the facts to the proof of which it is directed, and that it is intrinsically lacking in those elements of certainty necessary to lead the mind to a safe or satisfactory conclusion.

The record in this case and the two conflicting reports which have been made upon it present to this House the simple but sharply defined proposition, whether a member of this body in deciding the question of the right of another member to the seat which he occupies upon this floor has a right to do so in open disregard and violation of settled principles of law.

Of course, we can do so if we will. We are admittedly the sole judges of the election of our members, and, as the minority report practically asserts and covertly but artfully urges, we can decide such matters arbitrarily and in defiance of law; but I presume every fair-minded man will agree such conduct on our part would be a wrong lacking no feature of an outrage. For myself, I repudiate as dangerous in practice and wrong in principle this doctrine so stealthily suggested by the minority report; and I hold that the questions of the competency of this evidence and its weight, if received, should be treated in this discussion and in our final action in this contest just as such questions would be treated by a judge or jury if arising in quo warranto or mandamus.

An office is a property, and the certificate of the duly constituted authorities of the State of Alabama invested the contestee with a prima facie right to this office, and neither in the forum of conscience nor of law can it be taken from him and given to contestant without "due process of law," which means he may call to his aid every known rule of evidence and law. This certificate not only confers upon him the possession of this office, but every advantage which actual occupancy gives, and he was not required to offer any evidence in support of his title thereto until contestant had shown by competent evidence that the returns upon which this certificate was based were so impregnated with fraud as to be unworthy of credit and therefore worthless as evidence. Gentlemen on the other side of the floor, under the loose construction of their obligations to the law which the minority report makes, and acting under the spur of an anger which a reminder of the loss of the control of the negro votes in the South never fails to excite in them, may be willing upon such evidence to take from contestee his seat upon this floor; but not one of them upon such conjectural, vague, and uncertain evidence would, in a proceeding appropriate for that purpose, be willing to take from the meanest negro in the South the 40 acres and mule which that party so generously gave him in 1868, and in consideration of which donation it so long demanded and received his suffrage.

The method by which the contestant proposes to change the count and override the declared result of the election in this district is one which, it must be admitted, has never received the sanction of this House. If there is any precedent for it I have not seen it, and the gentlemen of the minority have failed to cite it. Past Congresses, it is true, have admitted the evidence of individual voters to show how they themselves have voted; but it is impossible to read the earlier cases of this class without discovering the doubts and misgivings which attended the establishment even of this rule. Though it violated no principle of evidence, it was felt to diminish the certainty of the ballot, and seems to have been adopted only upon grounds of necessity. The proposition of the minority of the committee not only violates the most fundamental of these principles, but it goes a great leap further in the direction of exposing the suffrage to the dangerous influences which we know pervert human testimony.

We are gravely asked, Mr. Speaker, to set aside the votes of thirty-three voting precincts in this district and reverse the result of the election upon the unsupported evidence sometimes of only one, sometimes of two, seldom more than three witnesses in each case, the partisan supporters and friends of contestant, his special workers and confidential agents, that their friend and candidate was popular with the colored voters of these precincts, and that they, being sometimes 30, sometimes 50, and sometimes 300 feet from the polls, issued contestant's tickets to these colored voters, sometimes keeping a tally, but more often keeping none, the number of which tickets they sometimes state from count, but more often from guess, which tickets some of them say they saw the voters hand to the inspector of the election, and some of them admit they could not have seen, from the nature of things, the tickets so handed to the inspectors. But without regard to whether these ticket-distributors were near the polls or far from them; without regard as to whether they kept a list of the number of tickets issued or only guessed at it; without regard to whether they could or could not see them handed to the inspectors, we are asked to reject these precincts, because, forsooth, contestant's friends say he is popular with the colored voters and because there are more negro than white men who vote at these precincts. This is the sort of rubbish contestant tries to palm off on this House as evidence.

Sir, it does not rise to the dignity of first-class hearsay. At best it can not be given greater weight as evidence than the expression of an opinion of the individual voter as to the lines upon which voters were divided and the number of votes received by the respective candidates. It is worth no more as evidence than a poll of the vote the day before or the day after the election would have been worth. At best it is an opinion predicated upon an argument, to wit, the argument that the voter having received contestant's ticket, therefore voted for contestant, a conclusion not only contradicted by experience but by the most overwhelming evidence of the conduct of individual voters in this very election. I will not trouble the House with a rehash of the evidence. One illustration drawn from it will show the truth of my statement as to the unreliability of the whole. The evidence in these thirty-three precincts is almost in duplicate; in kind and character it is altogether in duplicate. I will only therefore call the attention of the House to the evidence introduced to impeach the returns from one precinct.

The precinct of Orrville, in the county of Dallas, is the first mentioned in the brief of contestant, and the evidence in his favor in this precinct is probably as strong as in any of the thirty-three precincts which it is sought to reject upon this kind of evidence. By the returns Davidson received at this precinct 163 and McDuffie 24 votes. But McDuffie says there should have been counted for him at this precinct 242 votes. Why? Because one Harrison Ellis, his ticket-distributor, says he distributed to colored voters at this precinct that number of his tickets. Let us examine the evidence of this witness. When asked where he was on the day of election with reference to the polls, he admitted he moved about from place to place, sitting awhile on a trestle and then on a wagon. Asked if he kept a tally of the tickets issued by him, he admitted he did not. Asked if any one else kept a tally for him, he admitted no one did. Asked how he knew they were McDuffie's tickets and if he could read, the record furnishes the answer, that he could not, he having made his mark to his deposition. Contestant seems to have been impressed with the unreliability of this evidence, and to relieve it, unfortunately for him, called one Burwell Hayes, whose testimony shows the unreliability of all this kind of evidence. Hayes says, on examination-in-chief, that contestant received about a hundred votes at this precinct. When asked how long he was at the place of election during that day, he said he went at 10 and left at 12 o'clock. When asked how he then knew how many votes contestant had received, he said he went back at sundown and met Harrison Ellis, the witness who swears he distributed 242 of contestant's tickets, and upon whose evidence it is proposed to reject this precinct, and that Ellis told him he carried down there with him 108 tickets, mark you, not 242, and that he had given them all out to McDuffie voters except 7 or 8. To make the utter worthlessness of this evidence transparent, one of the poll-holders and other credible witnesses are introduced to show that this man Ellis sat most of the day upon a wagon, with his back to the polls, and could not possibly have seen the electors vote.

I have no criticism to make against this man because he can not read; that is a fact to be regretted, but one which does not affect his p rsonal credibility as a witness. This is not an isolated case. A large number of these ticket-distributors can not read; but when the gentlemen make the argument that this circumstance does not gainsay their evidence, they press the argument, to my mind, beyond the point of good sense. When a man who can not read undertakes to swear to the contents of a printed paper which he can not possibly verify, he either swears recklessly or to what he has heard from another, and in either case his statement is worthless as evidence. Acting upon this principle, this House has repeatedly refused to receive such evidence, because, though they were sworn statements, their truth depended upon another and an unsworn statement.

But to all this evidence offered to impeach and vitiate elections in these thirty-three precincts, there is an overwhelming and conclusive answer furnished by the law of the State of Alabama, providing for the preservation of the evidence by which contestant might have verified beyond peradventure the truth of the accusation he makes against the integrity of these returns. By that code the voter hands his ballot to the inspector, his name is put upon the poll-list, which poll list, together with the ballot so voted by him, is required to be preserved for sixty days, to afford evidence to any one desiring to assail the count. That these poll-lists and these ballots so preserved by the law to test the honesty of the count are the primary evidence and the best evidence, and therefore while they exist the only competent evidence upon such charges as are made in this contest, is a proposition too clear for argument. It will not do for contestant to answer the ease with which these ballots might have been manipulated in the hands of a fraudulent inspector to sustain the false count, because neither in theevidence nor in his specifications does he charge that these ballots were doctored; and it may be, upon examination of them, they would have shown they were as he claims the vote was cast, and he is not permitted before resort to them to introduce the secondary evidence upon which he relies in this case. To allow this would be to permit him to nullify the law and to substitute a kind of evidence more elastic and less reliable than that provided by the law.

But I will not pursue this branch of the subject any further. From a survey of the whole history of this contest it is apparent it had its inception, and that it owes the support which it is now receiving from the other side of this House, to the theory that the suffrage of the Southern negro is an inalienable right of the Republican party. In behalf of the manhood, in behalf of the integrity and the patriotism of the Southern black man, I want to say in this presence and to the country this imputation has long since ceased to be just.

There was a time when the minds of these unfortunate people were as much a victim to political as were ever their bodies to chattel slavery, when no considerations of public policy nor personal obligation could move them from their fixed allegiance to the Republican party. A sense of duty impels me to say these years were the darkest that ever cast their accursed shadows upon that fair land lying yonder across the Potomac towards the ocean and the gulf. Happily they have passed, and they will not come back again.

The false promises, the betrayal of trust, and the deception so long practiced by the Republican party upon his credulity and ignorance have at length matured the bitter fruits which infidelity always bears. The scales have fallen from their eyes, and they have been given to behold in all its nakedness the falsity of the pretenses which have so long coerced their suffrage. Doubtless the efforts of the white people of the South, burdening their property with excessive taxation to educate the black man, has contributed to the establishment of these better political relations, and has enabled him to take a more intelligent view of the situation and the conditions upon which the destiny of his race depends. But the immediate cause of the defection of the colored man from the Republican party is to be found elsewhere. From the earliest period of his emancipation he had been taught that Democratic ascendency meant his return to slavery. Every recurring campaign was to him a season of feverish excitement. The dark foreboding of his political orators of the evil consequences to him of Democratic success was ever present in his heart and mind, until it became a living, breathing terror, from which there was no escape.

When every department of local government in the South had passed under control of the Democratic party, and his rights remained undisturbed, he was told his only safety consisted in the continued control by the Republican party of the National Government. In 1884 it was beat and hammered into his mind that the election of Mr. Cleveland would confer upon the Democracy the long-sought power to compass his ruin and re-enslave him. When Mr. Cleveland was elected no one who did not see it can appreciate the frightful panic into which many of them were thrown. But scarcely had he taken his seat at the other end of the avenue, certainly ere his untrained hand had become accustomed to the reins of Government, these fears had subsided, and there is not a sane colored man in the whole South who does not today feel as secure in the enjoyment of all the rights guarantied to him by the law as in the palmiest days of Republican ascendency.

Sir, under these circumstances and in the light of these revelations, it would be unnatural should these people continue to trust the men who in the days of their weakness thus misled and deceived them. These considerations sufficiently, I think, account for the defeat of the contestant in the last election in the Fourth district of the State of Alabama. They likewise account for the large colored vote which the evidence clearly shows was polled in that district at that election for the Democratic candidate, and for the interest and zeal which many of the leaders of that race manifested in his behalf both before and on the day of election.

I rejoice, Mr. Speaker, that the old antagonisms between the whites and the blacks of the South are thus fast disappearing before the dawn of a better understanding of the true relations of the one to the other. And in conclusion, I only want to add, if the Republican party, angered at the loss of the colored man's vote and the increased representation in the councils of the nation which that vote has given the South, should wish, as there are many signs and reasons to believe it does wish, to take from him the great privilege of the ballot, it will find itself opposed at every step in such a reconstruction by the undivided strength of the Democratic party.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] has taken exception to the general statement of the minority of the committee that there is no question of law involved in this case. I will call his attention to some law which is not in this case nor any other, but which finds a place in the report of the majority. About the middle of page 3 of the majority report is found this language:

> As will be seen, the names of the voters are written down and numbered as they vote, forming what is called the poll-list, and the ballots cast are correspondingly numbered with the number of each of the electors, so that it can easily be ascertained, when necessary, for whom the voter cast his ballot, or whether the officers of the election fraudulently substituted ballots for those cast by the voters.

Mr. CRISP. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] is not in his seat, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from Pennsylvania intended to say that the law of Alabama referred to in the passage quoted by the gentleman from Massachusetts from the report of the majority has been repealed.

Mr. LODGE. As the chairman of the Committee on Elections has said, this provision, which is cited in the report of the majority, is a repealed section of the law of Alabama; yet upon it a large part of the argument of the majority has rested. Upon this theory they ask more than once in their report why the ballots were not produced. The question is easily answered. To begin with, if those ballots had been produced, from the fact that this provision of the statutes has been repealed they would have been worthless for the purpose of indicating by what voters they were cast or of enabling any one to bring testimony from the voter to identify his ballot. This section of the Alabama statute as to the numbering of the ballots, which is cited by the majority on page 2 of their report, being a repealed section, it is no longer possible to identify a voter's ballot, and the question why the contestant did not introduce the ballots is therefore pointless, and the argument proceeding upon the assumption that the ballots are numbered is valueless.

But again, the ballots are the very things which are attacked. The election officers are the persons whose returns are impeached. Those ballots, if they were produced, would tell nothing. They are assailed by the evidence in the record, and if they were brought in as proof of Mr. Davidson's election it would be necessary to introduce the testimony of every judge and every inspector of election to show that those were the identical ballots cast by the voters. It is the business of the contestant and not of the contestee to produce those ballots. It is the contestee not the contestant who relies upon the official count. He relies upon the ballots and the poll-list for his seat, but he has not called any of the election officers to rebut the charges made against them and against the honesty of their returns. It is not the place of the contestant to introduce ballots and poll-lists for he is attacking the evidence of those very men, and he has impeached their testimony and the returns that they made. It is the place of the contestee to bring in the ballots and the poll-lists and the election officers, and to prove thereby that the vote was an honest one. Yet, with the exception of one precinct, no election officer I believe was called. This House can draw its own inference from this refusal of the contestee to produce the very testimony on which he relies.

It is further said by the majority:

> It is not pretended that the ballots were changed during the progress of the election, or afterwards when they were counted, or that they were destroyed when falsely counted. The allegation simply is that they were so counted as to make it appear that they were cast for the contestee.

On the contrary, those ballots are charged with fraud in every respect. It is charged that there were frauds in the count; that other ballots were substituted; that the returns were fraudulent and did not conform to the ballots actually cast. The charge is of the broadest, most general, and most sweeping kind.

Now, sir, before I leave the report of the majority there are one or two other points to which I wish to call the attention of the House. On page 21, in referring to Lowndesborough precinct in which they admit fraud, they give the contestant 7 votes as those of the seven witnesses who testified in his behalf. If they had examined the record a little more closely they would have seen that three of those witnesses were Democrats, and that there was no pretense made that they voted for contestant. I merely mention this to show the perfectly arbitrary manner in which that precinct has been dealt with by the majority of the committee.

St. Clair precinct again is one that was thrown out, and the majority say (page 22) "the county canvassers refused to receive the returns of this poll, because the officers omitted to sign them." I have searched the record with some care, and have failed to find the evidence to support that statement. I have been unable to find any evidence of this alleged fact as to the failure of the officers to sign, and I ask the chairman to refer me to the testimony on which the majority rely to establish the fact.

Passing now from the report of the majority I wish to say at the outset that I think this is a more interesting case than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] and the majority of the committee have been disposed to believe. It seems to me that it illustrates very interestingly the general progress of what we may call civilization in the Fourth district of Alabama.

The simple policy of violence and bloodshed, or what may be called the "jack-boot and saber policy," has gradually disappeared. When that policy disappeared, we find the counties gerrymandered so as to bring the mass of the black vote of the State into this district; and then the Republican vote having been thus concentrated was deprived of its rights by a very rudimentary kind of fraud committed by the county supervisors who merely threw out the precinct returns. That was so simple that after having been rejected by two Congresses, one Republican and one Democratic, it was abandoned and a new and somewhat more elaborate system of cheating took its place. As you will observe, this is a distinct advance in civilization—inasmuch as it is a concession to the intelligence if not to the moral sense of the country. But the frauds we are considering in this case, although more carefully devised than their predecessors, are not very ingenious after all; and I am certain that after the discussion which they will receive here to-day something better will have to be substituted. So on a general view I think this case really assumes large and philosophical proportions as a contribution to the history of political development in Alabama. It is not a very pretty story, but there it is.

Moreover, we see the advance of public opinion in two little indications in the record.

There is an effort on the part of the contestee to prove that the blacks voted for him, which is a distinct concession, for a few years ago this would not have been thought at all worth while. There is also evidence that the attempt to count the vote wrongly failed conspicuously in one county, the county in which Judge McDuffie lived, and where the white men of the county declined to have anything to do with counting him out.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is there any evidence on that point?

Mr. LODGE. Yes, sir; that is in the record. I will come to it again by and by. The case of the minority, to put it in a few words, is that the ballots from four of the five counties were vitiated throughout by general fraud; that the evidence is conclusive that all the precincts in these four counties were permeated with fraud, arising from a general scheme to defeat Judge McDuffie by unfair means. The first step in that proceeding, as has been pointed out in the minority report, was what has been called "the Turner movement." When Judge McDuffie was nominated his nomination was regarded with great disfavor by the opposite party, because he was considered to be a strong candidate, and they were accordingly present in his convention trying to get up a bogus nomination by a small minority of delegates.

They had made up their minds to defeat him; but, as Mr. Swiveller in the "Old Curiosity Shop," says to the little servant girl of Mr. Sampson Brass, when they were playing cribbage in the kitchen, "To make it more real and pleasant, I will call you 'Marchioness;'" so "to make it more real and pleasant" in the Fourth district of Alabama, an "Independent" Republican candidate, a Mr. Turner, was nominated by a small faction of the convention after Judge McDuffie had received the nomination of an overwhelming majority. The details of this are in the testimony and in the minority report. I will not go into them further than to say that "the Turner movement," originating in corruption, was a purely mythical one so far as actual candidacy at the polls was concerned.

It is apparent also that the voters in many of the precincts had never heard of the candidacy of Turner, and that in others where they had heard of it they knew what it meant and were perfectly aware that the movement was simply resorted to in order to divert attention, and that there was no reality about it. It appears, further, that this sham candidacy was part of a general scheme of fraud from the uniform appearance of an unnatural Turner vote in almost all these precincts. In many cases where there were no Turner tickets distributed and none seen on the ground, the Turner vote appears in the returns; and in one case where there were no Turner votes returned, we find the counsel for the contestee cross-examining the witnesses as to the Turner vote, which seems to indicate that the Turner vote ought to have appeared in all the precincts, and that the contestee and his friends expected to find it in every case.

Mr. CRISP. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman; but in regard to St. Clair precinct, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the specification of the notice of contest alleges the rejection of the vote of that precinct by the managers; and the contestee in his response admits the fact, and states that the vote was rightly rejected.

Mr. LODGE. But where is the testimony on that point?

Mr. CRISP. I refer the gentleman to the fifty-first specification of the notice of contest.

Mr. LODGE. What I want is the evidence of the fact that the officers did not sign the return.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman can find that evidence. I refer him to pages 62, 63, 65, 67, and 72.

Mr. LODGE. That is the testimony as to the vote of the precinct; but where is the testimony that the officers did not sign that return?

Mr. CRISP. The allegation of the contestant is that the vote of that precinct was rejected. The response of the contestee is that it was properly rejected; and the evidence that the return was not signed is on the pages I have named.

Mr. LODGE. I want the testimony, not the allegation of the contestee.

Mr. CRISP. Where a fact is admitted, of course there is no testimony about it.

Mr. LODGE. But where is this allegation admitted?

Mr. CRISP. In the notice of contest and the answer, taken together, as I understand.

Mr. ROWELL. Was it alleged in the notice of contest or in the answer that the return was not signed? If alleged in the answer, it is a subject of proof.

Mr. CRISP. I shall have to examine the evidence before I answer that positively.

Mr. LODGE. I will continue my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the proposition of the minority, as I have said, is that there was a general scheme to carry all these precincts by fraud and that the testimony shows conclusively there was general fraud throughout four counties of the district. To this testimony of general fraud existing throughout those four counties I wish to call the attention of the House. Mr. Morrill's testimony which has been already referred to—as that of a witness who, it is said, was not cross-examined—has not been rebutted or contradicted. He testified that the chairman of the Democratic county committee stated "that they would carry that election peaceably and quietly if they could, but they had arrangements made to carry it."

The man who made that statement was a responsible officer of the Democratic party. He knew very well what he meant, and he meant exactly what he said.

Now, we come to the Union Town precinct, Perry County, in which two nephews and, I think, a son of the contestee were inspectors. One of those nephews said to one of the inspectors who remonstrated with him for substituting Davidson for McDuffie votes that "Uncle Aleck might as well have it." There is something very touching in that frank statement. There is a certain pastoral simplicity about it that is very engaging. As a distinguished lawyer said on another occasion, it is pleasant to see the asperities of politics thus softened by the amenities of domestic life [laughter]; and I should regret, sir, from that point of view to bring this up for adverse criticism. It can not but interest every right-feeling heart to see this ingenuous expression of interest in an uncle on the part of a nephew engaged in counting the votes. At the same time, sir, I think it goes to indicate the general purpose of the managers of that election to defraud Judge McDuffie.

The testimony from Lowndesborough, Lowndes County, is to the same effect, that there was a general knowledge on the part of the Democrats in that precinct that fraud was to be committed.

These three instances are taken from three widely separated points. There was also one other which was overlooked in drawing the report. It will be found on page 63 of the record. In the St. Clair precinct the witness gave this testimony as to Mr. Smith, one of the regularly appointed inspectors:

Mr. Smith said he just as leave have Mr. McDuffie as Mr. Davidson, and Mr. Davidson as Mr. McDuffie. Mr. Smith said he had a letter from Mr. Caffee—

Who was the county judge who had been recently elected and supported in the election, let me say, by Judge McDuffie.

Mr. Smith said he just as leave have Mr. McDuffie as Mr. Davidson, and Mr. Davidson as Mr. McDuffie. Mr. Smith said he had a letter from Mr. Caffee asking him to give Mr. McDuffie a fair count; he (Smith) did not care to have anything to do with it, for his Democratic friends might go back on him and he might want a favor from them some time. Mr. Rabb—said he would not give McDuffie a vote if he was dying and it would save him.

Who I believe was another of the regular inspectors—

In that precinct Judge Caffee, the county judge, had interfered on behalf of Judge McDuffie, and in that precinct the polls were not opened by the regular inspectors. That, I contend, is another and striking evidence from yet another precinct showing the same general intention of committing fraud on the part of the Davidson managers, and a general recognition of the fact of this intention by persons qualified to know and living at widely separated points.

In the same way it will be found that it was believed by the Republicans throughout the district that fraud was about to be committed and that they took means to meet and provide for that fraud. This evidence is introduced and pointed out by the committee simply as showing the general public opinion as to what that election was going to be; and that general public opinion weighs for something—is an indication of something; is an indication of a great deal to every fair-minded man.

The minority of the committee have also pointed out the general irregularities in the returns; that they were made up in a careless and hasty manner, which simply shows their general character and points toward indifference to law and a general readiness to alter election returns.

In answer to the suggestion that there is no general evidence of fraud in this district, the minority have pointed out case after case in which more votes were counted than were cast and in which more votes were counted than there were voters in the precinct. If it is urged that this appears simply on the testimony of a county assessor and canvasser, I ask members of the majority to turn to Valley Creek precinct and explain how, in a precinct where the voting population on a most liberal estimate based on the census returns could not be more than 600, it was found that there were 685 votes in the ballot-box, while there was direct testimony that not more than 115 voters voted.

From such facts, occurring at widely separated points, there is a conclusion to be drawn which shows the general tendency throughout the district. In many cases one finds that there were more ballots returned than were cast; more than could possibly have been cast in the precinct. In one precinct, for instance—and much stress has been laid upon bringing in the poll-list—we have the poll-list (Walthall's precinct), and it shows 21 less votes than the official returns of the votes that were cast.

That was the result of bringing in one poll-list; and whenever you tear up a precinct and probe it to the bottom you find the same irregularity and the same evidence of fraud.

Now, sir, we come to another feature of the case which presents one of the methods by which the vote was so largely increased in these precincts. We have testimony, for instance, in the city of Selma, that nine men voted who were not there. Most of them were dead. We know, sir, on the highest literary authority, that—

> In the most high and palmy state of Rome,'
> A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
> The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead
> Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

The sheeted dead did much better than that in Selma, Ala.—they voted. [Laughter.] There they are testified to by the register of vital statistics, the physician who has practiced in the town for twenty years, and who found these dead and absent men sworn to by name and put down upon the poll-list as voting. I do not wonder, therefore, after Judge McDuffie had made one examination of the poll-lists of Wilcox County, a county to which the majority have not referred, those poll-lists were withdrawn so that he could not make any further examination of them, and that when he went back there twice he was told they were mislaid.

I repeat, sir, every time we get hold of an official document we find the same fraud springing up from it.

Look more closely at the testimony of Dr. McKinnan, from which I have been quoting. He was asked, for instance, as to Mike Fitzgerald, who is put down on the list as having voted, and he testified that he knew him, and that Fitzgerald had died about eight years before. He knew John Moran; he died three years ago.

I don't know anything about Thomas Benger. I knew a Harry Horn in Selma three or four years ago; he now lives in Knoxville, Tenn.; he has been living there three years or more. I knew W. D. Snow; he lives in Anniston, Ala.; he has been living there at least two years. Charles Heinz is dead; he died in September, 1886. I knew Amos Du Bose; he now lives on the Cummings place. In 1886 he lived on Sam Houston's place, which is not in the city of Selma. Charley Goins is an engineer on the Western Railroad; he has gone to Montgomery, and has been there for five years. My information is that Charles Lore lives in Louisville; he has been there for twelve months. Joe Ferguson is dead; he died at least a year ago. I don't know anything about A. E. Kennedy.

George Craig, testifying as to the same precinct, said:

He found on that list several names of persons who do not reside in Selma, and did not at the time of that election. One of these, A. E. Kinnedy, resides n Corsicana, Tex., and has resided there for the past five or six years.

We can not for a moment suppose that a gentleman who has the privilege of residing in Corsicana, Tex., and voting for the eminent leader of the Democratic party in this House, would struggle back to Alabama to vote in the Fourth district. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAIRD. There is no doubt about the politics of the dead and absent?

Mr. LODGE. No; their politics are perfectly evident. They all voted for Davidson.

We now come to Wilcox County. Here there is a long list of names given, as to which Morrill, formerly county assessor for six years, testifies in great detail. It is a long series of names of men who for one reason or another did not have the right to vote, or could not have voted owing to absence or death.

For example, John Henry was not a legal voter of said precinct on the 2d day of November, 1886, because he left the county three years ago, and now lives in Florida.

* * * * * * *

William Johnson was not a legal voter of said precinct at said time, having left the county at least five years ago and now lives in Mobile, Ala. John Johnson was not a legal voter of said precinct on the 2d of November last, having left the county at least three years ago and is living in Selma, Ala. Henry Primree was not a legal voter of said precinct at said time, because he left said county eleven years ago. The last I heard of him he was in Monroe County, Alabama. Elijah Baldwin was not a legal voter of said county at said time, he having left the county at least five years ago and lives in Selma, Ala. Edmond Etheridge. Do not know Edmond Etheridge. Am satisfied there was no such man in the beat on the 2d day of November last. Simon Shields was not a legal voter of said precinct on said date, he having left the county at least two years before said date. The last I heard of him he was preaching in Richmond, Dallas County, Alabama. Charles Jenkins might possibly have been a legal voter, but was not there, he having run away from the sheriff some time in the fore part of the year.

Yet so anxious was Jenkins to vote for Davidson, that he returned to do it in the face of the sheriff.

Tom Martin was not a legal voter of said precinct at said time, he having left Wilcox County at least five years previous, and at that time was living at Chattanooga, Tenn. Isaac Abram. Can not answer as to his name. Tom Tomlinson was not a legal voter of Camden beat at said time, because he left the county three years ago, and now lives in Selma, Ala. N. Hill. There were two N. Hills on the poll-list, and I know of but one in the beat. Scott Smith was not a legal voter of Camden beat at said time, because he lives in Mims's beat and voted there. P. E. Mathewson may be a voter of Camden beat, but the records of the election the 2d of November, 1886, show that he was an inspector at Bethel beat, at least 18 miles from Camden. M. J. Adler was not a legal voter at said precinct at said election, he having left the county eight years ago, and is now and has been for years in business in New York City. R. Briggs may or may not be a citizen of said precinct. He was not there at the election. To the best of my information he was preaching in California at that time. Eph. Wilkinson was not a voter of Camden beat at that time, he having been disfranchised for crime under the laws of the State some six years before. Wm. Hill was a voter, but did not offer to vote. George Black was not a legal voter of said precinct at said time, he having moved away from said county three years before, and was then a resident of Talladega, Ala.

Look a little further and see how gross and unguarded these frauds are on that poll-list. Here is the name of Robert Elam. Morrill testifies:

Elam was not a legal voter on the 2d day of November, he having been murdered in the latter part of the summer previous to said election.

> The times have been,
> That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
> And there an end: But now, they rise again
> With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
> And push us from our stools: This is more strange
> Than such a murder is.

Passing from these instances of the way the names of the dead and absent were voted upon and placed upon the poll-list, take the returns from thirteen precincts given in the minority report, in which it is well known and in which it is admitted by the contestee that most of the negroes were Republicans. In these thirteen precincts Mr. McDuffie on the returns received absolutely no votes.

How palpable and clumsy is such a fraud as this, which is too stupidly performed to even seek concealment. Then there are other places where devices of equal clumsiness, but different in kind, were employed to change the votes of the counties. There is one, for instance, where the inspectors refused to open the polls. There are others where, the law requiring that at least two inspectors should be of opposite political parties, they were all of one party, as at Greensborough and other places named in the report. In the majority of precincts the inspectors were made up of two white Democrats and one ignorant black man who did not know how to read or write. It is easy to see the intention of such an arrangement, and we have here, too, an opportunity to test the value of those official returns which the majority of the committee are so anxious to have introduced.

In only one county did we get transcripts of the official returns from the judge of probate and certified by him. In nineteen of the twenty-seven precincts of Dallas County, the one in question, one of the inspectors was a negro too ignorant to read or write and able only to make his mark. From the other counties we have no transcripts, but we can judge from this sufficiently well as to the general practice.

Mr. Speaker, it is always the same story. Wherever you go in the examination of this case you find that the same condition of things existed, showing that the same principle of fraud, deliberate and systematic fraud, ran through the whole election at every point.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before the gentleman leaves this point let me ask this question. By whom are these persons appointed or selected?

Mr. LODGE. The inspectors of elections are appointed by a board of supervisors of the county, consisting of the judge of probate, the county clerk, and the sheriff of the county. All three of these were Democrats in all five of these counties. These various precincts as to which testimony has been taken are all specified, and the general character of the testimony set out in the report of the minority. We have investigated it with care, and without going fully into its details, I shall content myself by calling attention to some only of the more striking facts.

The minority of the committee wished especially to bring out in reviewing that testimony in detail a comparison of the vote which it was sworn McDuffie received with the vote that turned up in the returns for McDuffie after it had passed through the hands of the officers of election. For instance, in Dallas County, King's precinct, the returns gave McDuffie no votes, and yet one of the witnesses testified that he himself issued 120 McDuffie tickets to colored voters and saw each of these colored voters take the ticket so issued to him and deposit it with the inspector of election. We are asked, therefore, to believe that the witness was absolutely mistaken in every one of the 120 persons. That is to say, that he made a mistake in every single man of that whole number, for there was not one McDuffie vote in the returns, notwithstanding the witness testified that he saw 120 cast.

Take this same county, Dallas, again and the Valley Creek precinct,

W. H. Haynes testifies in that case that he issued 100 McDuffie tickets and Alf. Boyd issued 4. He testifies that he saw 95 of the persons to whom he issued McDuffie tickets vote them and saw 4 men to whom Boyd issued tickets vote them, making a total of 99. When asked how far he was from the polling-place when he gave the voters the McDuffie tickets and saw them vote them, his answer was that after he had given them the tickets, he walked up to the polls with them and saw them vote, and when they voted he was not over 3 or 4 feet from the inspectors who took the tickets. He was cross-examined, but the cross-examination did not shake his testimony; and yet, Mr. Speaker, the returns from that precinct of that county gave Davidson 501 votes and only 35 for McDuffie, while 149 were counted for Turner out of a total possible voting population of 600.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Was that testimony rebutted?

Mr. LODGE. No, sir; it was not.

In the same county, Dallas, and in Woodlawn precinct, the returns gave Davidson 107 and McDuffie only 6 votes.

There is testimony in connection with the vote there to show that 40 or 50 voters cast their votes for McDuffie; one witness so testifies, and testifies further that he saw no other tickets there. Cross-examination did not shake this evidence, nor was there any attempt made to rebut the testimony.

You may say that of the forty or fifty persons who received these ballots possibly two or three of them did not cast that ballot, but it would hardly be a fair presumption that the whole of them failed to cast more than six in view of the fact that no other tickets or ballots were visible. It is perfectly incredible that such a condition of things could have existed, and that only that number of votes should have been cast for McDuffie while no other ticket was to be seen. Perhaps the reason is that the tickets for the other side were already in the box without having gone through the formality of being cast by the voters.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Presumably.

Mr. LODGE. The same is true of Marion Junction.

In Dallas County, Michell's Mill precinct, one witness swore that he issued 307 McDuffie tickets and saw 303 of them handed in by the voters at the window, and could not tell as to 4 of them. On cross-examination he swore that he was sitting all the time within 15 feet of the window, nor could the cross-examination shake his testimony. The majority of the committee, although no attempt was made to rebut this evidence, treat it as if it were of no account; as if a man who testified under oath with as much exactness as that was a man whose testimony was not worthy of rebuttal.

Mr. LAIRD. How many did the returns give McDuffie there?

Mr. LODGE. The returns gave Davidson 201 votes and McDuffie 34.

Now take the case of Selma, in the same county. That precinct returned 1,115 votes in that election. The polls were open, we may safely assume, from 8 o'clock to 6. I believe the law of Alabama provides that they shall be open from 8 to 5, but I put the widest possible margin; and thus it appears that the voting went on for ten hours without intermission at the rate of two votes a minute throughout the whole day, and yet witnesses came on the stand utterly uncontradicted and swore it was a light vote. They may have been mistaken about how many votes this candidate received or that candidate received, but no man in his senses would swear that a vote cast in that way at that rate was a light vote. That testimony stands uncontradicted as to the general character of the voting at Selma.

It is sworn in evidence by the register of vital statistics of Selma that something like ten pages of the names on the poll-list at which he looked did not contain one name that he recognized as that of a man who lived in Selma at that time. Is it remarkable that the poll-list showed a large vote?

Uniontown was a family precinct, and has been given up by the majority. There is more testimony as to that precinct than as to many others, although it is by no means exceptionally clear or direct evidence. But we are asked to believe at Uniontown that 777 voters changed McDuffie tickets for Davidson's and voted the latter secretly. This is indeed too much for anybody's imagination. But, sir, the abandonment of Uniontown is a concession of the whole case by the majority. If there were frauds there, then on precisely similar and often better testimony, there was fraud everywhere.

In Walthall's precinct, in Perry County, the poll-list shows 261 persons voted, while the returns, which are supposed to be based on the poll-list, make the vote 282, or 21 more than the poll-list contained.

I wish now to call attention for a moment to the St. Clair precinct, of Lowndes County, to which I have already referred.

The polls were not opened there at the regularly appointed hour, but were opened by five qualified electors afterwards, and I desire to compare the action of the county supervisors in that case with the action of a similar board upon the Pine Flat precinct in Dallas County, where the returns were signed by only two of the inspectors, where the law requires three. In that precinct the return is received by the supervisors, although the irregularity is just as great as in the St. Clair precinct. In the St. Clair precinct the polls were opened and a majority was given for McDuffie, but the irregularity due to the absence of signatures (to which the chairman is going to furnish me a reference in the record in a moment) was sufficient to invalidate it, while at Pine Flat, where the record is just as irregular, it is counted for contestee by the board of supervisors.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to call his attention to the fact that another board passed upon that?

Mr. LODGE. That is the precise reason that I have called attention to it, because another board did pass upon it. It shows the same intention in every county; the same high-handed disregard of the commonest provisions of law.

In one case they throw out the regular vote, taking advantage of an unproved technicality; in the other they keep it in; in both showing a complete disregard for the spirit or the requirements of the law.

Wilcox County is one which the majority of the committee seem rather to have neglected. But take, for instance, the returns from the Snow Hill precinct. There were returned there for Mr. Davidson 415 votes, and for Mr. McDuffie 15. Carmichael testified that he issued and tallied 425 tickets for Mr. McDuffie, and saw them voted. On cross-examination he said he handed the voters their tickets, and was standing in front of the window where they voted and saw them hand them in; and "there was no swapping." Another witness, Nathan Scott, in reply to a question, said he knew that all those to whom he gave tickets voted for McDuffie—

Because I gave them their choice to vote for McDuffie or Davidson, and they took the McDuffie tickets and voted them; that is why I say so.

And yet after he had seen 425 McDuffie tickets put into the box it came out that McDuffie had only 15 votes.

Mr. CHEADLE. How about Davidson?

Mr. LODGE. Davidson received 451 votes, according to the returns.

Now, as to the manner in which these frauds were carried on. Take the testimony of Charles H. Walker, the United States supervisor at Brown's Station. I only want to call attention to one single point in that testimony. He swore that the tickets that were counted were different from the tickets that were cast. In one case the name was printed across the ticket; in the other it was printed lengthwise, and the tickets that were counted differed in this way from those that were cast.

Then, after such a showing as this, it is coolly asked by the majority why the ballots are not brought in here. Why, sir, the ballots that were counted were clean and new, while those voted were crumpled and soiled—good evidence, surely, that the former were not the ballots that were cast.

In Marion County precinct, Cole, one of the inspectors, testified that he saw Mr. Parish drop tickets on the floor that he had taken from the voters and take other tickets from his pocket and hand them to him (Cole) to put in the box. Testimony was introduced by the contestee to impugn Cole's character for veracity; but Cole was appointed by the Democratic county judge, the Democratic county clerk, and the Democratic sheriff as a fit man to act as an inspector at the election. The other inspector was not called to contradict that testimony. He is a well-known man in the precinct, but was not called to rebut this direct charge of fraud.

Mr. LAIRD. Were any of the election officers called?

Mr. LODGE. In one precinct; only one; and there the election officer gave this testimony:

Q. When you closed the polls on that day and the box was carried to your father's house, and you delivered it, as you say, to Simon Ulmer, do you know what became of or was done with that box from that time until you went back to the polling-place?

A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether or not that box was opened during the time it was out of your possession and before you got back to the polling-place and the ballots taken out or changed?

A. I do not know whether the box was opened or not.

Q. Could it not have been opened and the ballots changed without your knowledge?

A. It could have been opened and the ballots changed without my knowledge, because it was out of my sight for two hours.

Q. Then you do not know that the ballots that you counted out of that box were the identical ballots that you, as inspector, received from the hands of the electors?

A. I do not know.

That is the testimony of Mr. Kirkpatrick. I think we have seen enough to know now why the poll-lists and the returns of the inspectors were not produced by the contestee, and even kept out of reach of the contestant. Although Mr. Davidson relies exclusively upon that primary evidence, as he calls it, for his seat in this House. As to the proposition that Mr. Davidson knew of colored men who voted for him secretly, we have brought that to a direct test. Of the twenty-three negroes who voted for Davidson, as he alleges, in Uniontwn, only six cared enough about concealing their purpose to take votes from the Republican distributor, as appears by the Republican list put in evidence in the record.

In conclusion, sir, I wish to call the attention of the House to these facts: that fraud existed wherever we probe for it; that it was clumsy fraud; that the poll-lists have not been produced, and that the election officers have not been called to rebut the attacks made upon them. I think we can imagine why those election officers were not called. Unfortunately a public opinion appears to exist in that district, which makes it if not a proper certainly not a discreditable thing to cheat the negro voters out of their votes. But those same men who will cheat negroes at the polls will not, as men of honor if put upon the stand, perjure themselves as to actions which public opinion condones and even applauds. That this should be the case certainly shows the existence of a most unfortunate state of opinion.

Because a man is helpless and ignorant and black it is all the more discreditable to cheat him; the more helpless he is, the more he is at a man's mercy, the more unworthy and unmanly to do him wrong. Further, they allege over and over again, and they make it part of their argument, that the colored men voted largely for Colonel Davidson because he and his friends represented the property, the character, and the intelligence of the district; and yet, accepting that statement, accepting it in its widest interpretation, we are asked to believe, we are forced to believe, that the property, the intelligence, the character of the Fourth district of Alabama are unable to carry that district the way they want it to go except by resorting to frauds so clumsy that they are an affront to our intelligence. It seems to me, sir, that when a case like this comes before Congress reeking with fraud in every precinct that has been opened, with obvious and patent fraud, it is a slur upon the American Congress that it should be asked to pass favorably upon such an election.

It is a greater injury, let me say, to the State of Alabama to have such practices in its elections condoned and sustained than it can possibly be to any other part of the country. The gain or loss of one vote in this House on either side is a comparatively unimportant matter. But the honesty of the elections of members of Congress is a matter of vital importance; and the men who represent honest districts, the people who send representatives here on fair elections, regard with increasing anger the absolute frustration of their votes by practices like these. They believe, and I think with reason, that an election like this nullifies not simply the action of the voters of that particular district, but the sentiment of the State of Alabama to-day on the great questions of the tariff; and it seems to me that the members from other districts, feeling the vital importance of those questions, should resist with all their might the effort to bring votes into this House by practices like these. For the honor of Congress, and in the name of honest elections, I believe that this House should reject the sitting member and seat the contestant. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. LODGE. I will reserve that until to-morrow.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one hour to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, it may be well before considering the facts that pertain to this case to examine slightly the historical and political situation of this Fourth district of Alabama. It is a district to which considerable attention has been directed. The minority of the Committee on Elections in claiming that the contestant should be seated have advanced a new doctrine. Some allusion was made by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. LODGE] to the fact that there has been some progress in civilization in the Fourth district of Alabama. I want to congratulate the side of the House which the gentleman represents in this matter upon the fact that there appears to be in this case considerable progress in their doctrine as to what should be done with the negro vote in this country.

Heretofore that party have been satisfied to assume and to declare that the negro vote belonged to the Republican party. They have been content to declare that the negro vote was to be cast for Republican candidates in the Southern States, and they have stopped there. But here they have advanced a step farther. Here they assert not only that the negro vote in the South shall be cast for the Republican candidate, but that it shall not be counted for a colored Republican; that whenever it is cast for a colored Republican it must be thrown out. That is the proposition of the contestant. That is the proposition of the minority in summing up their results.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is the gentleman now referring to the case of South Carolina?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am referring to this particular case, which I propose to discuss, and it only.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not know but the gentleman was referring in a general way to the Smalls case.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We have not yet reached the Smalls case.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the gentleman to be laying down a general principle.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am stating the principle which the minority have declared in this case. I said at the outset that it would be well to consider somewhat the historical situation of this district as to its vote. In 1884 the district cast 13,850 votes for the Democratic candidate for President, and 8,227 for the Republican candidate; a total vote of 22,077, and a majority of 5,623. At the same time the vote for the Democratic candidate for Congressman was 14,225; for the Republican candidate 8,181—for the Republican candidates, I should have said, for at that election there were three Republican candidates—Mr. Craig, Mr. DeLemos, and Mr. Haralson. Those two independent colored Republican candidates received 1,377 votes, and they were counted; no exception was taken to them.

There was in that State in August, 1886, preceding this Congressional election, an election for governor. The Democratic candidate for governor received in this district 19,714 votes; the Republican candidate 3,861 votes. The Democratic candidate for Congress at the election a few months later received 14,913 votes; the Republican candidates 5,043. I cite these figures to show what the aggregate vote of the Republican candidates amounted to in all these elections.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Turner, the colored Republican candidate, once sat in this Hall as a Representative from that district. I cite the fact simply to show the absurdity, the effrontery of the contestant and his friends in claiming that Mr. Turner received no support in the contest that was going on. He was nominated at the same convention at which Mr. McDuffie was nominated. It has been said here that there was but little attention paid to his canvass. Why, sir, I have here a list of a large number of witnesses who were called upon to testify in behalf of Mr. McDuffie, who testified to the fact of Mr. Turner's nomination being known throughout the district, to the fact that he was not only supported but well supported—supported by negro members of the Legislature, by leading Republicans throughout the district. The testimony shows that he stood as well as the contestant, Judge McDuffie. Here is the testimony of one case:

Q. Do you know as a fact that Jerry Blevins, William J. Stevens, John Gee, and many other leading Republicans were supporters of Ben S. Turner?
A. Yes.
Q. Are the persons named in preceding question citizens of the colored race?
A. They are.
Q. Is Ben S. Turner a colored man?
A. He is.

Then I have here the testimony of another witness, who testifies that Stevens and his crowd continued to support Turner to the last. Stevens is a Republican, a Republican member of the Legislature, and a colored man. Another witness testifies:

I am well acquainted with the colored electors of that beat. It is this way: There was three tickets out; they were divided there that day, I suppose; that was what I heard; I don't know; I voted and came right away. They were divided in this way: Some portion for Mr. Ben Turner, and some was for Mr. McDuffie, and some voted for Mr. Davidson.

I read from the testimony of another witness:

Q. Whom did the colored voters vote for that day?
A. Mr. McDuffie and Ben Turner, and some 3 or 4 for the Democratic party whilst I was present. Saw them issuing Turner's tickets. Saw some 40 voted for him.

As to another precinct we have this testimony:

Knew he was a candidate from himself and others. He at one time represented this district in Congress and as a Republican.

Now, as to there being no Turner tickets present, there is very little testimony of that kind. There is the testimony of witnesses who swear that they were so busily engaged in issuing the tickets of McDuffie to voters that they issued some 300, 400, 500, 600, or 800 a day, and marked down the fact at the time; also, that while issuing them to the crowds of voters they followed them up and saw them voted, but did not see any Turner tickets. That is the kind of testimony on this point.

Discussing this question from the light of a "conspiracy," can any one tell me why it would be necessary to give Mr. Turner in some instances more votes than Mr. McDuffie, or why it was necessary to give him any votes? Why not do as Mr. McDuffie's friends did in Lowndes County—count Turner out entirely? That is the county which is cited as the one instance of an honorable election, an election free from fraud, untainted by suspicion, simply because, and for no other reason, Ben Turner, the colored candidate for Congress, did not get any votes in the home county of Judge McDuffie.

Then, again, there was a large number of voters who testified right along that they knew the party was split; they knew that voters were voting for Turner or for McDuffie, and at the same time quite a large number of them were voting the Democratic ticket.

There was a strange state of affairs down there as to the negroes themselves. The sort of argument that is made here to-day in favor of seating the contestant would be met with ridicule if it were applied to any of the districts in the Northern States. It is based upon the assumption, as I said awhile ago, that the negroes must vote the Republican ticket, and must vote for a white Republican, forgetting that, as a matter of fact, the most intelligent Republican witness who testified in this examination, one who has held a seat in this House, stated upon oath that there were from 10,000 to 13,000 white voters in that district. Do you tell me that 10,000 to 13,000 white voters could not influence enough colored voters to come with them to make this vote of Mr. Davidson 14,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. To whose evidence do you refer?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I refer to the evidence of Mr. Craig; you will find it on page 134, I think. A great many of the colored voters did not know for whom or what they were voting; they did not know until they were told by the leading man. As one of them states, "We have Nathan Stratton as our leading man; whatever he distructs us, we debide by that." Here are four or five witnesses who testified right along that half the colored voters did not know whom or what they were voting for.

But other witnesses in a large number of precincts testified that voters voted the Democratic ticket in many instances secretly, voted the Democratic ticket holding them in their sleeves, going up there afraid to vote the Democratic ticket openly; and why? Because meetings had been held and they had been told if they voted the Democratic ticket they would be tongue-lashed in the churches, and when told of this said, "I know they voted the Democratic ticket secretly; I know they voted it in large numbers; but they did not vote it openly because they feared some of the others would hog-ride them to death about it; others are afraid they will be deviled about it and turn them out of church."

I draw an inference from another fact in this case a little different from gentlemen on the other side. They infer that because these negroes were watched when they voted, and because others attempted to get them up to have their names taken down, that they were therefore anxious to vote the Republican ticket. They came up and gave their names because, as more than one witness testified, they were required to do so. They came up and accepted McDuffie tickets from those who were distributing McDuffie tickets, and then came in front of the election officers carrying in their hands two tickets, undecided in some instances which they should vote. In other instances they drew other tickets out of their sleeves and voted them.

Men were posted in four or five precincts for what purpose? To watch and see the voters did not change their ballots. If there was all this enthusiasm and anxiety to vote the Republican ticket so often spoken of, why was it necessary to appoint men at several polling precincts to watch and see they did not change their votes? I know gentlemen will say it was the expectation to have to make such proof as this. Only one or two witnesses of the great number who testified in this case testified that was their purpose, and they did it upon the leading question, which, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] suggests, told them the kind of answer to give, and when they answered they (the witnesses), of their own accord, gave a different reason. They said they watched the voters to see that they did not change their votes.

Complaint is made that there is evidence of fraud in this election, because many of the Republican inspectors could neither read nor write. It is very unfortunate that the most of the Republican party in that district can neither read nor write. If gentlemen will take the pains to look at the record and examine the testimony of the witnesses for contestant and see how these witnesses signed their names they will find that about the same proportion signed their name with a cross-mark; that these Republicans, called upon to testify in this case, to impeach the returns, signed their names with a cross-mark; that it was not possible perhaps for the appointing boards at the county seats to find leading Republicans in sufficient numbers who did not sign their names with cross-marks.

As to the claim there was a conspiracy in this district extending throughout the whole district, what is the testimony to sustain that proposition? Is there any testimony that at any time or place Democrats from different counties of the district met and consulted as to what their action should be? Is there any testimony which looks in that direction? Not one syllable.

The only testimony upon which this frivolous, this flimsy, this absurd proposition that there was a conspiracy is based upon is that three or four different men in the district, consisting of over seventy precincts, at their own precincts, at different times, probably during the election, or after it, made some such declaration concerning the election as "Uncle Aleck might have it as well as McDuffie." Another said, when they were discussing whether the Democrats should be permitted to name their supervisors of election to be appointed by the court, while the Republicans had the privilege of naming theirs, that they expected to carry the election, and they would carry the election peaceably if they could, but forcibly if they must, meaning if they were to have forcible interference with the elections by the supervising officers they would have to meet it with force. Yet that is attempted to be tortured into a declaration that they were going to carry the election by fraud.

In several of the contested precincts I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that only one witness testified; that the witness testified he issued so many tickets, and that thereupon it is claimed the election officers should have been called to sustain the purity of the ballot. No law was cited of that kind, because no law could be cited. The only decisions cited before the committee upon that proposition are the two, Frost vs. Metcalf, and Washburn vs. Voorhees. In Frost vs. Metcalf the committee unanimously held that the failure of the contestant to call the election officers must be construed against him.

> The contestant having failed to call Dejong and the officers of election to testify, the law presumes that they would testify to the correctness of their proceedings if they had been called.

In two sentences the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. LODGE] uttered a proposition which would certainly destroy any such claim as that the introduction of one witness ought to compel the contestee to produce the officers of election. He said they were not called because they were probably honorable enough not to perjure themselves to maintain the fraud. The gentleman forgot that if they committed the fraud they committed a more despicable crime, because it was combined with perjury. They swore to make true returns of the election; they were sworn to make these returns according to the ballots cast; and if, after taking this oath, they attempted to commit this fraud, it is the combination of both crimes. Look at the result of the verdict by this House, if it should adopt the view of this case it ought to according to the views of the minority. What is it? That every election officer in every precinct in the Fourth district of Alabama is a perjured scoundrel, and ought to be in the penitentiary.

That is your proposition; that is your liberality; that is your justice. Without calling these men, as it was your duty under the law and under the decisions that have been rendered, you render this judgment against them.

I shall read only one other sentence, from Frost vs. Metcalf:

> To set aside a formal and regular return made by sworn officers of both political parties upon such evidence would set a dangerous precedent and render popular elections but a name and a mockery.

To do so in this case would be rendering popular elections a sham and a mockery.

In Washburn vs. Voorhees we have as follows:

> It certainly can not be necessary to remark further upon the very weak and unsatisfactory character of this evidence.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] pointed out the unsatisfactory nature of this testimony in one of these precincts; but as I think the House did not catch clearly the force of the evidence he read, I will recur to it again.

One of these witnesses—there were two called to impeach the integrity of the returns of Orville precinct—one of these witnesses, Harrison Ellis, testified that he issued some 242 McDuffie tickets; that he not only issued them, but that he had seen them voted. Another colored witness, Burril Hayes, is called by contestant, and he says in answer to this question:

> Q. State, if you know, about how many voters of that beat voted for McDuffie there at that day.
> A. About 100.

Further along he is asked how he knows the fact. This is the testimony:

> Q. You having said that you remained at the polls only between the hours of 10 and 12, explain how you can testify that about 100 votes were cast for McDuffie.
> A. When I came back the last time I met Harrison Ellis, and he told me that he brought 108 votes down there with him when he came, and he had about 7 or 8 as he was going on back home that night when the polls closed
> Q. In saying that about 100 votes were cast for McDuffie you are testifying to what was told you by Harrison Ellis, are you not?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. Do you know how many persons voted at the Orville polling-place on that election day? If so, state if you kept any list, record, or count of any votes which were cast at that polling-place.
> A. I do not know the number of votes cast that day. I did not keep any list, or record, or count.
> Q. Do you know whether or not Ben. S. Turner was a candidate and voted for at that election?
> A. I heard he was, but never saw any of his tickets.

Both of these men signed their names to their depositions with a cross-mark.

That is the character of the testimony here, and I repeat from the report in Washburn vs. Voorhees:

> It certainly can not be necessary to remark further upon the very weak and unsatisfactory character of this evidence. How easy is it for an unlettered man to be mistaken or deceived in regard to the character of the ballot that he delivers in at the polls. How easy for any man to be mistaken in regard to the vote cast by another, although standing near him when his ballot is deposited. How many are there, as we know from observation, who will receive from a friend or acquaintance a ballot, and profess to vote it, when, in fact, they substitute for it another and a different ballot, more congenial to their own views or feelings. Both classes of evidence, by which it is attempted to prove these 82 votes, when analyzed, amount to nothing on earth but hearsay evidence.

And in this instance which I have cited it was hearsay evidence of hearsay facts.

> An unlettered man voting by ballot has no means of knowing for whom he himself votes, except by relying upon the unsworn statement of other parties, who furnish him his ballot and explain to him its character. And a man standing by or near the polls has no means of knowing how another votes, except by relying upon the unsworn statement of the person voting. For, although the witnesses may have furnished a ballot to the voter and followed him to the polls, it is so easy to substitute one ballot for another before delivering it to the inspector or judge of election that our knowledge of how another votes who has not been sworn is based at last upon our confidence in his integrity and truthfulness; in other words, in his unsworn statement.
> It amounts simply to hearsay evidence and nothing else, which, however we may rely and act upon it in the ordinary transactions of life, is not permitted to have any weight in any judicial tribunal on earth that has regard for the principles of the common law.

Right here I want to fix the attention of the House upon this prominent fact, the utter unreliability of the testimony by which it is sought to sweep aside the official integrity of those who conducted the election, and impeach the purity of the returns as made by these sworn officers of the law; that it is by presenting one or two ignorant men to testify to their issuing ballots and their seeing in the turmoil and confusion of an election how they were voted, when in some instances the voter passed out of their sight, either going into a room or going upstairs, or in the church or some other place entirely out of view, and there casting his ballot. But in no single instance did the contestant call the voters themselves to sustain these assertions. In no single instance did he and his attorney sit down and subpœna the voters of the precinct to call them up and say, "How did you vote?"

I know what the excuse will be why this was not done, and it will be a false one. As shown by the record, the excuse will be that there was not time in which to do this, and I say it will not be well founded for this reason. Here is the entire record taken in this case, of about two hundred pages in length, when the full time was occupied given by law. We have two or three cases in which no greater time was taken, in which the testimony will amount to ten times as much.

But that is not all. You will find if you care to glance through this record that in some instances for several days in succession no testimony whatever was taken because the contestant had no witnesses. Then you will find that towards the conclusion of the time the contestant had the examination adjourned from day to day until the end of the time. If this method of calling the voters to testify had been adopted in a single instance in a single precinct, and it had been shown by the voters themselves that they did vote for McDuffie, when they were not so counted, then this House and this committee would have been placed certainly in a position that would require them to reject that precinct's vote if it were cast differently from the manner in which it was returned by the officers of the election, or to count it according to the manner in which it was cast when that was thus ascertained. Half a dozen cases of that kind might have justified some of the claims that have been made here to-day.

Among the witnesses examined and one upon whose testimony great stress has been placed by the minority is a man named Morrell, described in the minority report as a Republican canvasser. Nowhere in the testimony is there anything to sustain the proposition that he had been a Republican canvasser. But it is said that he was not cross-examined; that no testimony was brought to rebut his testimony.

The testimony shows that this man Morrell was not examined until the 11th day of April, and then he was examined in the State of Tennessee, a great distance away from the precinct.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROWELL. Was not this man originally examined and the notary refused to allow him to sign his testimony earlier?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. He so states, but he was not examined earlier, nor was there any notice that his deposition would be taken; nor was it in any way authorized by the law. Some ex parte statement of his was taken down, perhaps.

Mr. ROWELL. All the parties were present and the notary refused to sign it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Some ex parte statement was taken down and the witness was not permitted to sign because no notice was given to the contestee that he would be examined at that time.

He was called—for what purpose? To state that there was a large negro vote in that precinct. We concede that. All we insist upon is this, that where negroes want to vote the Democratic ticket they shall be permitted to do so; and that where negroes want to vote for a colored candidate for Congress they shall be permitted to do so without being counted out upon such a pretext as that set up by contestant.

A MEMBER. You are not asking very much.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We are not asking very much, but we are asking more than the other side is willing to concede in this case.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask the gentleman to refer to page 152 of the record and say whether he will still insist that this man was not examined originally in pursuance of a notice.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I may be mistaken, and will stand corrected without examining it. I found no testimony taken under notice in looking through the papers, and made my assertion from an examination of the record.

Mr. ROWELL. It is the first name in the notice, which appears on page 152.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have touched upon the great "conspiracy" and the proof to sustain it, and without appealing to fair-minded men I think men who have self-respect even would reject any proposition that should insist upon their minds coming to the conclusion that there was any conspiracy in that district.

Some of the precincts have been omitted, I have observed, in the minority report; I do not know for what reason. But as it is claimed that upon the testimony the returns in these precincts should be thrown out and should not be counted, I will call the attention of the House to one of them.

Take the Laneville precinct, in Hall County. It is claimed the whole of the vote in that precinct should be thrown out.

George Washington Bryant, called by the contestant, testifies as follows:

Q. Was the voting over, or nearly over, before you left?
A. I left about 2 o'clock; I could not tell.
Q. How many colored men were there that day who voted the Democratic ticket, about how many?
A. I could not tell to save my life; not over 20; I don't think there could be over 20. I could not swear to it either way.
Q. Did the colored voters vote there that day for McDuffie, if any; and state fully about this.
A. If any, it was after I left; there was no tickets there.
Q. Did you take down a tally of any of the voters who did not vote there that day who expressed a wish to vote for Mr. McDuffie; if so, how many?
(Contestee objects to the above question because it is illegal and irrelevant.)
A. Yes, sir, I did; 156.
Q. Did these voters who you tallied go away without voting?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How many colored men vote there that day, to your knowledge, for Ben Turner?
A. I could not tell; I have no idea.
Q. Did you see any?
A. No, sir, I did not.
Q. About how many white men over the age of twenty-one years live in Laneville beat?
A. Between 20 and 25; I don't think there is over 25.
Q. Do the colored voters of that beat vote the Democratic ticket?
A. I do not know whether many of them do or not.
Q. How many colored voters remained on the ground when you left?
A. There was a good many, and they were coming in when I left.
Q. Did all or nearly all of the colored voters that were there that day seem anxious to vote for McDuffie?
(Contestee objects to the above question because it calls for an opinion.)
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did any colored men there that day, to your knowledge, vote for Colonel Davidson?
A. Not as I know of.
Crossed:
Q. How many voters are there in Laneville beat?
A. I do not know, sir. I have voted there; between three and four hundred who have polled there; that many.
Q. Is it not a fact that the colored people are very secretive about who they voted for?
A. Yes, sir; that is a fact.
Q. Do not a good many of the colored people vote the Democratic ticket secretly?
A. Yes, sir; I am satisfied of that.
Q. Are not many of the colored voters afraid to vote the Democratic ticket openly?
A. I have seen some that will do it of the sly.
Q. Do you not think that a good many on them do on the sly?
A. I have seen several do it.
Q. Do not and have not the Republican leaders used the party lash to keep them in line?
A. Of course.
Q. Do one-half of the colored voters know for whom or for what they vote for?
A. I don't believe they do.
Q. Were there or not any Ben Turner tickets distributed there that day? If so, who distributed them?
A. Yes; Ed. Lavender.

That is all the testimony that is introduced with regard to that precinct; and yet upon testimony so frivolous as that this House is asked to throw out that precinct.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it not because they counted those 150 voters that went away and returned them as having voted?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, there is no evidence that they counted those that went away; there is no evidence that they counted others than those who were there and voted.

In Wilcox County we have an illustration of what is to be expected. Laurence Washington says:

I was serving out McDuffie tickets.
Q. About how many colored voters did you see vote there that day?
A. I saw about 116.

He says he saw about 116. That is all he testifies to at that time; but upon one of these leading questions, one of these instructive questions, one of these high-pressure questions, he responds to the satisfaction of contestant's attorney:

Q. From your knowledge of the voters of Camden beat, and from what you saw there that day, how many voted for McDuffie?
A. About 400 voted that day for McDuffie at the Camden beat.

At Marion Junction the witness Blevins does not say, as is asserted in the minority report, that there were no Turner tickets that day. He does say that he saw no Turner tickets there that day.

Q. Did you have in your possession when you went to the voting-place that day all the McDuffie tickets that were at the polling-place that day?
A. If there was any there I never saw them. I had all that was there that day.
Q. Where did you stand when you gave out the tickets?
A. I stood between the place where they were voting and Mr. Harrison's store, and about 35 or 40 yards from the polls.
Q. Did you read all of the tickets that you gave out?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did they have on them?
A. They had on them the Representatives for the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth district of Alabama, John V. McDuffie.
Q. Spell John V. McDuffie's name.
A. "John V. McDuffie."
Q. Describe the ticket—size and color.
A. They was a white ticket, 2 or 3 inches wide and 5 or 6 inches long, I reckon.
Q. What other tickets were on the ground there that day?
A. I saw one more ticket there; that was A. C. Davidson's. I only saw one of them.
Q. Spell that name on that ticket.
A. "A. C. Daverson."
Q. What was on that ticket beside the name there spelled?
A. Representative for Fiftieth Congress of Fourth district of Alabama.
Q. How far can you see and distinguish the reading upon a ticket?
A. I don't know.
Q. Then can you swear that the tickets that you saw deposited in the box that day had any single particular name upon it?
A. No more than the tickets I give out.

Pine Flat is another precinct that is not honored by mention in the minority report. Daniel Henderson testifies:

I live in Dallas County, Pine Flat precinct. I have lived there fifteen years. There was such an election held, and the candidates so named. Mr. Chamblis was one inspector; Mr. Smith another; I do not remember his name. I do not know who the clerks were. Those inspectors that I have named were Democrats. I can't tell how many votes was cast that day. I voted and went away.

Q. Are you not very well acquainted with the colored electors of that beat; and do you not know how the colored electors in that beat stand affected toward the Republican party? If yea, are they not almost a unit in the support of the candidate of the Republican party?

A. I am well acquainted with the colored electors of that beat. It is this way: There was three tickets out; they were divided there that day, I suppose; that was what I heard; I don't know; I voted and came right away; they were divided in this way: Some portion for Mr. Ben. Turner, and some was for Mr. McDuffie, and some voted for Mr. Davidson.

Q. About how many colored electors are there in that beat?
A. I reckon there is about 175.
Q. About how many of this 175 colored electors voted for Mr. Davidson?
A. I could not specify how many.
Q. About how many of them voted for Mr. Turner?
A. I could not specify how many.
Q. About how many, do you think, voted for Mr. McDuffie?
A. I can't specify.

Are you going to throw out whole precincts upon testimony of that kind, or are you going to say, in the face of the law and in the face of this evidence, that it was the duty of the contestee to bring before a notary and have examined the officers of elections?

Here is the testimony of Stephen Cunningham, from Old Town, in Dallas County:

Q. How many voters are there in that beat?
A. I don't know, sir.
Q. Did you examine the votes of those persons whom you saw vote while you were there?
A. Mighty few of them.
Q. How close to the place where the votes were put in did you stand while the voting was going on?
A. I do not know; I did not measure the distance; there was a line made and none went over.
Q. Could you have seen the names on the tickets that were voted as they were put in?
A. No; sir; because I didn't try.
Q. Then if you did not do it, nor did not try, can you swear as to how those persons voted who voted when you did not see their tickets?
A. No, sir; I wouldn't swear.
Q. Did you not say that about forty voted for Ben Turner that day?
A. Yes, sir; they said so.
Q. Then the only way you had of knowing about it was what they told you, was it?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know of your own individual knowledge that they voted as they said?
A. No, sir, I don't; I had to take their word for it.
Q. For whom did the colored voters in said beat at said election vote for that day?
A. Mr. McDuffie and Ben. Turner, some three or four for the Democratic party, whilst I was present.
Q. About how many colored voters voted there that day for Ben. Turner?
A. About 40 whilst I was present.
Q. How many voted for McDuffie?
A. From 70 to 80 while I was there.
Q. What time did you leave there?
A. About 1 o'clock.

Upon such evidence as that you are asked to throw out a precinct.

Here is another: Liberty Hall, where the witness Toney Tolbert was examined apparently in rebuttal, one of those cases in which the minority say the testimony of the witness was not contradicted or rebutted. Why, he is called in rebuttal and yet not in rebuttal. He testifies that one Martin Williams issued the tickets, and that he saw about 65 or 70 of them issued by Martin Williams. Now, why was not Martin Williams called? There are several instances in which you are asked to rely upon the testimony of only one of the two or three or four or five men who were conducting this special supervision of how the colored Republicans should vote.

Here is the testimony of John Callier, from Portland precinct, which may throw a little light upon the "progress of civilization" in this district. He is asked who were the candidates for Congress at that election, and he answers:

A. C. Davidson was the only candidate that I know of my own knowledge that was voted for. There were other candidates in the field. J. V. McDuffie and Ben. S. Turner were in the field and candidates for Congress.
Q. What is your race? And for whom did you vote for Congress at that election?
A. I belong to the colored race; I voted for A. C. Davidson for Congress at that election.
Q. Do you know whether or not there were other colored electors of Portland precinct who voted for A. C. Davidson? If so, give an estimate of the number that voted for A. C. Davidson.
A. My best judgment is that about 40 or 50 colored electors of that precinct voted at that election for A. C. Davidson.
Q. How many colored electors live in Portland precinct?
A. I think there are about 150 colored electors in Portland precinct.
Q. Do you know of any action or agreement made between the colored people of Portland precinct in reference to who they should support as a candidate for the Fiftieth Congress? State fully any conversations which you may have had with colored voters as to who they intended to vote for in November, 1886.
A. I do know of such action and agreement; not a great while before election on 2d of November, 1886, the colored people in that precinct held meetings; these meetings were largely attended, there being perhaps from fifty to one hundred or more people at each of them. At these meetings political affairs were discussed, and the colored people agreed that inasmuch as they had been voting for Republican nominees heretofore, without any benefit to themselves or the country, that they would at the November election support the Democratic nominee, A. C. Davidson.
Q. Give the names of some of the leading colored men of Portland beat who supported A. C. Davidson for the Fiftieth Congress.
A. Jake Bennett, Ben Taylor, Peter Allen, John Callier, Hardy Cary, Ben Clifton are some of the leading colored men of that beat who voted for Mr. Davidson at that election.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Whose testimony is that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is the testimony of John Callier. That was not the only meeting of the same kind that was held in the district, where the negroes met and consulted and came to the conclusion which the majority of the voters of this country have come to—that by voting for the Republican nominees they would not benefit either themselves or the people at large. [Laughter.]

At Macon Station a witness named Alexander Ellis testified as follows:

Q. About how many voters to whom was issued McDuffie tickets, did you see vote McDuffie tickets?
A. Near 300 that I issued out and saw voted.
Q. Did any one there that day vote for Ben Turner?
A. I do not know; I only saw one that day, and Jim Green had that.
Q. Does Jim Greene live in that beat?
A. No, sir.
Q. What, if anything, did the colored voters tell Jim Greene about voting the Turner ticket?
A. I heard some of them tell him they did not want anything to do with him; he had deceived them once and would do so again.
Q. What was that election for?
A. For Congressman.
Q. Does Jim Greene live in that beat?
A. No, sir. I heard some of them tell him they did not want anything to do with him; he had deceived them once and would do it again.

Here was a colored voter issuing Turner tickets, and this man heard some of the colored voters say they did not want anything to do with him.

Canton precinct, Wilcox County, is sought to be thrown out upon the testimony of Jake English, who testified that he was issuing J. V. McDuffie tickets—Republican tickets. He says:

We carried up there 250 tickets and we carried back home 112 tickets, and 3 were handed to some white voters and was not received back again, is the way I came to said conclusion.

Here is an election which gentlemen on the other side seek to have determined by the fact of a man's having carried to a precinct a certain number of tickets and carried home a smaller number, and therefore we are to suppose there were as many votes cast for the Republican candidate for Congress as were missing out of the package.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Whose evidence is that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the evidence of Jake English, in Canton precinct.

Towards the conclusion of this report of the minority I find it charged that threats were used with regard to the keeping of a tally-list; and two or three instances are cited. I merely mention them to call the attention of the House to the nature of the "threats" which are stated to have been used. One person was keeping a tally-sheet of the number that voted; a Democrat went up to him and said, "I don't think you had better do that any more;" and he stopped. The Democrat went on, and he commenced again; the Democrat went back to him, and said to him, "I don't think that it is your interest to do that; you had better not do it; if you do do it you may get into a rucus about it." And upon that statement the man ceased to keep the tally. This was the extent of the "threat" or interference. The two or three "threats" which are cited amount to nothing more than this.

The intention of the law in Alabama is that the voters shall vote without intimidation and without supervision. The election officers are sworn, in substance, not to divulge the name of the voter and the ticket he votes. But here was action in contravention of the spirit of the law. Here were men requiring these ignorant voters to come up to them, accept tickets from them, and march to the polls with those tickets open, although the requirement of the law is that they should be folded before being voted. The object of these "leaders" was to see that the voters voted—how? Not as they wanted to, because they did not know how they wanted to vote; not as they intended to, because they had no intention; but as the "leader" required them to vote, as the politicians and "bosses" of the district were determined that they should vote. This was the reason persons who were keeping tally were told it would be better for them not to do so.

Mr. STEELE. How does the gentleman account for the names of dead men appearing on the list of voters, as is alleged on behalf of the contestant?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Upon that subject I will say in the first place that this testimony as to the names of voters, etc., does not show for whom these persons voted. These allegations relate to a precinct in which Turner received over 100 votes; to a precinct where McDuffie received over 100 votes. Besides, the testimony in one instance is that of a man who was out of the State, and who could not be cross-examined because his testimony was taken at the very close of the time for taking testimony, so that no rebutting evidence could be introduced. Still further, if the gentleman will take the pains to look over the list which was furnished here in one instance of the names of voters, he will find several repetitions of names.

Any one who knows the history of the South knows that a family name frequently ran through the negroes upon a whole plantation. There might be half a dozen George Washingtons, half a dozen Thomas Moores, half a dozen A. M. Hills. There might be forty men of the same name in a single county. So in some of these precincts there were two men of the same name.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is not a fact that the votes of those dead men were counted, could it not have been very easily disproved?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It would have been very easy to disprove it if the election officers had been called by the contestant, as by law they ought to have been. It would have been easy to disprove it if the testimony on that point had been introduced in the opening of the case, so that there might have been opportunity to introduce testimony in rebuttal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you claim that the reason it is not disproved is that you had not time?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We claim that the proof in itself does not amount to anything.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You mean the proof that dead men were counted as voters?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We do not know that the men whose names were on the list as voters were dead. There may have been in the precinct living men of the same name with those who were dead.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I understand the gentleman proposes to get rid of the evidence by a mere inference.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no testimony that there were not other persons of the same name living in the same precinct. There is a registry law there and a registration record, and the names are on the registration list which was certified back with the list of those who voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the gentleman is too good a lawyer to undertake to rebut sworn testimony by inference.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I hope I am too good a lawyer to concede that the testimony of any one man should be accepted as discrediting the official action of five public officers acting on their oaths.

Mr. MACDONALD. The contestee is not required to prove a negative.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is very rarely that the proposition is asserted that any one should be required to prove a negative.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to detain the House any longer, and would like to know how much time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has only seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I thought I had much more. I wanted to reserve fifteen minutes which I promised to yield. I will reserve the seven minutes I have remaining.

Mr. LODGE. I yield the twelve minutes remaining of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I had not designed to speak in this case, but as my colleague on the committee has yielded to me a few minutes of time, I will occupy it.

I desire to say first that I believe in trying all election cases upon legal testimony, upon that kind of testimony that the experience of mankind has taught is safe to rely upon. I would neither vote to seat or unseat a man upon other testimony than that which I believe to be reliable, according to the rules of evidence laid down in the law books and in accordance with the experience of mankind.

In this case every syllable of the testimony relied upon by the contestant in my judgment is legal, proper, and legitimate for the purpose of proving the facts attempted to be proved.

Now, it is said here the only way to prove the facts in the case is to open the ballot-box and count the ballots. Mr. Speaker, before you can open a ballot-box and count the ballots you must first prove the ballots voted were put in the box, and then that the box was so preserved and so kept that the ballots within it could not be tampered with. The charge in this case is a charge against the integrity of the judges of election. It is a charge all along the line that in pursuance of a conspiracy theretofore entered into these judges corruptly and criminally made false returns. And it is said that the contestant must call upon the men whom he charges to be corrupt to prove that they, these corrupt men, put the ballots that were voted into the ballot-box; and one of these corrupt men took charge for sixty days of that ballot-box. That is neither common sense nor law. Here is a charge these men corruptly falsified the returns, returning hundreds for the contestee where tens were voted; returning tens for the contestant where hundreds were cast. That they did it in all the counties; that this method of falsification was not in one or two precincts, but in every precinct where time permitted investigation.

While that proof is made uncontradicted and unimpeached, the contestee, who had the power to answer by counting the ballots in the ballot-boxes, by calling these same political friends of his who took these ballots and counted them, and by proving by them they put the ballots into the boxes as they were handed to them by the voters, and the boxes were preserved—this contestee utterly fails to call from all those precincts a single inspector of election anywhere to prove the facts that would enable a count to be made of the ballots; he fails to get a single inspector of election anywhere in that district to prove a correct return was made anywhere.

So that to lay the foundation for counting these ballots we, if we are called upon, must first give character and credit to the witness by calling him—that witness whom we have attacked for corruption in making up the returns! Why, Mr. Speaker, you had as well say when a man is put in the prisoner's dock to be tried for a crime that it is illegal to prove his guilt by any other testimony than that of the criminal himself.

Suppose these judges were in the prisoners' dock under indictment for making false returns, and two witnesses go on the stand and show that they handed in 100 ballots for McDuffie, and saw the voters hold them in their open hands, hand them in to the officers of election, and yet when the returns came back it shows but 5 of them had been cast, and no other evidence was offered. Suppose the defendants were competent witnesses for themselves, and they sat mute in the prisoners' dock and refused to testify. Suppose no rebutting testimony came in; would that jury be permitted, under their oaths, to find any other verdict than that of guilty?

That is the exact state of facts here. Their return is prima facie evidence, but when it is attacked by competent testimony the prima facie case is rebutted, and it devolves upon the men who claim the correctness of the returns to call the men who made them. And yet contestee refuses to call a single one of the judges of election to cast from off their own shoulders the odium, if it is an odium, in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama, of having reported in every precinct the votes cast in favor of contestant for contestee, and the votes that were cast for the contestee for the contestant.

We allege—the minority of the committee—that the evidence in this case conclusively proves a conspiracy. Why? Time permitted only to take testimony in regard to two-thirds of the precincts. There were no shorthand reporters there. It is an odium to act as a notary or attorney in that district against the Democratic party. In two-thirds of the precincts in these five counties—in every one of them—there turns up the same character of fraud.

One precinct might have returns which would indicate such a fraud, but that would prove no such conspiracy existing amongst the whole of them. Possibly two might have returned the same character of fraud, but when two-thirds of them—every one that has been attacked in evidence—comes in with the same fraud it conclusively proves that the fraud was premeditated and permitted by the authorities controlling the Democratic campaign, and therefore every vote to which that fraud is attached must be ruled out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask leave to extend my remarks, although I may not avail myself of the privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE. I will ask if the gentleman from Illinois would like time to go on this evening.

Mr. ROWELL. How much time did I occupy?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twelve minutes.

Mr. ROWELL. No; I will not take more of the time from other gentlemen.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield more time if the gentleman wishes it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DUNN. I ask the gentleman from Georgia if he will not yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to designate a national vessel of war to convey the remains of General Paez, together with the commission appointed by Venezuela, to Caracas.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives that there be printed 10,000 copies of the addresses delivered in the House of Representatives on January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 451) granting a pension to Anna C. De Witt;

A bill (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.;

A bill (S. 455) for the relief of Andrew J. Lindsay; and

A bill (S. 147) for the relief of S. D. Barclay, G. D. Adams, and William H. Kimbrew.

VENTILATORS FOR SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 130) making an appropriation for ventilators and chimney-caps for the Senate and House of Representatives; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. COX also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8072) to divide into six classes the employés in the railway mail service, and to fix the salary of each class; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HELENA, ARK.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman from Georgia yields to me, and I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4472) for a public building at Helena, Ark., and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the district and circuit courts of the United States, the post-office, and internal-revenue office, and for other Government uses, at Helena, in the State of Arkansas. The site, and the building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $80,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited, after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $80,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 50 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Arkansas shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] asks unanimous consent that the House consider the bill which has been read.

Mr. DUNN. This is suspension day, and I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Arkansas has moved to suspend the rules.

Mr. STRUBLE. Can he not ask unanimous consent? I understand he has done so.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred House bill 4472, submit the following report:

This bill provides for the erection of a public building at the city of Helena, in the State of Arkansas, for the purposes of the United States district and circuit courts, the post-office, the United States revenue office and other Government offices.

The United States district and circuit courts have held two terms per annum at this city since 1876. For ten years the county in which the city is situated gave the Government the use of the county court-house and furniture free of charge, and since the expiration of that arrangement the Government has rented rooms in the second story of a business house and furnished them; but it is found these rooms are inconvenient and very unsafe for the keeping of the records by reason of the dangers of fire.

By an act of the Forty-ninth Congress this court was given the exclusive jurisdiction of counties containing about 300,000 inhabitants, and it is the only point at which a court of admiralty jurisdiction is held on the west shore of the Mississippi River between St. Louis and the Gulf of Mexico, while many very important navigable tributaries of that river flow into it from the west, and all the vessels navigating them touch at Helena, and that is the most convenient point for litigating all their controversies. It is not unlikely that Helena will at no distant day be made a port of entry or delivery for foreign commerce.

The postal business of the Government has assumed proportions there which now require more room and better facilities, and the business of the internal revenue also requires office room.

The Chief Architect estimates that $100,000 will be required to erect there a suitable building for the purposes of the Government, but the committee are of the opinion that a building sufficient to answer the present needs of the Government may be erected with $75,000, including the purchase of a suitable site.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: Strike out the word "eighty" where it occurs in lines 13 and 22 of the bill and insert the word "seventy-five."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to consider this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to the gentleman making his motion to suspend the rules, but the responsibility of a motion requiring a two-thirds vote is quite different from that of a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman for a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CRISP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DUNN. I think the gentleman from Georgia is under a misapprehension.

Mr. CRISP. I withdraw the motion to adjourn. I understood that the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Arkansas to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. McMILLIN. I dislike very much to object to the consideration of the bill; but I think, looking at the number of public-building bills we have been putting through, it is my duty to do so.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. McMILLIN said: I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill of the gentleman from Arkansas, reserving the right to vote against it. I do not favor the bill, but I am willing the House should consider it if it sees proper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I object.

POSTAL MATTER.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8073) to give persons who may mail matter within the United States facilities equal to those enjoyed by persons without the limits thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

J. Q. BARTON.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration a joint resolution to which I think there will be no objection on either side of the House. It simply grants permission to an officer of the United States Navy to accept an order of merit awarded to him by the Japanese Government for services in establishing the pay system of the Japanese navy while under leave of absence from our Navy for that purpose.

Mr. WISE. Who is it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Paymaster Barton. The resolution has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 68) in favor of J. Q. Barton.

Resolved, etc., That Paymaster J. Q. Barton, of the United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept the decoration of the "Order of the Rising Sun," conferred upon him by the Emperor of Japan as evidence of his appreciation of services rendered by that officer to the Japanese Government.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BOUTELLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred joint resolution (H. Res. 68) in favor of J. Q. Barton, having considered the subject, beg leave to report:

The committee find that at a time when the Government of the United States was manifesting a special interest in cultivating friendly relations with the Empire of Japan, Paymaster J. Q. Barton, United States Navy, was granted leave of absence for three years, with permission to enter the service of the Japanese navy, for the purpose of organizing a pay department for that navy, and also of instructing a number of Japanese youth for that service. Paymaster Barton was thus engaged by the Japanese navy department as instructor of accounts October 1, 1874, and served in that capacity until October 1, 1877, when his leave of absence expired, and, although the Japanese Government desired to re-engage his services, he returned to duty in the United States Navy.

At the time of the expiration of Mr. Barton's contract, Hon. John A. Bingham, United States minister to Japan, addressed the following letter to the Secretary of State, which we quote, to show the estimation in which his service was held:

"UNITED STATES LEGATION, Tokio, Japan, October 10, 1877.

"SIR: Three years ago Lieut. J. Q. Barton, paymaster United States Navy, on leave of absence, took service in the navy of this Government for the purpose of organizing a pay department in His Imperial Japanese Majesty's navy, and also instructing a number of Japanese youth for that service. Lieutenant Barton has acquitted himself with great credit and to the entire satisfaction of this Government, and returns again to duty in the United States Navy.

"The Japanese navy department has addressed to me a letter making acknowledgment of Lieutenant Barton's services, and expressing the thanks of the department, a translation of which letter I have the honor to inclose herewith.

"I have the honor, etc.,

"JOHN A. BINGHAM.

"Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS,
"Secretary of State, Washington, D. C."

The translation inclosed with Mr. Bingham's letter reads as follows:

"IMPERIAL NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"Tokei, 8th of 10th month of 10th year of Meiji (October 8, 1877).

"SIR: I have the honor to inform you that Mr. J. Q. Barton, paymaster of the United States Navy, who has been employed by this department as teacher of naval accounts since October 1, 1874, has taught faithfully and laboriously during three years, and has given full satisfaction to this department. I now, on the occasion of his return to his native land, desire to give this notice of the expiration of his contract time, and to acknowledge his services with thanks.

"I have the honor, etc.,

"NAKAMUDA KURANOTSKE,
"Admiral in the Navy and Deputy for the Minister of Marine.

"H. E. JOHN A. BINGHAM,
"Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary
"of the United States of America."

In further recognition of Mr. Barton's services, the Emperor of Japan has now conferred upon him the decoration of the fourth class of the Order of the Rising Sun. At the time when Mr. Barton was in Japan this order had not been established. Since it was instituted, however, its various decorations have been conferred upon foreigners who have rendered distinguished services to the Japanese Government.

Such marks of distinction are highly valued in oriental countries, and when they are voluntarily offered to a foreigner, as in Mr. Barton's case, after an absence from Japan for a number of years, the compliment is a marked one. The rejection of the decoration in such a case, especially as other Americans have accepted similar honors from other nationalities, might create an impression which would not be desirable in view of the unusually cordial relations which exist between the United States and Japan.

Mr. Barton is the only American who has ever served in the Japanese navy department, the foreign employés of that department having generally been English naval officers. This made Mr. Barton's position somewhat difficult, but he conducted himself with such tact and ability as to win the esteem of the department authorities and of his English colleagues, while fully carrying out the reforms which he desired to introduce. Through his efforts the American system of naval accounts was adopted, and that system is still in use in the Japanese navy.

The committee find that Congress, in a large number of instances, has granted permission for the acceptance of gifts and decorations conferred upon United States officers by foreign governments, private act No. 11, approved January 31, 1881, having granted such permission in no less than ten cases.

The committee desire to state that while they would be averse to granting permission to any officer of the United States to accept any order or distinction which would involve any direct or implied allegiance to any monarchical or other foreign government, they have inquired as to the nature of the order tendered to Paymaster Barton, and find that it is a mere official recognition of merit, bestowed upon persons who have become distinguished in scientific or other pursuits, and we believe that it can be accepted by an American citizen with entire propriety.

The Secretary of the Navy, under date of February 6, 1888, referring to this and another case of a similar nature, says:

"I would respectfully recommend a favorable report in both cases, in view of the evident desire on the part of two friendly powers to show in some way their appreciation of the valuable services rendered them by officers of this Government."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of joint resolution H. R. 68, in favor of J. Q. Barton, as hereunto appended.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN COMMISSION.

Mr. HUDD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1340) to provide for the appointment of a commission to inspect and report on the condition of Indian affairs, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill H. R. 3333.

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill H. R. 4472.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HELENA, ARK.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman from Arkansas gave me explanations of the bill of such a character that I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I should like, if the gentleman on the other side is recognized to call up a public-building bill, some gentleman on this side should be recognized for the same purpose. I have one in my hand which I should like the House to consider.

Mr. STRUBLE. I also have one which I desire the House to consider.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the bill be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been read and the report has been read. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The question was on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is the bill debatable at this stage?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is; the previous question not having been ordered upon it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like the report to be read in my time, or to hear a statement by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. I will send up the report. It is very brief.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let it be read in my time.

The report which is printed above was again read.

Mr. TAULBEE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has fifty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. TAULBEE. I suppose there is no rule to compel me to occupy that time?

Mr. PERKINS. What are the gross receipts of the post-office there?

Mr. DUNN. I can not tell the gentleman; but I suppose the amount runs up into the thousands. It is a Presidential office. The salary of the postmaster is about $2,000, I believe.

Mr. PERKINS. The salary is $1,700, is it not, and the gross receipts about $5,000?

Mr. DUNN. The chief necessity for the building is for a court-house. I would not ask for this appropriation to build a post-office alone.

Mr. ROWELL. How many people are there in the town?

Mr. DUNN. About 6,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much money does the bill ask for?

Mr. DUNN. Seventy-five thousand dollars; $20,000 less than the county court-house has cost.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I stated a while ago that I should oppose the passage of this bill. At first I objected to its consideration, but afterwards I withdrew that objection, reserving the right to oppose the bill. My objection then was and my objection now is, not to this bill specifically, but to the custom into which we are falling of erecting these buildings, at a cost of from $75,000 to $100,000 in towns of 5,000 or 6,000 inhabitants, where there is not post-office business enough to warrant paying the postmaster a larger salary than $1,700 or $1,800 a year. If that custom is to be continued there will be no end to the public buildings erected and no end to the taxation that will be required. I regret to have to say this much in opposition to the gentleman's bill, for I esteem him highly, and only a sense of duty compels me to oppose this bill.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, if it was not imperatively necessary for the needs and purposes of the Federal courts, I would not ask for this appropriation; but if we are to have a building at all, it should be large enough to afford the necessary accommodations.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would say to my friend that the trouble comes generally—not in this instance, I believe, but generally—from the system of getting a court established in order to get a public building, and then demanding a public building because you have a court.

Mr. DUNN. The court has held its sessions there for twelve years.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I said this was not a case in point, but there have been many cases of the kind I have described, and I think it is time to call a halt. I am not going to make any captious opposition to the gentleman's bill. I am content to state my objections and let the House pass upon them; but I think there ought to be a full House when these public-building bills are considered, especially as we have already devoted two or three days to measures of that kind.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] to state that they have regular sessions of the court at this place.

Mr. DUNN. Oh, yes; two sessions a year. We have had the court there for twelve years.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I move to amend so as to make the amount $5,0000 instead of $75,000.

Mr. DUNN. I hope the gentleman will not press that amendment, because the amount would not be adequate for even a one-story building. The county court-house cost $95,000; and it is no more than sufficient for the purposes of the county.

The amendment of Mr. STONE, of Missouri, was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the gentleman will not attempt to cut out this side of the House from having a bill considered.

BUSINESS REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, reported, as a substitute for the House resolution assigning Tuesday the 20th and Wednesday the 21st of March, 1888, for the consideration of business reported by the Committee on Labor, a resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] claims that he was recognized to call up a bill. I have no desire to be unfair, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to say that I had the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] to call up his bill.

CHICAGO WATER-WORKS.

Mr. DUNHAM, by unanimous consent, called up the bill (H. R. 3333) to authorize the city of Chicago to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-works purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the city of Chicago, county of Cook, State of Illinois, to extend a tunnel or inlet pipes into Lake Michigan so far as may be deemed necessary to insure a supply of pure water, and to erect a pier or piers and crib in the navigable waters of said lake for the making, preserving, and working of said aqueducts or pipes or tunnel: Provided, That such piers or crib shall be furnished with a beacon light, which shall be lighted at all such seasons and hours as the light on the piers at the entrance of Chicago Harbor.

An amendment reported from the Committee on Commerce, adding at the end of the bill the words "and shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, the House then (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 6, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AMERICAN FISHING INTERESTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of State, accompanied by documents and correspondence in relation to the recent negotiations with Great Britain concerning American fishing interests in British North American waters.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order of the Senate the message, with the accompanying documents, will be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF REBELLION RECORDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 16, 1888, a report as to what members of the Forty-seventh Congress have furnished lists for the distribution of the Records of the Rebellion, and the number of each volume remaining undistributed; which, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1254) granting a pension to Eliza J. Mayden;

A bill (S. 1137) for the relief of Adam L. Epley;

A bill (S. 1384) granting a pension to Margaret J. Cash; and

A bill (S. 1359) for the relief of Mary A. Doud.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1237) granting a pension to Anna Mertz, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1385) granting a pension to Hezekiah Cardwell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1446) for the relief of William A. Stockman, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1348) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth B. Dyer, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8) to provide for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and the issue of coin certificates in lieu of gold and silver certificates, and for other purposes, to report it adversely. I ask to have it placed upon the Calendar, at the request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. BECK. That bill was introduced by myself, and is now reported adversely by the majority of the Committee on Finance. I desire to give notice that on next Tuesday morning, and from that time on, if I can not be heard then, I shall endeavor to take the bill from the Calendar and ask the Senate to put it on its passage.

Mr. MORRILL. I am also directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, to report it favorably with amendments. I desire to say that the committee will submit a report to accompany the bill at an early day. I give notice that I shall endeavor to call the bill up at the very earliest moment.

Mr. BECK. I offer an amendment to be proposed to the bill, so that it may be printed with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 501) for the relief of W. H. Ward, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1037) granting a pension to the infant children of Michael A. Moran, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1928) granting a pension to M. J. Fogg, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 692) granting an increase of pension to Enoch G. Adams, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 696) granting an increase of pension to Enoch G. Adams, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

A bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Judson Knight.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Avis J. Hockey, praying that her name be placed on the pension-roll, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2253) granting a pension to Mrs. Avis J. Hockey; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Ella M. Grover, praying to be allowed an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Ella M. Grover; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Amanda W. Beach, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2255) granting a pension to Amanda W. Beach; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAWYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2927) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., to report it favorably with amendments, and to submit a written report thereon.

Mr. GIBSON. On behalf of a minority of the committee, I submit the views of the minority, concurred in by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and myself; and I ask that the views of the minority be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views submitted by the minority of the committee will be received and printed.

Mr. SAWYER. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report adversely on a Senate bill on the same subject, the bill (S. 1569) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., and to ask that it be postponed indefinitely.

The report was agreed to, and the bill indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HARRIS subsequently said: House bill 2927 was reported back from the Committee on Commerce this morning with amendments. It is a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn. I simply desire to give notice, inasmuch as it is very important as a matter of time, if the bill is to pass at all, that it pass promptly, that so soon as the bill and amendments have been printed I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1143) granting a pension to John Curtin, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1921) granting a pension to Robert Davis, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2064) granting a pension to Titus Wilder; and

A bill (S. 341) granting pensions to William Knight, Jacob Parrott, William Reddick, and John Whollam.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1919) granting a pension to John Fox;

A bill (S. 2166) granting a pension to Martha F. Woodrum, widow of James Woodrum, deceased;

A bill (S. 996) granting a pension to Caroline Ruppert; and

A bill (S. 1153) for the relief of Charles Wagemann.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1678) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Buffalo, N. Y., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE REBELLION RECORDS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents, and recommend that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the word "Congress," in line 9, down to and including the word "unsupplied," in line 10, in the following words, "shall be sold at cost or distributed to libraries yet unsupplied," and to insert:

Shall be put to the credit pro rata of the several Representatives of the State in which such districts are located who were not Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress.

So that, as amended, the joint resolution will read:

That all copies of the Records of the War of the Rebellion, Reports of the Tenth Census, and Report of the Public Lands Commission remaining undistributed of the quota of ex-members of Congress, shall be put to the credit and distributed upon the orders of their successors, respectively, in the Fiftieth Congress, in accordance with existing provisions of law: Provided, That copies of the above-named documents standing to the credit of ex-members who, in consequence of changes in the boundaries of Congressional districts, have no direct successors in the present Congress shall be put to the credit pro rata of the several Representatives of the State in which such districts are located who were not Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress: And provided further, That this resolution shall not be construed as withholding from parties already named to receive complete sets of said documents the volumes yet to be issued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives?

The amendment was concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2256) to correct the military record of J. M. Peyton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2257) to increase the efficiency of the medical division of the Pension Bureau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2258) to increase the efficiency of boards of surgeons for the examination of pension applicants; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EUSTIS introduced a bill (S. 2259) for the relief of Isidore Daigle and Rose Daigle Woodruff; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2260) restoring the name of Wilhemina Hosband to the pension-roll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2261) to correct the military record of Roswell M. Shurtleff, of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2262) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," approved June 3, 1884; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 2263) granting a pension to Frank Paschker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2264) for the erection of a public building at Grand Island, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 61) making an appropriation to enable the Government to participate in the centennial exposition of the Ohio Valley and Central States, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, from July 4 to October 27, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid regions of the United States, and I ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 60) directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States, and to report to Congress, was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas a large portion of the unoccupied public lands of the United States is located within what is known as the arid region, and now utilized only for grazing purposes, but much of which by means of irrigation may be rendered as fertile and productive as any land in the world, capable of supporting a large population, thereby adding to the national wealth and prosperity; and

Whereas all the water flowing during the summer months in many of the streams of the Rocky Mountains, upon which the husbandman of the plains and the mountain valleys chiefly depends for moisture for his crops, has been appropriated and is used for the irrigation of lands contiguous thereto, whereby a comparatively small area has been reclaimed; and

Whereas there are many natural depressions near the sources and along the courses of these streams which may be converted into reservoirs for the storage of the surplus water which during the winter and spring seasons flows through the streams, from which reservoirs the water there stored can be drawn and conducted through properly constructed canals at the proper season, thus bringing large areas of land into cultivation and making desirable much of the public lands for which there is now no demand: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, be, and he is hereby, directed to make an examination of that portion of the arid regions of the United States where agriculture is carried on by means of irrigation, as to the natural advantages for the storage of water for irrigating purposes with the practicability of constructing reservoirs, together with the capacity of the streams and the cost of construction and capacity of reservoirs, and such other facts as bear on the question of storage of water for irrigating purposes; and that he be further directed to report to Congress as soon as practicable the result of such investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that this joint resolution may now be considered by the Senate. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Having been read at length, a further reading of the joint resolution will be dispensed with, if there be no objection.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SAULSBURY, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Elizabeth E. Montgomery for the purpose of reference to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. GIBSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a page and assign him to the Press Gallery of the Senate for duty, and that he be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO SIDEWALKS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to ascertain what rules or regulations prevail in the District for granting authority to house-owners to extend the fronts and the door-steps of their residences into the streets, and to establish carriage-ways across the sidewalks to and from their front doors, and to inquire whether or not such rules and regulations and the practice under them are lawful and judicious, and whether such carriage-ways across the sidewalks are consistent with the safe use of the latter by foot-passengers.

DUTY ON HEMP.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration certain amendments reported from the Committee on Rules to the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further resolutions, concurrent or other?

Mr. HARRIS rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee rise to morning business?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, under the call of concurrent and other resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. On the first day of this month there arose a question, not very material, between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and myself about a certain vote in respect to amendments on the tariff bill of 1883. I ask the Secretary to read from the RECORD an extract from the Senator's speech, which I have marked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The extract will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

So going further into the tariff schedules I reach the article of hemp. I knew when I observed that article that the Senator was not a free-trader except as to the product of some people besides those of Kentucky. I find that the tariff on the different products of hemp remained precisely the same under the tariff of 1883, as under the preceding tariff, retained there by the vote of the Senator from Kentucky and his colleague, except where it was found convenient to raise the duty. No reduction, no change except upward, no reduction upon hemp, after whisky Kentucky's prime product, nearly equally that of Tennessee, and also I think the Senator from Tennessee who sits facing me participated in the robbery which the great duty on hemp produces. The increase on certain manufactures of hemp was from 30 to 35 per cent. and so on, but there was no reduction. So as I go South I find the article of rice——

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator as stating that I voted to increase the duties on hemp? Tennessee has no particular interest in that commodity. I am a little surprised if the Senator means to state that as a fact.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator did. Did he not?

Mr. HARRIS. It is not in accordance with my recollection. I have not looked at the RECORD since the day the bill passed.

Mr. PLUMB. There being a principle running through all this, a person may do a thing to-day that he forgets to-morrow; and so the Senator is very properly cautious in asserting what he did do.

Mr HARRIS. I ask the Senator, however, as he seems to be making statements from the RECORD, if he intends to be understood as stating I did so vote?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. I will look to the RECORD and see.

Mr. PLUMB. Either the Senator voted for it affirmatively or it passed nem. con. without his vote being recorded against it.

Mr. HARRIS. That may be true; I do not remember how the facts are; but when the Senator states that I voted for it, I shall look to the RECORD. I do not believe I did.

Mr. PLUMB. The lynx-eyed Senator from Tennessee never lets anything go through the Senate that does not meet his approval without expressing his dissent. Silence gives consent, and matters of this kind, grave matters that divide parties, involving what is on the Senator's side called robbery, are not of the kind that can be allowed to go by without responsibility being incurred.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Kansas in the line of his remarks, but certainly a point such as the last one he suggested falls a little below the dignity of debate which a Senator ought to indulge in. He knows very well, as every Senator knows, that there is not a day that amendments and questions do not pass here nem. con., without the attention of Senators being particularly called to them, and that according to the rule he lays down he would find himself committed a thousand times in a session to things that he does not approve.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, Mr. President; but this involves what has been termed, and will be termed over and over again in this debate, robbery, plunder, the unlawful appropriation of the property of many for the benefit of a few. That is not one of those things about which a person can escape responsibility who happens to be conveniently absent when the vote is taken.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say that since that debate I have had the clerk of the Finance Committee, a very able gentleman, carefully examine the record both in committee and in the Senate. There was no proposition ever made in committee and none ever made in the Senate to increase or diminish the duties on hemp; but I find on the 8th day of February, 1883, Mr. Slater, then Senator from Oregon, moved to put jute and jute-butts, a kindred product, I believe, upon the free-list. There was a debate of eight pages in the RECORD upon that question, and it was finally decided by a yea-and-nay vote, and I find the yeas favoring putting jute and jute-butts on the free-list to be Messrs. ALLISON, Barrow, COCKRELL, COKE, DAWES, Farley, FRYE, Grover, HAMPTON, HARRIS, Hill, INGALLS, Lapham, McDill, Miller of California, Miller of New York, MORGAN, PUGH, Sewell, Slater, VANCE, and Van Wyck.

So it appears from the RECORD that on the only proposition that ever approximated affecting the duties upon the article referred to by the Senator from Kansas, which was decided by a yea-and-nay vote, I voted in favor of putting jute and jute-butts upon the free-list.

I simply desired to make that correction because I did not choose to have myself put in a false position with regard to a matter about which I have had very profound and very distinct convictions.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. PLUMB. Notwithstanding the disclaimer of the Senator from Tennessee, I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the duty on hemp was increased. It got through, according to his statement, unbeknown to anybody. However, the duty was not only increased, but the report in favor of the increase came from the Committee on Finance, as I understand the facts.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to correct the Senator, because there is nothing in the Committee on Finance which indicates that there ever was such a question even suggested in that committee. Such is the record.

Mr. PLUMB. Then the committee must have bolted the bill whole, because it came from the committee and was supposed to represent their debate and their decisions. The Senate got possession of it by reason of its report from the Committee on Finance, and in some way, and undoubtedly by the action of both Houses of Congress and the President concurring, the duty on hemp was increased, that is to say, on certain manufactures of hemp.

Mr. HARRIS. That it may have been increased by the action of the conference committee, while neither House had by its action affected it in the one way or the other, I will not pretend to admit or deny, because I do not know; but I now assert again that upon a critical investigation no such question was acted upon by the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and no such question was acted upon by the Senate unless it acted in affirming and adopting the report of the committee of conference, and on the yeas and nays I voted against the adoption of that report.

Mr. PLUMB. How could the measure get through the committee without its action?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me again to say, what has been often said upon this floor, that the committee of conference, as the Senator from Kentucky and others have asserted over and over again——

Mr. PLUMB. I have not got that far along yet.

Mr. HARRIS. Changed the duties upon quite a number of articles that neither House had legislated upon. If changed at all, it may have been changed in that way.

Mr. PLUMB. This was not increased in the committee of conference; it was increased, according to my recollection, as the bill came from the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator is a member.

Now, the question is, how could the bill have got before the Senate from that committee without being acted upon, and how could that provision have got into it without the action of the committee? It was not acted on in the conference. The conference, I am authorized to state, did not change the duty on hemp as it was passed upon by the Senate and by the committee. It will not do to put all this on the conference committee, especially when there are no facts to justify it.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not admit, if the Senator will allow me, that the duty has been changed at all. He asserts that it has been. I tell him that if it has, then it must have been in the way I suggested, as it could not have been done in any other way. But I do not admit that it has been changed. The duty on hemp remains now as it remained before the passage of the act of 1883, as I understood.

Mr. PLUMB. The duty on certain manufactures of hemp was increased from 30 per cent. to 35 per cent.

Mr. HARRIS. That is altogether a different item. There is a difference between the manufactures of hemp and hemp. The Senator was referring to hemp in the discussion on the 1st of March.

Mr. BECK. The raw material.

Mr. HARRIS. The raw material.

Mr. PLUMB. It answers the Senator's purpose to distinguish between the thing in the raw state and the manufactured state. The general subject was the duty on hemp, the product of hemp, and so on. In no case was that reduced, and in one case it was increased. That is what I alluded to, and I do not think the Senator acquits himself of any complicity in that increase by referring to the vote that he cast in regard to the duty on jute-butts.

Mr. HARRIS. On jute and jute-butts.

Mr. PLUMB. On jute and jute-butts.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Kansas is satisfied to continue to assert the statement that he made, I will not say recklessly, but the statement that he made incautiously a week ago, in the face of the record, I am perfectly willing that that Senator shall stand upon his assertion, and I let the record stand to contradict him.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator let me have the RECORD from which he read the vote in 1883?

Mr. HARRIS. I will.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the Senator's attention to the portion of the speech which I will read, in which I expressly spoke of the duty on the products of hemp:

I find that the tariff on the different products of hemp remained precisely the same under the tariff of 1883 as under the preceding tariff, retained there by the vote of the Senator from Kentucky and his colleague, except where it was found convenient to raise the duty.

That is all that need be said on that point. What I said was in regard to the products of hemp. If the Senator is entirely willing to accept what he has made proffer of here as to the duty on jute and jute-butts as excusing himself from any complicity in the increase of duty on products of hemp, I am very willing to leave it there.

Mr. HARRIS. My statement went one step further. It went to the point that there was no proposition in the Committee on Finance of the Senate and no proposition in the Senate to change the duty upon hemp at all.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not a question of a proposition; it is a question of what was done. I do not know how that mysterious and awful body, the Committee on Finance, works its wonders, but I know this, that that committee certainly reported that bill, and whether it did it by proposition, by debate, by discussion, or whether it voted nem. con. with eyes closed, I do not know. I have no responsibility for what took place inside its doors, and I think the Senator from Tennessee is quite anxious to have it understood that he has none.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator had better quote the record showing the increase of which he speaks.

Mr. PLUMB. I had it the other day, and I will produce it if necessary.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3333) to authorize the city of Chicago to erect a crib in Lake Michigan for water-works purposes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 4472) for a public building at Helena, Ark., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 68) in favor of J. Q. Barton was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TREATMENT OF PETITIONS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration the amendments to the rules proposed by the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of proposed amendments to the rules.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Rules will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule VII, section 4. Strike out the words:

"Before any petition or memorial shall be received it shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist, and a brief statement of its contents made by the Presiding Officer or Senator presenting it."

And insert:

"Every petition or memorial shall be signed by the petitioner or memorialist and have indorsed thereon a brief statement of its contents, and shall be presented and referred without debate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the proposed amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next proposed amendment to the rules.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule XIV. Add as an additional clause:

"That it shall not be in order, except by unanimous consent, for the Committee on Appropriations to report to the Senate for consideration or action any general appropriation bill other than an urgency deficiency bill without having had such bill under consideration for a period of five days or more."

Mr. GORMAN. I should like very much if the chairman of the Committee on Rules would give the reasons why the committee have reported such an extraordinary proposition as this to the Senate. I ask him whether in the history of legislation for the past twenty years circumstances may not have arisen when it would be impossible to comply with this rule? It would obstruct legislation. I know it is very desirable to have these bills fully and properly considered in the Senate, but there are a great many exigencies that arise where it would be impossible to allow all the time provided by this change of rule.

When these bills come up, if there is not sufficient time for their consideration, we can then take the responsibility by our individual votes of stopping the wheels of government or compelling an extra session of Congress. It does seem to me, however, that to make this one of the rules of the Senate that a bill shall he here several days before it can be considered is impolitic. It is serving notice elsewhere that they ought to have these bills ready in time. What effect will that have? Unless there are stronger reasons than I have heard, I think it unwise to adopt this addition to the rules.

Mr. ALDRICH. The purpose of the amendment is obvious. The Senator from Maryland in the course of his remarks has shown that he understands the purpose of it as well as I. It is to serve notice upon those interested elsewhere that we can not receive and consider these bills in the very last days of the session, when there is no time for the intelligent consideration of them by the Committee on Appropriations. I suppose the experience of the Senator from Maryland as a member of that committee has led him to understand that no intelligent consideration can be given to a general appropriation bill in less than the time mentioned in the proposed rule.

At the last session three of the large appropriation bills were received in this body within two days of the close of the session; and the Senate had to either refuse to consider those bills at all or consider them in the most perfunctory and pro forma manner. The proposed rule which is suggested unanimously by the Committee on Rules, which was offered originally by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] not now in his seat, was reported by the committee for the express purpose which the Senator from Maryland himself has admitted to be a wise one, and I think every member of the Senate as well as himself understands its purpose.

Mr. GORMAN. I only desire to say that the difficulty of which the Senator from Rhode Island speaks is perfectly well understood, but the real trouble is to find a remedy for it. I think the only remedy is the proposition which was submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and is pending elsewhere, which will give additional time for the second session of each Congress. It is impossible to conduct the affairs of the Government properly in the short session of each Congress as it now is.

Mr. HOAR. It is impossible to hear the Senator on this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appeals to the Senate to be in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the difficulty we desire to overcome in this matter is perfectly well understood. It does not arise from any want of attention on the part of those charged with appropriation bills elsewhere, but comes from the fact that the second session of Congress is too short to accomplish the business of this great country, and I say that the Senator from Massachusetts suggested the only proper remedy, and another is pending now to increase the length of the second session of Congress and change the beginning of it. Until that is done I submit to the Senator from Rhode Island that this movement in all probability would add very much to our difficulty. We had better wait until the question is determined in the broader form which has been suggested, and let the Senate deal with the question of appropriation bills at the short session without an iron rule. I think the Senate can be trusted to do it. Let this whole question be settled upon the remedies proposed otherwise. I therefore suggest, as there is no present necessity for action, that it would be wise to let the matter go over and await action on the remedies to which I have alluded.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Maryland will not contend that the body charged by the Constitution with the duty of preparing these bills and originating them can not prepare and present them and pass them early in a short session as well as in a long one. I think it is an open secret that these bills would not have been sent here at such a late day of the session at any session for the last ten years except on account of some political exigency, or on account of the supposed existence of some political exigency which made it necessary that they should be held elsewhere until the very last days of the session.

Now, I submit to the Senator from Maryland that the time which is required by the Committee on Appropriations for the intelligent consideration of an appropriation bill does not depend upon the length of the session of Congress by any means, and it makes no difference whether the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted or not on that point. It is simply a question as to the time the Committee on Appropriations require for the intelligent consideration of bills sent to them, and I do not think any Senator on this floor believes the time fixed by this proposed rule, five days, is too short.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not see upon what principle or argument you can justify the idea of the Senate precluding itself from considering any subject-matter unless a committee has had it for five days. This rule simply declares that the Senate shall not, if it sees fit to do so, consider a bill that has not been before the Committee on Appropriations five days. The Senate always has that power. It may be a little inconvenient for it to abrogate that rule, if it is once adopted, but why shall the Senate fetter its own discretion on the subject? If it thinks five days is a proper time for the consideration of an appropriation bill when it comes up, why can not the Senate take five days or ten days? Why shall it by a rule say that its committee shall not report the bill for five days?

If the Committee on Appropriations has considered maturely within less than five days an appropriation bill, the Senate has an unlimited time for its consideration when it is reported, and I do not see in what respect this rule can in any way advantage the situation even if it is adopted. The Senate can have no reasonable object in saying that the Committee on Appropriations shall have only one day or two days, or shall consider a matter five days, for the Senate sits in judgment upon the Committee on Appropriations whenever it reports a bill. I can not see, therefore, that this resolution will be of any avail whatever except to embarrass the Senate, and for that reason I shall vote against its adoption.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me we had better go a little slow about this matter. There can be no doubt about the dilatory way that these bills have been treated elsewhere, and about the fact that the Senate is put to very great disadvantage thereby; but it might be put to still greater disadvantage by adopting a rule of this kind which would require it in an emergency to practically ignore an appropriation bill sent from the House of Representatives, and perhaps precipitate on the country the expense and annoyance of an extra session of Congress.

If a joint rule could be adopted whereby the two Houses would come to some understanding about this matter, it would undoubtedly promote the public interests; but I should very much fear that at the last moment we should be put into the same predicament we have been heretofore, and be under constraint to attempt to undo what we are now doing, but which we might fail to undo because of the objection of a single member of the Senate, and thus one member of the Senate would have it in his power to precipitate perhaps an extra session or compel something to be done which was against the will of every other member of this body. While the motive which the Committee on Rules has acted upon is a very praiseworthy one, at the same time I am under the impression that this matter ought to lie over for the present until we see what the future may develop.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not suppose this amendment would give rise to any discussion; but as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who proposed the resolution originally and who reported it from the Committee on Rules, is now absent from his seat, I suggest that it perhaps had better go over until to-morrow, and that the other rules reported by the committee may be acted on by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). If there be no objection the proposed amendment to the rules will be laid aside. The next amendment to the rules proposed by the Committee on Rules will be stated.

EXECUTIVE SESSION PROCEEDINGS.

The SECRETARY The next amendment reported by the Committee on Rules is:

Amend Rule XXXVI. Add, after the word "business," in line 1, clause 2, the words:
"Unless the same shall be considered in open executive session."
Add at the end of clause 3 the words:
"Or unless the same shall be considered in open executive session."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall both these amendments be treated as a single amendment? Is there objection to these amendments being so treated? The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next proposed amendment to the rules will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Amend Rule XXXVII, clause 1, by striking out "or," in the third line of the first paragraph, and inserting at the end of said paragraph the words "to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session;" so that the paragraph would read:
"When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification it shall be read a first time; and no motion in respect to it shall be in order except to refer it to a committee, to print it in confidence for the use of the Senate, to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have that read once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Does that provide that no motion in reference to it shall be in order except simply on the first reading?

Mr. ALDRICH. This amendment applies simply to the first reading.

Mr. HALE. Let that part relating to open executive sessions be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend Rule XXXVII, clause 1, by striking out "or," in the third line of the first paragraph, and inserting at the end of said paragraph the words "to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session;" so that the paragraph would read:
"When a treaty shall be laid before the Senate for ratification it shall be read a first time; and no motion in respect to it shall be in order, except to refer it to a committee, to print it in confidence for the use of the Senate, to remove the injunction of secrecy, or to consider it in open executive session."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. What was done, may I ask, in regard to the proposition about which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] was speaking a few moments ago?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was laid aside. The next proposed amendment to the rules will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Rules propose to amend the second paragraph of clause 1 of Rule XXXVII, by adding the words:

At any stage of such proceedings the Senate may remove the injunction of secrecy from the treaty, or proceed with its consideration in open executive session.

The amendment was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One of the previously proposed amendments was laid aside to-day, as the Chair understands, because the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] was not in his seat. Does he desire to proceed with it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have just held a conference with several gentlemen, members of the Committee on Appropriations, the chairman of that committee among others, and at the suggestion of that committee I prefer that the proposed amendment to the rules referred to shall lie over until we know exactly the conclusion which that committee may reach.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will go to the Calendar, and remain there until it shall be called up.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 505, being House joint resolution 117.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar being in order under the eighth rule, the Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. Is that before the Senate for consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water upon the reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., not necessary for the Army and Navy Hospital, the bath-houses erected and to be erected upon the reservation, and the bath-houses now erected and furnished with hot water by authority of the Secretary off the reservation, by permitting its use by not exceeding three bath-houses to be erected by individuals below and off Hot Springs reservation (the expense of obtaining the water to be borne by the proprietors of the bath-houses), the water to be furnished under the same restrictions and regulations as now govern the supply of hot water furnished to the bath-houses above and off the reservation; and the water rents for all bath-houses are to be increased to $30 per tub per annum.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not know that I shall make any very serious opposition to the passage of this resolution. I understand it meets the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the superintendent of the Hot Springs reservation and has passed the House of Representatives. For my single self, however, I can say that I believe the whole management of the Hot Springs reservation has been wrong. The reservation was made by the Government for the purpose of controlling in the interest of the public the hot water. Leases have been granted to certain individuals who have built bath-houses and have had practical control of the hot water, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, up to this time. A few bath-houses off the reservation have also been allowed hot water, which has been carried away from the reservation. Now all persons on the reservation, as I understand, have been prohibited from making any excavations which are likely to bring the hot water to the surface anywhere away from where it crops out by nature. I can understand no reason why, if it is wrong to allow the water to come to the surface off the reservation, it should be carried off the reservation by artificial means after it comes out of the natural apertures.

I believe the Government of the United States ought to control the entire matter in the interest of the general public. I believe that the private interests that are now there, the private bath-houses that are built on the reservation, which pay no taxes to the municipality of Hot Springs, pay none to the county of Ozark, pay none to the State of Arkansas, should not have these exemptions, but these bath-houses should be superintended and controlled by the Government of the United States in the interest of the general public.

This resolution, if I am not mistaken, will be at best a mere makeshift. Instead of satisfying the clamor that exists now and has existed at Hot Springs for a long time against the present Government management, this will only magnify and aggravate the evils that have existed heretofore. It is proposed now by this resolution to authorize the building of three bath-houses off the reservation, below the springs. I suppose there is no other reason for this than that there are already four bath-houses off the reservation above the springs. There are many hotels, boarding-houses, and bath-houses that will want the water. When the Secretary of the Interior or somebody else who attends to the hospital reservation shall select out of the number of applicants those who shall have this great privilege, all those who fail to get the permission to use the water will be dissatisfied, and the clamors that will come from them will be intensified over what they are now. All the time people at Hot Springs complain of this advantage being given to a few persons above the valley, and I do not see how granting the same privilege to a few persons below the springs, down the valley, is going to allay the trouble.

It seems to me the only intelligent way to act is to return to what the Government should have done in the first instance, and instead of allowing this great public watering-place to be controlled by a set of private individuals, as it is now, thereby making it absolutely a private monopoly, the Government of the United States ought to pay a fair valuation on the bath-houses on the reservation; and it ought to cut off every one from taking water off the reservation, and ought to put the whole thing under the superintendent of the Hot Springs reservation and make it in fact, as it is in name, a public matter.

For the purpose of accomplishing this result, I move to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert what I send to the desk to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves to amend by striking out all after the resolving clause and inserting what will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to take possession of all bath-houses and fixures now upon the reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and place them under the control of the superintendent of said reservation, to be controlled by him under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to ascertain the value of the property taken by him under the foregoing provision, and report the same to Congress.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, if it were possible to adopt the suggestion of my colleague, and pass a bill carrying out his ideas, I do not know that I should have any objection to it; but it is not likely that anything will ever induce Congress to take charge of that reservation and run the bath-houses by the Government of the United States. Knowing that we can not get Congress to pay for all the bath-houses and bath fixtures located on that reservation and run them as a Government institution, the only effect of the adoption of the amendment of my colleague will be to defeat not only this resolution, but to defeat any legislation whatever.

In the last Congress my colleague introduced a bill, similar in its character to the amendment he has offered to-day, embodying the same idea and having the same purpose in view. That bill went to the Committee on Public Lands, and the committee was unanimously of opinion that it was utterly impossible for Congress to adopt any such course. The whole question must rest on the merits of the proposition, because the amendment proposed contemplates the Government taking charge of all the bath-houses now located there and running the bath-houses by Government officers out of money taken from the Treasury of the United States.

This resolution has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Public Lands, and unanimously passed the House. While Mr. Schurz was Secretary of the Interior he held that he had power to authorize private persons off the reservation to erect bath-houses and use the water not necessary to those located on the reservation.

Under that ruling four bath-houses were located in the northern part of the city of Hot Springs, and they are there to-day. Senators will bear in mind that a large portion of the town is located south of the bath-houses on the reservation. The four bath-houses were located in the northern part of the city, off the reservation. Since the present Administration came into power the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, Mr. Montgomery, has decided that there was no authority to authorize the water being taken off the reservation. In view of that, Congress, during the last session, passed a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to allow those bath-houses now in the northern part of the city to have the benefit of that water, and that is the law of the land to-day.

Now, what does this resolution do? It simply says that out of the waste water, the water that runs away, estimated to be 300,000 gallons a day, that is not used for any purpose whatever, the Secretary of the Interior may be authorized to allow the erection in the southern part of the city of three bath-houses. This resolution does not contemplate any interference with the bath-houses located on the reservation. It does not contemplate any interference with those already located off the reservation. It simply provides that from the waste water not necessary for the bath-houses on the reservation, not necessary for the Army and Navy Hospital, not necessary for those bath-houses off the reservation already erected, but from the waste water the Secretary of the Interior may authorize the erection of three bath-houses in the southern part of the city.

What is the object and purpose of that? Upon that reservation there are bath-houses, and on the reservation is the Arlington Hotel, a fine, magnificent hotel. There are a large number of persons who go there of modest means, poor men, invalids, who are unable to pay the prices of the Arlington Hotel and take the baths at the bath-houses located on the reservation. In the southern part of the city there are a large number of small hotels where parties whose means are limited, invalids, can stay if they can have the baths near them there or near the places where they desire to stop while they stay there. It is on behalf of those citizens, those poor people who are unable to go to the Arlington Hotel and pay the prices asked there, that this is needed. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. My colleague says it is recommended by the superintendent of the reservation. If there is any objection from any quarter whatever, in or about Hot Springs, it is from the men who own bath-houses on the reservation, but I do not know that they all object. Some do.

In regard to the bath-houses on the reservation, I will state that there exists among the whole number of their proprietors, except one, a pool—that they have all united. I do not know whether it would be proper to call it a trust or not, but at any rate all the money that is received from all these bath-houses goes into one common fund, and it is divided between the proprietors according to the amount of capital that they have invested in the enterprise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that debate is limited to five minutes by each Senator on this measure.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will have an opportunity to explain the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. Only a few moments longer. This resolution has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Public Lands. It may interfere to some extent with the patronage of those who own the bath-houses on the reservation. They secured those privileges from the Secretary of the Interior without paying the Government of the United States one dollar. They were selected by him. He gave the privilege to such men as he saw proper, those already owning bath-houses being preferred. There has been some speculation in these leases not creditable to the Government. But he provided in each one of those leases specifically that they were subject to any legislation that might be had by Congress thereafter. They can not claim that their rights are interfered with, because they contracted in every lease that they took it subject to any legislation that Congress might think proper to adopt in the future. There can be no complaint on that score.

In addition to that they only secured those leases for a period of five years; yet the Secretary of the Interior has renewed the leases, and they now have had them for about nine years. Originally they only had the right for five years, but under the action of the Secretary of the Interior they have them for five years longer. I think the time will expire in December, 1888.

Now, on behalf of the visitors who go there and who are unable to patronize the bath-houses on the reservation, and on behalf of the people in the southern portion of the Hot Springs, all that we ask is that 300,000 gallons of water that daily goes to waste and can not be used for the purposes before mentioned—we ask that the Secretary of the Interior be allowed to permit three bath-houses to be located where they are wanted for the purpose of accommodating those who are unable to go elsewhere. We think it is a modest request, and I trust the Senate will vote down the amendment of my colleague, because if that amendment is adopted it amounts to a defeat of the resolution. It was rejected by the Committee on Public Lands in the last Congress.

One word more. Under the present law the bath-houses on the reservation and those off are now paying $15 per tub per annum. This resolution increases it to $30 per tub. The Secretary of the Interior recommended that it be increased to $40 per tub per annum, but the Committee on Public Lands thought that $30 would be a sufficient increase. I would state in regard to that that the money derived from that source goes to the improvement of the reservation and the building and improvement of a free bath-house now erected on the reservation. The money does not go into the Treasury of the United States, but the increased money will go to the improvement of the reservation and free bath-house for poor people who are unable to pay the charges.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not familiar with the history of the legislation in relation to bath-houses at Hot Springs, neither am I familiar with the facts connected with the situation there, but I have a letter here which has been written by an honorable gentleman who seems to feel that this resolution is going to interfere somewhat with rights that he thinks he possesses there, and that it is unfair. I confess I am not sufficiently advised to know whether it is so or not. The gentleman who writes to me has either a lease or some other arrangement by which he is running a number of bath-tubs on the reservation, and the thing he complains of is that it has already been done to a limited extent, and that it is proposed now to enlarge the authority that has been exercised in a small degree in licensing or giving permission to persons keeping hotels in different parts of that city to put bath-tubs in their hotels off the reservation, so that persons having the privilege of running bath-tubs on the reservation and not having an opportunity to keep a hotel on the reservation will be damaged by giving persons off the reservation having hotels the right to run bath-tubs as well. This would result in taking away from persons having bath-tubs on the reservation a privilege which they naturally would otherwise get. That is the purport of the letter I have received, written by a very good man.

I do not know exactly whether this resolution reported by the Committee on Public Lands and advocated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] who has just occupied the floor, does interfere as is stated to me in this letter, or not, but if it does it seems to me that it would not be exactly fair.

This gentleman would be perfectly willing, if he were granted the privilege of erecting a hotel on the reservation and having bath-tubs in it, to allow everybody else who may have a hotel or hotels in the city anywhere to enjoy the same privilege that he enjoyed; but if the purpose is to give this hot water that the Senator says is more than is needed upon the reservation to persons outside of it who are keeping hotels, without giving to those persons having it on the reservation the privilege of keeping a hotel, I think it would be unfair to them. All that I desire to do is to oppose any legislation that will place the persons who have got these privileges on the reservation at a disadvantage as between them and those off the reservation.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly. I am seeking light on the question.

Mr. BERRY. I stated awhile ago, and I repeat, that there is now one hotel at Hot Springs on the reservation, and located near the bath-houses, or some of them, that are now on the reservation. That is the only hotel there is or can be on the reservation.

In regard to the hotels down below, I want to say that I do not know any individual or number of individuals who desire to build a bath-house in the southern part of the city. I simply know that the entire southern part of the city wants the privilege for some one—I do not know who, nor do I care—to go in there and have bath-houses in order to afford those who stop there an opportunity to bathe without being compelled to go to board at the Arlington Hotel, which is near the other bath-houses.

Mr. CULLOM. I will read a portion of this letter, and I would read it all but for the fact that there are in it some matters personal to myself:

I would be pleased if you would offer an amendment to any bill that may be introduced, to the effect that hotel privileges and sufficient space for the same be granted to the holders of bath-house leases on the Government reservation. This is a matter of justice to us; and in fairness, if the water be given to those off, it may be claimed that the water is wanted only for bath-houses off the reservation; but it has already been given to hotels, and one large hotel, the Avenue, has a bath-house in it, but no bath-house on the reservation is allowed hotel privileges. Now, if the matter is to be extended, we want fairness and not unjust d'scrimination, and I am sure the United States Congress does not desire to treat us unfairly if the matter were made plain.

That represents what I desire to express here on the floor of the Senate. My own information is that the substitute offered by the other Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] ought really to be adopted, so as to place this whole matter in the hands of the Government, and so that when persons go there seeking relief they shall find what is already held out to be the fact, that they can get relief without being extorted from by hotel-keepers and others who are holding the bath-tubs. I believe that we ought to adopt the substitute of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in place of the resolution offered by the Committee on Public Lands; and if that be not done, all I desire is that a certain amendment be made to this resolution, if it needs it, so that there shall not be a discrimination against those people who are holding bath-tubs upon the reservation.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the substitute be reported. I was out of the Chamber when it was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, to all those who are at all familiar with the circumstances and the location of Hot Springs, it will occur that there is very great force in what has just been said by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. There is, of course, a line marking off the Government reservation from the territory occupied by the town. It is sharply defined. All of the hot water comes to the surface on the Government reservation and within a few feet of the line of that reservation. Now, if the Government authorizes the building of bath-houses by private individuals on the reservation, and at the same time authorizes hot water to be carried off the reservation to hotels situated off the reservation, and does not permit bath owners on the reservation to erect hotels or boarding-houses or anything of that kind, it must be perfectly clear to every man who stops for one moment to think, that the Government is discriminating against its own property and discriminating against the hot water where it comes out of the ground by permitting facilities to people off the reservation which people on the reservation can not under any circumstances have. This, it seems to me, is unjust to those who hold Government leases.

I agree with my colleague in complaining of some things that have been done by the Government in the grant of the leases upon the reservation. They have been given without pay to private individuals at the will of the Secretary of the Interior, and have been made the subject of speculation; but does it cure that evil to start the same class of evils on the outside? If you provide there for the use of three bath-houses under this resolution, who will be applicants, who will apply for the privilege of putting bath-tubs in their own houses? And when these three new bath-houses are erected their keepers will have a right to join the pool of which my colleague complains, and we shall have the evils heretofore complained of on the reservation extended off the reservation and a discrimination made by the Government against its own property.

It seems to me there is but one reasonable way to settle all this. When the Government took possession of this property years ago and declared it should be kept as a sanitarium for the benefit of the general public, it seems to me it did wrong when it allowed the first lease, when it allowed anybody to go upon the Government reservation for the purpose of putting up bath-houses. If the Government intended to use the hot water in the interest of the general public, it ought to have done so at the public expense. But as we have a Federal officer there who has charge of these things and controls the hot water, I can not understand the great wrong in allowing the Government to pay private people who have invested their money there, take possession of their property, and make this what it ought to be, a public sanitarium indeed and in truth.

I have no sympathy whatever with this movement; and yet I have very little hope that the Senate of the United States will agree with me in my views. I have submitted the question to Secretaries of the Interior, one after another, and I have never yet been able to get one of them to recommend the course I have advocated. I went before the Committee on Public Lands at the last Congress and asked them to sustain the same proposition, and they replied that the Government of the United States should not build bath-houses. I have no sympathy with that feeling, so far as I am concerned. The Government has a superintendent there; it pretends to control the reservation; and if the Government manages and controls it, why should it not do so entirely?

The complaints of which we have heard come from the public. There ought to be no ground for any of the complaints of preference for one bath-house over another. The general public should have all the benefit of the hot water, and then there would be no ground of complaint. There is at present one hotel upon the Government reservation, and that has been the parent of very much of the trouble we have to deal with here. Everybody not connected with that hotel has been complaining that its owners have facilities for bringing people there, which others who are off the reservation do not have. That is not remedied by our authorizing hotels off the reservation and allowing them to have hot water in their buildings, a privilege denied to others. The Arlington Hotel has a lease for ten years which expires in a short time. Everybody, I believe, except those interested in the hotel is opposed to the continuance of the lease, because it is said that the Arlington Hotel is the only hotel on the reservation, and its owners have an undue advantage over the general public.

But you propose now to do something off the reservation by authorizing water to be carried off the reservation to favorite bath-houses in certain localities. I think that is opening a Pandora's box of evil that will only magnify the trouble that now exists, and will not be a relief.

My colleague complains that if my system is adopted it will result in confusion. This I do not agree to by any manner of means. The same argument might be made against any amendment which might be drawn. If the ideas that I have embodied here are right, if the Government of the United States ought to take control of the hot water entirely, we can do our part to bring that result about without regard to what has occurred elsewhere.

I believe it is altogether likely that some such provision could be carried out, and that we could succeed in making this matter public. The complaint of the people who are interested in these bath-houses, as I suggested a while ago, is that they have large amounts invested, and that they realize nothing like what they expected. But besides that they "pool their issues," as it is called, and they divide the receipts among them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. By unanimous consent he may proceed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish only to make an observation or two more.

I imagine that no one here suspects that my opposition to this matter has been inspired by anybody. My colleague suggests that there is nobody opposed to the passage of this resolution except the bath-house people at Hot Springs. That I believe is true; and if the suggestions that I make here are not to be heeded, I want to say frankly that I am in favor, if the present system is to be kept up, if we are to have three or four bath-houses in another part of the town, of having bath-houses in another part of the town; but the truth is, they ought all to be kept off and the hot water kept on the reservation.

I have no objection to the passage of the resolution if the plan I have suggested is not to be adopted. If we are going to allow these people to come in with bath-houses for five years and build them up, and continue that course indefinitely, and make what was intended to be a great public sanitarium simply the property of private individuals who pay no taxes for the exercise of their ownership and the profits they derive, then I think it would be well to provide for bath-houses off the reservation; but why three; why not three hundred instead of three? If you permit people off the reservation to build hotels and private bath-houses, no doubt you will find that nobody will go to the reservation and pay; and it will only be a short time till no one will go to the reservation except those who go to the Government hospital. The result will be that all the water that comes out of the Hot Springs reservation will be surface water and will be carried off to hotels off the reservation, and the Government will have defeated itself in providing for any reservation at all. There is no reservation unless you keep the hot water on it. When you scatter that, you have absolutely thrown away the whole reservation, and you may as well repeal the act by which the ground on which it is located was reserved from private ownership.

I submit what I have said as a simple matter of justice to myself. I regard this system as absolutely pernicious. I believe it will come back to plague the Senate, and you will have constant applications made, and sooner or later you will be driven to adopt the course I suggest; and the Government must become the absolute owner or it must turn it over to private individuals entirely. There can be no half-and-half control of this matter, one part by the Government and one part by individuals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BERRY. I ask to be allowed five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. BERRY. In reply to that which has been stated by my colleague, I say that it is impossible to secure what he wants, because the House of Representatives sent a committee to Hot Springs in the Forty-eighth Congress, who staid there for weeks and took testimony, and they reported against the plan recommended by my colleague. As I stated awhile ago, the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, during the last Congress, unanimously, except myself—I was willing to vote for his bill if it could be adopted—gave the opinion that it ought not to be adopted.

Now, these bath-houses are there; and the question is, shall we allow from the waste water that is benefiting no one—that runs down that valley and is not utilized—shall we allow it to be taken, not for hotels, but allow individuals to erect bath-houses in the southern part of the city, paying the same price, paying $30 per tub per annum? The men who build these houses, the bill provides, shall pay the expense themselves of conveying that water there, and the Government retains the right to cut off the water if they fail to comply with the regulations.

I agree with my colleague when he says the Government has made a mistake when it adopted the lease plan; but they are there and they are going to remain there, and if we refuse to pass this resolution the result is that there are four bath-houses off the reservation in the north part of the city, and the southern part below has nothing, while the 300,000 gallons of water are running away daily.

It is for this reason and in behalf of the poor invalids who go there and are unable to go to the hotel on the reservation, and for their convenience, that I ask that this authority be given to the Secretary of the Interior. I am satisfied it is this or no legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, since we have had the Hot Springs there has been always trouble. The trouble grows out of the fact that the Government is dealing with a class of questions that it ought never to deal with.

When the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the Government owned that tract of land, it would have been the height of wisdom for the Government to have turned it over to the State of Arkansas on condition merely that that State should operate it and carry it on, or see that it was operated and carried on, for the benefit of such portions of the people of the United States as might need the healing influence of the waters. This local control would have been better than any control the Government ever could give; and yet what we are doing is a hundred per cent. better, ever so much better than what is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If the Government is to give these baths, it must furnish those who go there with medical attendance in order that the baths may be properly taken. If we are to enter upon the management and control of this sanitarium, then it must be done in such a way that no possible disadvantage may grow out of that management. I am told by persons who have been there, as I have not been—I have never had the good fortune—that it is necessary to take the baths with great care; that whoever takes them must take them under the advice of a competent physician. If, therefore, the Government gives the baths, it must furnish the physician; it must take the utmost care that the people who go there, its citizens, are not damaged by taking the baths, and, of course, as we take in the physicians we take in the other surroundings as well. We ought to have a drug store as a necessary accompaniment, and all the other things that tend to the health of afflicted people who go down to Hot Springs for the purpose of receiving the benefit of the baths.

I can not adopt any such idea as that. It were better a great deal for the Government and were better a great deal for the sick people of the United States if the Government would withdraw all control of these baths. The subject is a constant source of irritation. We have leased certain bath-houses on the reservation. Everybody else wants them. These leases are said to be a monopoly. It may be so.

The resolution urged by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] proposes to dispose of the surplus water in a way to which on the face of it there can be no objection, and I do not know that there is any objection to the resolution as reported. It would seem as though if there was more water there than can be used there ought to be certainly a method by which it can be utilized; but whatever is to be done it is a great deal better that the Government should let what is going on there continue to go on, or should turn over the whole thing to the State of Arkansas, or should sow the whole ground with stalks rather than that it should undertake the giving of the baths, with all the paraphernalia and all the surroundings of that kind of business.

I think therefore if anything is to be done, if there is a necessity for utilizing the water, we should pass the resolution as it came from the House, which I understand is in the same terms as the bill that came from the Committee on Public Lands. In any event there is nothing but evil in the proposition made by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] that the Government should take possession of this business and proceed to give baths and carry on a sanitarium for the sick.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think there are some considerations connected with this resolution that are rather too important to be passed over silently. I understand the argument in favor of the resolution is that there can not be obtained enough consideration by the two Houses of Congress for the public interests of the people of this country as against private interests to do what it is manifestly the duty of Congress to do. If there were no other reason than that, it would impel me to vote against the bill and in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

This resolution seems to be in the interest of private individuals as against the people at large. I mean so much of it as leaves the leases intact and continues the monopoly of the water in the hands and control of a few individuals privileged by the act of Congress, and the management of the Secretary of the Treasury, to extort great sums of money from the diseased, the suffering, and the poor, for the use of the public property dedicated by Congress to them.

If this can not be done because Congress is under the control of these private interests, then I am in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. What does the Senator mean?

Mr. CALL. I mean, not that feature of the bill which proposes to utilize the surplus water, but I mean the failure on the part of Congress to dedicate this water to the general public. This resolution perpetuates that system.

Here is a great sanitarium, a great beneficence, reserved by the people of the United States for the benefit of the public, passed to the hands of a few individuals for the purpose of making fortunes for them out of the misfortunes, the sufferings, and necessities of the people and out of the public property. Why has not Congress the virtue to do what the people desire to be done and what duty requires to be done? Why should not the United States build upon that reservation the bath-houses, either free to all its people or giving the use of the water to those who pay such prices as may be adequate in the comfort and cost of keeping the different apartments that may be assigned to them?

I see no reason why a system of that sort can not be devised. The Senator from Arkansas says it can not be done. Why? Because a committee of the other House has gone to Arkansas and has had conference with the interested parties, and comes here and opposes its being done in the interest of the public. Mr. President, to utilize that water is manifestly the duty of Congress. There should be baths and bath-houses provided by which every portion of it could be used. Why give it to private individuals? Why not allow it to be reserved for the public upon the best terms that can be provided?

I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. VOORHEES. I believe the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the special order be informally laid aside until we conclude this matter.

Mr. VOORHEES. I shall feel compelled to object, because I want to have the matter considered further, and I should be glad to have it go over until to-morrow for that reason independent of the superior merits of the pension bill just announced as the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Arkansas. The question in the pending bill is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 181) granting a pension to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 5, after the word "from," it is proposed to insert the words "the infirmities of age or from;" so as to read:

And who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, whatever difference of opinion may have existed as to the effect when the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] was adopted striking out the word "totally," if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] now be adopted, there can be no question but that it practically makes this a service-pension bill. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas admitted all those to receive a pension who were to any extent incapacitated for manual labor. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from Iowa proposes to admit any man who in any degree is suffering from the infirmities of age. Now, I ask if it is not true that every man who served in the Union Army a quarter of a century ago can not prove that he is to some extent incapacitated? I ask if he can not prove that he is suffering in some degree from the infirmities of age?

The Senator from Nebraska estimated that there were a million soldiers yet living who served in the Union Army. Of that number about 20 per cent., something less than three hundred thousand, are on the pension-roll. If those three hundred thousand or less than three hundred thousand cost the Government of the United States, annually, over $80,000,000, the other seven hundred thousand must certainly cost the Government more than $200,000,000 more in addition to the present pension-roll, making a grand total of $300,000,000 annually.

Mr. President, if we are to pass a service-pension bill, as this will become when we adopt the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, I submit that the fair and open way would be to call it a service-pension bill, and not pass a service-pension bill in disguise under the term of a dependent-pension bill, because this language can have no other construction save and except to admit every man who can prove that he is to any extent incapacitated or suffering in any degree from the infirmities of age.

I have no disposition to make any extended remarks upon this matter, but I think in fairness if the Senate adopt the amendment they practically open the door to the pensioning of every man who served in the Union Army. I do not say that all will claim it and all be placed on the roll, but I say this bill so amended makes it possible that each and every one of them can be so placed.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I reach the same conclusion that is reached by the Senator from Arkansas, but the motives that prompt me to that conclusion are entirely different. I do not propose to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and yet I am in full accord with him, that if there be a case where an ex-soldier by reason of the infirmities of age is incapacitated for manual labor and dependent upon himself for self-support, such soldier should be pensioned. I do not think, however, that to reach this result it is necessary to change the language of the bill. It reads as now amended:

> That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and who are without other adequate means of self-support, shall, upon making due proof, etc., receive a pension. It seems to me that it is immaterial whether this incapacity for the performance of manual labor comes as the result of accident, as the result of wounds formerly received, as the result of disease, or as the result of old age; there is the same incapacity.

I do not think that, for the purpose of construing this language, it will be necessary for us to go into the fine-spun distinctions that are made by the medical profession. If a man is incapacitated, being dependent on himself for manual labor, I submit that it is immaterial whether that incapacity comes from advancing years or from a wound; and therefore it seems to me that it is entirely unnecessary that this bill should be changed as proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I certainly have no disposition to interfere with the purpose of the Committee on Pensions in reporting this bill, as I understand that purpose from their own definition. It has been distinctly stated by members of the committee that their desire is to have the benefit of this bill extended to all persons who may have served three months in the military or naval service of the United States in the late rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are suffering from disabilities which incapacitate them for the performance of manual labor. Such persons are to receive the pension here provided. It seemed to me that there was a distinction existing between incapacities resulting from the infirmities of age and those resulting from physical disability, but I was not disposed to rest entirely upon my own impression about that. I therefore took the pains to consult members of the medical profession in that respect, without telling them why I desired to know, whether such distinction existed, and from all of them that I consulted I received the same answer, that there was a distinction between incapacities resulting from the infirmities of age and those resulting from physical disability.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator will permit an interruption, the language of the bill is not "incapacity resulting from physical disability," but if they are "suffering from mental or physical disability * * * which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit if a person is so aged as not to be able to perform manual labor, such person is clearly within the language of this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If I am to take what members of the profession tell me in that regard, I must differ from the Senator from Nebraska; and if we are all to consider the experience we have had in reference to decisions in the Pension Office on medical questions of this kind, we should all be very careful to make the terms of the bill broad enough to cover the various distinctions that have there been established. If the disabilities resulting from infirmities of age are included in the term "physical disability," then it is going to do no harm to put in the language which is embraced within my amendment; but if, on the contrary, the Commissioner of Pensions should hold, as members of the medical profession tell me would be held, that there is a distinction between incapacities resulting from the infirmities of age and those resulting from physical disability, then we ought to be sure to cover both by the inclusion of the amendment I have offered.

A man who has served his three months, has been honorably discharged, who has not in fact and technically the physical disability which incapacitates him for labor, who may have the incapacity which has resulted from advancing years, may find himself, although he may be as deserving as any other soldier who has served for the term, left out under the terms of the bill reported by the committee; and it is only to guard against that and to protect all of that deserving class that I introduce this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted. It is not for the purpose of enlarging the scope of the bill, as stated by the committee, but to be sure that we have all within it that the committee tell us they intended to have.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, when this pension bill was before the Senate last, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], traveling entirely outside of the record and subject-matter of debate, made use of remarks which I thought at the time should be revised and corrected; but since he has allowed them to stand in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I do not feel, in justice to myself and others, that I can allow them to pass without correction and review. I will ask the Secretary to read the marked paragraph I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper sent to the desk will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

> And that was all said to be done in order to protect the American laborer; he was told that he should accept payment in nothing but gold coin, while the poor, ignorant people of India were willing to take silver. What brought about this condition of things? The Senator from Ohio is more responsible for it than anybody else. The record shows it. When Congress undertook to strike down our silver coinage at the dictation of England, and when Germany and England and the United States combined and struck it down secretly, so secretly that General Grant, who was then President, did not know it, though he signed the bill; Mr. Blaine, the then Speaker of the House, did not know it; Mr. Garfield did not know it; Mr. KELLEY, who had charge of the bill, did not know it—not one of the Argus-eyed reporters found it out. He is responsible for it. Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, was chairman of the conference that settled it on the part of the House, and Mr. SHERMAN was chairman on the part of the Senate. They knew it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I would not even have regarded this as worthy of notice, as I knew the Senator from Kentucky was under some excitement, but that he uses the word "secretly," intimates that this was done entirely under cover, by some pretense or other, and that I was responsible, selecting me although I had had no connection with the debate in regard to this pension bill. From the general magnanimity of the Senator from Kentucky I did not believe he would allow these words to stand, but as they do stand in the RECORD, I will endeavor to show as briefly as I can that they are entirely false and unfounded, not only in point of fact but in point of reflection, not merely to myself but to the other persons engaged in the passage of the coinage bill, and I think I can do it from the public records without resorting to any declamation or any other remarks.

The coinage bill, to which the Senator refers, was introduced in Congress as early as 1870. I have here the official correspondence, including the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, of the date of June 25, 1870. I find in this the summary of the bill, and also the bill itself as it was originally introduced in the Senate, in a summary made by the Comptroller of the Currency giving the changes proposed in the existing law. It says:

> The silver dollar, half-dime, and three-cent piece are dispensed with by this amendment. Gold becomes the standard money, of which the gold dollar is the unit. Silver is subsidiary, embracing coins from the dime to half-dollar; coins less than the dime are of copper-nickel. The legal tender is limited to necessities of the case, not more than a dollar for such silver or 15 cents for the nickels.

Then I find in the bill itself, which is attached to this document, that in section 15 it is provided—

> That of the silver coins, the weight of the half-dollar or piece of 50 cents shall be 192 grains, and that of the quarter-dollar and dime shall be, respectively, one-half and one-fifth of the weight of said half-dollars.

Then section 18 provides—

> That no coins, either of gold, silver, or minor coinage, shall hereafter be issued from the mint other than those of the denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth.

By these sections, a long time afterwards becoming the law, the silver dollar, which had existed from the foundation of the Government but had not been coined to a large amount for fifty-odd years, was dropped from our coinage, and it is that offense that the Senator says was secretly, furtively done; so secretly that Grant did not know it; that Blaine did not know it; that others did not know it.

Mr. President, these sections stood in that bill during three long continuous sessions, during which time this subject was debated over and over again by every leading member of the Senate and every leading member of the House of Representatives. I have the law here as it passed nearly three years afterwards, and these sections which I have already read became the law as it passed, and are as follows:

That the silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar, a half-dollar or fifty-cent piece, a quarter-dollar or twenty-five-cent piece, a dime or ten-cent piece; and the weight of the trade-dollar shall be 420 grains troy.

And adding the weights of the minor coins in French grams; then there is the same provision, section 17, of the law as it passed, the same in hæc verba as in the bill when first introduced:

That no coins, either of gold, silver, or minor coinage, shall hereafter be issued from the mint other than those of the denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth.

This provision of the statute in substance and in effect remained in the bill during all its long-pending consideration. It was open as the air and as public, it having been printed thirteen different times and debated over and over again; and yet these provisions which suspended the coinage of the silver dollar were a part of the bill in every stage of the controversy. There was no change whatever made in the second clause, which practically suspended the coinage of the silver dollar; but in the first section there were two changes. One was that instead of the silver dollar, which was not mentioned in it, there was the trade-dollar provided for, provided for at the request of the producers of silver, at the request of the Senators from the Pacific coast, and at the request and on the petition of the dealers in and producers of gold and silver in California that the trade-dollar was put upon the statute-book, its weight increased, its value increased so as to afford the means of exporting silver. That was the change. There was some little change also in the weight of the minor coins; and that was all. With these exceptions, the law as it now stands, which the Senator from Kentucky says did so much evil in this country, is precisely the bill as it stood in every stage of its progress except in these two minor particulars of which I have spoken.

Now, let us go a little further; let us look at the history of this act. I do not wish to consume much time upon it, but here I have it in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1876. I find there the history of the statute in full:

On April 25, 1870, the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted the following letter to Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Then follows that letter. Then here is what is said, and this history of the coinage act of 1873 is transcribed from a speech of Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, now mayor of that city:

The coinage of the silver-dollar piece, the history of which is here given, is discontinued in the proposed bill. It is by law the dollar unit, and, assuming the value of gold to be fifteen and one-half times that of silver, being about the mean ratio for the past six years, is worth in gold a premium of about 3 per cent. (its value being $103.12)—

So that the silver dollar was then worth 3 per cent. more than the dollar in gold—and intrinsically more than 7 per cent. premium in our other silver coin, its value thus being $107.42. The present laws consequently authorize both a gold-dollar unit and a silver-dollar unit, differing from each other in intrinsic value. The present gold-dollar piece is made the dollar unit in the proposed bill, and the silver-dollar piece is discontinued. If, however, such a coin is authorized, it should be issued only as a commercial dollar, not as a standard unit of account, and of the exact value of the Mexican dollar, which is the favorite for circulation in China and Japan and other oriental countries.

That statement made as to the relative value of the silver and gold dollar was made in this original document as early as April 25, 1870; and yet that bill, containing many sections, involving a codification of the entire coinage law, was continued upon our table day after day and session after session. It was passed in both Houses of that Congress, but not in sufficient time to have the amendments and differences between the two Houses reconciled by a committee of conference, and so it went over to another Congress, when it was again debated with these provisions staring every man in the face, so that no one could read the bill without knowing them and knowing that they were there and knowing the precise effect of the measure.

I find among these documents, sent to us long before there was any controversy upon this subject, a statement of Mr. Robert Patterson, of Philadelphia, sent to Mr. Knox. He says:

The silver dollar, half-dime, and three-cent piece are dispensed with by this amendment.

Again:

On December 19, 1870, the bill was reported from the Finance Committee of the Senate and printed with amendments.

On January 9, 1871, in accordance with previous notice, the bill came before the Senate, and was discussed during that day and the following day by Senators SHERMAN, Sumner, Bayard, STEWART of Nevada, Williams, Casserly, MORRILL, and others, and passed the Senate on the 10th by a vote of 36 yeas to 14 nays.

On January 13, 1871, on motion of Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, the Senate bill was ordered to be printed. On February 24, 1871, Mr. KELLEY, the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, reported the bill back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, when it was again printed and recommitted. Mr. KELLEY again, on March 9, 1871, introduced the bill in the Forty-second Congress, when it was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Coinage, when appointed.

And so on, the different stages during that whole Congress are given. Mr. KELLEY said in reporting that bill the second time to the House:

We proceeded with great deliberation to go over the bill, not only section by section, but line by line and word by word. The bill has not received the same elaborate consideration from the Committee on Coinage of this House, but the attention of each member was brought to it at the earliest day of this session; each member procured a copy of the bill and there has been a thorough examination of the bill again.—Congressional Globe, volume 100, page 322.

This was at the second session. Then he speaks:

There are one or two things in this bill, I will say to the gentleman from New York, with his permission, which I personally would like to modify—that is to say, I would like to follow the example of England and make a wide difference between our silver and gold coinage.

He wished to follow the English example and make the silver coinage a mere token money, although our minor coinage was then as now a token money.

Again Mr. KELLEY said:

But, sir, I again call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentlemen who oppose this bill insist upon maintaining a silver dollar worth 3½ cents more than the gold dollar, and worth 7 cents more than two half-dollars, and that so long as those provisions remain you can not keep silver coin in the country.

There are other passages showing that in the following session, while other features of the bill were the subject of controversy, these two provisions which dropped the silver dollar and substituted in its place the trade-dollar stood in the bill always open for consideration, plain and manifest, distinctly printed, and considered over and over again.

The bill was again printed in the Senate on May 29, 1872, and referred to the Finance Committee. Senator SHERMAN, in reporting it back on December 16, 1872, said:

"This bill has, in substance, passed both Houses, except that the Senate bill enlarged and increased the salaries of the officers of the mint. It was passed by the Senate at the session of the last Congress, went to the House, and now, somewhat modified, has passed the House at this Congress, so that the bill has practically passed both Houses of Congress. The Senate Committee on Finance proposed a modification of only a single section; but as this is not the same Congress that passed the bill in the Senate, I suppose it will have to go through the form of a full reading, unless the Senate are willing to take it on the statement of the committee, the Senate already having debated it and passed it." (Page 203, volume 106, third session Forty-second Congress.)

After further debate, on motion of Mr. Cole, the bill was printed in full, with amendments.

On January 7, 1873, it was again reported, with amendments, and again printed for the information of the Senate. It passed that body on January 17, 1873, after a discussion occupying nineteen columns of the Congressional Globe. In the course of the debate Senator SHERMAN said:

"This bill proposes a silver coinage exactly the same as the French, and what are called the associated nations of Europe, who have adopted the international standard of silver coinage; that is, the dollar (two half-dollars) provided for by this bill is the precise equivalent of a five-franc piece. It contains the same number of grams of silver, and we have adopted the international gram instead of the grain for the standard of our silver coinage. The trade-dollar has been adopted mainly for the benefit of the people of California and others engaged in trade with China.

"That is the only coin measured by the grain instead of by the gram. The intrinsic value of each is to be stamped upon the coin. The Chamber of Commerce of New York recommended this change, and it has been adopted, I believe, by all the learned societies who have given attention to coinage, and has been recommended to us, I believe, as the general desire. That is embodied in these three or four sections of amendment to make our silver coinage correspond in exact form and dimensions and shape and stamp with the coinage of the associated nations of Europe who have adopted an international silver coinage." (Page 672, volume 106, third session Forty-second Congress.)

The bill was sent to the House and on January 21, 1873, on motion of Mr. Hooper, it was again printed with amendments, and subsequently committees of conference were appointed, consisting of Messrs. Hooper, Houghton, and McNeely, of the House; and Senators SHERMAN, Scott, and Bayard, of the Senate. The reports of the committees of conference were agreed to, and the bill became a law on February 12, 1873, substantially as originally prepared at the Treasury.

The bill as prepared at the Treasury omitted the silver-dollar piece, and the report stated the fact of its omision three different times and gave the reasons therefor. The silver-dollar piece was omitted from the bill as it first passed the Senate. It was also omitted from the bills reported by Mr. KELLEY; but in the bills reported by Mr. Hooper a new silver dollar was proposed equal in weight (384 grains) to two of the half-dollars then authorized.

The Senate substituted a trade-dollar weighing 420 grains in place of the dollar of 384 grains, in accordance with the wishes of the dealers in bullion upon the Pacific coast, that being considered by them as the most advantageous weight for a coin to be used for shipment to China and Japan.

The weight of the subsidiary silver coin was increased about ½ per cent. in value, making the half-dollar, quarter-dollar, and dime, respectively, of the weight of 12½ grams, 6¼ grams, and 2½ grams, or precisely one-half, one-quarter, and one-tenth, respectively, of the weight of the French five-franc piece. All of said coins were made a legal tender in nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment. The bill was read in full in the Senate several times, and the record states on January 9, 1872, that it was read in the House. It was undoubtedly read at other times. The bill was printed separately eleven times, and twice in reports made by the deputy Comptroller of the Currency, thirteen times in all, by order of Congress. It was considered at length by the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Coinage Committee of the House during five different sessions, and the debates upon the bill in the Senate occupied sixty-six columns of the Globe and in the House seventy-eight columns of the Globe.

It might be asked, why was the silver dollar dropped from the coinage? It was for this reason, as shown by the report I now hold from the Director of the Mint, made this year: that although that coin was established in the beginning of the Government and was started to be issued, there having been $27,000 issued in the first year after the formation of the Mint, it soon ran out. It was not a convenient coin for the people, and then for long years after not a single dollar of this silver coin was issued. It had then become practically disused, and the whole amount that was issued prior to that time was probably less than a million dollars all told. The Mexican dollar was the dollar then largely in circulation.

Then commenced a time in 1841 when small sums were again beginning to be issued, sometimes running as low as $1,100 in a year, and it so continued, and always less than $100,000 a year, until in 1859–'60, when it ran up to $600,000, and again fell to $78,000, and so on down until 1872–'73. Until it was dropped from our coinage and the trade-dollar took its place there were, all told, issued by the Government of the United States in eighty years of its history less than $8,000,000.

It was this coin which by long experience was shown not to be adapted to the wants of the people, which for forty years in succession had not been issued at all, that was dropped, and in its place there was provided a coin called the trade-dollar, and that at once supplied an important demand for commerce and was issued in large quantities.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me.

Mr. TELLER. After the statement that this coin had been found not to be adapted to the use of the country, I wish the Senator to state to us why it was not coined. He knows that that is not the reason. He knows that it was because it was worth 3½ per cent. more than a gold dollar.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was a sufficient reason.

Mr. TELLER. That was the reason, and I wish the Senator to state it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already stated that; I commenced with stating that that was a proper reason why it should be; that at the very time the law was passed, the bill was introduced, it was worth $1.03. I have stated that.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; but the Senator stated that it was found not to be adapted to the wants of the people. I deny that.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was found not to be adapted because, as I said before, it was worth more than a gold dollar, and was not issued.

Mr. TELLER. Put it that way, then.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated that. The Senator must have been out of the Chamber. I stated the exact value of it when the law was passed. It was under those circumstances that it was dropped.

The Senator from Kentucky says that it was done secretly, under cover, so as to reproach somebody. Although he was talking about a bill that dealt only with pensions, he traveled over the tariff question, then came to the silver question, and dragged up this old campaign story and threw it at me, as if I was responsible, and said that it was done secretly.

Why, Mr. President, this thing was done in the light of day. Not only that, but when it was finally brought to a committee of conference, who were those conferees who are thus arraigned? Mr. Bayard, Mr. John Scott, of Pennsylvania, one of the most honored members of this body, and myself were the conferees on the part of the Senate. Mr. Hooper, the Senator says, knew it, and I knew it, and there was something devilish about it, something secret. A bill that had been debated for three long sessions, considered line by line, and precept by precept, is held up as a matter of reproach against Mr. Hooper, now gathered to his fathers, chairman of the committee on the part of the House, and myself.

Why did he not include the rest of the conferees? Here is the conference report. They did not in the slightest degree change either of the sections named which suspended the coinage of the silver dollar. The conference had no relation to them. The dispute was about other matters entirely. Here is that conference report. "Mr. SHERMAN submitted the conference report on the 6th day of February, 1873." It is signed: "JOHN SHERMAN, John Scott, T. F. Bayard, managers on the part of the Senate; S. Hooper, William L. Houghton, managers on the part of the House."

Why the Senator from Kentucky should lug in this matter here under these circumstances it is not for me to say. I appeal to the generosity and sense of candor of Senators whether we must be thus arraigned on collateral issues pending a bill of this importance to the soldiers of our country.

This is all I have to say, for I do not wish to interfere at all with the Presiding Officer, who, I believe, is entitled to the floor; but during his temporary absence I thought it proper to make this correction, not only in vindication of myself, but of all those who participated in the passage of that important bill.

Mr. INGALLS and Mr. BECK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the pending amendment be read.

Mr. BECK. I know that the audience here is assembled for the purpose of hearing the Senator from Kansas, and I do not propose to interfere with him nor interrupt him for more than a moment, if he will allow me. I had no idea the Senator from Ohio was going to make this explanation to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I told the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I did not know it until the Senator said in committee this morning that he would do so at some time or other. I supposed that I should be advised before it was done.

I only want to say, if the Senator from Kansas will allow me, that to-morrow morning or whenever I can have an opportunity I will show, notwithstanding all that was read about the former bill, that when Mr. Hooper brought in his substitute he so stated on the floor of the House and induced all of us to let the bill go, because it had nothing in it; and in the Senate when the discussion was had the Senator from Ohio, in a dispute or an argument with the then Senator from California, Mr. Casserly, insisted that silver should circulate the world over and as far as our commerce went, and that the Revised Statutes were changed to carry out this purpose, and that Mr. KELLEY, who had charge of the bill originally, as I read the other day, or had inserted in my speech, having told the Senator from Connecticut that I would do so; Mr. Blaine, the Speaker of the House; Senator VOORHEES, then an active member of the House; Mr. Garfield, afterwards President, and General Grant, who signed the bill, all show that they knew nothing about it. I will show that this matter originated with the Senator from Ohio himself in a conference held in Paris in 1869——

Mr. SHERMAN. In 1867.

Mr. BECK. When this letter was translated, and sent to Mr. Seward by Mr. Ruggles, and was commended by the Emperor of the French because it was for a gold unit alone. Mr. Ruggles lauded the Senator from Ohio, and stated that the German Emperor did and all the distinguished powers of Europe did, because he had thrown such a moral influence in favor of gold and gold alone as the unit of value. It was because of that conference in Paris that Mr. Ruggles reported, and all these bills were brought here, and the scheme was repudiated by the American people every time they had a chance.

I will bring up all these documents and I will show that there never was an act that was more misunderstood by the American people, that was more condemned the moment it was ascertained, and that the silver dollar was restored in spite of the veto when the Senator from Ohio was himself Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Hayes, and that every statement made in regard to it has been falsified from that day to this. I will then apologize to the Senator from Ohio if I do not prove that to have been the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 5, after the word "from," it is proposed to insert the words "the infirmities of age or from;" so as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and who are without other adequate means of self-support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive $12 per month.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, considerations of decorum and propriety, excessive, perhaps, and sometimes overstrained, have deterred me from participation in debate thus far this session of the Senate, my impression being that perhaps order could be more impartially maintained and the rules of the Senate better enforced by abstinence on the part of the Presiding Officer from the controversies of the floor.

I was surprised, therefore, one day last week, upon returning to the Chamber after a brief absence, to learn that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] had taken occasion when I was not present to allude to me in terms the reverse, to say the least, of complimentary in a discussion in which I had taken no part, and including in his combined and concentrated and coagulated cynicism not me only, but the inhabitants of the District of Columbia also, and all the comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic; intimating that those were incapable of disinterested patriotism, and that the surviving veterans of the Union armies were a mob of sordid mercenaries organized for plunder, and for sale to the highest political bidder.

Personal allusions to myself I will pass by with but one single observation, and that is, that the nomination and election of Grover Cleveland have made the pretensions of any American citizen to the Presidency respectable. There is no man in this country whose ignorance is so profound, whose obscurity is so impenetrable, and whose antecedents are so degraded that he may not justifiably aspire to a Presidential nomination—by the Democratic party. [Applause and laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The galleries must preserve order.

Mr. INGALLS. I regret, Mr. President, that the Senator from Missouri is not present to-day. He is a courteous and courageous antagonist. I have waited for his return. The day following this debate the discussion turned rather upon the infirmities of the tariff than upon the infirmities of age. Thereafter the Senate adjourned over, and this is the first convenient opportunity that I have had to address myself to the bill under consideration.

To whatever degree the Senator from Missouri saw fit to criticise with indignity and to asperse with personal allusion a colleague upon the floor who was not present, I shall not imitate that bad example, but confine myself, so far as he is concerned, to what has been disclosed in his autobiography.

The Senator from Missouri was born in a State that did not secede from the Union—the State of Kentucky. His autobiography shows that he represented in the Confederate house of representatives for two years, and in the senate of the Confederate States for one year, the State of Missouri. The State of Missouri did not secede, Mr. President, and while I have no doubt that the Confederate house of representatives and the Confederate senate were the judges of the election, the qualifications, and the returns of their own members, it would be a special gratification to the historian to know upon what conditions and by what methods a member of the Confederate house of representatives or of the Confederate senate could have been admitted from the State of Missouri that never seceded from the Union. I do not propose, however, to push my investigation into the subject of his right to represent that State in the Confederate senate so far as to move to refer his credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is a matter of ancient history.

Nor, sir, do I allude to this matter in any disparagement to the Senator from Missouri any more than I do to the same fact in the history of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] who sits now before me, and who with a great deal of profusion of speech rose and denounced the "super-loyalty" of the Grand Army of the Republic, criticising them as a horde of beggars thrusting their demands into the Senate. I do not speak in derogation either of the honor or the courage or the integrity of that Senator. I allude to it as a matter of history only, and for the purpose of showing, so far as I may, that in their devotion to the South and to the Southern Confederacy the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Missouri can not be suspected of insincerity. No flag of State allegiance summoned them to cast their fortunes with the South. No phantom of State sovereignty allured them, as it did so many others, into that terrible catastrophe. No, sir; they went because they wanted to go. They went because they believed that slavery was better than liberty; because they believed that secession was better than union; because they believed the stars and bars were more worthy of a patriot's allegiance than the Stars and Stripes; because they believed that Jefferson Davis was more entitled to respect and confidence than Abraham Lincoln. They went South, they allied their fortunes with the Confederacy because they preferred to do so, and their sincerity can not be suspected.

It is a little singular, however, that for some subtle and incomprehensible reason, the Confederates from Union States are a little more pronounced, a little more aggressive, and a little more violent in their denunciations of the North, of the Union armies, of the veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic, than those who had the excuse to which I have referred of following their States into the vortex of secession. So it is that upon every occasion when debate affords the opportunity the Senator from Missouri, born in a Union State, a citizen of a Union State by adoption, rises here and eulogizes the exploits of the Confederate armies, extols their achievements, and by irresistible inference degrades, belittles, and sneers at the Union armies and their friends and allies.

So, in the debate on Wednesday last, the Senator from Missouri rises and says:

When General Lee surrendered at Appomattox there were but eight thousand muskets—

If the Senator had been there there would have been eight thousand and one. [Laughter.]

When General Lee surrendered at Appomattox there were but eight thousand muskets left of that splendid army which had fought the world in arms and had been battered and beaten back by overwhelming numbers for four long years. Out of companies that went into that terrible strife, of one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and eighty men, but ten or twelve returned back to their kindred and homes. The South to-day is filled with maimed and crippled soldiers, who, amid shot and shell and saber-stroke, fought for their honest convictions as men had seldom fought before. They ask no pensions, sneeringly said the Senator from Missouri. The Federal soldiers are asking for pensions, but the gallant survivors of the Confederate armies have asked for no pensions!

God be thanked—

Said the Senator from Missouri, growing devout—

God be thanked, they would not take them. They are not in almshouses, and no man has ever seen one of them begging for bread.

The computation of the Senator from Missouri must certainly have been made with his fancy. It dizzies the arithmetic of the imagination to understand upon what volume of statistics he founded his amazing and incredible statement that there were but 8,000 survivors of the Confederate armies at the surrender at Appomattox. If that Senator would pluck a few of the plumes from the dazzling tail of his imagination and stick them into the wings of his judgment, he would fly a bolder, a more direct, and accurate flight.

The official reports show that from the 29th day of March, 1865, to April 9 of that year there were captured of General Lee's army 49,485 men in arms, and that on that fatal day for the Confederacy, when God failed to bless their cause, as the Senator from Missouri said he hoped He would have done, there were taken, in addition to those who had been previously captured and paroled, 27,416 men in arms, making a total, instead of 8,000 men with muskets who were in the final crash and collision between the avenging and triumphant forces of the North and the broken and shattered remnants of the Confederacy, of 73,911 men in arms. Yet the Senator from Missouri, in his eagerness, his avidity to belittle, undignify, and humiliate the North, and to extol and praise and exaggerate the achievements and the numbers of the South, diminishes that number of 73,911 to less than 8,000. His mathematics are certainly giddy.

There is but one parallel to the extraordinary inaccuracy of this statement, and that is the other allegation in his speech that out of the 2,300,000 Union soldiers more than one-half had applied for pensions, a statement that would have been refuted by the simplest inspection of the latest return of the Commissioner of Pensions.

As I said, Mr. President, I do not attempt, nor do I intend to cast the slightest personal aspersion, the slightest imputation by the remotest inference upon the honor and patriotism of either the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Missouri who does not honor us with his presence. I mention these things for the purpose of saying that I have no doubt they fully and thoroughly represent the convictions, the feelings, the purposes, and the intentions of their constituencies. They know what sentiments will awaken an answering response in the South. They know what it is popular to say at home

When the Senator from Missouri alludes to the efforts which are being made by the Republicans in this body to afford pensions to the dependent, indigent, and suffering survivors of the Union armies now enrolled in the Grand Army of the Republic as an attempt by candidates for the Presidency to bid for the soldier vote, the Senator from Kentucky will pardon me when I say that I have no doubt speeches like those which he made, and which the Senator from Missouri repeated, were intended to bid for the Confederate vote; and they will get it every time. It is a center shot. Appeals like that strike the bull's-eye and ring the bell. [Laughter and applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will suspend one moment. The rules of the Senate require that order shall be preserved in the galleries, and the Chair will see that those rules are enforced.

Mr. INGALLS. I have never heard, Mr. President, during the fifteen years that I have been in this body, any repudiation of sentiments like those avowed by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kentucky from any quarter in the Democratic party. Time and time again have I heard those same sentiments reiterated and repeated here. If they were obnoxious to any sentiment of the Southern States, why should we not have heard some disavowal of them? Why are they repeated here iterum iterumque, ad nauseam, until the heart of the patriotic North rises in indignation, and never a word of protest spoken by any Democratic Senator North or South? No, Mr. President, they know the sentiments, they know the convictions, they know the emotions of the people behind them, and that is the reason for their utterances.

Why was it that when the last appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who by one of the strange caprices of history now sits in judgment upon those great constitutional amendments that were adopted and agreed to against his protest and his efforts, rose in this Chamber and said that he would resent as a personal affront any imputation upon the honor, the integrity, or the patriotism of Jefferson Davis as a personal insult to himself—why was it that when he said he had no doubt Jefferson Davis would occupy a niche in history by the side of John Hampden and George Washington, no Democratic Senator, North or South, rose to repudiate and disavow it? Yet the moment that any Republican Senator or any editor of any Northern newspaper or any organ of the Grand Army of the Republic talks about the Union Army, the grandeur of its achievements, the obligations and duties of the nation toward its members, we are charged with waving the ensanguined undergarment, raking up the ashes of sectional strife, and appealing to partisan hatred and wrong and malice. It is time that the twenty-four Confederates who constitute twenty-four thirty-sevenths of the Democratic members of the Senate should understand how the people of the North feel about these matters.

Mr. MORGAN. How about the other two on that side?

Mr. INGALLS. And that they were fully advised that the Northern people are not in the dark or unadvised about the situation.

Mr. MORGAN. Does not the Senator from Kansas recognize the fact that he holds his place as President of the Senate in consequence of the votes of two of the Confederates who fought and surrendered at Appomattox?

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose I do; I never heard them deify Jefferson Davis. I never have heard one of them get up here and denounce the efforts of the Republicans to pension Union soldiers. Have you? Answer me, "thou learned Theban."

Mr. MORGAN. Nor have you heard me, an Alabamian and a Confederate soldier, denounce the right of Union soldiers to pensions. We have not come and asked alms of you or your friends.

Mr. INGALLS. You have done it repeatedly.

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. INGALLS. There never is an occasion when an attempt is made to pass a pension bill for the surviving soldiers of the Union armies, that every Democrat does not put on his spectacles, go to the blackboard, and take the crayon and say, "It is going to cost too much."

Mr. MORGAN. I do not deny that we have asked pensions from the Government of the United States for that splendid body of men who went to Mexico, into a foreign country——

Mr. INGALLS. I will get to that pretty soon.

Mr. MORGAN. Who fought for their country and brought to it a dowry which I believe includes a large part of the State of Kansas, and who we have always felt had a claim to sincere gratitude on the part of the American people.

Mr. INGALLS. I will come to that shortly; but I want the Senators who are opposing this pension bill, and opposing it on the ground of economy and on the ground the Senator from Kentucky did, that it is an attempt to dispose of the surplus for the purpose of preventing a reduction of the tariff, to understand that the disguise is exceedingly thin and that nobody is deceived by it.

The South do not like the Union soldiers; the Democratic party do not like them—they never did. So it is now, after the animosities of the war should have died away; and upon every conceivable occasion when we attempt to enlarge the pension system or liberalize its provisions, Senators rise here one after the other and peevishly complain that it is going to cost too much.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me just a moment I will say that the Democratic party liked General Hancock very well, and voted for him.

Mr. INGALLS. They did, as they are going to vote for again, Grover Cleveland, under compulsion. They thought they could fool the Northern people by voting for a Union soldier, but they did not. We understand very well what the voting for General Hancock meant. It was just the same as voting for Horace Greeley. You have been engaged in illicit intercourse with all the degraded elements of the North for the last twenty-five years.

Horace Greeley! The Democratic party attempting to delude the North by nominating and voting for Horace Greeley to show that they were reconstructed, that they would fain fill their bellies with the husks that the swine did eat, and they could not; and then the Senator from Alabama rises and assures us with a suffusion of patriotic loyalty that they voted for Hancock. Why, Mr. President, we understand why they voted for Hancock. We know why Hancock was nominated. We know why that other ally of the Confederacy, George B. McClellan, was nominated, who had just declared that the war was a failure after he had been trying for two years to make it so. No, Mr. President, these pretensions are altogether too diaphanous. They require to have the drapery removed for an instant.

But I am not quite through with this aspect of the question yet. In 1886, on the first day of May of that year, less than two years ago, there was in the city of Atlanta, in Georgia, a great historic occasion. A statue to one of our former associates in this body was to be unveiled, a man whom I honored, and whom we all respected. Upon that occasion the venerable ex-president of the Confederacy was invited to be present. It was a day that never will be forgotten in the annals of the South. They flocked to that city as men go to a banquet or as doves flock to their windows. They—

> Came as the winds come, when > Forests are rended;
> Came as the waves come, when
> Navies are stranded.

The city was decorated with the Confederate emblem brought out to make a Confederate holiday, and an orator was selected to give voice to the sentiments of the inhabitants of the lost Confederacy, not in 1866, but in 1886, twenty years after the surrender at Appomattox, and twenty years after we had been told that the South in good faith had accepted the results of the war and desired to come in under the old flag and obtain the necessary appropriations. [Laughter.]

I have the oration delivered by the speaker upon that occasion, not a garbled and mutilated extract printed in a Northern paper, but the corrected copy printed in the paper that the orator himself edits, I believe. Therefore it is entitled to credence; it is authentic and authoritative. It may be, perhaps, instructive and entertaining, in view of what we hear about the reconstruction of the South, their repentance, their desire to co-operate with the North in accomplishing the great results of our destiny under the Constitution of the Union, to hear what he says; and at the risk of trespassing upon your patience I will, with as little abbreviation as I can, repeat the oration delivered on that occasion. As I said, it was to unveil a monument to Benjamin Harvey Hill. The orator said:

> Had the great man whose memory is perpetuated in this marble chosen of all men one witness to his constancy and his courage, he would have chosen the honorable statesman whose presence honors this platform to-day. Had the people of Georgia chosen of all men one man to-day to aid in this sacred duty, and, by the memories that invest him about, to give deeper sanctity to their work, they would have chosen Jefferson Davis first and last president of the Confederate States.

I do not blame him for that, Mr. President. I can understand it; in a certain sense I honor it, because he spoke what I believe were the honest, truthful, and courageous sentiments of his heart, as I believe the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Missouri have done in this debate.

> It is good, sir—

He continued—

> [turning to Mr. Davis] for you to be here. Other leaders have had their triumphs. Conquerors have won crowns, and honors have been piled on the victors of earth's great battles; but never yet, sir, came man to more loving people. Never conqueror wore prouder diadem than the deathless love that crowns your gray hairs to-day. Never king inhabited more splendid palace than the millions of brave hearts in which your dear name and fame are forever enshrined. Speaking to you, sir, as the son of a Confederate soldier who sealed his devotion with his life—holding kinship through the priceless heritage of his blood to you and yours—standing midway between the thinning ranks of his old comrades, whose faltering footsteps are turned toward the grave, and the new generation thronging eagerly to take the work that falls unfinished from their hands—here in the auspicious present, across which the historic past salutes a glorious future, let me pledge you that the love we bear you shall be transmitted to our children and our children's children, and that generations yet unborn shall in this fair land hold your memory sacred and point with pride to your lofty and stainless life.

> [turning to the crowd], let us teach the lesson in this old man's life, that defeat hath its glories no less than victory. Let us declare that this outcast from the privileges of this great Government is the uncrowned king of our people, and that no Southern man, high or humble, asks greater glory than to bear with him heart to heart the blame and the burden of the cause for which he stands unpardoned. In dignity and honor he met the responsibilities of our common cause. With dauntless courage he faced its charges. In obscurity and poverty he has for twenty years borne the reproach of our enemies and the obloquy of defeat.

And as if this were not enough, as if eulogy had not been exhausted, he rises to the height of the occasion; and coming nearer, I think, the frontier of sacrilege, the boundary line of blasphemy, than ever man came before, he said:

> This moment—in this blessed Easter week—that, witnessing the resurrection of these memories, that for twenty years have been buried in our hearts, has given us the best Easter we have seen since Christ was risen from the dead. This moment finds its richest reward in the fact that we can light with sunshine the shortening end of a path that has long been dark and dreary. Georgians, countrymen, soldiers, and sons of soldiers, and brave women, the light and soul and crown of our civilization, rise and give your hearts voice as we tell Jefferson Davis that he is at home among his people.

I do not propose to rehearse what that distinguished representative who had just been eulogized said in his reply, except in one single sentence. I will quote one paragraph in which he refers to the services rendered him by that illustrious man whose statue was that day being unveiled in a somewhat memorable debate that occurred in Congress. He said:

> He had nothing to ask, but he had much to give, and when I was the last from the South who could excite any expectation of benefit, it was Hill whose voice rose triumphant in the Senate and mashed the injurious Yankee down.

Referring, I suppose, to our friend who is now in Florence.

Yet, Mr. President, before the lilies of that Easter were faded,

> The funeral bak'd meats
> Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables, in New York or Brooklyn, and in this same year of our Lord 1886, this same orator, who declared that Jefferson Davis was the uncrowned king of the Southern people, and that no more glorious Easter had arisen since Christ died on Calvary than that which gave them the opportunity of renewing their devotion to him and the ideas that he represented, made a pilgrimage to the North, and at the New England dinner in the city of New York poured out his treacle, cold cream, honey, and maple sirup all over the North, declaring that the South had been wandering in a far country, that they were anxious to return to the home of their fathers, and the whole Democratic party rose and fell on his neck, and put shoes on his feet, and a ring on his finger, and said, "Lo, this my son that was lost is found." But some protested, in the language of the Scripture, as the elder son who had not wasted his substance with harlots complained that the father had killed the fatted calf, although "thou never gavest me a kid that I might make merry with my friends."

When was that orator sincere, Mr. President? When did he speak the sentiments, the feelings, and convictions of the Southern people—when he delivered that oration on the 1st day of May, 1886, in Atlanta, in the presence of applauding thousands, or when he went up to the New England dinner, in December of the same year, and spilled oil and wine all over the American people?

If our friends who are opposing this dependent pension bill imagine that I entertain any feelings of ill-will or malevolence toward them for the course they pursue, they are mistaken. I do not very well understand how they can act in any other way. I have sometimes thought with curious reflection what my emotion would have been had the result of the conflict been reversed; if the armies of the Confederacy had dictated terms of peace in this capital; if the Georgia statesman had fulfilled his insolent menace to call the roll of his slaves in the shadow of Bunker Hill, and if the flag that now floats above us had been a dishonored and a degraded rag; if this Chamber had been spoliated and sacked as you tried to spoliate and sack it; if this country had been destroyed and overthrown as you tried to destroy and overthrow it; if the Constitution of the United States had become an antiquated relic and American citizenship a forgotten attribute; if slavery had been declared to be right and liberty wrong, and if the theories of Calhoun and of Jefferson Davis had been declared to be the true measure of interpretation of the Constitution.

Mr. President, such calamities were imminent often during the war. From the place where we now sit the challenge of the sentinel upon the hills of Virginia could almost have been heard, and the reverberation of your guns thundered hoarsely along the valley of the Potomac. I have often reflected how I should have felt if these results had been accomplished; had my political sins been forgiven; had I come back and said, "Remove my political disabilities; allow me to enter your legislative body and draw my salary punctually and with dispatch."

Had I seen the Confederate heroes in bronze mounting their granite pedestals in this capital, Lee instead of Grant, Davis instead of Garfield, Stonewall Jackson instead of McPherson, I do not believe that I should have had any consolation in voting pensions to Confederate soldiers myself. I doubt whether I should ever have ceased to be a conspirator; I doubt whether in some hidden and secluded receptacle, at least in the sanctuary of my soul, I had not kept the Stars and Stripes enshrined, and hoped that the day might again dawn when it should be the symbol of the glory and the emblem of the power of a united country. I doubt whether I ever should have believed that slavery was better than liberty.

But, Mr. President, I should have regarded it as the climax of effrontery, as the very apex and summit of hardihood and audacity, I will not say pusillanimity and dishonor, when I had accepted a pardon, had my disabilities removed, and taken the oath of allegiance to the successful Southern Confederacy, if I had appeared day after day upon every occasion when opportunity offered to denounce the efforts made by my conquerors to reward their own soldiers, and to haggle about the price that the victors should see fit to bestow upon the men by whom I was vanquished.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say again, without personal imputation or inference, to those who are under one pretext and another attempting to convince the North that they can safely and patriotically vote the Democratic ticket and elect Democratic Presidents, although 153 votes in the electoral college are in those States saturated with these sentiments, I do not think that the North is at all deluded by such pretensions.

It is a little singular, Mr. President, that in all the years which have elapsed since the war there never has come from one of the States that were in rebellion a single Unionist, so far as I know, elected by Democratic votes to either House of Congress, not even by an accident. They never have blundered into sending here a man who was not in the Confederate service in some capacity or other; nor, so far as I know, has any governor of any one of the Confederate States since the war ever been a Unionist. The supreme test that is applied is the test of service to the Confederacy. When I look over the roll of this body and over the roll of the other House of Congress and reflect how few of those who served in the Union armies are found in the councils of the nation, I am not surprised that we have witnessed the demonstrations that we have heard and seen upon this bill and every similar bill that is presented for action either in the Senate or House of Representatives.

The Senator from Missouri, in the course of the debate last Wednesday, as an illustration of the magnanimity of the South, assured us that of the $883,000,000 of pensions that had been paid, $240,000,000 had been contributed by the South; and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], who evidently is a more accurate arithmetician, rose and said, not $240,000,000 but $290,000,000. I wish that Senator, as he is now present, would tell us by what method of computation he has reached the conclusion that out of $883,000,000 paid for pensions the South has paid $290,000,000.

Mr. President, that is a glittering generality. I doubt if they have actually paid $290,000, instead of $290,000,000. I should like if some eminent arithmetician would get out his table of logarithms, which is the usual practice on these occasions, and tell us how it appears that the South has paid $290,000,000 since the war closed out of the $883,000,000 that have been paid as the sum-total evidencing the nation's gratitude to its surviving soldiers.

Even if they have paid $290,000,000, I have one single remark to make about that. They are very fortunate that they did not have to pay the whole of it, and, instead of grumbling and complaining that they have paid $290,000,000, they ought to be thankful they did not have to foot the entire bill, as Germany made France foot the expenses of the Franco-Prussian war, and as every other vanquished and rebellious province has been compelled to submit to exaction and ransom. Yet after the war has long since closed we have the jailors and murderers of Andersonville, Belle Isle, and Libby Prison sitting here beneath the flag that they endeavored to dishonor, legislating for the country that they attempted to destroy, and trying to pinch, belittle, and minimize the amount that we shall pay to the mutilated and disabled survivors of the hell of that incarceration.

The Senator from Missouri rises in a burst of indignant impatience and wants to know when all this is going to end. He says he has gone thus far, but he shall go no further; that he was coerced by the necessities of his position because he was a Confederate, of which I do not see the logic. He says that he was coerced by the logic of his position to vote, as we are bound to assume, for dishonest and unjustifiable pensions because he was a Confederate, but that, God helping him, he is going no further. He is going to resist the claims of these organized robbers and plunderers who have banded together for the purpose of depleting the Treasury, and they shall have no single farthing more. I will tell that Senator and every other Democratic Senator, whether they like it or not, what we intend to do. I will tell the Senator from Missouri and the rest of his associates just where it is to stop. It is going to stop when the arrears of pension are paid, when the limitation is removed, and every soldier upon the rolls, or who hereafter gets on the rolls, is paid from the day of his disability, or his survivors from the day of his death, and when every surviving soldier of the Union armies is put on the rolls for service only. That is when it is going to stop [applause in the galleries]; and if you do not like it, make the most of it.

When is it going to end? And on every occasion last week as this week the old, stale calumnies about the arrears-of-pension act are repeated. Mr. President, I was chairman of the Committee on Pensions when that bill was reported and passed. It was an act of great national justice. I consented to the insertion of the compromise date of July 1, 1880, because I could not get the principle established in any other way, and I gave notice then and made a pledge, which I have redeemed at every session of Congress since, that I would never desist from my efforts to remove that limitation and to pay every soldier placed upon that roll from the date of disability or discharge, so that this stigma should be wiped out and the honor of the nation redeemed. And yet the Senator from Kentucky farthest from me [Mr. BECK], in his speech upon the infirmities of the tariff on a pension bill, said that we were told when that bill passed in 1879 that it would take about eighteen or twenty millions, not over thirty at the outside, to make it operative, and that hundreds of millions had since been spent. Mr. President, that statement has been refuted so often that it does not deserve another word in reply. No such statement was made; no such statement could have been made.

The only statement was that to apply that principle to those who were already upon the roll would not require at the outside over $30,000,000 and might not cost more than $18,000,000. How could any one say what would be the expense that would be due under the act thereafter? It would depend entirely upon the number of applications under it. And yet, with a disingenuousness that has no parallel, upon every occasion that offers the Senators who oppose this bill affirm that the nation was duped into the adoption of that measure by false statements as to the amount it would cost.

Are we at last, says the Senator from Missouri, to have a service-pension bill? Nothing, he said, will content the soldiers and their allies but a service-pension bill, and are we to have that? Yes, Mr. President, you are to have that! There is not to-day a surviving soldier or the widow or dependent relative of any surviving soldier in any of the antecedent wars of the Republic who is not on the roll for a service pension—not one. I voted for the Mexican service pension bill, not because I believed it was wholly justifiable, but for the purpose of removing the last obstacle in the pathway of giving a service pension to every surviving soldier of the Union armies.

The Mexican war was waged in the interest of the Democratic party, for the extension of the area of human slavery. A very large proportion of those who fought were from the Southern States, and a very large part of those who have been benefited by it, I believed then and I know now, had served in the Confederate army. Who do you suppose was the first man who received a pension under the Mexican pension bill? Who was the first beneficiary of this service-pension bill? Was it some disabled, mutilated, indigent veteran, who, as the Senator from Alabama has assured us, fought under the American flag in that great war, and acquired that enormous area of which the State of Kansas was once a part?

It seems to me that I can imagine that venerable, decrepid, and aged survivor of the Mexican war marching up to General John C. Black, the physical wreck who is getting $100 a month as a totally disabled Union soldier, to ask him that the beneficence of $8 a month might be doled out to him for the service he rendered in the Mexican war. Who stands primus inter pares on that roll of honor, shining and illustrious, as an illustration of a nation's gratitude? John S. Williams, ex-Senator from Kentucky, a man who would resent as a personal imputation any averment of any description whatever that he was not an absolutely sound, hale, strong, and competent man. We recollect the brown tresses that waved over the brow of that veteran, the appearance of youth and vigor, of almost boyish juvenility that was wont to accompany him; a man who was an aspirant for an appointment on the Interstate Commission, who wanted to be re-elected to this body; a man who is generally suspected of being in the enjoyment of an ample fortune; an applicant for the position of minister to Mexico; a man who rendered, as I am told, distinguished service as a Kentucky Confederate in the armies that were marshaled against the American Union!

And yet, Mr. President, because we ask that to the ten or twelve thousand disabled soldiers and indigent veterans of the Union Army who are now the objects of charity some relief shall be granted, we are told that it is an injurious extension of the nation's liberality, when as a matter of fact every one knows that the benefactions and donations of the Mexican service bill were indefinitely wider and more expansive than anything that has been proposed by the bill that is now pending before us as proposed even to be amended by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, as the comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic have been stigmatized in this debate as a band of sordid mercenaries, organized for the purpose of plundering the public Treasury, and, like the legions of Rome, ready either to be bid for or to be bidden against for the control of the empire, I will read a paragraph or two before I close from the journal of the twenty-first annual session of the National Encampment held at St. Louis on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of September last, that organization which the Senator from Missouri says through its officers had insolently aspersed the Chief Magistrate of the Republic and threatened him with personal indignity if he attempted to visit the city of St. Louis at the time when that encampment was being held. In the name of that organization, so far as I can speak for it, I repudiate and deny that assertion. No threats of discourtesy, no menaces of violence, no hostile criticism was indulged against the Chief Magistrate by the Grand Army of the Republic. He could have gone to St. Louis with entire safety. He knew that he did not deserve well of that organization and he felt the stings of that conscience which "makes cowards of us all." The commander of the Grand Army of the Republic says:

I heartily congratulate all who have the pleasure to attend this great reunion of old comrades whose friendship was welded in the hot flame of battle, in the camp, on the march, and cemented by the love which all bore and still maintain for the Union. In Fraternity, Charity, and Loyalty we stand, proud of the fact that there is not now nor has there ever been any bitter feeling of hate for those of our fellow-citizens who, once in arms against us, but now being loyal, have long ago taken their old-time places in our hearts, never, we devoutly hope, to be removed therefrom. We have not now, nor have we at any time since the war closed, had any disposition to open again the bloody chasm which once unhappily divided this people. We not only will not ourselves reopen that dreadful abyss, but we will, with the loyal people North and South, protest against all attempts which others may make to do so, by holding up for especial honor and distinction anything that pertains to or in any manner glorifies the cause of disunion.

With the people of the South we only seek to continue the friendly rivalry long ago entered upon in the effort to make our beloved land great and prosperous and its people intelligent, happy, and virtuous.

We will rival them in exalting all that pertains to and honors this great Union and in condemning everything that tends to foster a hostile sentiment thereto. We will rival them in earnest endeavors to inculcate in the minds of all the citizens of this country, and especially of our children, a heartfelt love for the United States of America, to the end that present and coming generations shall in every part of the land believe in and "maintain true allegiance thereto, based upon a paramount respect for and fidelity to its constitution and laws," which will lead them to "discountenance whatever tends to weaken loyalty, incites to insurrection, treason, or rebellion or in any manner impairs the efficiency and permanency of our free institutions," and will impel them "to encourage the spread of universal liberty, equal rights, and justice to all men," and to defend these sentiments, which are quoted from the fundamental law of our order, with their lives if need be, and to the further end that they shall so revere the emblems of the Union that under no circumstances can be coupled with them in the same honorable terms the symbols of a sentiment which is antagonistic to its perpetuity.

The contemplation of the grand picture of a long ago preserved Union, a mighty people prospering as no people on earth ever before prospered, with a future far beyond that which opens to any other nation, a land, comrades, which to all its citizens is worth living for, and a country and government worth dying for, constitutes the greatest reward of those who have suffered and bled and striven that such a spectacle might be possible.

An organization that entertains those sentiments and that is animated by such purposes is stigmatized here as a gang of sordid mercenaries, organized for plunder! Mr. President, they were organized for charity. The total amount reported expended in charity from March 31, 1886, to March 31, 1887, was $253,934.43; the number of persons relieved was 24,606; 17,607 of these were members of the order or the families of such, and 8,999 were either ex-soldiers, not members, or those dependent upon them. It is to supplement this charity that the Grand Army has asked the Congress of the United States that this bill may pass. We propose in this body to pass it. Imitating the language that has been used by its adversaries, I hope that it will pass the other House of Congress, and if it does, let the President of the United States veto it at his peril. [Manifestations of applause.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I am at a loss to account for the course that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has seen fit to adopt in l gging me into the tirade in which he has just indulged, for I am sure that I had never made boast of identification with any military service in my life. I had never referred to the fact of having been a Confederate soldier. Unlike the Senator from Kansas, I thought my military record was too modest and too humble to prove a subject of interest to the galleries that have assembled to listen to his political harangue.

I did not need to be told by him that I stood here a representative from a State that had never seceded from the Union. I did not need to be reminded that Kentucky had always been loyal. I knew then, as he should know now, that I represent a constituency that are entitled to draw more pensions than the State so ably represented by the Senator who has just preceded me. The records of this country, I believe, show that the State of Kentucky furnished three men to the Union Army for every one that Kansas furnished; and in passing I may assure the Senator that it is not without pride that I recall the fact that of the thirty-odd States then in this Union the one from which I came is the only one that, without the application of a conscript law, furnished more than her quota of men to both sides during that struggle.

Now, why he should travel out of his way to have made an onslaught upon me I do not know. I do not understand that I was a necessary text for his speech of acceptance of the Presidential nomination of which he complained. I shall not undertake to answer for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. The Senator from Kansas doubtless knew that illness in his family had taken him a long distance from this city, and that he is to be absent for some time on that account.

I do not intend to be involved in any controversy with the Senator from Kansas, but I do intend to protest against the lack of fairness which he employs when he undertakes to deal after such a fashion with men who have but simply stated facts and submitted data for the consideration of the Senate upon a bill that is pending.

What connection had the speech made at Atlanta by a gentleman who never was a member of either House of Congress in his life, or the speech made by that same gentleman in Brooklyn or New York, with the bill that is pending here?

When the Senator from Kansas undertakes to speak of the Chief Executive of this country in the terms that he has seen fit to employ in a deliberately prepared and conned effort, he surely will not take issue with me if I conclude that it is not entitled to response or reply in this or any other decent presence. What cause of grievance he has that warrants him in employing language that would not be permissible upon the hustings—I will not say it would be disgraceful even if employed by fish-women—but when he undertakes to denounce the Chief Executive of the United States after such a fashion as to deliberately declare that no man is afflicted with antecedents so degraded, or ignorance so profound, or obscurity so unfathomable as to preclude him from becoming that man's successor, it does seem to me that the dignity of the Senate Chamber refuses permission for response. I am not here to defend the President from such unwarranted attacks. I know but one sin that he has committed in the eyes of the Senator from Kansas, and that may be the unpardonable offense of not only having defeated his party at the polls but having given to the American people for three years past so efficient, so honest, so clean-handed an administration as to doom the last of that party's aspirations to disaster.

If it be possible, the Senator from Kansas has gone further and done worse. In his intemperate zeal he has not hesitated to invade graves. In his frantic efforts to stir prejudice between sections that have already been reunited he goes into the trenches of the soldiery, and not on my side but on his side, and drags up for abuse and vilification before the American Senate such men as traced with their own unblemished swords in blood the brightest pages of American history. McClellan and Hancock are to be denounced upon this floor as allies of Confederates. Might it not have been in better taste, more creditable, at least, to the courage and to the candor of that Senator, if he had made that charge before both of these men were dead?

Mr. INGALLS. I did, often.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then so much the worse for the Senator from Kansas. What warrant or ground had he for that, except that they were both different from himself, at least in political faith, if we may not hope in many other regards?

Hancock an ally of the Confederates! Was he so regarded and believed when, weltering in his blood upon Cemetery Heights, he refused to be taken from the field, and yet persisted in giving orders to check the last advance of Longstreet's irresistible veterans? Was it this man who was honored up to the very day that he accepted the nomination at the hands of the Democratic party, honored alike by the American people, whether they were Republicans or Democrats?

He travels on to berate the Commissioner of Pensions, and he speaks in terms certainly as little complimentary, if he does not, as in the other two cases, impeach his loyalty. Mr. President, that crippled and maimed Commissioner of Pensions, himself a general in the Federal Army from 1861 to 1865, would hesitate to have the contrast or comparison, as he may term it, drawn between himself and the Senator from Kansas. Whilst he was earning his military reputation when the flag was flying upon the borders of the Senator's own State, and bleeding upon every battle-field upon which he went, what great service was the Senator from Kansas rendering?

He complains of the Senator from Missouri, and says that he rests his complaints upon that Senator's autobiography. I believe that it is generally assumed that a gentleman writes that bit of interesting history for himself. Now, in looking over the short but conspicuously brilliant autobiography of the Senator from Kansas, I find that he was not in the Army in 1861.

He surely was not in the Army in 1862, because he says that he was in the State senate of Kansas, "a member of the State senate of Kansas from Atchison County in 1862." But he would have us believe that he was in the Army from 1863 to 1865. 'Tis not true. He never was in the Federal Army. Why, to have sat and listened to the Senator one would have imagined that he was controlling the great armies that were operating in the West at least, if not in the East.

I saw the bronzed and weather-beaten commander of the American Armies sit there in that chair and blush in modesty at the humble part that he found that he had played in the war of the rebellion; and what was the Senator from Kansas doing whilst he was earning his reputation? What was his occupation in a military capacity? He tells you himself that he was "a judge-advocate to Kansas militia volunteers." Whilst Black was bleeding on Kansas soil, whilst McClellan was commanding the armies of the Potomac, whilst Hancock was weltering in his blood upon Cemetery Heights at Gettysburgh, the Senator from Kansas, away behind in the rear of the Army, was prosecuting Kansas jayhawkers for robbing hen-roosts! [Great laughter.]

Mr. President, what are we to think of the recklessness of a Senator who will leave that place now occupied by yourself and come to the floor in the illustration of a partisan zeal that I am glad to say I have never seen equaled, to attack everybody, all decent people, from the President of the United States down, civilians and military men, living and dead? No object can be found that escapes the venom of his tongue—a cynic, one would say, despising mankind because perhaps he has a suspicion that mankind is not enamored with him; malignant even toward himself; and there doubtless are some who would agree that he has cause; but neither President nor soldier, living nor dead, Confederate nor Federal, unless he accords with him in political conviction, is safe from his unwarranted, unjust, and unfounded attacks.

I do not want to be put in the position of an opponent or an enemy to the pensioning of honest Federal soldiers. I have never opposed the pensioning, whether by private act or public act, of any man that ever bore service in the Union Army and was incapacitated to support himself either by disease or by wounds contracted in that service. And I do not know the Confederate that ever did, and I trust that none ever will.

But to illustrate the accuracy of the Senator's statements, he tells us in the haste with which he rushes to his conclusions that no Democratic constituency in the South ever elected a Union soldier to either House of Congress. I do not know that it is material to answer that assertion; but, like most of the material that enters into his late utterances, there is not a particle of foundation in fact for the statement. The State of Texas sent to the Halls of Congress term after term, and until recently, a distinguished Union soldier during the war in the person of Governor Hancock. The State of Arkansas sent here in recent years from a Democratic constituency a Union soldier during the war to represent her in the other House of Congress. I would like to know whether the late governor of Virginia, Governor Walker, was not a Union soldier and an honored Representative in the other branch of Congress from an overwhelmingly Democratic district in the Old Dominion?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. He was not a soldier.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought that he was.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. He was a Northern man who came to Virginia.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He certainly was a loyal man during the war.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. He came to Virginia during the war.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to know why the Senator from Kansas, when he was studying that record so closely and blundered so badly when he undertook to state what the facts were, did not remember that within the last six years, and for four years, the State of Kentucky kept continuously in the other House of Congress a distinguished Federal general who was shot out of his saddle more than half a dozen times, and he came there always as the candidate of the Democratic party, and elected in a Democratic district.

I do not care to follow the Senator, for time forbids, through all the inaccuracies of his utterances, but this much I do propose to say before I close. Mr. President, party man as I am, partisan as I confess myself to be, I do sincerely trust that I may never find my term of public service prolonged to that day, nor my life extended to that hour when, without warrant, without fact to support me, without truth at my back, I shall deliberately traduce and abuse the dead who whilst living were honored by all honorable men. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair takes this occasion to observe that there must be no applause in the galleries and no manifestation of approval or disapproval. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 5, after the word "from," it is proposed to insert "the infirmities of age or from;" so as to read:

And who are now, or who may hereafter be, suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the debate on this bill has taken an extraordinary range. Leading from matters germane to the discussion, it has comprehended the tariff, bimetallism, and the personal antecedents of Senators in regard to measures not at all connected with this proceeding. Sarcasm upon one side has been followed by retaliatory sarcasm on the other until I think it is perfectly proper for me to state again what the purpose of this bill is, what we apprehend will be the effect of the amendments which have been proposed, and why we of the committee desire as near as practicable that this measure shall not be endangered by the well-meaning but mistaken efforts of those who are doubtless friendly to the soldier.

Now, in regard to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which is the immediate question pending, while I do not think it changes the meaning of the bill in the least particular (and I say this in justice to the committee who considered it so carefully, and because of the apprehension that it does make a difference in the construction of the bill), I hope the amendment will be rejected and the bill be suffered to stand as it was originally reported, "suffering from mental or physical disability."

To my mind those comprehensive words "mental or physical disability," qualified as they are by the phraseology that the man shall be required to be incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, cover every cause of disability, whether it be the cause specified by the Senator from Iowa or not. I have never read and have no confidence in the opinion of any medical authority that there is a difference between mental or physical disability which results from old age and that mental or physical disability which results from disease or wounds. Whatever the cause, the result is disability. The phraseology proposed by the bill is sufficient to comprehend all persons who may now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability. I construe that to mean any mental or physical disability produced by any cause. The words are large and general, and of their significance there can be no doubt.

Again, Mr. President, after giving this matter the most mature reflection of which I am capable, it is my opinion that the word "totally," which has been stricken from this bill in committee, should be restored to the place it formerly occupied. The moment that word was stricken out by amendment a torrent of criticism as to cost, numbers to be benefited, and construction generally was poured upon the measure, which showed conclusively that in the minds of those who were contemplating the bill thus dismembered it was brought clearly within the pretext on which its equivalent was vetoed at the last session of Congress.

The persons whose petition is embodied in this bill have come before the Senate for a definite and specific object. They have not come here for an enlarged and all-comprehensive pension bill. They know better than we or any others can know that there is a large class of people precisely described by this bill, remediless under the present pension laws, receiving relief from the various encampments represented by the figures read by the Senator from Kansas, and they desire at this session nothing more than that the National Legislature shall pass a bill which will give those totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor the measure of relief for which this bill provides.

For these reasons I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, and I shall urge, when the bill is reported to the Senate, that the word "totally" be restored to the place it originally occupied.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator from Iowa goes on I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a single question for my own guidance. I ask whether the bill as reported from the Committee on Pensions contains substantially the proposition of the Grand Army.

Mr. DAVIS. It is the bill draughted by the Grand Army of the Republic, submitted to the encampments of the Grand Army of the Republic, and voted on individually by the encampments, and carried by a vote of 103,000 to 3,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was their attention called to the word "totally" as used in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. It was in the draught of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the best evidence we have that this bill is not satisfactory to the great body of the Union soldiers is found in the fact that they are coming here by hundreds and thousands every day petitioning for the enactment of the per diem rated service-pension bill. Therefore we may safely assume that this is not the bill that is approved by all the soldiers of the Union Army.

But I do not desire to antagonize this bill with that one which is so largely petitioned for by that large class of men who served the country. My only purpose in moving this amendment is to aid the committee in effecting what they avowed to be the purpose of the bill, and that is to give a pension to every Union soldier who having served three months has been honorably discharged, and is now suffering from a mental disability which incapacitates him for labor, or a physical disability within the technical definition of that term which incapacitates him for labor, or who because of the onmarch of age and infirmities which are not included in the term "physical disabilities" is incapacitated for manual labor.

If the bill as construed by the chairman of the committee covers the ground which he suggests, this amendment can do no harm; but if the bill does not cover the ground, then without this provision will be left out all the men who served three months in the Army and were honorably discharged and who can not perform daily manual labor because of the effects induced by age. I want to save the possibility of having those men coming here at the next session of Congress and asking to have an amendment of this bill, if it shall become a law, by providing in advance precisely what the chairman of the committee says is the intent of the committee. Therefore, while it is probable that this amendment may be voted down, I shall vote for it if it does not receive another vote in the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions one moment. I was out while the chairman was speaking. Shall I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions opposes this amendment? I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions also desires when this bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate that the friends of the pension bill shall vote against all the amendments that have been already adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. I excluded the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], commencing on line 10 of section 3:

All pensions granted to widows under this or any other general law shall take effect from the date of the death of the husband of such widows, respectively, but not dating back of the passage of this act.

I think that is an excellent amendment, and is in the line of the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Then there is an amendment in section 5, proposed by the Senator from Iowa in correction of the phraseology:

And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in any military or naval service against the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, whether in stating that he wants all these amendments rejected he would include that one.

Mr. DAVIS. No; I am excluding that one.

Mr. FRYE. Now I should like to ask the Senator one other question. I mentioned an amendment of the first section which seemed to me to be necessary, to insert the word "adequate" and the word "only" where application is made to dependent parents. I did not offer the amendment because I felt a respect for the Committee on Pensions which prevented me from offering the amendment; but I suggested whether or not it should be so that the first section should show, not that absolute dependence upon manual labor was necessary, but that there was not property adequate for support.

Mr. DAVIS. I have been considering the effect of that amendment. I do not think it ought to go in.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will not offer that amendment; but it places us in this terribly awkward position: There is no Senator on this side who does not desire to go to the full extent of this bill and to confer upon the soldier every single benefit which the bill provides for; but there are Senators on this side who see that the bill is entirely inadequate and have offered amendments to improve it, and it occurs to every Senator here that those amendments ought to be adopted, and if adopted they would improve the bill and increase the benefits to the soldiers.

Now, it puts us in the awkward position of being obliged to vote against those very propositions which we believe would improve this bill. It will compel me, for instance, when the bill comes before the Senate and a vote is taken on that word "totally" where it was inserted before the word "incapacitated"—it compels me, if I comply with the wishes of the Pensions Committee, to vote "no," when my intelligence and my mind are entirely "ay," and when I believe it is in the interest of the pensioners to vote "ay." It compels me to vote "no" on the proposition of the Senator from Iowa when I would like to have men who are disabled by the infirmities of age included in the bill. It compels me to remain silent and decline to offer an amendment which I believe necessary in the first section. It all comes from this mistake—and a fundamental mistake, in my judgment—that the Grand Army of the Republic has undertaken to make a pension bill which shall be satisfactory to the President of the United States, which shall be a compliance with the statements made in his veto message on the bill of the last session of Congress, when the most of us, on this side at any rate, do not believe that the President of the United States has any sympathy whatever with the movement or with the soldier, and are led to that belief by his own acts and his own words in all the vetoes he has sent to Congress in special cases.

In my judgment it is a fundamental mistake for the Grand Army of the Republic to accept the conclusions of the President of the United States when by every act of his he has shown himself inimical to the purposes of the Grand Army itself; and in my judgment the Grand Army made a mistake, and the Pension Committee has made a mistake, when they have reported a bill to be supported by men who are loyal to the soldiers and the pensioners, who have recommended that bill, as has been intimated here, to meet the same veto and its requirements. It places us in an awkward position.

I am going to vote as the chairman of the Committee on Pensions and the Pension Committee desire me to vote on this bill, but at the same time I desire in advance of any vote to enter my protest against the bill, against the voting down of amendments, against my not being entitled to the privilege myself of offering an amendment and urging its acceptance upon the Senate—all which comes, I say, from this fundamental mistake, and yet I shall be obliged to vote against my convictions, and vote as the Committee on Pensions desire me to vote on these amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to add to the debate. I am embarrassed precisely like the Senator from Maine. The word "totally," it seems to me, ought not to be left in the bill. I do not see how gentlemen on either side should desire that the disability should be total. I can not imagine a man so totally disabled that he can not do some kind of work, unless he has lost both arms and both legs. If he is living in almost any condition he can do some labor. It seems to me Senators ought to yield the point on that word "totally," because if we exclude from the benefits of this bill all persons except those totally disabled, I do not see how an honest Commissioner of Pensions construing the law, acting simply as an executive officer, could hold that——

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether he sees any distinction between the words "total disability" and "totally incapacitated?"

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then let me suggest that that is the language of the present pension law, and that a total disability, under which a private soldier gets $8 a month, does not mean that he shall be helpless, but that it is a disability that is to the extent of the loss of the use of the elbow-joint. The Pension Office has construed that to mean "total disability." I think that the same construction should apply here.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me an odd kind of construction. I wish to vote with the committee. I have made up my mind to support the committee and vote for the bill as they want it; but it seems to me it is a very embarrassing thing to ask us to vote against amendments that meet our hearty approval; but I shall do it.

I rose rather to suggest that we are near the time of adjournment, and I wish——

Mr. PADDOCK. Allow me to suggest that under the present law, where there is total disability, it is requisite that the cause must have originated in the line of duty. That is total incapacity, which all of us can understand. This would not require absolutely that a person should be found to be totally incapacitated, and that the incapacity should be traced to a cause originating in the line of duty. He is to receive the pension if totally incapacitated.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is not only a member of the Committee on Pensions but a good lawyer, as all these gentlemen are. Will he say to me that the words as they stand in the bill reported from the committee will give to every man who is substantially unable to pursue manual labor a pension?

Mr. PADDOCK. That was the view of the committee when the bill was under consideration, and it is due to the committee to say this much. The committee were equally embarrassed, as the Senator is, with respect to the provisions of the bill. The committee desired to formulate and present to the Senate a much stronger bill, but they were advised by the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic that under the circumstances in which they are placed—I shall not describe what those circumstances are, they can be imagined—it seemed that this was the only attainable result that could be reached; and, therefore, the committee unwillingly took this moderate bill as probably the best attainable result, upon the theory that a half-loaf is better than no bread at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to make a proposition with respect to this bill with the consent of both sides. I understand several Senators have gone away who want to be here when the vote is taken. I will suggest, with the consent of my friend from Minnesota, that this bill be taken up as the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow and be considered under what is known as the Anthony rule, that is known by all the Senators as involving five minutes' debate on amendments, and that the vote shall be taken on the final passage of the bill before the adjournment to-morrow. When I speak of the Anthony rule, I mean five minutes' debate by each Senator.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that proposition will be entirely satisfactory to this side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the proposition. The Senator from Ohio proposes that this bill shall be taken up as the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow, and that the debate shall be conducted under the provisions of what is known as the Anthony rule, and that the vote shall be taken upon the amendments and the bill before the close of the session to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather say at 4 o'clock to-morrow. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that would be better.

Mr. ALLISON. I think no hour should be fixed. I think under the five-minute rule we can dispose of the bill readily.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. We can have unanimous consent, I hope.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the proposition once more as it is understood by the Chair. It is that this bill be taken up as the unfinished business to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and that debate proceed under the limitations of the Anthony rule, so called, and that the vote be taken on the amendments and on the bill before the close of the session to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. CALL. I understood the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] desired to make some remarks to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. He can speak the next day just as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition? The Chair hears none, and that will be considered the understanding of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House for the printing of the addresses delivered in that body January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 7, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 6, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. M. KING, D. D., of New York City.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. MASON as a member of the Committee on Claims, in place of Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, excused.

DISTRESSED AMERICAN VESSELS IN CANADIAN WATERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a letter of the House, copies of correspondence in regard to the alleged refusal of Canadian authorities to allow American wrecking vessels to assist American vessels in distress in Canadian waters; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OSWEGO HARBOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with inclosures, a report of the Chief of Engineers in regard to the cost of repairing west pier in Oswego Harbor, and of the necessity and cost of removing the east breakwater in the mouth of the river; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM BUSHBY VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of findings of fact in the case of William Bushby vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PORTRAITS OF SPEAKERS SEDGWICK, VARNUM, AND BANKS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the following resolution, adopted by the House February 1, 1888:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the addresses delivered in the House of Representatives, January 19, 1888, upon the presentation of the portraits of Speakers Sedgwick, Varnum, and Banks, for the use of the House.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 7, after "Banks," insert "2,000 for the use of the Senate and 8,000;" so as to read: "2,000 for the use of the Senate and 8,000 for the use of the House."

Mr. LONG. I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILKINSON, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DAVENPORT, for ten days, on account of important business.

LIKENESSES, ETC., FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8151) to prohibit the use of likenesses, portraits, or representations of females for advertising purposes, without consent in writing; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Several members addressed the Chair.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a question of privilege, and call up the contested-election case of McDuffie vs. Davidson. We must go on with this case at once, in order that it may be finished to-day.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask whether, under the rules, it is not in order at this time to present a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands, for the purpose simply of having the report printed and the bill recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order while a question of higher privilege is pending.

Mr. PAYSON. This will take but a second. I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. This is a privileged matter under the rules; and I simply want an order for the printing of the report and the recommittal of the bill. It will take less time than it does even for me to make the request.

Mr. CRISP. I can hardly resist that kind of an appeal; but if we do not go on at once with this election case it will run into to-morrow. There is an anxiety, at least on this side of the House, to dispose of it promptly.

Mr. PAYSON. It will not take three seconds to make the order I desire. The report is voluminous, and I simply want it printed and the bill recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist on the regular order?

Mr. CRISP. I can not after that statement.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS, IN IOWA.

Mr. PAYSON. On behalf of the Committee on Public Lands I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. I ask that the report be printed and the bill recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to be heard on this question. I object to the reception of this report on the ground that it does not come under the rule as a privileged report, and that the gentleman has no right to make it under the circumstances.

Mr. PAYSON. Why, Mr. Speaker, upon the point suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], it was expressly decided by Mr. Speaker CARLISLE on this very bill, in the last Congress, that it was privileged as to report and consideration.

Mr. PARKER. In answer to that, I am compelled to say that it is understood Mr. Speaker CARLISLE—I have not heard him say so, but I am so informed—has said that his attention was not called to the point, and that he did not regard this matter as privileged under the rules.

Mr. PAYSON. He so decided; and I will find the reference for the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER. The question was not raised.

Mr. PAYSON. It was raised and argued, and the Speaker expressly decided it.

Mr. PARKER. Then I re-present it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be inclined to follow the precedents laid down by the former decision of the Speaker under the present circumstances. It is understood that there is to be no debate upon the matter.

Mr. PAYSON. None at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine the matter of the ruling made by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. PARKER. I insist that we have a right to have the present occupant of the chair rule upon the question as now presented, untrammeled by any previous consideration of the subject. The merits of the case are now presented, and call for a ruling when that question is raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair could not, certainly without a careful investigation, overrule a decision of the Speaker of the House, and would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he permit the matter to go over for another day.

Mr. PAYSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this report I ask leave until Friday next to present the views of the minority.

Mr. PAYSON. There is no objection so far as I am concerned.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question that that consent can not be given until the report is received under the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The views of the minority under the circumstances can not, of course, be received at this time.

Mr. PARKER. I make no objection to that particularly, but the case is such as not to entitle the minority to submit a report.

Mr. CRISP. I call up the contested-election case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia calls up the contested-election case.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to know the decision upon this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not been disposed of.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to object separately to the recommittal, in case it comes to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois had better withdraw the report for the present, and the Chair will take occasion to look into the question presented.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the report will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

ALABAMA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. CRISP. I now call up the election contest of McDuffie vs. Davidson.

Mr. LODGE. I yield one-half hour of the time allotted to this side to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN].

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] who first addressed the House on yesterday in support of the majority report of the Committee on Elections took what appeared to me to be a very strange legal position. He contended, if I correctly understood him, that the contestant in this case had presented no legal testimony in sustaining his contest for his seat as a Representative from the Fourth district of the State of Alabama. The main question presented by contestant is that the votes cast in that election were not properly counted in that district, and that the ballot-boxes were tampered with, and that the returns were manufactured for the occasion.

He has sustained that to a great extent by the testimony of men who were at the polls at the various precincts in that district when the ballots were cast. It appears from the record in this case, too, to which I shall have occasion to refer again before I have finished, that the Republican party of that district anticipated just the state of affairs we find here to-day. They expected to elect their candidate for Congress; they expected that just such frauds would be attempted or perpetrated as would necessitate proceedings for a contest for the seat before the House of Representatives, and they prepared themselves for the contest as best they might. They were prepared to show by competent testimony the number of votes cast for McDuffie, giving the votes cast in the various precincts; they have already established by the evidence that these ballots went, as they supposed, in the ballot-boxes; but the returns of the election officers do not seem to have found them there, and that was the class of evidence they have brought in support of the contest.

Now, if I understood the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on yesterday, he maintained that that evidence is not competent, and that the only legitimate evidence that could have been brought here in support of the contest was the evidence of the voters themselves, or the evidence of the ballot-boxes themselves.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the very gist of this contest is that those ballot-boxes to-day do not contain the votes that were cast in that district. The effort of the contestant has been to overthrow the validity of those boxes, to destroy the authority of the official returns sent in from that district. And it is the first time in my career as a lawyer that I have ever heard it seriously asserted that the only way to rebut fraud is by the very fraudulent acts themselves. Before those boxes are competent evidence at all it must have been established by competent testimony that they contain all the vote that was cast; that the returns of that vote are legitimate.

Then again it was claimed by the same gentleman on yesterday that we should have called the voters who cast these votes and have established by them how they voted. We might have done so, possibly, but we were not required to do so. As was stated by my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL], on yesterday, every word of the testimony that the contestant has brought here is legitimate and competent testimony. And let me ask the gentleman why it is that when the absolute worthlessness of these returns had been established and when it had been shown by competent testimony that these returns are wholly, absolutely worthless—why is it that these election officers whose integrity has been attacked were not brought before the proper officers and their testimony taken? The contestant had shown that these boxes had been tampered with. He had shown that the official returns from that district did not show the vote as cast; it would have been comparatively easy for the contestee to have brought the officers whose integrity had been attacked, who had been charged with making false returns, and let them say that those votes were returned as they appeared in the ballot-boxes on the evening of the election. Not one of them was examined. And yet the contestee could have examined every one of them. They were, with few exceptions, his political friends. They were as ready to do his bidding when he was taking evidence to sustain the claim to his seat as they were when committing these frauds on the voters of that election district.

It was argued by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], who also spoke on yesterday in support of the report of the majority, that the votes which were counted were cast; that that is a Democratic district. But notwithstanding that alleged state of affairs it was found necessary to vote disfranchised men; it was found necessary that the poll-list should show that dead men had voted; it was found necessary, notwithstanding the great reputed Democratic majority in the district, that the returns should show that men voted that months and years before had ceased to be citizens of that district. And yet gentlemen stand up here with apparent seriousness to say that that district was undoubtedly Democratic, that the sitting member was undoubtedly elected, while at the same time it was found necessary to resort to all such expedients as these in order that a return might be made that showed his election.

It has been argued, too, that these numerous witnesses all over this district are not to be believed, because they say the negroes, the colored men of that district, vote secretly. I have never before heard it charged seriously that it was necessary for any colored voter in the South to be very secret about his ballot, provided he voted the Democratic ticket. It seems to me supremely ridiculous that it should be charged here with seriousness that it should be necessary for the Democratic voters to be secret about casting their ballots. It seems to me no time should be spent in replying to such an argument as that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the day is past; it is too late now to argue the policy or impolicy of the course which has been adopted with reference to the enfranchised race of the South. It may be that it was an unwise policy to place the elective franchise in their hands. It may be that the action was hasty. It may be it was just as it ought to be. Be that as it may, I repeat it is too late to discuss the wisdom or the folly of that policy. That course has been adopted. The elective franchise has been placed in their hands, and they are now as much entitled to the protection of the laws as is the proudest Anglo-Saxon of this land. They have the right under the law to be protected in their exercise of this great privilege which has been conferred upon them, that of the elective franchise.

We have marked out during the present session of Congress two or more principles that are likely to enter into our political contests in the future; and it seems to me this case now at bar marks out for us another plank in the platform of the various parties who will contend for the supremacy in this country in a few months. It must enter into our political contests whether or not the rights, the privileges which were the results of the great struggle are to be preserved or to be entirely abandoned and overthrown.

A free ballot, a fair count, and an honest return is one of the great principles upon which the next contest at the ballot-box must be fought. My friends may charge that this is waving the bloody shirt. If it be, so far as I am able to raise my voice in the future, as in the past, that ensanguined garment must wave until all the fruits of our late great struggle shall be secured to the American people. If gentlemen desire to see the bloody shirt waved, let them go to the other end of this Capitol and listen to the speeches that have come from the mouths of Democratic members of that body during the past few days, assailing the integrity of the ex-soldiers of the Union, belittling their efforts, casting reproach upon them in every conceivable way. Let them go there if they desire to hear that question fully discussed.

Now, the question in this case is whether the rights which have cost this country so much treasure and so much blood and so many precious lives to assert it, have been permitted to be exercised by the voters of the Fourth district of Alabama. That is the only question here, and it is very tersely stated by the writer of the minority report in this case, who says:

> There is not a word, nothing in this case but a plain question of fact. Congress, undisturbed by any legal question or technicalities, is asked to decide simply whether the vote in the Fourth district of Alabama at the election held November 2, 1886, was returned as it was actually cast, or whether it was altered by fraudulent practices in such a way as to invalidate the right of the contestee to his seat and give that seat to the contestant.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the question at issue and which this House must settle by its vote in a few hours, whether the returns of that district show the vote as it was cast by the electors or whether it was so fraudulently manipulated as that the will of the people of that district has been misrepresented and they have been defrauded of their representative upon this floor. It would seem that the majority of the Committee on Elections were ready to resort to any means to convince this House that the position taken in that report was correct. On yesterday they appear to have discovered that at least one of the positions which they had taken was untenable and must be abandoned, but when this report was filed an idea seems to have pervaded the minds of the majority upon which the able argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] was to a great extent based, and in order to sustain the position taken by him and by the majority of the committee, they quoted in their report a section of the election statutes of Alabama, a statute enacted at a time when the Republican party controlled the Legislature of the State, for the purpose of protecting voters in their rights, but as soon as, by a reverse of fortune, the Republicans lost control and the Democrats acquired power in that State, which happened in 1879, that statute was repealed.

This is the section:

> SEC. 276. One of the inspectors must number each ballot with the same number as the name of the voter on the poll-lists, and the ballot must then, without being opened or examined, be deposited in the proper ballot-box.

They relied upon that, as is shown by their report, page 3, where they say:

> As will be seen, the names of the voters are written down and numbered as they vote, forming what is called the "poll-list," and the ballots cast are correspondingly numbered with the number of each of the electors, so that it can easily be ascertained, when necessary, for whom the voter cast his ballot, or whether the officers of the election fraudulently substituted ballots for those cast by the voters.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. LYMAN. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. I understood the gentleman to say that the Republican Legislature of the State of Alabama passed a statute requiring the ballots to be numbered in order to secure honest elections, and that when the Democrats succeeded in getting control of the Legislature they repealed that law. Will the gentleman allow me just here to read a section from the election law passed when both houses of the Legislature of Alabama were entirely Republican with the exception of one Democrat in the senate, to show how honest that law was?

Mr. LYMAN. If it is not to be taken out of my time, I do not care how much the gentleman reads; if it is, I object.

Mr. OATES. It is section 34——

Mr. LYMAN. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if I am not to be charged with the time the gentleman consumes, he may read what he pleases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] unless otherwise ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. LYMAN. Then I shall object to the interruption if it is to be taken out of my time.

Mr. OATES. Section 34 of the election law——

Mr. LYMAN. No, Mr. Speaker; I say that if the gentleman's reading is to be taken out of my time I must object. Now, as I was saying, the majority of the Committee on Elections evidently intended to rely upon that section to show that there would have been no difficulty in calling the voters and proving how they had voted. But, as I have said, that section was repealed in 1879, and they have since discovered that fact, as was announced yesterday by the chairman of the committee. By that admission almost the entire argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] who presented the majority report, and spent an hour yesterday in sustaining it, was taken out from under him; because when the election of 1886 was held this section having been repealed, there was no means of knowing or identifying the ballot which any particular voter cast, or of showing who cast the ballots that might be found in the ballot-box. This, of course, has no direct bearing upon the question now, because it is conceded that this section of the law has been repealed, but it destroys the main argument on which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] rested his case.

This Fourth district of Alabama is composed of the counties of Dallas, Hale, Lowndes, Perry, and Wilcox. It is in what is known as the "black belt" of the State of Alabama. Into that district were thrown, when the present apportionment of Congressional districts was made, as many colored voters as possible; all the Republican voters possible to be thrown into a single district were thrown into that district. The Congressional history of that district is not entirely without interest. I quote from the minority report:

The district was formed in such a way as to include as large a portion of the colored and Republican vote of the State as possible. Undeterred, however, by the very large Republican majority thus concentrated in the district, at the first election in 1880 the Democrats returned General Shelley as elected by the simple process of having the supervisors throw out and alter enough precinct returns to defeat the Republican and seat the Democratic candidate. Mr. Smith, the Republican candidate, contested and was seated by the Forty-seventh Congress, in which the Republican party had a majority. In 1882 the same process was repeated, and General Shelley was again returned. His seat was contested by Mr. Craig. The Forty-eighth Congress had a Democratic majority, but they took no action on the case during the first session.

The election of 1884 came on. Mr. Craig ran again, a candidate this time against Mr. Davidson. It was obvious that the old method of carrying the district by supervisors had survived its usefulness, and a new plan was adopted by which Mr. Davidson was declared elected. Mr. Craig, with his contest of 1882 still pending, and worn out with anxiety and fatigue, would not enter upon a second contest while the first was still unsettled, and Mr. Davidson held his seat without contest. In the closing days of the Forty-eighth Congress the House decided the contest of 1882 in favor of Craig and unseated Shelley.

When the election of 1886 approached it was reported that Mr. McDuffie was likely to be the Republican candidate. Mr. McDuffie was well known in the district, where he had lived for twenty-one years, having been a Union soldier who had settled in Alabama at the close of the war. He had held the office of probate judge for twelve years. He was widely known and had the respect of men of all parties as an able and honorable man. It was obvious that he would be a formidable candidate.

So, Mr. Speaker, a conspiracy was entered into by the sitting member and his political friends and advisers to prevent the nomination of Judge McDuffie; and there is where the conspiracy in this case commenced—a conspiracy to prevent Judge McDuffie from being the Republican candidate. And that conspiracy extended so far that the sitting member and his friends entered the Republican convention, held at Selma, I believe, and undertook to force upon the convention another candidate than Judge McDuffie—one Ben S. Turner. And the report of the majority in this case starts out almost in its first sentence with the declaration that Ben S. Turner, not Judge McDuffie, was to be treated in this contest as the Republican candidate. I read the second sentence of the report:

Besides the parties to this contest, there was a third candidate, Benjamin S. Turner.

On page 24 of the minority report is set out just what was done by the sitting member and his confrères in reference to making Ben S. Turner, and not Judge McDuffie, the Republican candidate. There was certainly method in this madness. Ben S. Turner is a colored man, and, if I mistake not, occupied at one time a seat upon this floor as a Representative from Alabama. I may be mistaken in that statement, but I think not.

When the Republican convention was held in Selma, Colonel Davidson was in town, and his friends and managers, including John McIlwain, the chairman of the Democratic Congressional committee, and the contestee's nephew, A. D. Pitts, were also there and were present in the Republican convention. Ben De Lemos testified that at this time Colonel Davidson said to him, "Well, so you don't nominate McDuffie I am satisfied."

Now it is no reflection upon Colonel Davidson that he made this remark, except that it shows he was afraid of Judge McDuffie being the Republican candidate in that district. He feared that with Judge McDuffie's popularity and strength in that district, his own friends would not be able, as they had done in the case of Mr. Craig and in the case of Mr. Smith, to overthrow the immense Republican majority existing in the Fourth district of Alabama.

Colonel Davidson said to him, "Well, so you don't nominate McDuffie, I am satisfied," and Colonel Davidson's managers told De Lemos, in view of McDuffie's probable candidacy, that they were desirous of a split in the Republican party.

The evidence on this point will be found on page 70 of the record of this case. The testimony of this witness continues as follows:

Q. Who was the nominee of that convention?

A. John V. McDuffie was the nominee of that convention.

Q. After John McDuffie was nominated, did not Ben L. Turner, Bill Stephens, Jere Blevins, and A. W. Atwater go to the rear of the convention hall and there hold a long consultation with A. D. Pitts, Mr. McIlwain, L. W. Turpin, and other ardent supporters of Colonel Davidson, and, after that consultation, come back and pretend to nominate Ben Turner for Congress?

A. They held the conference mentioned above; I don't remember if all the gentlemen were present, but I saw six or seven, but shortly after some one in the crowd tried to nominate Ben Turner, but he was pulled down from the stand by a large majority of the delegates of the convention who had just nominated Judge McDuffie. Colonel Davidson's friends, as well as Stephens, Turner, and his friends, claimed that Turner had been nominated.

Q. Do you know of Stephens or Turner and their friends sending messages to Colonel Davidson or his friends asking for money as an inducement to nominate Turner instead of McDuffie?

A. I don't know of any of them sending messages to either of the parties, Davidson or his friend. I was, however, approached or requested to take a hand in the defeat of McDuffie by some of Turner's friends, and they suggested if I would see certain friends of Colonel Davidson I could raise the money and thus defeat Judge McDuffie.

Q. Did you not at the request of W. J. Stephens see John McIlwain and say to him for Stephens that if McIlwain, as a friend of Davidson, would raise Stephens $75 he would nominate Turner for Congress, thereby defeating McDuffie?

A. Stephens did not request me to see anybody; he had, however, a conversation with me and suggested to me if I would see certain parties, friends of Colonel Davidson, and raise $75 from them for him and his friends, Turner could be nominated that night. I saw McIlwain and told him of the request of Stephens, and all three of us met together and talked the matter over, but Stephens received no money. I kept Judge McDuffie posted as to what was going on and prevented the nomination of Turner. Mr. McIlwain told me he had tried to raise the money for Stephens.

Q. Did Stephens and his crowd continue to support and agitate the election of Ben Turner for Congress?

A. Stephens and his crowd continued to support Turner to the last.

Q. From your knowledge of W. J. Stephens do you not believe he only supported Ben Turner for a money consideration?

A. Stephens has been embarrassed financially. He told me he had made a bad crop and he needed some money, and he had to make some out of this Congressional election.

Q. From your knowledge of Stephens, Blevins's financial condition, and what you heard of their canvassing, and what you have known of their political action in the past, do you or not believe that their canvass was conducted by money furnished by the Democratic party and in the interest of Colonel Davidson?

A. Stephens and his friends I have looked upon always as good Republicans, and we were always allied together closely in political contests, and I am led to believe in this contest against Judge McDuffie they were actuated by money consideration furnished by parties opposed to Judge McDuffie and his friends, and thus advancing the interest of Colonel Davidson.

Q. In your cross-examination you are asked about W. J. Stephens's Republicanism. Is it not a notorious fact that he has sold out his party in the last several Congressional elections? Did he oppose and do all in his power to defeat Judge James J. Smith, who successfully contested Charles M. Shelley's seat to the Forty-seventh Congress of the United States, and also oppose George H. Craig, who successfully contested Charles M. Shelley's seat in the Forty-eighth Congress?

A. Stephens did oppose and do all in his power to defeat Judge James J. Smith, who successfully contested a seat in the Forty-seventh Congress, and also George H. Craig, who successfully contested a seat in the Forty-eighth Congress. (Pages 71 and 72.)

Cross-examination did not touch the testimony of this witness on the points just quoted, nor was any attempt made to rebut it or impeach the veracity of the witness.

It is thus shown that the contestee feared McDuffie's candidacy, and that as a first step to compass McDuffie's defeat Colonel Davidson's managers went into the Republican convention, sought to break it up, attempted to nominate another candidate through the use of money and the agency of corrupt members of the Republican party; and that, having failed, they nevertheless continued to assert that another Republican candidate (Turner) had received the Republican nomination. The fiction of Turner's candidacy was kept up to the end, and it will be seen from an examination of the precincts that it never had any reality except in the returns. At many precincts there were no Turner tickets, at others there were a few scattered about, and at none was it regularly distributed and urged upon the voters. There is no indication that Turner received a hundred genuine votes in the entire district, but the returns gave him 2,519 votes. Turner's candidacy was a sham from beginning to end, but the methods by which it was originated show the alarm felt by Colonel Davidson's managers at McDuffie's candidacy, and constitute their first step in the conspiracy to deprive the voters of the district of their rights.

The colored voters took no interest in Turner, and they were quite aware, when they knew anything about it at all, that his candidacy was wholly unreal and only in the interest of Davidson.

The following witnesses testify that Turner had no following and no votes:

Again, there was a conspiracy formed to falsify the returns all over the district, in order to secure the election of Davidson, if necessary; and this conspiracy was carried out except in the county of Lowndes.

E. D. Morrill, who had been county superintendent of education for four years, county tax assessor for six years, chairman of the Republican executive committee for the county for the last six years, who had lived in Wilcox County for twenty-one years, and had participated in nearly every political campaign since 1870, testified (page 55):

"Q. State fully any and all conversation you had or heard by leading Democrats of Wilcox County to show, or tending to show, a disposition to commit frauds at the ballot on said November 2 last.

"A. I had a conference with J. F. Foster, chairman of the Democratic executive committee of the county, on the day after the meeting of the Democratic executive committee, with reference to the appointment of Federal supervisors. He stated in words to the effect that they were indifferent as to whether supervisors were appointed or not, and if they did not have the naming of their (Democratic) supervisors ours (Republican) would not be allowed to serve. He said positively that they were going to carry the election—they would carry it peaceably and quietly if they could, but would carry it by force if necessary, and had the arrangements made to do it. I reminded him that we (Republicans) had rights guarantied to us by the constitutions of the State and United States. He replied that those constitutions were forced upon them and they did not consider themselves bound to abide by them, or words to that effect."

"Q. State whether or not during the count, after the closing the polls, if you stated to A. D. Pitts, if you don't give McDuffie more votes that they will take us to the Big House, and that A. D. Pitts replied that Uncle Aleck might as well have it as McDuffie.

"A. Yes, I said that; and A. D. Pitts the reply as stated in the question."

Frank C. Powell, a Democrat, testified as follows (page 64) as to election in Lowndesborough precinct, Lowndes County:

"Q. Is Shelley Powell your brother?

"A. He is.

"Q. Did Larry Hunter come a few days before the election and ask you if your brother, Shelley Powell, was going to serve as an inspector of that election, and what was your answer?

"A. He did ask me, and my answer was, my brother would not serve."

"Q. Did Larry Hunter then and there say anything further about acting as inspector; and, if so, what? State fully.

"A. Larry Hunter said then he would act as an inspector, and if he could get two others to act with him, he liked to see McDuffie counted out, but did not state he (Hunter) would do so.

"Q. Did Larry Hunter act as an inspector, then, at that election?

"A. He did."

No attempt was made to impeach or rebut the testimony of these three witnesses on these points in any way. Foster was chairman of the Democratic county committee of Wilcox County; A. D. Pitts was a nephew of the contestee and an inspector in Perry County, and Hunter was an inspector in Lowndes County. Thus it will be seen that three Democratic officers of the party all admit, or recognize at widely separated points, the intention to carry the election by fraud.

Another thing that conclusively establishes this conspiracy is the fact that in every precinct examined in the testimony, all over the district, exactly the same frauds appear.

On account of all these things the conclusion is irresistible that there was a conspiracy formed to "carry the election peaceably and quietly if they could, but carry it by force if necessary, and that they had the arrangements made to do it."

The Republicans of the district generally believed that the election was to be carried against them by fraud, and they prepared themselves as best they could for the contest to follow.

At Selma precinct, Dallas County (page 141); Newbern precinct, Hale County (pages 34, 35), and Greensborough, Hale County (page 47), Republican voters refused to vote because they had no confidence in the Democratic inspectors and believed they would be cheated out of their votes. In most of the precincts, however, the general belief that frauds were to be committed caused the Republicans to make arrangements to secure evidence of the vote which they cast for McDuffie. One or more Republicans at each precinct, as will appear when we examine the precincts in detail, issued McDuffie tickets, wrote down the names or kept a tally of voters who received them, then watched the voters closely to see that they did not change their ballots, and in some instances tallied them again as they voted. These precautions demonstrate the general belief that frauds were to be committed, and, taken in conjunction with the testimony as to Foster, Pitts, and Hunter of the intention to commit fraud, furnish strong proof of a general conspiracy among Davidson's supporters to carry the district by fraudulent methods.

Having thus shown that Judge McDuffie was popular and respected; that his nomination was feared by his opponents, who entered his convention to corrupt his delegates and start a sham candidate; that Davidson's managers at different points admitted the intention to carry the election by fraud, and that the Republican voters generally believe that frauds were to be practiced against their candidate, it only remains to show the actual frauds by which the conspiracy to carry the election fraudulently was worked out to a successful issue. These frauds were of many kinds, but they are all alike, clumsy, and they all show the same uniform plan throughout four counties to falsify returns in order to secure the election of Davidson.

In many precincts more votes were returned as counted than there were voters present at the election or living in the precinct.

The uncontradicted testimony of Morrill, county tax assessor for six years, shows (page 54) that in Canton, Wilcox County, there are 214 voters; but the returns give a total vote of 276, and allot 226 votes to Davidson.

The testimony (page 54) shows in Clifton, same county, 199 votes; but the returns give 200 votes cast, which indicates that a large percentage of the vote was polled on November 2, 1886.

At Allentown it appears that 311 votes were actually cast (page 169), and that there were 330 voters in the precinct (page 54); but the official poll-list gives 347 votes as polled.

At Pineapple there are 308 voters, of whom 228 are colored; but the returns declare that 324 votes were cast, and that of these Davidson got 244, Turner 78, and McDuffie 6.

At Mount Hope there are 162 voters, 127 colored and about 35 white (page 54); but the returns declare that 416 votes were cast, of which Colonel Davidson was fortunate enough to receive 399, while Turner, who does not appear to have run well in this precinct, received only 13, and McDuffie was forced to be content with 4.

At Fox's Mill there are 116 voters, whom an experienced Republican canvasser (page 54) divides between the parties as 23 Republicans and 93 Democrats. The returns give 111 votes to Davidson and none to anybody else, which indicates that it does not require a contest in Fox's Mill to bring out a very full vote, and also that there is a delightful unanimity in that favored spot.

At Sedan there are 106 voters, according to the uncontradicted Republican canvasser (page 54), 48 Republicans and 58 Democrats. The returns gave Davidson 105, Turner 4, and McDuffie 6, in all 115 votes, which indicates a recent increase in the voting strength of Sedan.

At Gee's Bend it appears (page 54) that there are some 10 white and 131 colored voters; but the returns gave Davidson alone 190, and the total vote was 210—another interesting increase in voting population.

At Mining precinct there are some 103 voters, as equally divided as possible between the parties. The returns, ever generous, gave Davidson 137 votes, and showed that 156 votes in all were cast, which is still another increase in voters.

The official vote in all these cases is given in McDuffie's testimony, pages 68, 69.

There are, however, some precincts which show a vote in the returns that can not be accounted for even by the abnormally rapid increase in population which appears to be characteristic of the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama.

In Walthall's precinct, Perry County, the poll-list, which is in evidence (pages 48, 49), shows that 261 voters voted on November 2. The inspectors' returns, however, declare that 282 men voted, 21 more than were recorded on the poll-list by the same inspectors. It is needless to add that these returns were accepted, and that 213 votes were counted from Walthall's precinct for Davidson.

In the matter of large returns Dallas County furnishes the champion precinct. At Valley Creek the testimony shows (page 180) that not over 115 voters voted there on November 2, 1886. The census of 1880 gives the population of Valley Creek as 2,608. Allowing that the same percentage of increase of population has occurred since 1880 as between 1870 and 1880 there would have been in the precinct in November, 1886, rather less than 3,000 persons. On the usual estimate of 1 adult male for each 5 of the total population we should have 600 voters in the precinct in 1886.

The returns declare that the total vote in this precinct was 685, of which Davidson received 501 votes and Turner 149. The polls were open from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m., ten hours, during which the voters voted at the rate of rather more than one a minute without intermission during the entire day. In view of the size of the voting population this total is an interesting result, but when we consider that there is sworn testimony that not more than 104 colored men and 10 white men actually voted, then the result becomes more than interesting. The chairman of the Democratic Congressional committee, Mr. John Mellwain, was present at this polling place, and it can not be doubted that he felt that his position demanded unusual exertions in behalf of his candidate. The minority of his committee are obliged to admit that those exertions were conspicuously successful.

The names of the dead, absent, and disfranchised were placed on the poll-lists as having voted.

No effort was made to rebut this testimony, and these instances of representing the dead, absent, and disfranchised as having voted occurred at widely separated points, indicating a general scheme of returning bogus votes. Comment upon this method of increasing the voting population seems entirely superfluous.

In many precincts in which it is known that the population is chiefly colored no votes at all were returned for McDuffie.

In Dallas County, Richmond precinct, according to the official returns, Davidson received 214 votes; McDuffie none; and the same state of things existed in the following precincts:

Precincts.	Davidson.	McDuffie.
Pleasant Hill	14	None.
IN HALE COUNTY.
Phipp's precinct	53	None.
Hollow Square	45	None.
IN WILCOX COUNTY.
Fox's Mill	111	None.
Bonham	178	None.
IN PERRY COUNTY.
Brush Creek	47	None.
Oldtown	195	None.
Pinetucky	81	None.
Heards	42	None.
Perryville	122	None.
Oak Grove	105	None.
Radfordsville	80	None.

In many other precincts McDuffie is given less than 6 votes by the returns, but here are thirteen precincts, scattered over four counties, in which, according to the returns, McDuffie did not receive a single vote, although it is well known that the population is chiefly colored, and it is admitted even by the witnesses for contestee that the colored voters are generally Republicans.

In other instances the voting-places were changed without due notice, in order that the Republican voters might not know where to go to cast their votes.

In Gee's Bend, Wilcox County, Isom McLaughlin swears that the voting-place was changed 3 miles without notice, and he had difficulty in getting there (page 172). George Petway swears that the usual place of voting was at the red schoolhouse, and at this election the voting place was at Young's store (page 172).

In still other instances the inspectors failed or refused to open the polls in strong Republican precincts.

In Hollow Square precinct, Hale County (pages 117, 118), and in St. Clair precinct, Lowndes County (pages 62-67), inspectors were either absent or refused to open the polls. The polls being then opened by three qualified electors, in accordance with the law (Code of Alabama, chapter 3, article 1, section 262), and an election duly held, the returns from these precincts were rejected by the county boards of supervisors. At Lowndesborough an attempt was made to refuse to open polls, and the inspectors only opened polls when the voters started to do it themselves (page 61).

The laws of Alabama require that not more than two out of three of the inspectors shall belong to the same political party. In order to make a showing of compliance with the law, the Democratic authorities would appoint a negro who could neither read nor write, as the Republican inspector, or else, wholly disregarding the law, would appoint three Democratic inspectors.

At Uniontown precinct, Perry County (page 37), two of the election officers were nephews and one was the son of Davidson; and it was one of these nephews who declared, when he was criticised for substituting Davidson for McDuffie votes, that "Uncle Aleck might's well have it."

In Selma, Dallas County, one of the inspectors who signed the returns was Jesse Wilson, a colored man, who was disfranchised under the law of Alabama for crime, but who was, nevertheless, appointed an inspector by the county supervisors, and whose name also appears upon the poll-list as having voted (page 45).

The law requires that two of the inspectors should be of opposite political parties, but at Greensborough (page 46), Hamburgh (page 45), Mount Hope (page 158), and Marion Junction (page 125), they were all Democrats.

At the following precincts two of the inspectors were white Democrats, while the third was an ignorant colored man, unable either to read or write, and these inspectors were appointed by the Democratic board of supervisors, consisting of the judge of probate, county clerk, and sheriff of the county:

The law requires that not more than two out of three of the inspectors shall be of the same political party. To meet the requirements of the law it will be observed from the above table that in twenty-six precincts (omitting Lowndesborough) out of seventy-three, scattered over four counties, an ignorant colored man, unable to read or write, was associated as the Republican representative with two Democrats in the performance of the important duties of inspectors of elections.

It is also interesting to notice that of these twenty-seven precincts given above nineteen come from a single county. The reason for this is that exact transcripts of the precinct returns from Dallas County are given in the record, thus showing the signatures of the inspectors to each return, and disclosing, out of a total of twenty-seven cases nineteen in which one of the inspectors could only make his mark. Could we have had in the record similar transcripts of all the precinct returns in the district, no doubt as large a proportion of ignorant Republican inspectors would have been disclosed in the other counties. In all the counties except Dallas the politics and the capacity of the inspectors had to be shown by outside testimony, but enough was disclosed even in this way to demonstrate that the ingenious scheme of having the Republican inspector a man too ignorant to detect fraud was carried out as thoroughly as in Dallas, where it is obvious on the face of the returns.

Now let us compare the vote actually cast at the various precincts with the returns of the election officers, and mark the result:

DALLAS COUNTY, BROWN'S STATION.

The returns from this precinct gave Davidson 207, Turner 59, and McDuffie 52 votes. Charles H. Walker (page 41) testified that he was a United States supervisor; that he stood within 5 feet of the box; that the ticket-taker was a one-armed man, and sometimes dropped the ballots so that he (Walker) was able to see that McDuffie tickets were voted; that a list was kept outside which showed that 282 colored voters had taken McDuffie tickets and voted them; that the colored people were united for McDuffie; that there was no indication that any of them voted for Turner, and that after the returns were announced there was great dissatisfaction. A meeting was held and 250 men put down their names as having voted for McDuffie. Cross-examination was slight, and only showed that witness was a Republican and did not keep a tally.

Lewis Boyd (page 64) testified that he issued McDuffie tickets, and that three other men kept lists of those who took them; that he issued 285 McDuffie tickets, watched the voters closely, and saw them voted without change. Cross-examination failed to shake this testimony, and only went to show that witness could not read the ticket as it was put into the box, being too far away, that is, some 30 feet.

W. M. Ellerson (page 42) testified that he was one of the men taking down names of McDuffie voters; that he took down 115 names and his two companions took down 40 and 115, respectively. On cross-examination he swore that he watched as closely as possible the voters, and that they voted the tickets without change, although some might have changed without his seeing them.

Allen Allison was called by contestee to rebut this evidence. He testified that he thought there were a "good many" colored voters who voted the Davidson ticket. On cross-examination he testified that he voted a Turner ticket himself; that he had heard five or six colored voters, whom he named, say they intended to vote for Davidson, but on being asked if he could say that any one voted the Democratic ticket, he replied, "I could not say that they did; I go by what we talked over."

DALLAS COUNTY, KING'S.

The returns gave Davidson 181, Turner 22 votes, and none for McDuffie.

Willie Davidson (page 77) testified that there were about 45 or 50 white voters in the precinct who voted that day, and that the total vote was about 180; that he issued 120 McDuffie tickets to colored voters, and "saw each of these colored voters take the ticket so issued him and deposit it with the inspector of election." He knew of no colored man who voted for Davidson, and there is no evidence that there were any Turner tickets offered or voted. This witness was not cross-examined, and no effort was made to rebut his testimony.

DALLAS COUNTY, RIVER.

The returns from this precinct gave Davidson 259, Turner 38, and McDuffie 21. Cliff Campbell (page 74) testified that there were present 15 to 20 white voters and 100 to 150 colored voters; that a majority of colored voters voted for McDuffie, who was popular with them. Some of them voted for Davidson, who might have got 40 or 50 votes. Cross-examination did not shake this testimony, but brought out the fact that he made his estimate from watching voters take McDuffie tickets and vote them.

Nias Richardson (page 76) testified that he was one of four men issuing McDuffie tickets, and saw the voters vote them without apparent change. Cross-examination did not shake his testimony, but developed the fact that witness was present all day at the polling-place. This witness also swore that the total vote was from 175 to 200, while the returns give the vote as 318. No attempt was made to rebut this testimony.

Campbell also swore that he saw no Turner tickets, and there is no evidence that any votes were cast for Turner, or for anybody except Davidson and McDuffie. Yet the returns give Turner 38 votes.

DALLAS COUNTY, CAHABA.

The returns from this precinct gave Davidson 230 and McDuffie 33 votes. Ezekiel Arthur testified (page 187) that he and one Hawkins issued McDuffie tickets; that he issued 150 and saw the voters hand them, in every case, to the inspector. A sworn cross-examination failed to shake his testimony on these points. Contestee introduced evidence to rebut. L.M. Kirkpatrick (page 199) testified that he issued 50 Davidson tickets to colored men, but admitted on cross-examination that he knew of his own knowledge of none who voted it. He also testified that Arthur's character for truth and veracity was good, but that neither Arthur nor Hawkins were present all day. Clifton Kirkpatrick (page 208) testified to the same effect, admitting that he knew only one colored voter who voted for Davidson, and that there were 25 to 30 whites and 250 to 300 colored voters in the precinct.

DALLAS COUNTY, VALLEY CREEK.

W. H. Haynes (pages 179–187) testified as follows:

"Q. What time did the polls open that day and what time did they close?

"A. They opened between eight and nine and closed between five and six.

"Q. What were you doing there that day?

"A. I was issuing Judge McDuffie tickets.

"Q. How many tickets did you issue there that day, and did you see the parties to whom you issued tickets vote them?

"A. I issued 100 McDuffie tickets and Alf Boyd issued 4; I saw 95 of the persons to whom I issued McDuffie tickets vote them, and I saw the 4 men to whom Alf Boyd issued tickets vote them.

"Q. How far were you from the polling-place when you gave the voters the McDuffie tickets and you saw them vote them?

"A. I would meet the voters from ten to twenty feet from the polls; ask them what ticket they wanted to vote; they would tell me they wanted McDuffie tickets. I gave them a McDuffie ticket, walked up to the polls with them, and saw them vote it, and when they voted I was not over three or four feet from the inspectors who took the tickets.

"Q. Did any one notice you watching the voters vote, and, if so, whom, and what did they say to you, if anything?

"A. Mr. Ben Harrison noticed me and said to me, can you swear to all to whom you gave tickets voted them?

"Q. What did you say to him?

"A. Very nearly all.

He further testified that 4 or 5 colored men voted for Davidson, and that 10 white men voted, one of them for McDuffie, and that he was at the polls all day. He was subjected to a severe cross-examination, which not only failed to shake his evidence in chief as to the vote, but strengthened it by his reiteration as to the vote for each candidate and as a whole. No attempt was made to rebut this evidence. Mr. John McIlwain, chairman of the Democratic Congressional district committee, was present at this polling place, and the returns, as has been already pointed out, corresponded to the important political position that he occupied. The returns gave Davidson 501 votes, Turner 149, and McDuffie 35. Haynes could hardly have been mistaken seriously as to the total number of voters, and no attempt was made to either rebut or impeach his sworn testimony on this point, and yet Davidson alone received five times as many votes as there were voters present and voting.

DALLAS COUNTY, LEXINGTON.

The returns gave Davidson 115 and McDuffie 107 votes. Asia McMillan testified that he was present all day, generally within 35 yards of polling-place, and that he issued 190 McDuffie tickets and saw them handed in at the window. He further testified that 55 to 60 white voters lived in the precinct, and that he knew only 1 colored voter who voted for Davidson.

Cross-examination failed to shake this testimony, going only to the point that witness could not read ticket as it was handed in (page 134). Jeff. Edwards (page 136) testified that there were 35 to 40 white and 200 to 300 colored voters in the precinct; that the latter were united in support of McDuffie, and that he knew only 1 who voted for Davidson; that he saw over 100 take tickets from McMillan and 50 to 60 vote them; that only 25 to 30 white men voted. Cross-examination failed to shake this testimony, and no evidence was offered in rebuttal of either witness. It may be noted here that both these witnesses were cross-examined as to Turner's candidacy, although no votes were returned for Turner from this precinct, which would seem to indicate that cross-examination proceeded on the theory of what the returns were intended to show, and that in instances like this the inspectors for some reason did not adhere to the original plan.

DALLAS COUNTY, WOODLAWN.

The returns gave Davidson 107, Turner 1, and McDuffie 6 votes.

Andrew Mixon testified that he was at the polling-place until noon, and saw 40 to 50 voters vote for McDuffie, and that he saw no other ticket there. Cross-examination did not shake this evidence, developing merely the fact that witness was 50 feet from polling-place and could not see the ballot-box, but only the window where the tickets were handed in. The statement that there was no other ticket but the McDuffie ticket to be seen was reiterated. No attempt was made to rebut this testimony.

DALLAS COUNTY, MARION JUNCTION.

The returns gave Davidson 81, Turner 20, and McDuffie 10 votes. J. L. Blevins (page 124) testified that he was present all day during election; that the colored people all voted for McDuffie, and that there were only 25 to 30 white people in the precinct. Cross-examination failed to shake these statements, but developed the fact that the witness issued McDuffie tickets, watched the voters vote, and saw no Turner tickets about anywhere. No attempt was made to rebut this testimony.

DALLAS COUNTY, OLD TOWN.

The returns gave Davidson 46, Turner 3, and McDuffie 2 votes. Stephen Cunningham (pages 112–116) testified that there were some 180 voters present while he was there; that 70 or 80 took McDuffie tickets and 40 Turner tickets and voted them; that he judged by what they told him, but that he saw them vote. He was subjected to a severe cross-examination, which failed to shake his testimony on these points. No attempt was made to rebut this evidence. In this case the Turner and McDuffie vote alike faded away in the box, and only Davidson votes appear in the returns, which show a diminished total vote, instead of the more usual handsome increase over the voters actually present or living in the precinct.

DALLAS COUNTY, UNION PRECINCT.

The returns gave Davidson 320, Turner 31, and McDuffie 19 votes.

Affie Jones testified that he issued 86 McDuffie tickets and saw them carried to the box without change and voted, and was prevented from keeping a tally by one of the Democratic inspectors, Mr. McIlwain (page 108). This witness was not cross-examined, but James Townsend was called by contestee to rebut. Townsend testified that he issued about 50 Davidson tickets to colored voters, and believed from what they said that they voted them, but only knew three colored men who were Democrats. He further testified that Jones was 78 steps distant from polling-place, and unable to distinguish a ticket at that distance.

DALLAS COUNTY, PENCE'S BEAT.

The returns from this precinct give Davidson 168 and McDuffie 8 votes. Lewis Phillips (page 102) swore that 139 voters took the McDuffie ticket and handed them in at the widow. Cross-examination failed to shake his testimony and only developed the fact that witness was 30 yards from window. Emmet Shepherd (page 103) testified that he knew that 139 voters took McDuffie tickets and voted them, and on cross-examination swore that he was about 40 yards from the window, and knew that these 139 voters voted for McDuffie, because each man called McDuffie's name as he voted.

No attempt was made to rebut this evidence. Assuming that the total vote returned by the inspectors is correct, it is necessary to suppose further, in order to sustain the contestee's vote of 168, that 131 colored voters received McDuffie tickets, changed them for Davidson tickets without being noticed by either of the two witnesses who were watching them closely, and then, as they voted for Davidson, called out McDuffie's name to deceive the men keeping the tally.

DALLAS COUNTY, BURNSVILLE PRECINCT.

The returns gave Davidson 460, Turner 77, McDuffie 17.

J. C. Brantley, a United States supervisor, saw 75 vote McDuffie ticket, and no colored people vote for Davidson or Turner. He also swore that about 200 voters came to the polls.

Cross-examination failed to shake his testimony on these points. (Page 109.)

H. M. Hale (page 144) swore that there were some 375 white and colored voters in this precinct; that he issued 202 McDuffie tickets; was present all day, and saw 200 vote the McDuffie ticket which he gave them, and that 200 to 300 persons voted. Contestee's witness, R. D. Berry, testified that he knew four or five negroes who voted for Davidson, and that Brantley was not always present, and that Hale was not in a position to see the voters vote. Contestant was given no notice as to Berry, and had no opportunity to cross-examine him.

DALLAS COUNTY, LIBERTY HILL.

Tony Tolbert, (page 981) swore that he saw 65 to 70 colored voters place McDuffie tickets in the box; was there all day, and swore that about 100 persons voted.

No evidence was offered to rebut this testimony.

The returns gave Davidson 132, Turner 37, and McDuffie 31.

DALLAS COUNTY, MITCHELL'S MILL.

Lott P. Thomas testified (page 97) that he was at the polling-place from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m. That he issued 307 McDuffie tickets, and saw 303 handed in by the voters at the window, and could not tell about 4 of them. On the cross-examination, which utterly failed to shake his testimony, he swore that he was sitting all the time within 15 feet of the window. No attempt was made to rebut this evidence.

The returns gave Davidson, out of a total of 343, 201 votes; Turner, who apparently received no votes, 108, and McDuffie 34.

DALLAS COUNTY, ORRVILLE PRECINCT.

This precinct, according to inspectors' returns, gave McDuffie 24 votes, Turner 42, and Davidson 163.

Harrison Ellis (page 93) swore that he issued 242 McDuffie tickets, and that he watched the voters and saw most of them vote without changing their ballot.

Cross-examination failed to break him down.

Burrel Hayes swore that the colored voters voted for McDuffie. That he saw many of them vote. That none voted for Turner or Davidson.

Contestee attempted to rebut this evidence, and his first witness, Lance Bryant (pages 205 and 206), testified that he saw only four men vote; that he and three others were all he knew who voted for Davidson; that he thought all the rest of the colored people, some 200, voted for McDuffie, and that no one voted for Turner, and if the inspectors gave him 42 they gave him votes that he never received.

Contestee's second witness, Henry Bennet, testified that he knew of some half dozen negroes who were Democrats, and he believed "right smart" of the colored voters voted for Davidson. He swore also that Ellis could not see all voters, which was admitted.

DALLAS COUNTY, MARTIN PRECINCT.

Returns gave Davidson 340, Turner 103, McDuffie 18.

Nathan Stratton swore that he issued 364 McDuffie tickets, and Ned Petway, who stood at the window, swore that he saw these men vote without changing their ballot. Both swore that colored people sustained McDuffie and took no interest in Turner. (Pages 94 and 95.)

Craig testified that there were about 40 or 50 white voters in the precinct and 250 to 300 blacks, according to his recollection (page 141). No attempt was made to rebut this evidence, and the witnesses were not broken down on cross-examination.

DALLAS COUNTY, SELMA.

The returns gave Davidson 857, Turner 156, McDuffie 102. Henry Blevins (pages 99, 131) testifies that he issued 160 McDuffie tickets; that Turner was unpopular with the colored voters and received very few votes, and that, in his opinion, not over 300 persons voted in the precinct, very little voting being done in the afternoon. George H. Craig, who lives in Selma, and has been twice a candidate for Congress, and is familiar with the voting strength of the various precincts in the district, and especially with that of Selma, testified (page 141) that a very light vote was polled in Selma, and that in his opinion nothing like 1,115 votes were thrown as returned by the inspectors.

The character of some of the names given on the poll-list as those of persons who voted has been shown already. Contestee undertook to rebut the testimony of Blevins by that of Willis Hill (pages 192, 193). Hill swore that he worked for Davidson in the campaign and secured at least 20 votes for him, but on cross-examination could not give the name of a single colored voter who voted for Davidson. He offered no testimony as to the total vote. It will be noted that according to the returns, assuming the polls to have been open from 8 to 6, 1,115 voters voted in 10 hours, or at the rate of nearly 2 voters a minute all day without intermission.

PERRY COUNTY, UNIONTOWN.

The returns from this precinct gave Davidson 720, Turner 203, and McDuffie 65. George A. Clarke (pages 27–30) testified that he issued 836 McDuffie tickets to colored voters, whose names he took down. The list that he made is in evidence (pages 50–53). He further swore that he saw these men leave the place where he gave them the tickets and walk to the polling-place. Fountain Hudson, an inspector, testified that he saw 400 McDuffie tickets in the box, and that most of the tickets handed to him were open (page 30). Ned Braxton (page 31) swore that he saw 400 to 500 voters come from where Clarke was, and watched them as they entered the building where the polling-place was, and that they did not change the tickets, so far as he saw. Dr. J. H. Houston testified that there were 800 to 1,000 colored voters in the precinct, and that 95 per cent. voted the Republican ticket; that he watched the voters at the head of the stairs and saw that they did not change their tickets. He further testified that there was no voting for Turner.

The contestee introduced as witnesses 9 colored men (pages 80 to 86), who swore they voted for him, and named 14 other colored men whom they thought voted for Davidson. Of these 23 voters, as will be shown later on, only 6 took McDuffie tickets. If the returns are correct, we are obliged to believe that 771 men took McDuffie tickets and gave their names to Clarke as voting for McDuffie, secretly changed their ballots between the head of the stairs and the ballot-box, and then voted secretly for Davidson.

PERRY COUNTY, CUNNINGHAM.

The returns gave Davidson 288, Turner 45, and McDuffie 10. Oliver Ward testified that he issued and tallied 129 or 139 McDuffie votes, and saw the voters walk to the polls. Nick Seawell testified that after Ward stopped tallying he tallied 49 more McDuffie voters. Neither Ward nor Seawell saw any votes for Turner; and Seawell said 4 colored voters voted for Davidson. This testimony was not rebutted or contradicted.

PERRY COUNTY, WALTHALL'S.

The returns gave Davidson 213, Turner 36, McDuffie 33. Lee Andrews (page 39) testified that he issued between 200 and 300 McDuffie tickets, and saw 100 voted without apparent change. Green Chambers, called in rebuttal, testified that he voted for Davidson, and he thought "a heap" of colored voters voted for Davidson. The poll-list in this precinct shows that 261 persons voted, while the returns, supposed to be based on the poll-list, make the vote 282. Andrews swore that he saw no one vote for Turner.

PERRY COUNTY, SCOTT'S.

The returns gave Davidson 394, Turner 20, and McDuffie 15. William Jenkins testified that the colored people generally said they were voting for McDuffie; that he saw 50 vote that ticket; that 2 voted for Davidson, and that he did not hear Turner's name mentioned during the day (page 40). Daniel Thompkins (page 43) testified that he issued McDuffie tickets; that he saw 75 to 100 vote for McDuffie and 1 for Davidson, and that there were about 20 white voters in the precinct. His testimony was not contradicted.

PERRY COUNTY, MARION.

The returns gave Davidson 606, Turner 49, and McDuffie 23. Nick Stevens testified that he tallied the McDuffie vote and saw 400 to 450 go to the polls with the McDuffie ticket; that he did not know of any who voted for Davidson, and saw no one vote for Turner, because no one issued Turner tickets, the man to whom they were given having refused to issue them, and that about 75 white men voted. Cross-examination did not shake this testimony, and no attempt was made to rebut it.

PERRY COUNTY, HAMBURG.

The returns here gave Davidson 306, Turner 26, and McDuffie 7. Norvell Montgomery (page 46) testified that he issued 79 McDuffie tickets to colored voters, kept a list of those who received them, and watched them enter the building where the polls were without changing tickets. Swore that these 79 who took tickets and two or three others who did not vote were the only colored voters present during the day, and he was there from the opening until the closing of the polls. He could not, of course, see the voters vote, but only enter the building. This testimony was not attacked in cross-examination, but Hugh Davis was called to rebut it, and testified that more than 79 colored voters voted that day, i. e., as many as 260 to 275.

HALE COUNTY, NEWBERN.

The returns gave Davidson 206, Turner 58, and McDuffie 1. Oliver Ward testified that some 10 colored people voted there that day for Davidson, and 75 to 80 whites, but that the colored Republicans refused to vote, having no confidence in the inspectors. Dock McCrae testified to the same effect, and that he took the names of 180 voters who did not vote. These witnesses were neither cross-examined nor contradicted. It will be observed that although these voters failed to vote at the polling-place, they all voted in the returns, and voted for Davidson.

HALE COUNTY, GREENSBOROUGH.

The returns gave Davidson 330, Turner 121, and McDuffie 228. A. B. Hunter (page 46) testified that he tallied 546 voters who took McDuffie tickets and walked with them into the court-house where the polling-place was, and that the McDuffie tickets were printed in black ink to distinguish them from the Davidson tickets, printed in red. William Hugely swore that he stood by the box and saw the voters tallied by Hunter vote the McDuffie ticket. It would seem that the inspectors were sufficiently impressed by the precautions taken by these uncontradicted witnesses and others to preserve appearances in the returns rather better than in most precincts, which was creditable to their sense of the general fitness of things, even in cheating at an election. There is no evidence that any Turner tickets were voted at this precinct.

HALE COUNTY, MACON STATION.

The returns gave Davidson 380, Turner 150, and McDuffie 21. Alexander Lewis (page 45) testified that he issued nearly 300 McDuffie tickets and saw them handed in at the window, and that he saw no one vote for Turner and only one Turner ticket on the ground. This evidence was neither contradicted nor rebutted in any way.

HALE COUNTY, CEDARVILLE.

The returns gave Davidson 226, Turner 50, and McDuffie 75. Fred. Murphy (page 105) testified that he issued 315 McDuffie tickets and saw those identical tickets handed to the inspector, and that he stood within 30 feet of the door all day. This testimony was neither rebutted nor contradicted.

HALE COUNTY, HOLLOW SQUARE.

The returns gave Davidson 45, Turner 0, and McDuffie 0. R. D. Starkey swore (page 117) that the inspectors, of whom only one was present, refused to open the polls; that he and three other qualified voters then, in accordance with law, opened the polls at 8.45, and kept them open till 5 p. m., and allowed everybody to vote who desired; that there were 284 votes cast for McDuffie, and none for anybody else; and that these votes were cast by registered voters and duly counted and returned. Cross-examination failed entirely to shake the testimony of this witness, and on being recalled he produced, under oath, a duplicate of the returns sent to the county authorities. When the official returns for the county were made out these 284 votes for McDuffie had disappeared and were replaced by 45 for Davidson, which indicates the existence of an interesting discrepancy between the various official returns in this precinct.

LOWNDES COUNTY, LOWNDESBOROUGH.

The returns gave Davidson 178 votes and McDuffie 58. Scott Smith testified that he issued McDuffie tickets and saw 59 handed in at the window, and that only two or three colored men voted for Davidson, 225 to 250 having voted. Josh Howard testified that 25 or 30 white voters voted that day, and about 200 colored voted that day. Ben De Lemos testified to the same figures. This testimony was not contradicted or rebutted, witnesses for contestee being called to contradict Robinson's testimony as to the way the count was made.

LOWNDES COUNTY, ST. CLAIR.

Cain Salomon testified that the inspectors not opening the polls, he and 4 other qualified voters opened polls and received votes, and that 82 votes were cast for McDuffie and honestly counted and returned. The regular inspectors subsequently opened polls. Henry Taylor testified to the same effect. The county supervisors threw out the returns from this precinct.

WILCOX COUNTY, CAMDEN.

The returns gave Davidson 364, Turner 212, and McDuffie 35. Laurence Washington (page 153) swore that he saw 116 voters take McDuffie tickets from Charles Moye and vote them, and that in his opinion about 400 voters voted there for McDuffie. This witness was neither cross-examined, contradicted, nor rebutted.

WILCOX COUNTY, SNOW HILL.

The returns gave Davidson 451, Turner 125, and McDuffie 15. Daniel A. Carmichael (page 153) testified that he issued and tallied 425 McDuffie, and saw them voted; that he saw 6 colored voters vote for Turner and 1 for Davidson, and 1 white man for McDuffie, and that about 160 whites voted. Cross-examination not only did not shake this evidence, but strengthened it. Nathan Scott (page 175) testified that he issued McDuffie tickets, and that although he did not keep a tally, he knew that about 400 voted them. On cross-examination, which only strengthened this evidence, he said:

"I handed them their tickets, and was standing in front of the window where they voted, and saw them go and hand them in, and there was no swapping."

In reply to a question as to how he knew of his own knowledge that they voted for McDuffie, he said:

"Because I gave them their choice to vote for McDuffie or Davidson, and they took the McDuffie tickets and voted them, is why I say so."

These witnesses were not contradicted or rebutted in any way.

WILCOX COUNTY, BLACK'S BLUFF.

The returns gave Davidson 75 and McDuffie 10. Isham Bolton (page 155) testified that 162 voters received McDuffie tickets and voted them; that he watched them go into the box, being within 20 yards at farthest all day, and that Wyatt Shelborne issued the votes and Moses Henry tallied them. Shelborne (page 157) and Henry (page 170) testified to the same effect, and the latter introduced in evidence his tally-list. These witnesses were not shaken on cross-examination, nor were they rebutted or contradicted.

WILCOX COUNTY, MOUNT HOPE.

The returns gave Davidson 391, Turner 13, and McDuffie 4. Wash Adams swore (page 158) that he issued 75 McDuffie tickets and saw them voted. Cross-examination did not shake this testimony, nor was it rebutted. He further testified that there were about 35 or 36 white and 5 or 6 colored Democratic voters in the precinct. In this case, as in many others, it is interesting to contrast the number of votes cast for McDuffie with the number returned.

WILCOX COUNTY, BOILING SPRING.

The returns gave Davidson 154, Turner 26, and McDuffie 17. Daniel Moore (page 159) testified that he kept a poll-list of the McDuffie voters, which was put in evidence, and that 173 voters voted for McDuffie, and on cross-examination he said:

"I saw the votes taken in at the door by the inspector. They voted the ticket issued to them."

He further testified that there were 25 white and not more than 5 colored Democratic voters in the precinct. He was neither rebutted nor contradicted.

WILCOX COUNTY, GEE'S BEND.

The returns gave Davidson 190, Turner 14, and McDuffie 6. In this precinct the polls were moved to an unusual place, but Isom McLaughlin (page 162) testified that he saw 18 or 20 colored men vote for McDuffie and gave the names of 16. William Aiken (page 163) swore that he saw about 50 votes cast for McDuffie, and George Petway (page 171) swore that he issued 75 McDuffie tickets and saw them voted. These witnesses were not rebutted or contradicted.

WILCOX COUNTY, BETHEL.

The returns gave Davidson 205, Turner 15, and McDuffie 6. Charles Perkins testified that there were 196 Republicans there that day, but only 100 voted, because they only had that number of McDuffie tickets and were not accustomed to voting written tickets. Ben Dixon (page 166) testified that he issued the 100 tickets and saw them voted. These witnesses were not rebutted or contradicted.

WILCOX COUNTY, PRAIRIE BLUFF.

The returns gave Davidson 231 and McDuffie 10. Granville Bennett, who was an inspector, swore (page 167) that he tallied 227 votes cast for McDuffie, and L. J. Sykes (page 168), who was outside, testified that he issued 227 McDuffie tickets and saw them voted. Cross-examination failed to shake Bennett's testimony, and neither witness was contradicted or rebutted.

WILCOX COUNTY, ALLENTON.

There were no returns showing how many votes were cast or for whom, but the poll-list had 347 names on it.

James L. Grace swore (page 169) that he and Samuel Walton issued 276 Republican votes, kept a tally, and saw them voted. Walton testified to the same effect, and on cross-examination swore that the votes could not have been changed without his seeing it done. Neither witness was rebutted or contradicted.

WILCOX COUNTY, REHOBOTH.

The returns gave Davidson 195, Turner 40, and McDuffie 5. Levi McCammon (page 173) testified that he issued tickets and saw 106 voters vote for McDuffie; that a list was kept and the votes tallied. Archie Carr (page 174) testified to the same effect. They were not rebutted or contradicted, and they further testified that there were some 35 or 36 white Democrats in the precinct.

WILCOX COUNTY, CANTON.

The returns gave Davidson 226, Turner 41, McDuffie 10. Jake English testified that he watched and saw 135 men vote for McDuffie. He saw no colored voters vote for Davidson, and that there are about 32 or 33 white Democrats in the precinct. Cross-examination failed to shake this testimony, which was unrebutted and uncontradicted.

These precincts, which have been examined thus in detail, show that contestant's witnesses testified uniformly and generally very exactly as to the votes issued and cast for McDuffie and they were but little shaken on cross-examination, which was directed almost exclusively to showing that witnesses could not read the ballot as it was deposited, and that it might have been changed without their knowing it. Even if this contention had been generally successful, which it was not, it would have done but little to break the real force of this evidence, which demonstrates uniform and complete fraud through the four counties. This testimony also shows with perfect clearness that the Turner ticket was hardly voted at all and in some precincts was not even heard of. The returns, however, were not cramped by any consideration of the votes actually cast, and gave Davidson in the district 14,913 votes, a plurality over McDuffie of 11,387.

It is a subject of interesting consideration to learn how these frauds were perpetrated.

At Uniontown, Perry County, the votes cast were put in a sack by Mr. Pitts, nephew of Mr. Davidson, and then in the count Davidson ballots were counted instead of those cast for McDuffie (pages 31 and 32).

At Brown's Station, Walker County, Charles H. Walker, United States supervisor, testified as follows:

"Q. After the close of the polls did the inspectors immediately count out the vote and ascertain the result? And if not, state fully what was done.

"A. They did not; they said they were tired and wanted to take some air; they walked out and waited about one hour; then they went to supper before they counted out.

"Q. During this time what did they do with the box?

"A. When they went to supper one of the inspectors wanted to take the box with him. I objected; then he said he would leave it with the depot agent, and handed it to him, who put it down out of my sight; I again objected, and he handed it back to me, or a box similar to it.

"Q. What kind of a box was this?

"A. A small tin box.

"Q. Did you see any of the tickets voted there that day for Judge McDuffie; and, if so, how was his name printed on the ticket?

"A. I saw some of the McDuffie tickets there that day voted, and McDuffie's name was printed across the ticket.

"Q. Did you see any of the tickets counted by the inspectors for McDuffie; if so, how was his name printed on those tickets?

"A. I saw the McDuffie tickets that the inspectors counted, and on these tickets McDuffie's name was printed lengthwise of the ticket.

"Q. These tickets counted by the inspectors, how were they folded, neatly or otherwise?

"A. They were folded neatly.

"Q. Did they have the appearance of having been handled much, or were they clean?

"A. They were clean; did not appear to have been handled much.

"Q. How were the tickets voted by the voters folded, and did they appear to be clean?

"A. They were loosely folded; they were soiled and appeared to have been handled.

"Q. How close were you to the ballot-box during the time of the voting?

"A. About 5 feet.

"Q. Did you watch closely the tickets while they were being voted and put in the ballot-box?

"A. Yes, sir; I did.

"Q. Who put the tickets in the ballot-box? Explain fully about this.

"A. Aleck Colemon put the tickets in the ballot-box. He was a one-armed man, and had some trouble in putting the tickets into the box; sometimes they would drop and come open.

"Q. Did you or could you see whose name was on the dropped tickets, whose now were they printed on the tickets?

"A. John W. McDuffie name was printed across the ticket, and these tickets were picked up and put in the box."

From this testimony it will be seen that the tickets counted were different from those cast. The former were clean and had the name printed lengthwise on the ballot, while the latter were soiled and had the name printed across. The trick was evidently accomplished by putting a prepared box in the place of the one which contained the votes actually cast. No effort was made to rebut or impeach this testimony.

In regard to Marion, Perry County, Bill Cole testified as follows (pages 44, 45):

"Bill Cole, being called by the contestant, and first duly sworn, says as follows:

"Q. What is your name, what is your age, and where did you reside on the 2d of November last?

"A. Bill Cole; I am forty-one years old; I was in Marion.

"Q. Were you an inspector of election on that day?

"A. Yes, sir; I was.

"Q. What did you do?

"A. Sat at box and put the tickets in.

"Q. Who received them from the voters?

"A. Mr. Parish.

"Q. Did he receive them in the room where the box was or not?

"A. No, sir; he did not; he received them in one room and carried back into another room where the box was.

"Q. Did you see him drop on the floor any tickets he received from the voters and take another ticket from his person and give it to you to be placed in the box?

"A. Yes; I saw him drop tickets on the floor that he had taken from the voters and take other tickets from his pocket and hand them to me to put in the box.

"Q. Did you put all the tickets he gave you in the box?

"A. Yes, sir; I put all in.

"Q. Did they send you out of the room before they commenced counting?

"A. Yes, sir; they did.

"Q. About how many tickets did you see on the floor after the voting was over?

"A. There was a good many."

This is direct evidence of the fraudulent changing of ballots. Mat Boyd was called by contestee and swore that Cole's general character for truth and veracity was bad, but admitted on cross-examination that Cole had been duly appointed by the county board. This creates an interesting dilemma. Either Cole is a reasonably truthful person or the judge of probate, the county clerk, and the sheriff of Perry County, all Democrats and all white men, friends of Davidson, appointed deliberately as an inspector a colored man who not only could neither read nor write but whose character for truth and veracity was notoriously bad. Cole's evidence, however, is wholly unrebutted. Mr. Parish, whom we accused of managing the fraud, could have been called by contestee to contradict Cole's testimony. He was not called, and Cole's evidence on this case stands entirely uncontradicted.

In regard to Lowndesborough, Lowndes County, Scott Smith testified as follows (page 59):

"Redirect:

"Q. You were asked in your cross-examination if there was an election held in August, 1886, in said beat, and you stated there was. Was not Larry Hunter and Archie Douglas inspectors at said August election, as well as in November election; and, if so, were they not accused of fraudulently counting the vote cast at said August election in favor of the candidates whom they supported?

"(Contestee objects to the question on the ground that it is hearsay and irrelevant.)

"A. They were inspectors at the August election; they were accused of counting the election fraudulently in August, 1886, in favor of the candidate who they supported.

"Q. In the November election was not Larry Hunter and Archie Douglas warm and ardent supporters of Colonel Davidson, and were they not accused of fraudulently counting the election of November 2, 1886, in favor of Colonel Davidson there that night?

"A. They were both ardent supporters of Colonel Davidson, and they were accused that night of fraudulently counting the vote in favor of Colonel Davidson.

"Q. Do you know James Y. Brame? Is he a leading citizen of that beat and what are his politics?

"A. I know him; he is a leading citizen of that beat, a prominent one, and he is a Democrat.

"Q. Do you know, and if so, how do you know, if he voted there on the second day of November last?

"A. He went to the depot that morning and did not return in his buggy until that evening after the polls had closed."

"Cross:

"Q. Who were they accused by in August and November of fraudulently counting the votes?

"A. In the August election, white people and Democrats accused them, and in the November election colored people accused them.

"Q. The white people who accused them in August, were they not the defeated party?

"A. It was the white people who were defeated said so, but one white man who was on the winning side in the August election told me also that the election in August was not held fair.

"Q. Who was the white man who told you so two weeks ago?

"A. It was Mr. S. A. Tyson. He was called a caffee, or winning man."

"Redirect:

"Q. Is not Arthur Tyson one of the leading Democrats of the county, a man of large wealth, and knows well how politics of his beat are conducted, or is he not a Democrat in politics?

"A. He is a Democrat; he is a rich man; and I think he understands how politics are conducted in his beat."

From this it will be seen that in this precinct the inspectors were men whom white Democrats believed committed frauds at a previous election, and who at this election were accused on the spot of having committed frauds in the count. It also appears by the testimony of Emanuel Robinson that Mr. Douglas, one of the inspectors, counted the tickets, put some in his pocket and the rest back in the box (page 66). Efforts were made (pages 232, 233) to impeach Robinson's character for truth and veracity, but as he was selected by Democrats as an inspector this would be a reflection upon the judge of probate, county clerk, and sheriff, which can not be admitted.

The returns from Prairie Bluff precinct, in Wilcox County, gave Davidson 231 and McDuffie 10 votes. Granville Bennet, one of the inspectors, testified as follows (page 167):

"Q. After the polls were closed did you count the ballots cast there that day?

"A. We did.

"Q. State how many ballots you counted there that day for each of the candidates voted for.

"A. Two hundred and twenty-seven for McDuffie, and 13 for Davidson.

"Q. State if you made out and signed a statement of the result; if you did, how did you sign it? State the circumstances.

"A. Yes, sir; there was a statement signed up. It was handed to me and I was told to sign it, not seeing or knowing how the report was made out for each candidate."

The other two inspectors were white Democrats. This evidence, which stands unrebutted and unimpeached and entirely unshaken by cross-examination, shows that the votes were correctly counted, and then McDuffie's vote was credited to Davidson in the returns, and Davidson's to McDuffie, for this witness tallied 227 votes for McDuffie as they were cast, and another witness outside issued 227 McDuffie tickets and saw them voted (page 168).

In regard to Cahaba precinct, Dallas County, Ezekiel Arthur testified as follows (page 188):

"Q. When the polls was closed what became of the ballot-box?

"A. They retired to Mr. Kirkpatrick's house and took the box with them.

"Q. Who went to Mr. Kirkpatrick's house?

"A. Mr. Kirkpatrick and son, Simon Ulmer, and Greene Cornega.

"Q. Do you know whether or not the box was carried in the house of Mr. Kirkpatrick?

"A. Cornega and Simon said it was.

"Q. Did Greene Cornega and Simon Ulmer go into Mr. Kirkpatrick's house and stay in there during the time the ballot-box was in the house?

"A. They said they did not; they went round in the back yard.

"Q. About how long was the box kept in Mr. Kirkpatrick's house?

"A. They did not say.

"Q. Are not Simon Ulmer and Greene Cornega both negroes?

"A. They are."

Mr. L. M. Kirkpatrick, who was the owner of the house to which the box was taken, but who was not an inspector, was called by contestee and testified that he had no reason to believe that the ballots counted were not those cast, and that he delivered the ballot-box as it was given to him by the inspectors to the county authorities. Mr. Clifton Kirkpatrick, however, who was also called by contestee, and who was an inspector, testified on cross-examination as follows:

"Q. When you closed the polls that day and the box was carried to your father's house, and you delivered it, as you say, to Simon Ulmer, do you know what became of or was done with that box from that time until you went back to the polling-place?

"A. I do not know.

"Q. Do you know whether or not that box was opened during the time it was out of your possession and before you got back to the polling-place and the ballots taken out or changed?

"A. I do not know whether the box was opened or not.

"Q. Could it not have been opened and the ballots changed without your knowledge?

"A. It could have been opened and the ballots changed without my knowledge, because it was out of my sight for two hours.

"Q. Then you do not know that the ballots that you counted out of that box were the identical ballots that you, as inspector, received from the hands of the electors?

"A. I do not know."

There was, of course, ample opportunity to change the box for one prepared before the polls were opened.

Thus at five precincts in four counties, at widely separated points, we get very clear evidence as to the frauds and the manner of committing them. The inference from this is inevitable that these frauds were carried on throughout the district, except in a portion of Lowndes County. The Republican inspector is almost always an ignorant negro, unable to read or write, and he is either sent out of the room or deceived as to the count. As E. D. Morrill testifies (page 56):

"While the Republican is gone the box is changed for a box loaded previous to election. Sometimes the votes are changed after being handed in at the window and before being placed in the box. Sometimes the count is reversed, the vote of the Republican candidate is given to the Democratic candidate and the vote of the Democratic candidate is given to the Republican candidate."

The frauds and the methods of committing them are as obvious from the testimony as they are clumsy in design and execution.

The widespread existence of predetermined frauds is also indicated by the efforts which were made at different places and in different ways to prevent the production of proofs of wrong doing and to deceive voters.

At Uniontown, Perry County, Colonel Davidson told a colored man that he had no right to keep a tally of voters, and caused him to stop (page 39).

At St. Clair precinct, in Lowndes County, Mr. C. M. Smith, one of the inspectors, a white Democrat, told the colored people that there would be no election on account of a "big show" in Montgomery, and persuaded over two hundred of them to go away (page 67).

Emanuel Robinson, who testified as to Lowndesborough precinct, was threatened by Mr. Merritt, a white Democrat, and told he would catch the devil for having testified (page 68).

J. C. Brantly, United States supervisor at Burnsville, Dallas County, was told that his place was outside, and that he had nothing to do in the house, and to avoid a disturbance he went out (pages 109-111). Randal Berry (page 196), called to rebut this, failed to do so. At Union precinct Affie Jones (page 108) was prevented from keeping a tally by Mr. McIlvain, a Democratic inspector. At Snow Hill, Wilcox County, E. Burson, Democrat, distributing Davidson tickets, told Carmichael to stop taking down McDuffie voters on a list, and threatened him if he continued (page 154).

Judge McDuffie inspected the poll-lists of Wilcox County, and on a cursory examination detected the voting on false names testified to by Morrill (page 54). He made two subsequent attempts to get copies of these poll-lists, but was told that the original had been mislaid. In fact, these poll-lists and returns carry fraud so clearly on their face that the contestee, although he relies wholly on the poll-lists and official returns for his seat, has not put a single poll-list in evidence, in only one county has given transcripts of the official returns, and has not produced even the official vote by precincts in two counties. The minority feel bound to admit, however, that in this shrinking from the production of the detailed official returns the contestee displays excellent judgment.

In the testimony offered by contestee and in the argument made from that testimony the one effort is to suggest (any stronger word would be inappropriate) that Davidson was elected and received his majority by the secret votes of colored men who took McDuffie tickets and then changed them and voted for Davidson. We are able, luckily, to make a test case which disposes of this suggestion. At Uniontown precinct the Republican talliers took down the names of 836 colored men who received and, as they believed, voted McDuffie tickets. Davidson introduced 9 colored men as witnesses who swore they voted for him at Uniontown, and they mentioned 14 others of their race who, they believed, from hearsay, also voted for Davidson. Assuming that these 23 persons all voted for Davidson, the inquiry naturally occurs as to how many of them concealed their purpose by taking McDuffie tickets, and an examination shows that 6 did so. That is, of 836 men only 6 can be shown to have changed their vote, and of 23 who voted for Davidson only 6 took McDuffie tickets to conceal their real intent.

After the perpetration of all these frauds, the following is the official return of the district:

Counties.	Candidates.
	Alex. C. Davidson.	J. V. McDuffie.	Ben F. Turner.
Dallas	5,193	713	908
Hale	1,769	407	429
Lowndes	540	2,070	.....
Perry	3,273	173	390
Wilcox	4,138	163	792
Total	14,913	3,526	2,519

Contestant claims, and with reason, that the apparent majority for contestee has been overthrown, and that by competent evidence he has shown a majority in his favor of 7,232 votes.

But the minority of the committee adopts a different theory, equally well established by the testimony, and throws out these contested precincts and counts only the uncontested precincts. The minority say:

This review of the testimony seems to the minority to show conclusively and overwhelmingly that a conspiracy to carry the election November 2, 1886, in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama existed and was carried out successfully in four of the five counties of the district. They have no doubt that if the vote had been honestly counted Judge McDuffie would have been returned by a large majority. Inasmuch, however, as it is impossible to tell what the exact vote was in the precincts where the returns are contested and obviously vitiated throughout by fraud, they believe that the vote from all such precincts should be thrown out and only the uncontested precincts of Lowndes County counted. Judge McDuffie lived in that county, and the conspiracy broke down among the neighbors of a man generally respected by all, without distinction of party. The uncontested precincts of Lowndes County give Judge McDuffie 2,014 votes and Davidson 362.

The minority is therefore of opinion that Judge McDuffie is entitled to his seat in the Fiftieth Congress, and offer as a substitute for the resolutions proposed by the majority of the committee the following:

Resolved, That Alexander C. Davidson was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Fourth district of Alabama.

Resolved, That John V. McDuffie was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Fourth district of Alabama, and is entitled to his seat.

The resolutions offered by the minority should be adopted by the House.

Mr. LODGE. I yield half an hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON].

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it will be impossible for me within half an hour to discuss this question as it should be discussed. I can simply glance at some of the points as they present themselves in the case. The majority of the Committee on Elections start out with the proposition that all that is necessary to prove to this House and the country that there has been a fair election in the Fourth district of Alabama is to quote the election laws of that State. After quoting from the statutes of Alabama, they say:

These statutes have been cited to show what provisions of law have been made in Alabama to protect the ballot-box against frauds, and the means of discovering them when perpetrated.

They then recommend that these laws be adopted as a model in every State of the Union. Their language is:

It must be admitted that they are admirably designed to promote the purity of elections and afford the best methods yet discovered for detecting frauds upon the ballot-box.

Now, with that proposition of the majority of the committee I take issue. What is the election law of the State of Alabama? It is that the county judge, the county sheriff, and the county clerk shall be organized into an election board; and that board shall have the power of appointing every election officer in the county. In every county of this district, therefore, the election officers who have been appointed are Democrats. I suppose under the machinery of the election laws of Alabama these election officers are Democrats in every county in that State. They take from the people in all the townships and precincts that right which is guarantied to the people in every State of the North, the right of electing their own election officers. Three Democratic officials go into a township with 300 Republican voters and with 30 or 40 Democratic voters, appoint Democratic inspectors, and appoint Democratic clerks to hold the elections, and then to keep them in check they appoint a poor, ignorant black Republican who can neither read nor write.

And here this majority parade this statute, this law of the State of Alabama, before this House as one of the fairest laws for the purpose of preventing a fraud upon the ballot-box; although they virtually say to 300 Republicans in a precinct, you shall have no right to say who shall receive the votes cast at the election; you shall have no right to say who shall count your votes; you shall have no right to say who shall keep the tally when they are counted; you shall have nothing to say who shall make the returns. I say if the ingenuity embodied in the Democratic party in the State of Alabama had been exercised to concoct a scheme of law whereby the will of the honest voter might be thwarted they could not have any contrivances better adapted to secure the accomplishment of that outrage upon the people. Why was it necessary, then, Mr. Speaker, if they did not contemplate the perpetration of fraud—why did they repeal the statute of the State of Alabama which required the numbering of the votes, so that when there was a contest it would be possible to tell for whom a man voted in case it was not a fraudulent vote?

Now, let us see, under this admirably fair law, under this law commended by the majority committee to the universal world, how they demonstrate it. They set about, as is shown to you, the perpetration of a fraud upon the ballot-box. Mr. McDuffie goes into every county in that district, and shows that in every one of those counties there was a preconcerted plan to count him out. There was but one county where he was able to have a fair count, and that was the county in which he lives. How did that happen? Simply because the Democratic judge of that county who helped to appoint the election judges sent word, and the record shows it, "See that McDuffie has a fair count." Where they had an honest, incorruptible man as judge of a county, and he sent word to the election officers of the district, "See that Judge McDuffie has a fair count," then in that county he does have a fair count, and the return shows he comes up with 2,000 majority.

But, says the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], Mr. Davidson was counted out in that county. If he was, why do you pretend in your answer to the contestant in this case, he had been wronged and defrauded in that county? But still it stands as a fair count because McDuffie had seen fit at one time to be elected as an independent Democrat, and to defy the machinery of that party.

They say the negroes voted the Democratic ticket. If that be so, why, then, I say, gentlemen, let them vote it. There is no man on this side of the House who will say the negro who wants to vote the Democratic ticket should not have the right to vote it. No man in the Republican party ever denied the negro that right.

Now we have some very strong illustrations of how the negroes voted the Democratic ticket in this contest. Turn to page 10 of the record and you will see what are the facts in reference to Uniontown precinct, the home of Colonel Davidson. Judge McDuffie charges that he had been wronged and defrauded of 800 votes which had been cast for him; that instead of that number they had counted for him only 131 votes.

He charged in that notice that Mr. Davidson himself had entered into a conspiracy to intimidate the voters; he charged in that notice of contest that the nephew of Mr. Davidson and his own son, who had control of the election machinery in the Uniontown precinct, had been parties to that fraud, and had taken the tickets voted for McDuffie and put them in a sack and carried them off, and never counted them at all. Now, if you have leisure, gentlemen, I ask you to turn to page 22 of the record of Mr. Davidson's answer to that charge, and see what he says:

> I deny that in said county, on said day of election, and at a voting precinct called Uniontown, there were cast for you for said office 836 ballots, or anything like that number, and for me only 152 ballots, by the qualified electors of said precinct. You were neither by a dishonest count nor otherwise deprived of 770 ballots, or any ballots at all; nor was such language as you impute to A. D. Pitts used by him, nor did I seek by any means to intimidate any person either by threat of a criminal prosecution or otherwise.

Now I call the attention of my Democratic friends particularly to this:

> No ballots with your name on them were counted for me, but they were all honestly counted as they were cast; and I assert and will prove that on said day at said precinct and for said office there were honestly cast and counted for me 720, for you 65, and for Benjamin S. Turner 203 ballots.

Again, I commend your careful consideration to the next paragraph of this answer:

> Uniontown, as you well know, is my home. I have large planting interests there, and employ upon my plantations there a large number of negro laborers, and for this reason, as well as for the reason that numbers of negroes vote the Democratic ticket any way, I received the vote above stated.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, what is the condition of Uniontown precinct? Mr. McDuffie brings eight witnesses to prove that there were 800 ballots that went into the ballot-box with the name of "McDuffie" upon them. He has five living witnesses to that fact. He then brings in further evidence one of the election officers—one of the judges of election there—who swears that the nephew of the contestee, A. D. Pitts, abstracted from that ballot-box the tickets with McDuffie's name on them and refused to count them. That same man swears that there were over 400 of such tickets in the box. Recollect now that there were over 900 votes returned; and another man swears that he was tallying the votes and that Mr. Davidson came to him and said, "I tell you you had better stop that; you have no right to be tallying these votes." Thus while his son and his nephew were upon the inside of the house conducting the election in his behalf, he was out among the poor, ignorant negro voters, telling them that they should not tally the votes to see how many of their men had voted.

Mr. Davidson says in his answer, "I will show that testimony to be false." What does he show?

Ah, Mr. Speaker, when the charge is made and the man swears to the facts, does he come up like an honest man and deny it? No, sir; he is as dumb as a Baltimore oyster upon that question. When the judge swears that his nephew had abstracted these votes from the ballot-box, does the nephew come back and deny it? When he swears that the nephew says, "We will give these votes to Uncle Aleck; he might just as well have them as McDuffie," does he come back like an honest man and deny it? No, sir; by no means.

Now, what does the majority of the Committee on Elections find? I ask you what do they propose in this case? They take that ballot-box and recount it; and at the home of Mr. Davidson, where his big plantation is, where he lived all of his life, where his son, who is a judge of election, and where his nephew, who is a judge of election, the two Democrats who controlled this thing, were working on that day, what does the committee do? The majority of the committee take away 800 votes from him and leave him only 8 of the entire number cast. What has become of that negro vote there that was going to support him so strongly—the negroes upon his plantation? Out of the whole number of 800 who cast their ballots we find that the committee agree that he is entitled to only 8 of them. What has become of the rest of his big claim?

But what further? They give McDuffie 400 votes in that very precinct where your tally-sheets kept by your officers of election only gave him 131. What, then, becomes of the other 580 votes cast in that precinct? McDuffie is to be robbed of them by what process? Simply by the fraudulent practices of the contestee in this contest. And this committee takes away 580 votes from him, when the men swear that the tickets went into the ballot-box; and yet this is what you call a "fair election" under the laws of Alabama.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I will, when I get through.

Mr. MACDONALD. I want to ask a question in this connection.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Very well. What is it?

Mr. MACDONALD. I want to know whether there is any testimony except that set out in the minority report in support of what the gentleman has just stated?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes; the record is full of it.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like you to point me to some legal evidence in support of the allegation you make.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I will tell the gentleman. If he will turn to the record and read the evidence on pages 38 and 39 and along there he will find reading that will do his soul good. [Laughter.]

Mr. MACDONALD. I have read it, and did not find it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I have not time to take up these precincts one at a time. We have here other precincts where men voted and as they voted the tickets were put into the overcoat pockets of the officers of election; McDuffie tickets were put there and Davidson tickets were substituted in the box. That is sworn to by the witnesses; and the majority of the committee are bound to acknowledge it.

My colleague on the committee from Pennsylvania yesterday said he wanted to know if the majority of this House would unseat this man and let Mr. McDuffie be placed in his seat when Mr. McDuffie only got 2,376 votes in a district containing over 20,000 voters. He said the minority of the committee had failed to produce any authority for such a proceeding.

I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that there are men sitting upon his own side of the House, his own colleagues, that have got a great deal fewer votes than the 2,300 that Mr. McDuffie would have under this arrangement; that there are men sitting here casting the votes of what should be 40,000 voters upon a vote of 1,700 or 1,800 or 1,900.

Let me right here show you how these nice election laws work upon the representation of this country. Take, for instance, the First district of the State of Alabama. It casts 4,220 votes. Take the Third district. It casts 4,660 votes. Then take Georgia. The First district casts 2,078; the Second district, 2,411; the Third district, 1,704; the Fourth district, 2,339; the Fifth district, 2,999; the Sixth district, 1,722; the Eighth, 2,392; the Ninth, 2,346, and the Tenth, 1,944. Now come to the State of Mississippi, if you please. The Fourth district casts 2,964 votes; the Fifth, 3,527 votes. There is a grand total in those districts of 36,206, or 2,785, on an average, to each member of Congress. Those districts send thirteen members of Congress to represent the free American people upon this floor.

Now take my own State, the State of Indiana. The First district cast 35,159 votes; the Second, 30,981; the Third, 26,026; the Fourth, 30,766; the Fifth, 32,885; the Sixth, 32,654; the Seventh, 43,790; the Eighth, 40,739; the Ninth, 41,461; the Tenth, 34,155; the Eleventh, 38,890; the Twelfth, 34,589; the Thirteenth, 41,025—making a grand aggregate of 471,287 voters that sent but thirteen members to this House.

Because we men of the North object to this state of affairs it is said that we want to wave the bloody shirt. What we want is that every man in this broad land shall have the right to vote and shall have his vote honestly and fairly counted.

I hold in my hand a Democratic paper printed in the town of Jacksonville, Ala. I want now to offer a little Democratic authority as to how fair these elections are that are held in the "black belt." This was published on July 11, 1885:

Mr. Booker, revenue collector for the entire State of Alabama, is evidently a very small person. He not only appointed all his deputies and clerks from his own Congressional district, but he is pursuing the same narrow course in the appointment of his gaugers and other subordinates.

The friends of Mr. Booker, revenue collector for Alabama, have attempted various excuses for his narrowness in selecting all his aids from his own Congressional district. One of these is that it was necessary for him to take his deputies from the Fourth in order to enable him to make a bond. His Republican predecessor was driven to such a course by the necessity of his position. Another excuse is, when stripped of the verbiage thrown around it, that Mr. Booker is one of those gentlemen who are commonly denominated as the "boys in the black belt," who have distinguished themselves in reversing the result of popular elections and making majorities despite the will of qualified voters, and we are naively told he does but right to reward other of the "boys" who have shared his danger and his glory (?) in this direction. The people of this section are coolly told that because, under the skillful manipulation of these rotton borough returns by the "boys," one Democrat in the "black belt" counts as ten Democrats up here in State convention, we should smiling clasp our hands in approval as Mr. Booker proceeds to distribute the offices among the "boys" for meritorious service.

There is the evidence of a Democratic newspaper published in the State of Alabama, which says that this man has been appointed a revenue collector simply because he lives in the "black belt," and they make one white Democrat the equal of ten in the rest of the State simply because they are able—to do what? To reverse the results of a popular election—just what has been done in this contest exactly.

Again, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on yesterday said that he was glad to see the animosities between the white man and the colored man dying out, and that they would resist the taking away of the ballot from the colored man if the Republicans wanted to do it. I can say to my friend he can possess his soul in peace. The Republican party has no disposition to take from the colored men their right to vote. They enfranchised the disloyal white men who tried to tear down the Government, and along with them they enfranchised the loyal black men who stood by the Government and always stood true to the Stars and Stripes. We demand that they shall not be robbed of their votes and that the votes of 1,700 white men shall not represent a district having in it 20,000 voters.

But there has been some progress made down there, a great deal of progress. I recollect hearing about a year ago a very animated discussion between a distinguished gentleman from South Carolina and a man from some other part of the South. They were talking about how they disfranchised the colored man. The South Carolinian said, "Why, we beat that. We set down eight ballot-boxes in a row, and we put the poor, ignorant fellow by himself and make him select one of them. We make him select his ballot himself, and put it in the box himself; he gets the wrong ticket and the wrong box. But when the white man comes up, we tell him by winks and nods how to get the right ticket and the right box." And this gentleman wound up the controversy by the remark, "Boys, that is a damned sight better than shootin' 'em." [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I now yield forty-five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL].

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, without any preliminary remarks, for my time is short, I shall come down to a discussion of what I conceive to be the evidence in this case and the law applicable to it. I listened, sir, with a great deal of attention and some pleasure to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and also to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], and while I admire the diction and style of the one and the tact and brightness of the other, I was reminded during their remarks of a saying of Mr. Lincoln:

When I send a man out to hunt for a horse for me, I want him when he comes back to be able to give me the points of the horse, and not how many hairs he has in his tail.

I also listened to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] who has just addressed the House, and while I admire his zeal and earnestness, he reminds me of a story of a fellow who on one occasion was passing through a sparsely settled region, when night overtook him and a terrible thunder-storm came up, and he could only see his way by the occasional flashes of lightning that crossed his path. Finally there came a terrific peal of thunder, which caused him to drop upon his knees. As soon as it was over he sprang to his feet and exclaimed, "Oh, Lord! if it's all the same to you, I would like to have a little more light and not quite so much noise." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to some statements that have been made by the minority of the committee in their report. They go into a wholesale criticism of the majority report; but I undertake to say here, in the first place, that the statement which they make in the minority report as to the reasons why Judge Craig did not contest the seat of the sitting member in the last Congress is not sustained by one particle of testimony in the record, and that the gentlemen in making that statement were drawing upon their imaginations alone. I undertake to say also that their statements in regard to what occurred at the Uniontown precinct, referred to on page 45 of the report, is not sustained by the testimony in the case.

I undertake to say, also, that their statement in regard to St. Clair precinct (page 45) is not sustained by the testimony in the case. I undertake, also, to say that their statement in regard to Lowndesborough and Snow Hill precincts is not sustained by any testimony in the case. The minority have made incorrect statements of the testimony and drawn wrong conclusions.

Mr. Speaker, in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama, on the 2d day of November, 1886, there were three candidates for Congress. Two of them were Republican candidates, and one, the sitting member, was the Democratic candidate.

The testimony in this case shows that at that time there were dissensions in the Republican ranks in that district, that the supporters of each of the Republican candidates, one of whom was a white man, the contestant, and the other a colored man, claimed that their candidate was the regular nominee of the party. The testimony shows that the colored vote was greatly divided, not only between the two Republican candidates, but among all three of the candidates, and that Hon. A. C. Davidson, the sitting member, received a large proportion of the colored vote in that district. I have grouped together for the sake of convenience, and in order that the House may have it before them in an intelligible form, the testimony which bears upon this point.

1. Fountain Hudson, witness for contestant, testified as follows (record, 29):
"Q. Do not a great many colored voters vote the Democratic ticket secretly?
"A. Yes; they do.
"Q. How do you know they do it?
"A. A great many come up with their tickets folded up in their sleeves, and I think they vote the Democratic ticket; have heard a great many say they voted the Democratic ticket. The colored people are afraid to vote openly the Democratic ticket."

2. Charles Norris, colored (record, 79), testified that many colored men vote the Democratic ticket secretly because they are afraid they will turn them out of the church or they will be "deviled" about it. Many change their tickets.

So these poor men are compelled to resort to deception and secrecy to vote their sentiments, to avoid being turned out of the church or being harassed and annoyed, or, as this witness puts it, "deviled" about it.

3. David Sanders, colored (record, 80), testifies that he knew of many colored men who vote the Democratic ticket.

4. Thomas Roane, colored (record, 81), expresses himself in this way: "Lots of colored men vote the Democratic ticket. They are afraid to tell it. They are very secretive."

5. Joe Brooks, colored (record, 84), testifies he voted for Davidson.

6. Elam Matthews, colored (record, 84), swore he voted for Davidson and heard other colored men say they voted for him.

7. Frank Gant, colored (record, 85), swore he voted for Davidson and heard other colored men say they had.

8. Shadrach Smith, colored (record, 87), testified he voted for Davidson and heard other colored men say they had.

9. Philip Carrington, colored (record, 87), testified he voted for Davidson, but says he told one of the leaders he had voted for McDuffie because he was afraid to tell him he had voted the Democratic ticket.

10. Nick Seawell, colored (record, 34), who was active for McDuffie at the polls, testified that there was a "parcel" of colored men who did not come where the Republican ticket-holder and himself were, and he didn't know how they voted; that he saw some colored men vote for Davidson.

It is not hard to infer that the "parcel" of colored men to whom he refers had determined to act like men, and discard the Republican collars which had so long been about their necks. Of course they voted for Davidson.

11. Lee Andrews, colored (record, 39), swore Davidson got some colored votes, and that he did not believe one-half of the colored voters knew for whom they vote or what they are voting for.

12. Ned Morrisette, colored (record, 85), testified he voted for Davidson secretly.

Ah, "secretly." Secretly in this land of boasted liberty.

13. Greene Chambers, colored (record, 84), testified "he voted for Davidson; that the colored men were mixed, but a heap of them voted for Davidson; they said they were voting for McDuffie, but were voting for Davidson."

14. Matt Boyd, colored (record 90), at one time a Republican member of the Legislature and a delegate to the Republican Congressional convention of 1886, testified that many colored voters vote the Democratic ticket.

16. Lance Bryant, colored (record 205), testified he voted for Davidson, and knew of other colored men who voted for him.

17. Robert E. Belden, colored (record 207), testified he voted for Davidson, and that he knew of other colored men who voted for him.

18. Henry Bennett, colored (record 210), testified that he voted for Davidson, and thinks right smart of the colored vote was cast for him. "Things have changed a good deal down there" (meaning his precinct), said he. "Three years ago nearly all of the colored people down there were Republicans; but a good many of them vote the Democratic ticket now."

19. Peyton R. King, colored (record 203), testified he voted for Davidson and saw other colored men vote Davidson tickets. From what he could learn two-thirds of the colored vote was for the Democratic ticket.

20. James Townshend (record 198) testified he gave out many Davidson tickets to colored voters; sometimes as many colored men as ten would come to him at one time and get Davidson tickets, and some would exchange Republican tickets for Democratic tickets.

21. L. M. Kirkpatrick (record, 198), testified that he gave Davidson tickets to about 50 colored voters at his precinct and exchanged Davidson tickets for McDuffie tickets, the colored voters giving up their McDuffie tickets and taking Davidson tickets instead.

22. Clifton Kirkpatrick (record, 208), testified that the colored voters would come to the polls with a ticket in each hand folded; they would vote one and take the other back; that about 25 colored men asked him for Davidson tickets.

23. Cliff Campbell, colored (record, 74), testified that some of the colored voters were talking about voting for Davidson at his precinct and he reckoned some of them voted for him.

24. Allen Allison, colored (record, 83), swore "he voted for Davidson; that a great many colored voters of his beat vote the Democratic ticket; the most of them do it secretly because they say the party quarrels with them and rebukes them so that they won't own it." He says, "We had a meeting a few days before the election at the depot, and asked each other, and we said we had just as well vote for Davidson, as we could not see what good the Republican party did us anyhow. Colored men had Democratic tickets day of election distributing them."

25. William Hill, colored (record, 192), testified, "he voted for Davidson and got about 20 colored votes for him at his precinct. A good many colored people at his place belong to the Democratic party; he heard colored people hurrahing for Davidson inside and outside the court-house yard on the day of election."

26. John Lewis, colored (record, 194), testified, "I know of colored people who supported Davidson. I voted for him and issued his tickets on day of election."

27. John Callier, colored, (record, 212) testified he voted for Davidson, and estimated the colored vote for him as large. He said, "The colored people in their meeting agreed that inasmuch as they had been voting for Republican nominees heretofore without any benefit to themselves or the country, that they would at the November election support the Democratic nominee, A. C. Davidson," and he gives the names of leading colored men of his beat who voted for Davidson.

Ah! light had broken in upon the mind of the colored men. "Inasmuch as they (the colored men) had been voting for Republican nominees heretofore without any benefit to themselves or the country"—what sensible words!—"that they would at the November election vote for the Democratic nominee," who is the sitting member of this House.

28. Lewis Williams, color ed (record, 214), states he voted for Davidson and that most of the colored voters in his beat told him they were going to vote for him, and he gives a large estimate of the colored vote Davidson received.

He says, "They (the colored voters) said the Democrats and white people were their friends, and they thought it was to their interests to vote the Democratic ticket. I belong to the Democratic party now." He thinks McDuffie got about 5 colored votes in his precinct.

Mr. Speaker, how does that sustain the pretensions of the contestant? The scales remained over the eyes of only five.

29. M. E. Edwards, colored (record, 214), says he voted for Davidson, and had been a Republican for twenty years; that he supported him "because he thought he was a good man and the right man." He estimated the colored vote at his precinct for Davidson at 70 to 80.

Why the thing was so much like a jug-handle, all on one side, that he says the man who appeared on the ground with McDuffie tickets left in disgust.

Now, sir, be not surprised when I tell you that this man Edwards had been the chairman of the Republican committee in his beat.

30. J. J. Carmichael, colored (record, 213), testified that he canvassed for Davidson, issued his tickets, and voted for him; that he thought Davidson received a hundred or more colored votes at his precinct; that there were no McDuffie tickets on the ground; that a man came with some, but left.

31. Jack Coleman colored, (record, 211), states that he voted what he believed to be a Davidson ticket; that he couldn't read, but got his ticket from a Democrat. Thinks many colored men voted the same way, as they told him they were going to vote for Davidson.

32. John King, colored (record, 213), says he voted for Davidson, and estimates colored vote for him at about 65 at his polling-place. He was an inspector of the election.

33. Daniel Henderson, colored (record, 99), says at his precinct the colored vote was divided; some for McDuffie, some for Turner, and some for Davidson.

34. George Bryant, colored (record, 31), states there were no Republican tickets at his precinct; that he didn't vote; that he is satisfied a good many of the colored people vote the Democratic ticket secretly, "on the sly;" that the Republicans had been using the party lash freely.

35. Nathan Scott, colored (record, 176), testified that all the county officers and members of Legislature of Wilcox County are Democrats, and that at the August (1886) election there was no opposition to the Democratic ticket.

36. Wash. Adams, colored (record, 158), states there are some colored Democrats in his beat.

37. James Grace (record, 169), states there are some Democratic colored voters in his beat.

38. Levi McCommon (record, 173), states that there were some colored votes for Davidson at his beat.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here are about forty witnesses, all of them colored with the exception of two or three, introduced by both the contestant and the contestee, swearing that the colored vote in that Congressional district was greatly divided, and showing, according to the weight of testimony, that Alexander C. Davidson received the majority of the colored votes cast in that district at the election on the 2d of November, 1886.

What, then, becomes of the charge of "conspiracy" on the part of these distinguished gentlemen? In order to unseat the contestee in this case you must override the returns of nearly three hundred election officers; you must put the brand of crime upon them; and, more than that, you must stamp perjury upon the brow of about forty witnesses in this case, most of them introduced by the contestant himself.

Now, upon this testimony alone I might rest this case, in the full assurance that this House will not disturb the contestee in his right to the seat which he now holds.

But I go farther, and I meet the gentlemen on the proposition they themselves lay down in their minority report and which was adverted to yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH]. They lay down the broad proposition that where precincts are not contested they ought to be counted. There are thirty-two precincts in this Congressional district that are not attacked by a single witness or by a solitary particle of testimony.

As to nine precincts in Perry County, nine in Dallas, six in Hale, and eight in Wilcox, making thirty-two precincts, there is not, I repeat, one particle of testimony affecting them in any shape or form. In fact no witnesses were examined as to those precincts. These unassailed precincts give Mr. Davidson 3,385 votes, and Judge McDuffie 208 votes, leaving a majority of 3,177 for Mr. Davidson. Add to this the vote conceded to Mr. Davidson in Lowndes County by the report of the minority, 362, and he has 3,439 unassailed and uncontested votes. Deduct then Judge McDuffie's vote in Lowndes County, 2,014; and Alexander C. Davidson stands before this House, according to the theory and proposition of the minority of the committee themselves, with a clear majority of 1,425. Taking the gentlemen on their own proposition the contestee in this case is elected. I do not want to hear them "blow hot and cold" in the same breath. If they lay down the proposition that the uncontested precincts are to be counted, then let all be counted and do not confine the counting to Lowndes County as the minority report proposes to do.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] ridicules the idea of introducing as witnesses the voters at the various precincts. Sir, it has been repeatedly held on this floor that where the returns show a less number of votes for a candidate than he claims to have received, it is his duty to show his actual vote by the introduction of the voters themselves. I suppose, however, the question is ready, How is it possible to introduce the great mass of voters in this Congressional district? Sir, there are a number of precincts in that district at which the contestant received less than 10 votes. It was perfectly within the power of the contestant to have called voters at those precincts; and if, by introducing the voters themselves, he had shown that there were more votes cast for him than were returned, the returns of those precincts would in my judgment have been impeached. But he did not call the voters. Why did he not? The inference is irresistible that if he had called them it would have been like "calling spirits from the vasty deep." They were not there to respond, and he knew it.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped we would have been able to dispose of this case without an acrimonious debate, and without a political aspect being given to it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] says that so long as the colored voters in the South are deprived of the right of suffrage, just so long will the "ensanguined garment" wave. Mr. Speaker, in 1884 the "ensanguined garment" was washed by the people, and they are going to wash it again next fall.

The remark has been made—I believe by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]—that you can go to the other end of this Capitol and hear Senators—I suppose he means Democratic Senators—assailing Union soldiers. I have never heard anything of that kind. No man has ever heard such a sentiment as that coming from my lips; and I stand on this floor as one who wore the gray for four years. And if the war had lasted forty years, and God, in His infinite wisdom, had permitted me to live that long, I should have continued to wear the gray.

But there is not one spark of hostility in my bosom, and I am sorry a matter of that kind has been lugged into this case.

A MEMBER (in an undertone). You forgive us, then.

I have heard that remark on this floor before; it is an old chestnut; it was not intended for my ear, and yet I caught it.

But, Mr. Speaker, the position of the minority of this committee is simply this, that because in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama there is a majority of colored voters that district is thereby a Republican district.

The time was when the colored votes in the Southern States stood almost as a unit in support of the Republican party, and when colored men in many of the sections of the South regarded it as a duty to vote the Republican ticket—a duty which they had been led to believe was more sacredly binding upon them than even the duty they owed to their Creator.

The time was when the colored man believed he owed his freedom to the Republican party; that his disinthrallment from the bonds of slavery was the result of the philanthropic efforts of that party. The time was when he believed the perpetuation of his freedom, the safety of his children, the benefit of the schools, and the privileges of the ballot, all depended on the continuation of the Republican party in power, and when the siren voice of the carpet-bagger sounding in his ear awakened every passion of his nature, aroused every bad impulse of his soul, stirred his fears, and fanned any spark of hostility to those of white blood around him which might be slumbering in his bosom.

Evil days were those for him. His slumbers were broken, his pillow was thorny. He imagined an enemy in every bush and a pitfall at every step. Time ran on and truth began to creep through the crevices, and he learned for himself that his freedom came as a result of the war inaugurated and prosecuted, not for his benefit, not to strike the shackles from his limbs, but to prevent the dismemberment of this Union. He learned that even President Lincoln hesitated long before he wrote his signature to the emancipation proclamation. He learned that his freedom came as a war measure to cripple the seceding States; and not for the love his emancipators bore him. He learned that in that army of the Union which dipped its banners in the crimson tide of battle from the heights of Gettysburgh to the plains of Texas there were as many Democrats as Republicans, and the plumes of as many distinguished Democratic general officers as distinguished Republican general officers floated in the breezes of that war out of which came his freedom.

He learned that the star of McClellan shone upon those sanguinary fields, the plume of Hancock was ever seen in the thickest of the fight, and the sword of Rosecrans ever flashed in the light of battle glory, and the voice of Thomas was ever heard until he was stricken down above the din and tumult of the conflict, and that they were all Democrats.

His reasoning powers, though they had been slow to act, finally led him to the conclusion that he owed his freedom to a war measure and to a quarrel between brothers, but above all to Him who rules and directs the destinies of nations and peoples.

His devotion to the Republican party began then to weaken, and in many instances he ceased to vote. Southern State after Southern State dropped into the Democratic column. He found he was as well treated, as well cared for, yes, better cared for, under Democratic State rule than under Republican State rule; that his taxes were lower; that his children had the benefit of the public schools; that he had every right accorded to him which belonged to him under the Constitution.

He had in the mean time, Mr. Speaker, repudiated these members of the Republican party known as carpet-baggers, and they were compelled to seek a more congenial clime and wing their flight to the sections from whence they came.

Still there were missionaries of discord left, but the colored man was well treated, and as time rolled on he recognized that fact, and also that his interests were identified with his white neighbors, and the interests of his white neighbors were identified with his interests. But I say there were missionaries of discord left behind, and they were constantly sowing their seed and whispering words of distrust in his ear. They said to him, "Oh, yes; you are well cared for now under Democratic State rule because the Democrats know that a Republican administration is watching them and a Republican President is guarding you; but take care if they should secure control of the National Government; beware if they should elect a Democratic President; then your freedom will be gone and the chains of slavery will rattle around you again."

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the year 1884 came, and with it came peace, comfort, and happiness to the whole country, and indeed into no hearts did it pour more of the oil of joy and gladness than into the hearts of the poor, deluded colored man of the South. A man of destiny, with his soul swelling with patriotic love, knowing no section, but taking into his big, honest heart all sections alike, swearing by the faith of the fathers of the Republic, standing upon the Constitution and extending the ægis of its protection over all sections, North and South alike, over white and colored, over a united country, over all sections, classes, and races, without discrimination or distinction, was called to preside over the destinies of 60,000,000 people, and over the States and Territories of this great Union, with all of its varied interests, and by his administration to make it not only an Union of States and lakes and lands, but an union of sympathy and hearts and hands. Well, indeed, sir, can the year 1884 be enshrined in history, when the sad memories of internecine war were obliterated, the embers of civil strife extinguished around the national fireside, and the Union cemented by a grand policy of equal rights to all, special privileges to none, in kindness, fraternal feeling, and brotherly love. [Applause.]

On the 4th day of March, 1885, the administration of Grover Cleveland was inaugurated. Heaven itself seemed to smile upon the scene. While cold and bleak days had marked many preceding inaugurations, I believe every Republican inauguration, that day was warm and balmy. Pleasant breezes fanned the cheeks of the thousands present, and the sun shed its bright rays with warmth and gladness upon the scene. Twenty months rolled round and brought us to the Congressional elections of 1886. In the South the wail of the whole missionary force of the Republican party could be heard as they prepared, like the Arabs, to fold their tents and leave the field where for more than twenty years they had been engaged in their nefarious work. A Democratic administration had set its seal upon their false teachings, had stamped as false the charge that the Democratic party was inimical to the best interests of the colored man, had stamped as false the charge that he would be shorn of his liberty and deprived of his rights if the Democratic party came into power.

He found he had been deceived, and, like all men in the humble walks of life, he was disposed to turn upon his deceiver and wreak his vengeance. His pocket had been preyed upon and his fears played upon; his passions and his prejudices had been aroused and intensified, and he had been kept for years in a state of feverish excitement, and when the light of reason and of truth broke in upon him and he found that under a Democratic administration he stood out as a free man, enjoying every right guarantied to the citizens of this land under the Constitution, he determined in his heart to link his destinies and unite his interests with the people among whom he lived and from whom he drew his sustenance.

But the Republican party, hanging on with its characteristic pertinacity, did not intend to release its hold on him as long as the faintest glimmer of hope was left. It sought to hold him through his churches and societies. The preachers and the head men in the societies were still held by means not necessary to mention, and when a brother indicated a purpose to break off he was threatened with expulsion from the church and society. A system of espionage was resorted to and a close watch placed over him, so that when election day came around he was required, in order to prevent social ostracism, expulsion from the church and society, to procure his ticket from the appointed ticket-holders of his race. To accomplish his purpose then to vote the Democratic ticket he was compelled to resort to deception, and it was deception which, I repeat, was justified by the circumstances which surrounded him. It was deception in the interest of a free ballot; it was deception in the interest of manhood suffrage; it was deception in the interest of law and order.

It is a fact known and read of all men in the South that a more tyrannical system never existed than that practiced upon colored men by the preachers in their churches and the head men in their societies. Talk about the crack of the overseer's whip! Why, sir, no overseer ever dominated over slaves more than these men have dominated over the members of their churches and societies. If freedom means liberty of thought, liberty of opinion, and liberty of action, the colored men of the South have been as abject slaves to their political preachers and society leaders as they were to their masters the day President Lincoln, with a hesitating hand, signed the Proclamation of Emancipation. If freedom means the full rights of citizenship, which implies the right to go to the polls in the full light of day and in the full blaze of the sun and there deposit your ballot without let or hinderance, with no one to molest, no one to dictate, then, sir, the freedmen of the South have been deprived of the sweets of freedom through the tyranny, domination, and intimidation of men of their own race.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] declares in favor of a free ballot. So do I. A free ballot is what I stand here to advocate, not only for the white but also for the colored man. As long as the colored man votes with "the grand old party," as long as that party holds his conscience in the hollow of its hand, as long as it molds his political sentiments, as long as he follows his political preachers, he is a man and a brother; but as soon as he rises in the majesty of independent citizenship, "a staff is quickly found to beat him as a dog."

The white man is protected against the domination of his race and permitted to secure his ballot wheresoever he pleases, and to vote without intimidation, molestation, or dictation, and I demand the same privilege and immunity for every colored son of toil in the broad limits of this Union.

The hour has come when the Democratic party should take this matter in hand and guard and defend, support and sustain the colored men of the South in their right to vote as they please without fear, molestation, or dictation. The rights of citizenship were conferred upon them and the ballot placed in their hands, not to be driven like dumb cattle to the polls by a boss, not to be awed by the presence of one or two self-constituted dictators, not to be required under pain of church expulsion or fear of society punishment to cast their ballots in the interests of a particular political party, or for such men as political preachers or party hacks or society leaders may dictate. [Applause.]

The cry of fraud and ballot-box stuffing and conspiracy to deprive the colored men of their votes by the white men of the South is only raised to call off attention from the real fact that but for the system of bulldozing and intimidation by the colored Republican leaders, the Republican party in the Southern States would not muster enough to constitute pall-bearers at the approaching final burial of that party in November, 1888. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me ask him a question?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. From that remark are we to understand that the more a colored man knows down South the less he is inclined to vote the Democratic ticket?

Mr. O'FERRALL. No, sir; the more that he knows the more inclined he is to vote the Democratic ticket, and to cast his vote where he knows his interest lies and as his conscience dictates.

Mr. LAIRD. With the aid of a shotgun.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia another question.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If I had time I would take pleasure in listening to your questions and trying to entertain you all the evening.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman tell me what he means when he says these colored people are led by their preachers to vote the Republican ticket?

Mr. O'FERRALL. The gentleman does not understand the condition of affairs down South. Every single solitary leader that they have there, white and colored, with few exceptions, is an officer-seeker. That is what has made them Republicans; that is the fact in regard to it; and these preachers and society leaders overawe these men and undertake to direct them.

I think I am justified in stating that there is a colored man, an employé of this House, who, because he voted the Democratic ticket in Virginia had his house burned, and to-day is homeless, and that his house was burned because he cast his vote for the Democratic party.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman tell us how many have had their houses burned for not voting the Democratic ticket?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his implied compliment in interrupting me We know that galled withers will wince, and that a tight shoe will pinch.

Mr. KERR. I ask the gentleman where he learned that Abraham Lincoln signed that grand proclamation with hesitation.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I am sorry the gentleman is so unfamiliar with the history of his country as not to know that fact.

Now, down South the white leaders have no use for the colored man, except so far as they can make him serve their purposes. I remember not long ago hearing the story of an old colored man who had a dream. He dreamed that he died and went to the place where the wicked go after death. He undertook to give an account of his dream. He said he dreamed he was down in that bad place. His friends asked him, "What did you see there?" He answered, "I saw a heap of things." "Did you see any people there?" He said, "I saw a heap of people there." They asked him, "Did you see any of those fellows who have been patting us on the back in this country and stroking our hair?" "Yes! Oh! heaps of them." "Did you see any of the Republican leaders?" "Yes; quite a lot of them." "What were they doing?" His answer was, "Every man of them was holding a nigger between him and the fire." [Laughter.] They use him all they can, but the moment they can not use him, they cast him aside as quickly as they would a bad shilling.

The gentleman from Iowa asks me where I got my information about President Lincoln hesitating to sign the emancipation proclamation. I got it in history, unless I have read history wrong. There is a painting which hangs on the walls of this Capitol which I have been told by judges is a masterpiece. I have also heard that the propriety of hanging it on these walls has been questioned by some. For my part I am glad it is here. It is a perpetuation of an historic event. I refer to the painting representing the signing of the emancipation proclamation by that good man, that man whose heart overflowed with the milk of human kindness, and whose tragic death at the hands of the assassin was a terrible calamity to the whole country, and, coming at the time it did, peculiarly unfortunate for the South. The deep thought that mantles his features, the anxiety that sits enthroned upon his brow, and his disheveled hair plainly tell that the fire within his brain was burning with a fervid glow while the pen in his hand hesitated to sign the immortal name of Lincoln.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman pretend to say in the House of Representatives that Abraham Lincoln, as portrayed at that crucial period of his career, when he was about performing the grandest deed in all history——

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not yield for a speech. If the gentleman wants to ask me a question——

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does he say Abraham Lincoln hesitated? That hesitation is indicated in that picture which presents him as he came before his Cabinet to lay before them the great proclamation that he had prepared?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I tell the gentleman that he was unfortunately situated to know the history of his country at that time, when he undertakes to make that statement.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, such language as that, coming from the gentleman from Maine—and he never loses an occasion to use such language—is not the language of a brave man.

Mr. BOUTELLE. A brave man!

Mr. O'FERRALL. I have been always taught that it is not the part of a brave man to be always attempting to kick and cuff a fallen foe. It is only cowards that do it, not a brave man.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no question of bravery about it. Allow me to say to the gentleman——

Mr. O'FERRALL. No, sir; I do not yield to you. I have got the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I appeal to the gentleman that he will yield to me.

Mr. O'FERRALL. No, sir; I do not propose to do it. You can take your own time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] decline to yield?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will take my own time.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Well, sir, I will take mine after you.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suppose that is an illustration of the "bravery" you talk about.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Well, sir, if it is, it is the right kind. You can bet your bottom dollar on that. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is your kind, I should judge.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted by the gentleman thrusting himself in without my permission, I was about to say that I only wished that every colored man in this land could make a pilgrimage here to gaze upon that canvas and learn the truth of history; that his freedom came amid the agonies of war and as a war measure, and not through any political party; that it came as a war necessity from a nation struggling for its life; and I repeat that above all the colored man owes the freedom he enjoys to the God above him, who rules and directs the destinies of nations.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, for the respectful attention I have received; and if I have any time remaining, I now yield it to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes left.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to occupy any time in this discussion, as I could not understand how any one, however partisan, could give serious consideration to the claims of the contestant in a case like this, where the sitting member received 14,913 votes, while only 3,526 were cast for his opponent.

Some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to have abandoned the question at issue and devoted their oratory to the arraignment of an entire people. I can not and will not sit in silence, lest my doing so might be construed into an acquiescence as to the verity of their assertions, and possibly a quasi admission that there was an element of truth in the charges and assaults upon the people I have the honor to represent.

It is not the first time we of the South have been compelled to sit and listen to these accusations; but in all proceedings of this character I have been pleased to observe that they are indulged in by a very few, the great body of the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle not only refusing to enter into these harangues, but, if I mistake not, have a decided distaste for, and I can at least say a disapproval of, sectional speeches.

I do not pretend to say that I know everything that has occurred in Alabama election matters, as it is a very large and populous Commonwealth; but I can assert that I am well informed as to what has occurred in the district I have the honor to represent, and which extends across the entire State, from Mississippi to Georgia.

The good people of this district have done me the honor to select me four times as their candidate, and each time have done me the further honor to elect me as their Representative in this House, not by illegal and fraudulent returns, as some gentleman's remarks would indicate, but by a strictly fair, legal, quiet, and orderly election, conducted in conformity to the laws of our country; and although there are some two hundred precincts in this large district, I never heard of a single violent act or even a disturbance at any of these elections. Let me ask the gentlemen who are so ready to abuse the South if they can say the same for the good order of the people of the districts they represent?

In the election held on January 2, 1883, and the regular elections in November, 1884 and 1886, although my average majority was about 3,000, I will venture to say that no one, not even my Republican opponent, will assert that a single illegal vote was cast or counted for the Democratic candidate, or that the opposing candidate was deprived of a single vote to which he was entitled.

I say it is my belief that not even a Republican in that district will make the charge that there was any unfairness on the part of Democrats in those elections; and what is true of this part of Alabama is just as likely to be true of other portions of that State.

The country has some information regarding the election in my district in 1880. It had been represented by a gentleman of the Greenback party, and some of you recall the great efforts on the part of the Republicans to secure his re-election in 1880, and failing in this a contest ensued. The contestant employed seventeen lawyers and summoned nearly if not quite one thousand witnesses. Evidence covering thousands of pages was taken, which is contained in two massive volumes, and yet with all these extraordinary efforts they failed to prove that a single one of the 12,808 votes cast for the contestee was illegal. It is true that they finally unseated the Democrat, but to accomplish their purposes they struck out his entire vote from the returns of two precincts, but admitted that the balance, 12,609 votes, were legal and unimpeached.

The record of that case is an emphatic denial of the assertions so recklessly made on this floor that elections are conducted unfairly by Democrats in Alabama.

Mr. Speaker, I do not make these statements in any spirit of crimination, or even to criticise, but, so far as my personal knowledge permits, to refute the charges that have been made against a high-toned, honorable, chivalrous, and Christian people. I know those people. I have been at their hospitable homes; I have been from house to house, from home to home, and I assert that there is nowhere upon this globe a better, a more honorable and Christian people, a people devoted and adhering to what is right and scorning to do wrong, whether it be in private affairs of life or the more public management of the elective franchise.

As a proof of this I ask you to refer to the printed record in the election case of which I speak.

Witness after witness was put upon the stand by the Greenback contestant. They were his partisans, and were called upon to testify in his behalf. After completing their testimony for the contestant they were, as the law requires, turned over to the contestee for cross-examination. They were asked if they ever knew a Democrat to do an illegal act at election in the precinct where they lived, and I believe the record will bear me out that they answered invariably that they did not. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The record shows that some of the witnesses were further asked if they were the friends of the contestant, and in many cases they said they were, and that they had voted for him. I beg to refer those of you who appear to be amazed at this statement to the record to which I allude. You will find it in the evidence taken in this case in the Forty-seventh Congress, pages 120, 141, 145, 314-340, 343, 347, 351, 357, 364, 366, 369, 372, 373, 374, 375, 380, 381, 398, 405, 408, 990, 991, 992, and 1099. In all these and on many other pages you will find evidence sustaining my assertions.

The people of Alabama are making a gallant struggle to develop their rich and abundant resources. The fertility of the soil, their delightful, healthy, and equable climate has been long known as their heritage, but the immensity, richness, and value of her minerals is a matter of recent discovery. They want the enterprising young men of the North to come and live with them, to help in the development of their mines and forests, to share their prosperity, and to enjoy with them its blessings.

The papers of to-day tell us of making the best of steel from the iron ore of Birmingham, and predict an advacement and progress for North Alabama difficult of realization; but the same electric current carries to the people of the North the speeches made here to-day which convey a very unjust impression of the people who invite the youth and enterprise of our land to beautiful Alabama. We ought not and will not sit quietly in this Hall of the American Congress without raising our voices in defense of right and justice.

I thank the House for their kind attention to my remarks.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CRISP. I reserve the remainder of the time on this side of the House.

Mr. LODGE. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that this important election contest might be decided without any member going out of the way to introduce that old garment, the "bloody shirt." I supposed this was a great legal and constitutional question, reaching down through the claimant for a seat to the sovereignty of the people on which the rights of members rest. But instead of that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] seemed to forget that this was a contest involving no special question of law, but a contest of fact and of honesty and integrity based upon well-recognized constitutional rights. I regret to see the attempt to stir up partisan prejudice among Democrats; and I regret exceedingly that any gentleman would so far forget himself in this discussion as to become angry. The gentleman says, "The galled jade winces." Well, I leave it to the House and the galleries whether the gentleman from Virginia himself did not wince a little toward the last. He should remember the old couplet,

> Children, you should never let your angry passions rise,
> Your clumsy fists were never made to gouge each other's eyes.

[Laughter.]

But he tells you that the people of this country in 1884 washed and cleansed the "bloody shirt." If that is so, why, in the name of all the gods at once, are you staining it again; for if the result of that election was to take these war question out of the politics of the country, why is it we can not have a contest here over an election case without the rebel "bloody shirt" being unfurled and shaken before the country?

But the gentleman says—and I want to brush the trash out of the way before I attempt to argue this case on its merits—the gentleman says that all the colored people used to vote the Republican ticket, but that now they are voting the Democratic ticket. If it is the fact that the colored men who used to vote the Republican ticket vote now the Democratic ticket, is that the reason—I put this question to the gentleman—is that the reason the Democratic majority in the gentleman's State has faded away from 50,000 until none of it is left at all? [Laughter and applause.] Was it the colored men changing their votes and voting the Democratic ticket that caused the gentleman's party to have a fragment of one or two members on this floor from Virginia, while our party has six or seven? The negro votes the Democratic ticket! I never saw but one natural Democrat in my life who was a negro; they are not made that way. [Laughter.] What did the Democratic party ever do for the colored people to cause them to vote the Democratic ticket? "Oh," says the gentleman from Virginia—and he says it for the benefit of those colored men in the galleries, his constituents from Virginia, I suppose [laughter]—"the Democratic party and Democratic journals struck the shackles from the negro."

A MEMBER on the Republican side. Negro?

Mr. HOUK. These colored men will excuse me if I happen to say "nigger;" I can not help it; the Democrats taught me to say it. [Laughter and applause.]

But I was about to say if the Democratic party contributed anything to the emancipation of the colored people it was on the principle of a kicking gun, killing the thing behind it instead of that at which it was shot. [Laughter.] Oh, yes; go read the history of your party! You plunged your country into war for four years in order to keep the manacles upon the colored men in these galleries to whom you have been speaking to-day. You fought four years for the purpose of enjoying the privilege of selling their wives and children! And now you toady to them and beg them for their votes. [Applause.]

But gentlemen say, and among them my distinguished friend from Virginia—and I assure him that I love him almost like a brother, for he is a clever fellow, but a worse misguided fellow, politically I mean, never lived [laughter]—these gentlemen in explaining why Mr. Davidson received all these votes—and if I have the time I will refer to the testimony—they say the negroes are afraid to vote the Democratic ticket. Did you ever hear of the wolf being afraid of the lamb? [Laughter.] Why, in the name of common sense, if as you insist the majority of the colored men are Democrats, if all these colored men have turned Democrats, are they not, with the aid of all the white Democrats, able to protect each other against the poor negro who votes the Republican ticket. God pity you if you are so badly off you can not protect yourselves. [Applause and laughter.]

But gentlemen say that Mr. Lincoln did not free the negro; that the Republican party did not give freedom to the colored people. Mr. Lincoln, who in my opinion was as much a child of Providence as was Moses when he nestled in the bulrushes, and who was guided, as I believe, by the unerring wisdom of divine Providence itself, considered carefully and deliberately that question, and refused to give his signature to the emancipation proclamation until after the most mature consideration, believing that in signing that paper he emancipated a race and established the rights of men on an enduring basis.

In this connection the gentleman from Virginia speaks of that man at the other end of the Avenue—at the White House—as a child of destiny. [Laughter.] So I believe he is; and so was Pharaoh as he marched on to the Red Sea; but he and his whole Democratic army were drowned all the same. [Laughter and applause.] And so it will be in November next. This modern Pharaoh will encounter the Red Sea and will be overthrown and his political power wiped from the face of the earth. [Laughter and applause.]

But oh, Mr. Speaker, what a friend of the colored people is this modern Democratic party. I believe if you will go and consult your party you will find that after we had given the colored men all the rights they enjoyed, until deprived of them by the Democrats—when they enjoyed those rights which were given to them under Republican law and Republican administration, you will find we had at that time from ten to fifteen colored men on this floor as Representatives. But where are your colored Republicans now? Where are your colored Senators? Gone; swallowed up through the methods which are practiced in the Fourth Congressional district of the State of Alabama, and of which we have had some specimens presented here to-day. That is the reason why the seats of colored Representatives are vacant. Not one individual has escaped to tell the story. There is not a colored man here to tell the story of tribulation through which they came. If you permitted one to sit on this floor he would be as one who came up to wash his garments through great persecution and tribulation. If such an one were here I might bow to him with great deference.

But we are told they are afraid to vote the Democratic ticket. There is but one possible reason, Mr. Speaker, I can imagine, why a colored man would be afraid to vote the Democratic ticket in the Fourth Congressional district of the State of Alabama—just one reason, sir; and what is that? The colored voter might possibly be afraid the ghosts of his murdered comrades and his friends would rise up against him for deserting the party which gave him all the rights which he enjoyed. [Laughter and applause.] That may have been the cause of their fear, for a good many of them, it is said, are prone to superstition and do believe in ghosts. They may have been afraid of the ghosts of the slain rising up and warning them against voting the Democratic ticket.

I did not obtrude this political debate into this case. I am only replying to what has been said on the other side. I intended to go through this entire case without mentioning the subject of politics. But gentlemen on the other side have decided otherwise.

I regret that the other side of the House is not fuller than it is, because it is not my mission "to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance." [Laughter and applause.] I want every Democrat on this floor to hear what I have to say.

What do we find coming down to this case, getting the brush-wood out of the way? Now, there ought to be some conscience in politics. There ought to be a large amount of real native manhood in politics. That politician who does not guide himself by the policy of what is right and just, as certain as justice and Providence reign will be defeated in the end. Now, I say it deliberately that this is one of the most remarkable election cases ever presented to this House of Representatives. This is not a case where it is necessary to talk about a free ballot and a fair count, but it is a case where the testimony overwhelmingly establishes the fact there was a fair ballot and a free count. [Laughter.] There was nothing much wrong about the ballots coming in, but when the ballots commenced coming out the frauds commenced.

Let us see the testimony produced in this case. I want to say in this connection, gentlemen of the Democratic party, I know naturally there is no difference between a Republican and a Democrat as to their merits as men and citizens. The average Republican and the average Democrat are alike; but I exceedingly regret your partisan prejudices have precluded you from taking the right view of the facts in this case. I am fully convinced, if every man on that side of the House had read the record and studied it, there would be a large number of Democrats who, rising above partisan prejudices, would cast their votes in favor of Judge McDuffie, who was fairly elected, but who was counted out by a falsification of the election returns.

Why do I say it? I will tell you. In my analysis in this case, while I have carefully read all the testimony, I have sought to take two precincts from each county. I have read the testimony in reference to all of them, but my object has been to take two precincts from each county; one I have taken most favorable to the contestant, and the other I have taken the least favorable to the contestant. And what is true of those voting precincts is substantially true in regard to all the polling-places in four of the five counties in this Congressional district, and true of two of the polling-places in the fifth county.

I want as briefly as possible, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the testimony bearing upon each of these points, and I do beg that gentlemen on the Democratic side will hear what the witnesses say. Here, it will be seen, the way of justice is sought to be obstructed by false counting and fraudulent returns.

My colleague upon the committee, from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL], has read the testimony of a number of colored men who said they had voted for Davidson and had heard others say they had voted for him. I am not going to pause here to controvert the statement that a few colored votes were cast for him, because, as I now recollect the testimony, he proved as many as eight who did; but I submit to the House and to the country and to every fair-minded man if, because the contestee got a few colored voters, that is any justification to enter into a conspiracy to deliberately make false returns showing what never took place and giving votes that were never polled.

Now, let us look at the different voting precincts and let us see, if a man was on trial for his life, if there is not enough evidence here to hang him. I say yes. I say that men have been hung all over this country on circumstantial evidence not near so strong, far weaker and less positive than the circumstances and facts under which this contested-election case comes to us, clothed with the indications and evidences of fraud committed in that Fourth district of Alabama.

A. B. Hunter was called as a witness from Greensborough precinct. You will find his testimony on page 46 of the record. He was taking down—you see the methods of that country have been such that the Republicans had to fortify beforehand in order to secure the counting of their votes, and in pursuance of that mode of protection, in order to establish the number of the Republican votes that were actually polled, Hunter, the witness, kept a tally, and here is his testimony. Give me your attention, my Democratic brethren, and I especially invite my friend from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] to hear this:

Q. Did you take down the voters as they issued McDuffie tickets to them; if so, how many names did you take down?
A. I did, and I took down 546 names of voters to whom was issued McDuffie tickets.

Joe Bell was another witness who testified. You will find it on page 47 of the record. He said that he was issuing McDuffie tickets to the voters, and that he saw the voters proceeding with their ballots into the court-house, where the election was being held.

This witness goes on to say that he watched them, and that there was no change of the ballots before entering the court-house. Now, we have seen them supplied with the tickets, and have seen that they have gone into the court-house, which was the place to deposit them, showing the intention and the purpose of the voters.

It has been agreed by counsel for contestee and contestant that two other witnesses would have proved the same state of facts as to the issuance of tickets and the men going into the polling-place.

William Hugely was another witness, whose testimony will be found on page 116 of the record. He says:

I was keeping door as a watchman to see that none of the voters changed their ballots. From where I was standing I could see the voters give their tickets to the inspectors of election.

In answer to a question whether any of the voters changed their tickets or not, after receiving them, this witness answers in the most emphatic manner, "No, they did not."

There are several other witnesses who testify substantially to the same state of facts; but I will not take up the time of the House to read or comment upon them all as to this polling-place. I shall only call attention to enough of them to give a general idea of the conclusiveness of the testimony, and yet in face of this overwhelming testimony that at this precinct McDuffie received 546 votes, yet he was given but 228, while the contestee, Davidson, was given 330. The testimony shows with all the reasonable certainty that can attach to human evidence that McDuffie received 546 votes; and here you will find the returning officers, in their eagerness to give Davidson a good vote, return 21 names more than there were names on the poll-list, which shows, as a matter of fact, that Davidson possibly received 12, while McDuffie received 546 votes.

Go to the next precinct and voting-place. But first, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I do not see how any reasonable, fair-minded man can take this evidence, showing that these men, with the tickets in their hands, went into the polling-places and handed them to the inspectors of election as the law required, can determine that in view of the testimony on this point McDuffie could receive only the number of votes that these returning officers have given him.

But pass from this poll and let us come to the Hollow Square precinct. Abe Pierce, Thad May, and Rice Banks were appointed by the county authorities to hold an election, but refused to open the polls at the time prescribed by the law, when R. D. Starkey, a man by the name of Reddiford, and another by the name of Gray opened the polls, and, in the language of the witness, "the voters began to vote." At this box there were 284 votes polled and counted for McDuffie, certified, sealed up, and given to the returning officers, who delivered them to the sheriff, and one week afterwards the same witness saw the box that had been delivered to the sheriff at the county town, at the place it should have been, still in the possession of the sheriff. These officers of election made their return giving McDuffie these votes. By reference to page 105 of the record in this case it will be seen that this certificate of the returning officers is made Exhibit B to Starkey's deposition, and it shows that McDuffie received 284 votes, while Davidson received not a single vote.

Now, mark you, the officers appointed by the county authorities refused to open the polls and hold the election. Under the statute of Alabama the legally-qualified voters had a right to organize a poll, and this poll was organized strictly in accordance with the statute. Now, what do we find? We find by some kind of scheming, by some means unknown perhaps anywhere outside of the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama, the white voters of that district, after refusing to open the polls at the time and place prescribed by law, which was 9 o'clock as to time, and after the Republicans had opened the poll according to law, got around somewhere, the Lord only knows where, and held a sort of side-show election; and when the county officers came to certify to the secretary of state they certified 45 votes for Davidson out of this bogus poll opened contrary to the statutes of Alabama, and refused to certify a single one of the 284 legal votes that were as legal under the laws of that State as any ballot ever put in a ballot-box, and had been legally returned to the sheriff of the county.

Now, let us come to another county. We come now to the contestee's own county. Let us see how the ballot and the polls were conducted at the contestee's own voting precinct. I appeal to my Democratic friends, let us rise above these little petty prejudices, and come here and vote according to judgment and conscience on this subject. At this poll George Clarke testifies, on page 28 of the record, that he took down 836 names of the voters who received McDuffie tickets; and what else does this witness say? He said the voters were clamorous for McDuffie tickets—so clamorous and so earnest, in order to vote for McDuffie, that this man who was issuing tickets had to put a guard at the door to keep his room from being overcrowded, and he says as soon as the voters were supplied with these McDuffie tickets they went directly to the city hall where the poll was being held.

What else? Let us see what Dr. Houston says. Very fortunately or unfortunately he is not a negro, but is a white man of superior character and intelligence. He was looking on at that poll, and gives us to understand the "ways that were dark and the tricks that were vain" in elections in that locality—not so vain in this instance, however. He said that he stood around the polls where they were voting; that he saw most of the voters go to the head of the stairs; he did not see them hand their tickets in to the inspectors, but they carried their tickets open, so that they could be tallied as they passed in at the door.

The next witness, Dave Lacy, testifies that he was standing near the city-hall door, keeping tally of the McDuffie vote, and had tallied about 100. He was keeping tally to see if it would compare with the one kept by Clarke when the tickets were issued. When he had tallied about 100, then the contestee came to him and demanded to know—what? Do men who want a fair election assume this arrogance? The contestee approached this witness that was keeping the tally of the Republican vote and demanded to know by what authority he was keeping tally of the votes.

Upon what meat does this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great?

At that precinct a poor Republican voter dared not—in order to protect the purity and sanctity of the ballot-box and maintain Republican institutions—dared not take a list of the men who received tickets to vote for their party. What happened? Straws show which way the wind blows. What happened when the contestee came to that man and told him he had no authority to keep that list? It happened that this man, who was a poor, humble Republican, perhaps colored, made it convenient to get away from that door immediately and went out to where Dr. Houston was standing. Why? Echo answers "Why?" and it is unnecessary for me to answer further. "What authority?" "What authority?" A wink is sometimes as good as a nod. That poor fellow knew it, and I do not blame him. I will not argue this testimony in any way that is not exactly fair; but I say give me an honest jury and a competent court and I can send those election officers in Alabama to the penitentiary. There is no use of mincing words about this thing.

Fountain Hudson says he was an inspector at that poll. And here, lest I forget it at the proper time, I want the House to bear in mind that the contestant did bring in and have sworn several of these inspectors around that district, and every one of those examined as witnesses testified to the rascality of the other inspectors. Why was it you did not bring in some of these inspectors? I will come to that again if I do not forget it.

How long have I been talking?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty minutes remaining.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I have gone more into these details than I had intended. The fact is I had no intention of saying one word of a political character in this debate, but the gentlemen on the other side would provoke an angel into it. [Laughter.]

Fountain Hudson, inspector, says:

I received the tickets from the voters. I was inspector. They were folded. Aleck Pitts, a nephew of the contestee, read the tickets when they were counted and put them in a sack and took charge of them.

And now gentlemen rise up on the other side and ask us why we do not bring in those tickets. Would not you like to see McDuffie chase Aleck Pitts through the swamps of Alabama as he fled with that sack of tickets on his back to keep them from being counted for McDuffie? [Laughter.] Yet the proposition made to us is that we should pursue him into the wilderness and capture those tickets and bring them here and exhibit them to the House.

Mr. Speaker, I find that it will be impossible for me to review all of these various precincts in regard to which I have the evidence before me, so I will take the liberty of relying on the admirable collation made by my friend of Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] in his speech, and will insert the testimony that I have collated and have had time to read and discuss into my printed speech in the RECORD.

I shall only call attention now to one or two points. When they were counting the votes the Republican inspector, who was a colored man, said to the white inspectors, who were Democrats, "Boss, if you don't give Mr. McDuffie more votes than you are giving him, they will take us up to the 'big house'"—meaning that if they pursued the fraudulent count to the extent that they were pursuing it they would be taken to the Federal court at Montgomery. What was the reply? The reply was that they were McDuffie tickets, but that Uncle Aleck had just as well have them as McDuffie. So Uncle Aleck got the tickets, and they were certified to him, and he is sitting here on that certificate. [Laughter.]

There is witness after witness as to all these beats, but I have time now to refer to only one or two. I will take the case of Prairie Bluff beat, in Wilcox County. I have collated the testimony as to two beats in each county, and all of them are on a par with each other, but I have not time now to go through with them all.

At Prairie Bluff, Granville Bennett says (page 167 of the record):

Myself and R. J. Goode and Mr. Cleveland were the inspectors. Immediately after the polls were closed we counted the ballots. There were 227 for McDuffie and 13 for Colonel Davidson. There was a statement made and signed. I signed it without seeing or knowing how the report was made out for each candidate.

L. J. Sykes (page 168) says that he was issuing McDuffie tickets at Prairie Bluff; that he issued 227 tickets, and that all of them were voted. On cross-examination he said, "I could not be mistaken about those tickets, 227, being voted." When he was pressed on cross-examination he said, "I was looking at each and every man as they voted during the day." Why? Because he was sent there for the purpose of watching to see that the Republicans got justice. I call the attention of the House to the returns from that beat. All the proof shows that McDuffie got a large majority of the vote, but the election officers gave him 10 votes, I believe, and the balance to Davidson.

But here is a deposition that I am not surprised to see gentlemen on the other side laboring to anticipate and to break its force—the deposition of E. D. Morrill. E. D. Morrill is a man of character, who lives now in Chattanooga, Tenn., and who will be believed in any court anywhere in which he appears to testify. He had been a citizen of Wilcox County for twenty-one years. He had held various offices in the county, and had been chairman of the Republican executive committee for six years when this election took place. He knew the people, knew the situation of public affairs, and knew the poll-lists by heart, as it were. He was first examined in Alabama, but by some hocus-pocus he was not permitted to sign his deposition there; so poor McDuffie had to pursue him over the border into Tennessee and take his deposition again. He gives the number of voters in every voting precinct of that county, which knowledge he had acquired by reason of having been chairman of the Republican committee. And he says it would be impossible for a Democrat to be elected to Congress from that district unless there were more than three Republican candidates. Then he proceeds:

I had a conference with J. F. Foster, chairman of the Democratic executive committee, on the day of and after the meeting of the Democratic executive committee, with reference to the appointment of Federal supervisors. He stated in words to the effect that "they were indifferent as to whether supervisors were appointed or not, and that if they did not have the naming of their (Democratic) supervisors ours (Republican) would not be allowed to serve."

Now, I agree that there was no particular "bulldozing" there; but no sane man can read this witness's testimony and the evidence in the record without knowing that if the party managers had deemed it necessary there would have been. It was easier to play the counting act.

Mr. Morrill states that this Democratic chairman—

Said positively they were going to carry the election. They would carry it peacefully and quietly if they could, but would carry it by force if necessary, and had the arrangements made to do it.

Gentlemen treat this as a very trivial matter. Now, if a man should come up in the district of any of the gentlemen around me and tell such a story as that to voters among their constituents you would have his scalp, would you not? I say, then, come along with us and let us take the scalps of these fellows for doing the same thing. [Laughter.] I know the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] would do it, and do it like lightning. But I must hurry on.

I reminded him—

That is, our man Morrill, who was chairman of the Republican county committee, reminded the Democratic county committeeman—that we (Republicans) had rights guarantied to us by the constitutions of the State and of the United States. He replied—

I wish my friend who talked about the Democrats being such good friends to the colored men was here. This chairman of the Democratic county committee replied that—

Those constitutions were forced upon them, and they did not consider themselves bound to abide by them.

And gentlemen on the other side know that this is unfortunately to a considerable extent the public sentiment in some parts of the South. It is unfortunate, but it is true, I say, that this expression represents public sentiment in large portions of that country, and notably in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama. What else does Morrill say?

This conversation, together with previous experiences in other elections, induced me not to apply, as chairman of the Republican county committee, for the appointment of supervisors by the United States court, feeling that it might bring trouble.

But what else does this witness swear?

I know that Judge McDuffie was a popular candidate with his party. I know from actual experience in the canvass. The Republicans were thoroughly organized, and enthusiastic for their candidate. Davidson was unpopular with his party, and Turner had no following in the county. The colored vote in Wilcox county—

Now whom will you accept as the best authority as to what the colored vote is, a man and his friends who are interested in retaining for him a seat on this floor or the sworn testimony of a reputable citizen who testifies as to how the colored vote is divided in that county?

The colored vote in Wilcox County is about 95 per cent. Republican. There has been no change among them. If there has been any change, it is that a larger per cent. is Republican than formerly.

Now, here comes something good. The friends of the contestee did not jump up and down when they came to this part of the deposition. They were not like the fellow who, coming to a good piece of road, ran his horse backward and forward upon it, saying that, as he had been traveling all day through the mud, he was determined to enjoy one good piece of road while he had it. [Laughter.] They found this part of the road full of briars and stumps and gullies, and they passed over it as quickly as possible.

This witness being asked whether there was any effort on the part of Democrats to deny frauds in elections, answered, "There is not." And we all know personally many men who will sit down and laughingly tell us stories about how they do such things. It is a part of the history and experience of social life all through the South, and even here in the city of Washington.

But the witness continues:

They joke about it and boast about it.

William Carter, of Snow Hill, Wilcox County, Alabama, a delegate to the Democratic county convention in the spring of 1886, boasted in the court-house at Camden that "at the election in 1880, when he was an inspector, he, with the other inspectors, voted the entire registration list, and would have been voting yet if the list had been long enough."

What further does this witness swear? I ask members to note his statements:

Men are rewarded by office, both State and Federal, for their ability to carry elections against the popular majority.

Now, I invite the attention of every honest Democrat to what this witness further says on this subject:

I would also state in reply to this question that in a canvass among the Democrats before the election for State and county officers in the spring and summer of 1886 the issue—

Your attention, gentlemen—

the issue in the Democratic party between the aspirants for the office of probate judge was understood to be "honesty, or the lightning process at elections."

"Honesty" on the one hand, the "lightning process" on the other! You all understand what that means.

Colonel Gaillard, a Democrat, was supposed to be for honest elections, and in a speech, at the court-house in open day, to a large audience, Sol D. Bloch, a leading and influential Democrat, and mayor of the town, said, "That any man that was too religious, too conscientious, or scrupulous to put his hand down into a ballot-box and if he did not find a Democratic majority there, would not put it there, was too religious, too conscientious, and too scrupulous to be judge of probate of Wilcox County." And Colonel Gaillard was defeated.

This shows the state of public sentiment there, and what it leads to. Talk about good people, Christian people! Behold their conduct! By their fruits you shall judge them.

What else? Witness was asked the question, how was it possible for such frauds to be accomplished? He answered:

The board of county supervisors consists of the judge of probate, sheriff, and clerk of the circuit court. This board appoints three inspectors for each beat or voting precinct. The law requires opposing parties to be represented as inspectors. The board of county supervisors, being all Democrats (and counted in by these same methods), appoint as inspectors two shrewd Democrats and one ignorant negro, who can not read, write, or count, to represent the Republican party. These inspectors elect two clerks, who, of course, are Democrats. This gives four shrewd Democrats to one of the most ignorant Republicans.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOUK. I hope my friend will give me a few minutes longer.

Mr. LODGE. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. HOUK. I would like to have ten minutes.

Mr. LODGE. I will give the gentleman the five minutes I reserved yesterday.

Mr. HOUK. I was misled in this matter and believed I would have more time, as I understood the gentleman from Ohio would yield to me his time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] suggested he would yield time to me, I am quite content, and more than content, even anxious, that time should be given to my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. HOUK. I want it settled one way or the other before I go on if possible.

I was about to appeal to the speeches of gentlemen on the other side in order to show what was the defense set up against all these things. I have not had time to go through a tithe of the accumulated evidence. But I state upon my responsibility as a Representative that what I have cited is a fair example of the testimony bearing on all the precincts which have been presented in this record. And the testimony contained in the record is properly summed up in the table which I now read:

The vote proven for contestant stands uncontradicted by any proof of contestee, whose failure to produce the testimony of a single election officer is fatal to his case. The evidence of contestant is direct, consistent, and conclusive.

Now, what is the defense? They say that the contestant should have summoned and examined the inspectors charged with these frauds. I have already alluded to that briefly, and I have only to say further on that point one word. Bear in mind, and this is my reply, the contestant believed then and believes now every one of these inspectors who certified to these returns had certified to a falsehood, and that they had become criminals before the law. Now, believing that they had committed these frauds, would he not be a confiding sort of a fellow to reach out and call in these identical men to testify in regard to the very wrong for which they are impeached while he was still believing them to be guilty? If they were called in to testify, they would have to do one of three things: they would have to avail themselves of the privilege not to testify, in order to keep from criminating themselves, or they would have to tell the truth and knock the whole foundation from under the false superstructure upon which the contestee's whole case rests, or else they would have to resort to the third desperate alternative—that is, they would have to add perjury to the crime they had already committed, and at at the same time subject themselves to cross-examination, where their villainy could be exposed.

I say, both in good law and common sense, it is but reasonable whenever these inspectors have been attacked and their returns impeached, it is the duty of the contestee, it is the duty of the other side, if they can, to rebut the testimony which we have brought forward against them.

One word more in regard to this question raised of the colored people in the South. If you listen to the talk on this floor, you would believe that the thousands of colored voters who received ballots and went up to the ballot-box to cast them for the Republican party and candidates, instead cast them for the Democratic party and its candidates. You are asked to believe they have become converts to the Democratic party. You are to believe in reference to them that they have experienced a more sudden conversion than did the Apostle Paul on his way to Damascus. [Laughter.] You are asked to believe on their part they have undergone a more sudden change than did the multitude who spoke with tongues on the day of Pentecost, when, under the preaching of Peter, more than 5,000 were added to the church in one day. [Laughter and applause.]

And now, in conclusion, I want to say—the reckless may mock at it if they will, but I tell you, and I want to say to the country—that unless this system of fraud shall be made to stop, our Government, our institutions, our country will be ultimately swallowed up in anarchy and our liberties lost. [Applause.]

I intend my utterances to be conservative and uttered with the kindest of feeling, but unless this Government shall prove itself strong enough to reverse the order of things in such localities as the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama, and instead of "a fair ballot and a free count" secure "a free ballot and a fair count," our nation is doomed, and we are ruined as a people. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I yield fifteen minutes of the reserved time on this side to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, in the time allotted to me I would be glad to indicate what I conceive to be the real issue presented to this House in the pending contest. If the minority of the Committee on Elections are not satisfied with the issue that the majority present, they can not complain if we undertake to show from the issue they present that they are impaled upon that horn of the dilemma.

They say in their report, in concluding it, that in a single county in the Fourth district of Alabama they are perfectly willing the vote shall be counted—the county in which the contestant resides—from the fact that there is no evidence impeaching the integrity of its precincts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if they undertake to stand upon ground of that sort, it involves the wonderful proposition of the disenfranchisement of the balance of the entire district, and that, too, in the face of their own testimony; and I now present them the issue, and tell them they have got thirty precincts besides upon which there is not a scintilla of testimony attacking the integrity of the vote. Then what does the proposition amount to? If they are not willing to disfranchise the county in which McDuffie lives, are they willing to disfranchise the counties in which these thirty precincts are, and in which they do not pretend to say, nor will they say—and I ask them to say it and to show it from the record if they can—that there is a scintilla of testimony as to these thirty precincts outside of this county? That is the issue the minority would present. Let them stand by it as a legal fact, and what do you find? You find that in these uncontested precincts 2,936 votes are cast for Davidson and 206 for McDuffie, a net majority of 2,730 for the contestee in these precincts.

In the county in which they would preserve their McDuffie vote there is 2,014 for him, and 362 for Davidson. Taking the net majority and subtracting it from the net majority of Davidson, yet Davidson, by your own principle, by your own disfranchisement, by your own argument, stands elected by a thousand and some odd votes.

We have collated with great care those precincts. I hold in my hand the tabulated list of them by name and by counties, and no gentleman upon the other side will controvert my statement, for I think in this matter, as in every other matter, I would be too careful to make an announcement of fact as existing in the record that was not in the record and omitting from the record a fact that was in the record.

The gentleman who has just completed his remarkable address and homily to this House [Mr. HOUK] dwells much upon the superior virtue which he possesses as distinct from his fellows on this side of the House, and even lectures the Republicans for political bias as well as the Democrats. We are not children. We are presumed to be men of common sense, and the grandest lesson that has ever been taught—when he undertakes to speak of the language of Christ Himself—was when that Pharisee, standing in the streets of Jerusalem thanking God that he was a little better than other men, was rebuked when God Almighty looked at him and said, "Thou hypocrite." And I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the most dangerous badge that ever hung around the neck of any man is to be just a little better than his neighbors. Horace Greeley was philosopher enough when he said they are a praying set, but spelled it with an "e." [Laughter.] Regretting that there can be any political issue! Sad, sad, very sad indeed, that the political issue had got into this discussion!

This much, sir, I have to say: I believe this Union to-day is more solid from center to circumference, more united, with a grand army of compatriots from one end of the country to the other to cement it, not by bayonets, but by the brotherhood of man, than it has ever been since the foundation of this Government. [Applause.] North and South, everywhere I look, I see nothing but peace, tranquillity, good-will, and brotherly love that looks up to the very face of Jehovah in pride and in strength and in patriotism. [Renewed applause.] Lectures are out of the way, and that political party that promises to go to the country upon the ground that some who live in the South were to cheat and defraud, so that in the language of the gentleman himself, so cultured, such a scholar, yet who so vigorously asserted in his remarks yesterday that but for the corrupt practices of Alabama, Alabama would be truer to his views on the question of tariff.

Why say that? Why, I ask? Is it a bait to Alabama? Is it in the form of a bribe? Is this offer to Alabama sufficient to humiliate that proud State, and say to her, "We will take your political methods if you will just accept this tax?"

It was my fortune to have been born in Alabama, and as a child looks to the face of his mother, discovering in it honor and character, and love and duty, I look to-day to Alabama, as a dutiful child should, although I have not lived in her midst since my childhood.

What is the issue presented here? Mark you, they undertook in their charges published and printed to say only that the votes were put into the box in one way and counted in another way. They do not charge—and in that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is a little mistaken—they have never charged by any specification that those ballots were changed; that the ballot-boxes in any sense absolutely were changed with the single exception of the very places that this committee throw out. They have talked about Uniontown. The majority throw this precinct out; and they throw out two other precincts upon which nearly all the speeches of the gentlemen on the other side have been made. That is a fact in the record.

Now they want to present this issue and only this, that you ought to have counted so many votes for McDuffie and so many for Davidson, by which McDuffie would have been elected by some unknown number not given. They come into the House and say, "Conspiracy!" "Conspiracy!" Where? Why, over a whole district. There was; but it was a different conspiracy. It was a conspiracy indicated by their system that at a great number of places they had men appointed—to do what? That is their case. Why? To take these people off from 40 yards to 100 yards and distribute tickets to them—eight hundred and some odd at Uniontown by one man writing down their names in a room; and they started on down to the polls with their tickets. That is a big day's work, and a man who was doing that had but little else to look after. And then they set down their men; in that case, as in all others, a large proportion of them were unable to read, and they took a board and when a man came up they notched him down. That is the system which prevailed in Alabama.

There is no North and no South about that. Good men all over the country will say, "God save us from such a system and from suffrage reduced to such a small minimum; if that is the system existing in Alabama, God pity Alabama." If these are the task-masters set over them to determine the validity of elections, I am afraid that liberty and the rights of property are gone from Alabama, and New York or some better State will have to take care of Alabama. But if you do, for God's sake do not send those wretches called carpet-baggers down there any more.

Furthermore, I say to this House very much in the record is a charge exactly of that sort. We throw out Uniontown, and we do it because one witness, an inspector, took those ballots and put them in a sack. It was not contradicted, and we throw out that district. We throw out two more. We believed we were right, and we did right about it.

One gentleman said, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]—and I thank him for saying it, for I love honesty and honor from all sources—that in the North such a contest and such modes of proof would meet the ridicule of the whole country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOORE. I ask permission to extend my remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. So that, Mr. Speaker, we have the anomalous spectacle of a great political party contending that the regular returns of an election in Alabama may be set aside only upon evidence that a certain amount or number of tickets were delivered to voters; that certain parties stood near to the polls and saw them handed in as their votes, and notched down the number upon a board. This is the character of the testimony. No ballot-boxes are produced nor the ballots examined; no voters are called to show that they voted different from the count. Yet if this fraud existed, as charged, i. e., if there was only a fraudulent count, as charged, then the error would be exposed and corrected by this House. None of the judges of the election, none of the inspectors, none of the Federal supervisors are called as witnesses; yet we are gravely asked by the minority of the committee, upon such evidence as I have stated, to declare that Mr. McDuffie, who received 10,000 less votes than Mr. Davidson, was elected.

Our Republican friends in the House insist upon the proposition that the colored people are all Republicans, and that any election in which they vote for a Democrat is fraudulent. So long as the carpet-bag government of the Southern States existed, the colored people were used by these wretches as instruments of oppression and public plunder, and they succeeded in embittering the colored people against the whites. They were indeed then Republicans, and voted as they were bidden by their leaders. But after these States were remitted to the government of their own people, when the Republican party was overthrown, and power wrested from them by the Democratic party, then their leaders abandoned them, and, what is more glorious, abandoned those pillaged and oppressed States. What followed? A result at which all good men, North and South, rejoice. Peace, good order, and prosperity again blessed the land. The burdens of taxation were lifted from our people, public pillage ceased, common schools were everywhere established. The colored people participated in all these advantages of good government. Their friendly relations with the whites were re-established, and there existed among these two races mutual confidence and respect. A Democratic President was elected, and actually counted in and installed into his great office. No business disturbance followed, as predicted. There has been a clean and honest administration of our public affairs. The rights of the colored citizen have not been impaired, but fully protected. Then came the end of the Republican party in the Southern States. Its leaders are gone, and thousands of good colored people now discover they have been misled and fooled for many years. Who should be astonished that they vote the Democratic ticket in Alabama? And the country should rejoice that henceforth and forever, the politics of the citizen is not to be determined by his color or his race.

Mr. CRISP. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES].

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. BUCKALEW]. The gentleman from Georgia has six minutes remaining.

Mr. CRISP. I thought I had thirty-six minutes according to the count of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that six minutes complete the three hours.

Mr. CRISP. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. The course pursued by the gentlemen who have discussed this case on behalf of the contestant reminds me of a prosecuting attorney in the flush times of Alabama. A friend in describing his mode of conducting a prosecution said "he always took the guilt for granted and raved over the enormity of the offense." These gentlemen abandon the facts in the case and go off on a hue and cry.

One of those facts I propose to emphasize because it is conclusive in this case for the sitting member. That fact is that while they make seventy specifications of fraud there are twenty-six of them in which they do not produce any evidence at all; and when you take the vote in these twenty-six precincts and add it to the vote in Lowndes County, which is also undisputed, it makes a clear majority of nearly 1,500 for the sitting member.

But there is no reason why the vote in the other thirty-three precincts in which they introduce evidence should be rejected. The evidence introduced to show fraud is contradictory and insufficient. Then there is, according to this view of it, a majority of some 9,000 in favor of the sitting member.

Now if there was one fact more than another in the late contested case of Lowry and White, which controlled the gentlemen on the other side, it was the fact that Mr. White had a large popular majority. That had great influence with them in that case; why should it not have in this case? If it was justice there why is it not justice here?

But gentlemen complain that at thirteen precincts in this district the contestant, Mr. McDuffie, did not receive a solitary vote, and from that they draw the inference, wholly unwarranted by the evidence, that the vote was suppressed. Why, sir, the evidence shows that such was not the case. Take Richmond, one of those thirteen precincts; a colored witness there, Mr. Edwards, testified that he was a Republican; that he voted for Davidson; that he knew of a number of other colored men, eighty and odd, who voted for Davidson; that there were no McDuffie tickets distributed there, and that none of the negroes wanted to vote for McDuffie.

That, sir, is evidence to my mind of the "progress in civilization" which was referred to by the cultured gentleman [Mr. LODGE] from the cultured State of Massachusetts. I say it shows that the negroes are improving in civilization when at thirteen precincts in a Congressional district they refuse to vote for a Republican. It shows, sir, that they are no longer forced to the polls "like dumb, driven cattle," as they once were. It shows that they are not voting under the Loyal Leagues. It shows that the Republicans no longer have a bill of sale for them to vote them as their former owners worked them. That is what it shows.

Incredible as it may seem to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], we in Alabama have made some "progress in civilization." We have progressed from the misrule and anarchy of the reconstruction period to peace and prosperity under Democratic government. Last year the country was shocked at the doings of a few anarchists in Chicago. For seven or eight years, up to 1875, we had anarchists all over Alabama, even in the Legislature and courts of justice, and they were backed and sustained by the Republican party, then in control of the United States Government. The story of the saturnalia of crime and corruption of that period is familiar history. It is well known how brute numbers and gross ignorance confiscated our property, wrecked our institutions, and trampled under foot all that was valuable and sacred. How was it with Congressional elections during that period? During that time I was honored with a nomination for Congress. My opponent was the notorious Charles Hays, then a member of this House. He made his canvass against me with companies and detachments of United States troops, and with detectives and deputy marshals. Many of my supporters were arrested, some put in irons and carried to Mobile, and many fled to the swamps.

Before leaving Washington Mr. Hays had succeeded in getting Congress, then Republican in both Houses, to appropriate $400,000 worth of bacon under the pretense of aiding people rendered destitute by an overflow in the Tombigbee and Warrior Rivers. This bacon was used by my opponent as a corruption fund, and was issued to people on the tops of hills and mountains which have not seen an overflow since Noah's flood. By the use of such means I was defeated. We have made some "progress in civilization" since that Republican régime. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] has alluded to the small vote cast for Representatives in Congress in certain Southern districts, and has referred particularly to the district I have the honor to represent, and to the fact that I received only 4,220 votes at the election in November, 1886. I had no opposition. Is it to be expected that all the Democratic voters will go to the polls and vote when their candidate has no opposition? Is it to be supposed that Republican voters will rush to the polls when they have no candidate to vote for?

While "civilization has made some progress in Alabama," we have not yet caught up with the culture of Massachusetts or their tender consideration for the elective franchise. Under the constitution and laws of Massachusetts a voter is required to be able to read the constitution of the State before he can vote. If this highly civilized rule prevailed in Alabama nine-tenths of the negroes for whose rights and suffrages the gentleman from Massachusetts feels so much solicitude would be disfranchised.

Gentlemen complain that Ben Turner, a colored man, was a candidate for Congress at the last election in the Fourth Alabama district. They like the negro when he is a Republican voter, but when he is a Democratic voter, or even a Republican candidate, they have no use for him. They say Ben Turner ran as a dummy to benefit Davidson. Well, Ben Turner was in this respect imitating the high civilization of Massachusetts. In the last Presidential election a distinguished citizen of Massachusetts ran as a dummy to benefit and aid the Republican candidate for President.

Civilization has made some progress in Alabama. Instead of lawlessness, violence, and corruption, such as we had under Republican rule, the people of Alabama, white and black, now enjoy the benefit of wholesome laws. There is peace and friendship between the races. We have no strikes. Of twenty-six iron furnaces now in process of construction in the United States nineteen are in Alabama. Its industrial growth and prosperity are phenomenal. Gentlemen grieve over the wrongs of the poor negro, the injustice and oppression with which he is treated. How can they reconcile this with the absence of discontent among them, with the abundance and prosperity that surround them?

Mr. CRISP. I reserve the remainder of the time on this side.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL], in the course of his remarks saw fit to travel somewhat out of the record of this case to cast a reflection upon the sincerity and earnestness of Abraham Lincoln in the performance of the most important act of his life, and when he was corrected by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] he replied as follows, and I read from the reporter's notes:

> The gentleman from Iowa asks me where I got my information about President Lincoln hesitating to sign the emancipation proclamation. I got it in history, unless I have read history wrong. There is a painting which hangs on the walls of this Capitol, which I have been told by judges is a masterpiece. I have also heard that the propriety of hanging it on these walls has been questioned by some. For my part I am glad it is here. It is a perpetuation of an historic event. I refer to the painting representing the signing of the emancipation proclamation by that good man, that man whose heart overflowed with the milk of human kindness, and whose tragic death at the hands of the assassin was a terrible calamity to the whole country, and, coming at the time it did, peculiarly unfortunate for the South. The deep thought that mantles his features, the anxiety that sits enthroned upon his brow, and his disheveled hair plainly tell that the fire within his brain was burning with a fervid glow while the pen in his hand hesitated to sign the immortal name of Lincoln.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] with some warmth also told the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] that he ought to familiarize himself with the history of his country, presumably concerning that period; and when, in a little colloquy, I suggested in retort that possibly the gentleman from Virginia himself might not have been so situated as to be better informed upon that point of history than other gentlemen, he became very much excited, came into the main aisle, and talked very loudly about "bravery" and "cowardice." Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not here to display either bravery or cowardice. I do not think that an election case is a very appropriate subject or that the floor of the House is the most appropriate theater for the display of either; and it does not seem to me that twenty-five years after the war is a particularly fitting epoch to indulge in either epithets or boasting in that line.

But I desire to say that in my experience in this House, while I have listened with attention and with a proper degree of appreciation to quite a number of speeches delivered by the gentleman from Virginia, I recall at this time no single instance in which, upon any conceivable subject, he has addressed this House without reminding the House and the country, and speaking with pride of the fact, that he had served in the war and fought against his country. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the members of this House to bear witness that I never have indulged in boasting of that kind, and that whatever of bravery or of cowardice there may have been in my humble record of service in that country's defense during the four years which brought so much of bloodshed and sorrow upon this land it never has been boastingly referred to by me upon this floor. I do not propose to make any further reference to it now.

So far as the matters of bravery and cowardice are concerned, having advanced beyond the time when the blood runs so hotly as to overleap discretion, I am quite willing to leave the record and the test of all that sort of thing, so far as relates to myself, to be found in the history of events that have long since passed away, leaving an imperishable imprint behind them.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to award to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] the possession of bravery in one aspect. I say to him and to the country that it does seem to me to have required a very peculiar kind of "bravery" in any man to stand up before the American people in the year 1888 and attempt to pluck from the brow of the martyred Lincoln so much as a single unwithered leaf of the laurels placed there by the common consent of civilized humanity for the performance of an act that will live in grandeur as long as the love of liberty shall survive. In that respect I concede to the gentleman from Virginia a full meed of that sort of bravery which I believe has been illustrated by some one in poetry, who said in effect that—

> Thingamies rush in where what-you-may-call-'ems fear to tread.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in regard to the great historical fact which has been brought into this discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the time allowed to the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LODGE yielded Mr. BOUTELLE some additional time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not desire, sir, to assume to myself the attitude or the duty of championing Abraham Lincoln. That noble task might well be assumed by an abler eulogist.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have time yielded to me, sir.

Mr. MAISH. But the Chair has just now stated that your time has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust the gentleman will not grudge me the few minutes that my associates on this side have granted me to reply to what has been said upon this subject.

Mr. MAISH. I do not want it to come out of our time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, not at all. You shall have your pound of flesh.

Mr. MAISH. It is unnecessary to interchange compliments of that sort.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has got through interrupting me, I will proceed.

Mr. MAISH. I had the right to know whether the gentleman was entitled to the time he was occupying.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it would be but scant courtesy and justice on the part of the House if it should yield me out of its own time a few brief moments to meet the charge sprung for the first time, so far as I know, upon the people of this country—a reflection upon the great Chief Magistrate who has passed to the life beyond. But in the few moments allowed me out of the scanty time awarded this side I can only in the briefest manner refute the statement of the gentleman from Virginia that Abraham Lincoln was hesitating or reluctant when the time came for smiting the shackles from the limbs of his fellow-beings held in slavery's bondage.

I have the honor to be a resident of the State and of the city where lives the venerable and distinguished patriot, Hannibal Hamlin, who, as Vice-President of the United States, was the official and personal associate of President Lincoln throughout the four years from March 4, 1861, to 1865; and I could cite here from his lips the history which he has repeatedly given me, and which but recently he narrated in public, of the interview in which Mr. Lincoln confided to him before he had informed his Cabinet of his fixed purpose to issue the emancipation proclamation. If the gentleman from Virginia had heard that chapter of inner history as I have heard it he would not be in doubt about the strength of purpose that nerved the hand of Lincoln when he declared that four millions of God's children should be free.

In the brief interval of discussion I have hastily placed my hand upon the first historical authorities I could reach, and I now call as witness against the gentleman from Virginia the great finance minister of the war period and later Chief-Justice, Salmon P. Chase, who though dead yet speaketh in vindication of the lofty purpose of his great chief in issuing the immortal proclamation. In the diary of Mr. Chase, from which I can but briefly quote, he says, under date of September 22, 1862:

The President then took a graver tone and said, "Gentlemen, I have, as you are aware, thought a great deal about the relation of this war to slavery, and you all remember that several weeks ago I read to you an order I had prepared upon the subject, which, on account of objections made by some of you, was not issued. Ever since then my mind has been much occupied with this subject, and I have thought all along that the time for acting on it might probably come. I think the time has come now. I wish it was a better time. I wish that we were in a better condition. The action of the Army against the rebels has not been quite what I should have best liked. But they have been driven out of Maryland, and Pennsylvania is no longer in danger of invasion. "When the rebel army was at Frederick I determined, as soon as it should be driven out of Maryland, to issue a proclamation of emancipation such as I thought most likely to be useful. I said nothing to any one, but I made a promise to myself and (hesitating a little) to my Maker. The rebel army is now driven out and I am going to fulfill that promise. I have got you together to hear what I have written down. I do not wish your advice about the main matter, for that I have determined for myself. This I say without intending anything but respect for any one of you. But I already know the views of each on this question. They have been heretofore expressed, and I have considered them as thoroughly and carefully as I can. What I have written is that which my reflections have determined me to say. If there is anything in the expressions I use or in any minor matter which any of you thinks had best be changed I shall be glad to receive your suggestions. One other observation I will make: I know very well that many others might, in this matter, as in others, do better than I can, and if I was satisfied that the public confidence was more fully possessed by any one of them than by me, and knew of any constitutional way in which he could be put in my place, he should have it. I should gladly yield to him. But though I believe that I have not so much of the confidence of the people as I had some time since, I do not know that, all things considered, any other person has more; and, however this may be, there is no way in which I can have any other man put where I am. I am here. I must do the best I can and bear the responsibility of taking the course which I feel I ought to take."

The President then proceeded to read his emancipation proclamation, making remarks on the several parts as he went on, and showing that he had fully considered the subject in all the lights in which it had been presented to him.

I am able to call as a witness another distinguished member of President Lincoln's Cabinet, Hon. Gideon Welles, at that time Secretary of the Navy. In his volume of reminiscences of Lincoln and Seward, on pages 210–212, Mr. Welles says:

No one more than the President was impressed with the difficulties to be met, and at the same time with the imperative necessity of decisive action. The details of these proceedings, and the final determined stand taken by him—not by the Secretary of State or any of the Cabinet—to decree by an executive order the emancipation of the slaves in the rebellious States have been elsewhere related. It was after all efforts for voluntary emancipation by the States interested, with pecuniary aid from the national Treasury, had failed. To Mr. Seward and myself the President communicated his purpose and asked our views on the 13th of July, 1862. * * * The President deliberately prepared his preliminary proclamation, which met the approval, or at least the acquiescence, of the whole Cabinet, though there were phases of opinion not entirely in accord with the proceedings. * * * Aware that there were shades of difference among his counselors, and hesitation and doubt with some, in view of the vast responsibility and its consequences, the President devised his own scheme, held himself alone accountable for the act, and, unaided and unassisted, prepared each of the proclamations of freedom.

As the gentleman from Virginia has sought to find evidence in support of his charge in the expression of President Lincoln's face and his "disheveled hair," as portrayed in Carpenter's great painting now hanging on the walls of the Capitol, I quote a few sentences from "The Inner Life of Abraham Lincoln, or Six Months at the White House," written by the painter himself after the sittings had been concluded. On page 87 he says that on the evening when the proclamation was signed the President remarked to Mr. Colfax that the signature appeared somewhat tremulous and uneven; but, said Mr. Lincoln:

"Not because of any uncertainty or hesitation on my part; but it was just after the public reception, and three hours' handshaking is not calculated to improve a man's chirography." Then, changing his tone, he said, "The South had fair warning that if they did not return to their duty I should strike at this pillar of their strength. The promise must now be kept, and I shall never recall one word."

Again, on page 89, Mr. Carpenter, the artist, tells us:

Mr. Chase told me that at the Cabinet meeting immediately after the battle of Antietam, and just prior to the issue of the September proclamation, the President entered upon the business before the Cabinet by saying that the time for the annunciation of the emancipation policy could be no longer delayed. Public sentiment, he thought, would sustain it—many of his warmest friends and supporters demanded it—and he had promised his God that he would do it. The last part of this was uttered in a low tone and appeared to be heard by no one but Secretary Chase, who was sitting near him. He asked the President if he correctly understood him. Mr. Lincoln replied, "I made a solemn vow before God that if General Lee was driven back from Pennsylvania I would crown the result by the declaration of freedom to the slaves."

Mr. Speaker, I leave this subject in this hurried manner. Borrowing the words with which Lincoln closed his immortal proclamation, I say I am willing to leave the issue raised by the gentleman from Virginia (as Abraham Lincoln left the issue of his proclamation) "to the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God." [Applause.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there left on this side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BUCKALEW). Eighteen minutes.

Mr. LODGE. I yield that time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the time allowed me by the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts is much too brief to permit me to enter into a discussion of the issue joined here. If the determination of the question affected only Colonel Davidson or Mr. McDuffie, the result of our deliberations would be of less consequence. But there is involved a principle which is more important and far-reaching than the mere matter of determining which of these gentlemen shall sit as a member of this body during the remainder of this Congress. Our disposition of cases like the one we are now considering may well suggest the inquiry as to whether or not we shall continue to sit in this Hall as the chosen representatives of a free people, that freedom being protected by the ballot (that right preservative of all rights) honestly and fairly cast, uninfluenced by intimidation, and a return made of the ballots so cast, free from the touch and taint of fraud.

I am not unfamiliar, nor is any intelligent gentleman on this floor, with the alleged causes which have prompted the adoption of measures to suppress the Republican vote in one part of this country. It is an open secret, well known to all of us, that in many of the States south of the Ohio and the Potomac it is asserted and maintained that the suppression of the Republican vote, which is cast in the main by colored men, is necessary in the interest of civilization. They say openly—and I am not here to argue the merits of the proposition or inquire how far it has merit and may properly be urged in palliation of what has been done in that behalf—they say openly that the interests of civilization and of the hearth-stones in the Southern States demand that the men who are intelligent, who have property, who represent the best interests of society—which being interpreted by them means white men of the Democratic party—shall control the local affairs of that section, shall control the affairs of the county and the affairs of the State, and that this result could only be attained by heroic measures, which involved the obliteration or suppression of the black Republican vote in that section. And, gentlemen, it has been your appeals in that behalf which have in a measure deadened the feeling in the North touching these practices by which the Democratic party has been placed in power throughout the South, and may I not say in the nation? You have appealed to Northern people in the manner I have suggested. You have said to this side of the House, "You would not deem it wise, nor expedient, nor yet in any degree safe or tolerable to permit men having no experience in public affairs, being without knowledge of what is demanded of them in official position and lacking the ability and intelligence to administer either county or State affairs, to be placed in control of the highest and most vital interests of the citizens of the Southern States. The result has been that the delinquencies I have mentioned in the suppression of the ballot have been in large degree winked at. Winked at partly because there was by many deemed to be some merit in your claim, and largely because the things complained of could not be prevented, nor those who violated the law brought to punishment.

But, gentlemen, if for the sake of the argument it be admitted that there is merit in what you say in extenuation of your resorting to doubtful measures, which sound in violence and fraud, to obtain control of your local affairs, in the interest, as you allege, of good government, it is clear that nothing can be said in justification of reducing one of my constituents in the matter of the potentiality of his ballot cast at a Congressional election to the fifth or tenth part of one of your constituents. And yet that is just what is proposed in the case now pending before the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite enough that through these instrumentalities of violence and fraud (sanctioned as you allege by the sacredness of the end to be attained) you secure and retain in your control the local affairs which pertain to your State. It ought to be enough that you thus secure and retain control of the affairs of Alabama and Georgia. But, sir, even on your theory of the necessities of the situation, it is presuming too much upon the intelligence and patience of the patriotic people of the Northern States to demand of them that you be permitted by the suppression of Republican votes cast by blacks or whites anywhere to extend the area of your control to the whole nation, and thus through Congressional action manage the affairs of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan even as you do your own. But all that is in the last analysis involved in the determination of the question which we are now considering.

Gentlemen, what are the alleged facts to be proven, and what are the known and conceded facts involved in this discussion and with which we are called upon to deal? You know as men of experience in the practical affairs of life, and especially as lawyers who have been accustomed to search through the intricacies of tangled facts and find the truth—you know, I repeat, that it frequently occurs that allegations seemingly well attested by evidence are overthrown and completely put to rout by the strong probabilities that inhere in the known and admitted facts involved in the subject-matter to which the allegation relates.

The allegation is that the sitting member, a Democrat, was elected from the Fourth district of Alabama by a majority of about 14,000 over the regular Republican nominee.

The known facts are that the district in question contains about 6,500 white voters and over 27,000 colored voters; that the district is overwhelmingly Republican; that the appointment of inspectors of the election was made by Democratic officials; that the two Democratic inspectors were competent men, could read and write, and seemed to have been selected with direct reference to their fitness to do what was required of them, whatever that may have been, while the representative of the Republicans, whose duties required that he should be able to read and write, was in every instance selected and appointed, seemingly at least, because he could do neither. So we see that on the one side men who had the capacity to commit fraud, if so disposed, were appointed, and on the other a man selected who would not be able to detect the fraud if it was committed right under his nose.

What other admitted facts do we find? Why, that twice have the returns from the Fourth district of Alabama been condemned by this House, and twice has the member holding the certificate of election been unseated because of gross frauds committed by the officers of election. This was done once by a Republican House, once by a Democratic House—the Forty-seventh and the Forty-eighth Congresses. Thus we have presented the allegation and certain conceded facts in the light of which, on the evidence, we are to determine this case.

It is a strange proposition that the only district in Alabama which the Democratic Legislature of that State set apart as an overwhelmingly Republican district, as a reliable Republican district, should become in a day if not the only at least one of the most reliable Democratic districts in the State.

The gentleman has asserted that there is a strong disposition on the part of the colored men to vote the Democratic ticket. There is no inherent probability that that assertion can possibly be sustained by the fact. However, he may have been deceived as to the disposition of the colored men to vote the Democratic ticket; the observation, the experience, and the testimony of men white and black, North and South, are to the effect that the colored voters of the South, when permitted to vote at all, will vote the Republican ticket, and no reason is offered why the colored men of the Fourth district of Alabama should form an exception to the rule. It appears that while the colored man will confer with his old master and white neighbor touching the price of a mule, or the desirability of hiring a plantation, or the fit of a coat, or the value of corn, he will not take his advice or seek his counsel in performing his political duties, and that for reasons that are too obvious to need recounting.

Gentlemen, look at the population of this Fourth district, and I call your attention to the record for a moment in the light of what I termed the inherent probabilities in this case. The whole white population of all that district in 1880, according to the census, was 32,000 and a few hundred, and the colored population 135,000. Giving, according to the rule, one voter to each five of the population, we have of white voters only 6,500, and of colored voters over 27,000. And yet I am told notwithstanding you corraled those colored men as Republicans in that district. Knowing that there were and are in the district five Republicans to one Democrat, yet you tell me in the face of all our experience, in the face of our knowledge born of that experience, that such great political changes have been wrought recently among those colored Republicans that Colonel Davidson, the Democratic candidate for Congress, walks off with a majority of over 14,000 over Judge McDuffie, his Republican competitor. Paul's conversion is not to be mentioned in comparison with the conversion you claim for the colored men of that district. [Laughter and applause.]

Gentlemen, if it was proposed to commit fraud in the interest of the sitting member, could steps have been taken better calculated to subserve that end than the appointment in every instance of a Republican inspector who could neither read nor write, when the proper discharge of his duties in securing an honest election required that he should be able to do both? That these utterly illiterate Republican inspectors were not selected by accident is too clear to need argument. That they were selected because of their illiteracy can not be doubted, and the reason for such selection is obvious, and certainly no one suspects that it was done for an honest purpose. To state the case is to argue it.

Now, I ask you another question: Is it probable that these men were thus suddenly swept from their political allegiance and converted to the Democratic faith and hurried pell-mell to the support of the sitting member, Colonel Davidson? I take it for granted that the colonel is a reputable citizen and a good man. I take it for granted that he is a man of character and standing in the community where he resides. I am assured also by my Democratic friends that Judge McDuffie enjoys the respect and confidence of all men who know him. Then, so far as the character and standing of the two candidates were concerned, there was nothing to prompt the Republicans to leave their chosen candidate and run in a mass to vote for his Democratic competitor. There is no other instance of the kind on record, not one; and until human nature changes greatly there never will be one.

Let me call attention, gentlemen, to another fact before referred to. The Forty-seventh Congress unseated the then sitting member from the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama by reason of gross frauds in that district committed in his interest. But you say that was a Republican Congress. Following swift upon the heels of that the Forty-eighth Congress, which has not been suspected of being a Republican Congress, also unseated General Shelley (a gentleman popular at home and on this floor) because of frauds committed in the district, by the aid of which he obtained his certificate. And yet you tell me in the face of these facts that it is monstrous to suggest that frauds were there practiced in the interest of the sitting member. I say that the inherent probabilities are all against him, and so strongly against him that the report of the majority of the committee is matter of surprise to me. I want to be fair and just in this matter. It is true we reason in the direction of our desires; but, gentlemen, it must have taken a very earnest course of reasoning to induce you to believe that such conversions from the Republican to the Democratic faith as are here suggested, and must have been necessary to produce such a result if the election was honest, ever did or by any possibility could have taken place in that district.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is fraud ever presumed or inferred?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No; fraud is not presumed; but if you go into a room where there is nothing but a hat, and after you come out the hat is missing, the reasonable presumption will be very strong that you got the hat. [Great laughter.] When any candidate, as in the case at bar, goes into a district where there are five Republicans, devoted, earnest Republicans, to one devoted, earnest Democrat, or, in other words, finds 27,000 Republicans to 6,500 Democrats, and also finds all the arrangements complete to afford such candidate the opportunity to change the Republican majority of twelve or fifteen thousand to a Democratic majority of over 4,000, and that is actually done if the record be true, there is, as in the case of the hat, a very strong and, to my mind, a conclusive presumption the majority was not the result of the votes cast, but the manner of counting and returning the result after they were cast; and in the presence of the known facts in this case, I think we are well justified in suspecting that something is wrong—don't you, Brother WISE? [Laughter and applause.] Of course you do. In other words, everybody here, Republican and Democrat, knows that there was something wrong.

I am not speaking now simply in defense of the rights of Mr. McDuffie, but of the whole American people. I admit, if you please, that these men may have been mistaken as to a part of their testimony, as to the number of votes cast at particular precincts—these colored men, I mean. But the things we do know enable us to reason with certainty to the things of which we can not have actual personal knowledge. When I see a line of devoted Republicans who are willing to die for the cause they espouse, standing at the door of the room in which the voting is going on, each supplied with a Republican ticket, and are assured by others that they saw those tickets handed by the voter to the inspector of election, I have good reason to conclude that those tickets were voted and should have been deposited in the ballot-box and counted, and to expect that this House will see to it that those ballots find expression in controlling the results of that election, and if they do not, the trouble is not that the ballots were not cast, but that they were not honestly counted and a just and true return made of that count.

Now, my friend from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] has deprecated the fact that politics have been drawn into this discussion. Sir, I agree that we should approach the consideration of this question with calmness and deliberation, without partisan or other prejudice for or against either of these gentlemen, but with a view of getting at what is right, in order that the American people may feel that elections are not a mere means of juggling with the highest rights of the citizen in the interest of partisan ambition.

It is a lamentable fact, but a fact none the less, that already all over this country we are coming to believe that men may tamper with the ballot and be guilty of but a mere indiscretion. Sir, the sooner we, as the representatives of the people, disabuse the public mind of that idea the better. It ought to be understood that this, the only representative body in this nation so far as the General Government is concerned, elected directly by the people, can be trusted to stand guard within the limits of our jurisdiction over this more than sacred right, without which all other rights are likely to be sacrificed.

Now, I want to refer to what my honored friend from Texas [Mr. MOORE] has said, and I do so because his statement may mislead some if unchallenged. He said that thirty precincts of the district in question were not inquired into, and he therefore infers that these precincts are to pass unquestioned. Although fraud was sown throughout that district as the goddess Ceres scattered corn throughout the earth, we are to understand that as to these thirty precincts the returns are pure because they were not inquired into and the official returns scrutinized, when the fact is, as I am informed, that this contestant was unable, for want of time, to reach them, not having sufficient facilities in prosecuting his investigations and taking his testimony to visit each precinct.

He took testimony up to the last minute of his time, and, as stated, he was unable to reach these thirty precincts; but in my judgment they were all tarred with the same stick, and in point of fact the result in those precincts, if inquired into, would have been found to be precisely the same. The so-called conversion of black Republicans extended throughout the district.

I have run over some statistics to ascertain the probabilities as to that district. In 1876 the Democracy cast only about one-fourth as many votes as the Republicans; but through these peculiar agencies with which we are so familiar, they have been enabled to increase their ballots until to-day a Republican district in Alabama, created a Republican district by Democratic legislation, containing a clear Republican majority of from ten to fifteen thousand, and so intensely Republican as to be called the "black district," because it contained five Republicans, mostly colored men, to one Democrat, is now, through the jugglery of the ballot-box, the suppression of the ballot, and the forgery of returns, able to return 11,000 Democratic majority, a greater majority than was returned by all the other districts of Alabama put together, if I am correctly informed. [Applause.]

Mr. CRISP. I shall invite the attention of the House for a short time only to the case that is before it. I shall not wander, Mr. Speaker, to follow the distinguished gentlemen on the other side in paths that I think lead away from the case. I shall not stop to answer arguments that have no bearing on the matter we are now considering. But I shall seek to confine myself to a short discussion of what this case is, and I ask the House, both this side and that, although experience may tell us it is almost hopeless to appeal there—I shall ask the House for a candid expression of opinion upon the evidence.

At the threshold of this case, before a single word of testimony is alluded to, we are invited by the distinguished gentlemen who filed the minority report to consider the history of the district from which the contest comes. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the province of this House is to judge of the election of its members; to judge by the law and by the evidence; to determine by the evidence the number of votes cast, and to decide the case in accordance with that evidence. The principle invoked by these gentlemen in referring to the previous elections in this district involves the idea that there can be no change in the political opinion of individuals.

Is it your experience, sir, is it the experience of any man at all familiar with public affairs, that this is true? Does not the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Executive Mansion is to-day occupied by a Democrat, elected after twenty-four years of Republican rule there, demonstrate conclusively that there has been, somewhere in this country, a change in the political opinions of individuals? No man can deny this, and yet we are gravely asked, in judging under the Constitution of the United States as to who was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth district of Alabama, to determine that in that district no change of opinion shall be permitted; in that district as the people felt and voted ten years ago, so they must continue to feel and vote for all time to come.

But, Mr. Speaker, in view of the vote in that district for the past ten years we can not thus conclude. Let us examine this vote. In 1874 the Republican majority was 14,000; in 1876 it was 9,000; in 1880 it was 2,800; in 1882 it was little more than 3,000. These figures, Mr. Speaker, are from the official returns and the reports of the Election Committee of this House. I am unable to give you the exact vote in 1884. But I can say to you, gentlemen, that there was a notice of contest filed by the Republican candidate; he afterwards abandoned the contest, and the contestee in this case sat as a Representative from that district in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Gentlemen presume, outside of the evidence, to assign the reason for this abandonment. It seems to me, in the absence of evidence, and there is none, that the presumption is that the investigation of the case by that contestant and his counsel satisfied him that there was nothing in the case to justify its continuance. There was nothing in the past history of the Democratic party in this House that would lead him to believe he would not get justice here. I can confidently appeal to the record of the Democrats in that and this House when I make the assertion that they pass upon election cases fairly under the law and the evidence, and where they believe a Republican has been elected they award him the seat.

It seems, then, that the 14,000 Republican majority of 1874 has been changed to a Democratic majority in 1884, and that at the election in that year the Democratic candidate was elected. So much for the history of the district.

The vote for the sitting member was 14,913. Mr. McDuffie received 3,526 votes; and the colored candidate, named Turner, received 2,519. On that state of the returns a contest was entered. Numerous specifications of fraud are alleged, most of them going to the fact that the managers at the various precincts falsely counted the ballots. There is no charge of intimidation; there is no intimation that any man could not freely go to the polls and vote. But there is a distinct charge that the managers of the election violated their sworn duty and counted for the contestee votes cast for the contestant.

Without dwelling upon it, I wish to call attention here to the method adopted by the contestant to sustain his charges. If you were required to produce evidence that the ballots cast at an election were not honestly counted by the managers, you would naturally go first to the ballots, because they speak for themselves. "Ah, but," says the gentleman from Massachusetts, "how could we suppose that the managers of election would leave the ballots unchanged or would keep them as they found them?"

Mr. Speaker, the same spirit that prompted that remark accounts for a number of things that have been said on the other side. Those gentlemen make a bald charge—a charge without evidence, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] did, and then they say, "As we have charged it, it must be presumed to be true until you disprove it." They charge the election managers with the commission of a fraud, and when we ask them why they do not produce the ballot-boxes and show it, they say, "Is it to be supposed that these men who are reeking with fraud would not have changed the boxes to suit themselves?" Upon that kind of argument the House of Representatives, not as a Democratic House, not as a Republican House, but as honorable gentlemen sent here to represent the American people and sworn to decide this case as judges, are asked to unseat the contestee.

They are asked upon bare rumor, upon bare assertion, to unseat a gentleman who appears to have been elected by a majority of several thousand votes, who produces the certificate of the governor of his State, and who has behind him the sworn return of the election managers in every precinct. Upon such a mere bald, unsupported statement as that they are asked to unseat him.

Mr. Speaker, the ballots should have been examined. But pass from that, if you please, and go to the evidence and let me call attention, so far as my time will permit, to the character of case presented here. The contestant proceeded to take evidence; he proceeded to assail as best he could each precinct, and he took evidence which he claimed established fraud.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. I respectfully decline. This contestant took evidence which he claims will show the number of votes that were cast for him at a number of precincts. He came before the Committee on Elections, as the minority well understand, and presented his case upon this theory: "I attack a number of precincts in the district; I have shown that the returns are unworthy of credence; I have established by aliunde testimony a given number of votes in each of those precincts, and, taking those votes as I have established them and rejecting the returns from those precincts, the result elects me over Davidson by some seven or eight thousand majority." That is the contestant's case as he presented it and as he claimed his evidence established it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the Committee on Elections began to consider this case, nobody had heard of any charge of conspiracy in the matter. I will show later that the "conspiracy" originated with the minority of the Committee on Elections. As I have said, the case made by the contestant was, in substance, that he had proven by evidence facts which would authorize the rejection of a number of polls, that he had shown that at those polls there were a certain number of votes cast, and that, adding them together, he would have the majority; but when the committee came to consider that question it was found that the contestant's theory would not work; that, giving him credit for all the votes he claimed to have, and giving the contestee credit for all the votes that the same evidence showed that he had received, there was still a majority for the contestee. In that state of the case, what was to be done? According to the theory of my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the colored voter belongs to the Republican party. By reason of his color he must be assumed to be a Republican. "What can we do?" they asked. "It will not do to retain this Democrat in the seat; it will not do to break the uninterrupted record of the Republican party in always voting to seat a Republican. Something must be done. What shall it be?"

Right there, Mr. Speaker, began the "conspiracy" in this case—I do not use the term in any offensive sense. It was discovered that the theory on which the contestant had presented his case would not do, and something must be done to give the Republican the seat. I do not know which of the distinguished gentlemen upon the minority of the committee is entitled to the credit of inventing the "conspiracy." I suspect that I could point out the individual, but I shall not emulate the example of the gentlemen on the other side, and undertake to decide the question on mere suspicion.

The new idea was that a conspiracy must be established, and the question was, how? They said we will show that the Uniontown precinct ought to be thrown out. We will show that this precinct and that precinct and the other precinct ought to be thrown out, and then we will say that there was a conspiracy in this district to count in Davidson and to count out McDuffie. Now, I appeal to the House as reasonable men to answer this question: If there are twenty precincts in a county and you have indubitable evidence that in ten of them there have been frauds, will you therefore reject the other ten? It is admitted that as to thirty precincts in this district there is not a line of evidence assailing the integrity of the returns. Are we, upon this miserable presumption about which we have heard, to determine that three election officers in each of such precincts deliberately committed perjury?

Such is the proposition of the minority. The contestant himself and his able attorney never thought of such a thing. That idea had its birth here. Reference to the brief will show that contestee claimed that he had successfully assailed all the boxes except certain ones at which 3,411 votes were cast for contestee. He gives contestee these votes, because he says he has not had time to produce evidence of their illegality. Now the minority find that the uncontested vote for contestant is 2,014. This leaves a majority of 1,397 for contestee.

Understand, now, if you take the uncontested returns from this district, throwing out every precinct where there is a contest, rejecting, if you please, every ballot-box that they assail, and standing alone upon the uncontested ballots, and the contestee has a majority of 1,397. But these gentlemen, these ingenious gentlemen, do not propose to do that. They say to you that the uncontested vote of Lowndes County gave a majority to the contestant, and therefore they will seat him. What are you going to do with the uncontested vote in the other counties? They propose to reject it. Can we afford to do that?

Mr. Speaker, when I first saw the report of the minority and found that they were dwelling upon "the plenary power of Congress," I suspected that they intended something wrong. I question the motive of an individual when in the very approach to a question of law and fact he invokes a disregard of existing and established law. When I saw such an invocation in the minority report I was curious to know what would follow. Proceeding with an examination of that report, I found the minority discussing to some extent the vote at the various precincts, and then they set up this wonderful discovery of "conspiracy." Who ever heard that evidence of fraud in two or ten precincts would establish it in twenty others where there was not a line of evidence assailing the regularity and legality of the proceedings? It was reserved for this ingenious minority to take that view and present it for the first time to the American Congress. I commend them, sir, for dwelling upon the "plenary power" of Congress when they present a proposition like that.

Mr. Speaker, in the little time remaining I can only notice one or two other points. If you examine the report of the minority you will find the most extraordinary propositions presented. You will find that on page 31 they head a certain portion of their report with these words, "Returns which appear fraudulent on their face." Now, from a heading of that sort you would expect upon looking at the returns to see some evidence of fraud. You could not guess what the evidence is. The evidence which they set up as showing on its face the existence of fraud is the fact that in certain precincts named Mr. McDuffie did not receive any votes! [Laughter.] That is the evidence. Because Mr. McDuffie did not receive any votes there is fraud on the face of the returns!

Why, Mr. Speaker, I should take that to be an evidence of the intelligence of the voters of those precincts, not an evidence of fraud. [Laughter and applause.]

But if you will go to the record in reference to the list of precincts here presented you will find something besides the case as exhibited by the appearance of the returns. The evidence will show you that at one of these precincts there were no McDuffie tickets distributed. The man who came with the McDuffie tickets—and I commend this to the earnest gentlemen on the other side—got into a discussion with another colored man as to the merits of the two candidates, and they resolved, strange as it may seem to our Republican friends—they resolved that in this contest they would vote for Davidson; and they did not distribute Mr. McDuffie's tickets.

I ask the special attention of gentlemen on the other side to the evidence of Henry Bennett, on pages 210, 211:

I can not say for certain how many, but I think right smart of the colored voters voted this time for Mr. Davidson. Things have changed down there a good deal. Three years ago nearly all of the colored people down there were Republicans, but good many of them vote the Democratic ticket now.

"Things have changed," my friends, in that part of the country; and I thank God for it. I call attention to the evidence of John Callier, on page 212:

I belong to the colored race; I voted for A. C. Davidson for Congress at that election. * * * Not a great while before election on 2d of November, 1886, the colored people in that precinct held meetings; these meetings were largely attended, there being perhaps from fifty to one hundred or more people at each of them. At these meetings political affairs were discussed, and the colored people agreed that inasmuch as they had been voting for Republican nominees heretofore, without any benefit to themselves or the country, they would at the November election support the Democratic nominee, A. C. Davidson.

[Applause.]

So you see, Mr. Speaker, that even in a region where the Republican party claim and maintain that the dense ignorance of the colored people should keep them Republicans, light is breaking in. Why, sir, can any reason be given why colored men should vote the Republican ticket? Has that party ever given them anything but promises? Time after time, when an election was approaching, the hope has been held out to them of something to be gained from that party, and time after time there has been impressed upon them the dread of something fearful to come from the success of the Democracy.

But, Mr. Speaker, every man within the sound of my voice who has ever lived in the South knows that but for the miserable carpet-baggers that infested that part of the country after the war there never would have been any division between the white people and their former slaves. [Applause.] There has been no time since the freedom of the negroes when the people of the South were not their best friends, and the colored people begin to know it. Every year and every day numbers of them are becoming satisfied of this truth. There is not an economical question pending before the House to-day in which their interest is not identical with the interests of the white agriculturists among whom they live. There is not one of them who, in grief or distress, does not go to his white neighbor for aid and comfort. In poverty and in sickness the white people help them; they educate them. The interests of the two races are identical; why should they be separated in politics? I will tell you the only reason they ever have been separated: beause the miserable camp followers, the men who came down to the South after the war to prey upon an oppressed and poverty-stricken people in order to obtain office, deceived and misled them as to the real feeling of the people of the South. That is the reason and the only reason. But, Mr. Speaker, that day is passed. The last threat of the Republican party in the South has been tried. Every prophecy of theirs has failed. At the last Presidential election, when these colored people were inclined to leave the Republican party in droves and vote with the best and only friends they have, they were told by these same Republican leaders, "If Cleveland is elected you will go back into slavery."

That may seem absurd, and yet, my friends, I say to you, hundreds of these ignorant and misguided men believed it.

Now the Democrats are in power here, the rights of the colored men have been fully protected and maintained. Even that threat, about the last weapon the Republican party had to fire, even that threat, has been tried, and they have found it to be untrue.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there need be no surprise upon the mind of any man that a great many of these people who are identified in interest, for good or ill, with their white neighbors have determined to vote with them, and no fair-minded man at all acquainted with the situation in the South can insist that a Democrat should be ejected from the House of Representatives because his district contains more black men than white men.

Now, if I had time I might say something in reply to the insinuations of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana. I have not the time. Perhaps I may have occasion or opportunity before this Congress ends to make some reply to those insinuations. I wish him to understand and the House to know, so far as the State of Georgia is concerned, and her Representatives, they are entirely willing that all men may know the manner in which elections are there conducted. There has been no suggestion, even, from any source of fraud in those elections. I say what may be unpleasant to some to hear, and yet is nevertheless true, as soon as the Democratic party came into power and the Republicans could no longer obtain Federal offices their political organization went to pieces. There is practically no Republican party in the State. You had none except the office-holders and a few deluded followers, and when the office-holders lost their hold upon the Treasury they changed either their residence or their politics, and the Republican party, so far as the State of Georgia is concerned, practically ceased to exist.

I may say we have had peculiar politics down there on the part of the Republicans. If I had the time I could tell you how a Republican convention rejected an ex-Attorney-General of the United States for its presiding officer and elected a colored man; how that convention then solemnly resolved that three-fourths of the offices belonged to the colored people by right. I could tell you how the white Republicans left the convention and demoralization ensued. I could show you how the white Republican office-holders in the South have generally been Republicans for "revenue only," and when we took away from them the offices from which this revenue was derived they lost all interest in the Republican party. I could show you how these people were held together by the "cohesive power of plunder" only, and when they could no longer obtain the plunder they were no longer Republicans and the party practically dissolved.

Mr. HOUK. I wish to say to the gentleman from Georgia that, so far as my portion of the people of the South is concerned, that is not true.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRISP. I do not understand the gentleman from Tennessee lives in the South; certainly not in the sense in which I now use the term. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the substitution of the resolution offered by the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, pending that I move to recommit. It is very apparent that this report of the majority has been made by mistake. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. V. McDuffie is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama.

Resolved, That A. C. Davidson is entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the substitute proposed by the minority, on which the vote will first be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Alexander C. Davidson was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Fourth district of Alabama.

Resolved, That John V. McDuffie was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Fourth district of Alabama, and is entitled to his seat.

Mr. CRISP. I demand the previous questions upon the resolutions.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERR. At the request of some of my friends who are in charge of this matter I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the substitute.

Mr. CRISP. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 144, not voting 58; as follows:

Mr. BLISS with Mr. WHITE, of New York.
Mr. COCKRAN with Mr. STRUBLE.
Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. WADE.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR with Mr. SENEY, on the election case.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the resolutions reported by the majority, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. V. McDuffie is not entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama.

Resolved, That A. C. Davidson is entitled to a seat in this House as a Representative in the Fiftieth Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I desire to say that I asked for the yeas and nays because I believed neither gentleman was elected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution providing for the distribution of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Record.

Also, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 60) directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid regions of the United States, and to report to Congress; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

And then, on motion of Mr. CRISP (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

Mr. PALMER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the propriety of purchasing from the administratrix of the late John M. Stanley the historical Indian paintings by the said John M. Stanley now in the custody of the Smithsonian Institution.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT BUILDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the morning business is closed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that Senate bill 1040, Order of Business 432, be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Vermont moves to set aside the pending order, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1040) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building and to provide accommodations for the city post-office.

Mr. HALE. What is the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. This will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky rise to this question?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; but I desire to take one moment. I do not wish to interfere with the passage of this bill.

Yesterday, when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], whom I do not see in his seat at this moment, found some fault with what I had said with regard to silver coinage, I announced that I would to-day or at some early time take an opportunity to give the reasons why I made the assertion. The Senator is not here, at any rate, but I have given notice that on next Tuesday I shall endeavor to call up the bill (S. 8) "to provide for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and the issue of coin certificates in lieu of gold and silver certificates, and for other purposes," which necessarily involves the same matter, and as I propose to go into the history of this whole question then, instead of taking the time of the Senate now, I shall endeavor on next Tuesday morning, when I will try to call up that bill, to make the answer to the Senator from Ohio that I expected to make this morning; but I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate now.

I will say, however, so that the Senator from Ohio can see it in the RECORD, that after I read to him the speeches of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], in regard to how that act was doctored, and the speech of the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], and the speech made by Mr. Howe in the Senate, in which he said—I will only read two lines—"Mr. President, I do not regard the demonetization of silver as an attempt to wrench from the people more than they agreed to pay. That is not the crime of which I accuse the act of 1873. I charge it with guilt compared with which the robbery of two hundred millions is venial;" and after I read to him what has been said by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and other gentlemen, I think he will be content to say that my expressions were very mild in regard to the secrecy with which that measure was pushed through Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill moved by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1040) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building and to provide accommodations for the city post-office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the passage of the bill in the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who reported it from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, for the reason that it is important that the bill should go over to the other House this week in order that it may be considered by the committee of that body.

This bill has heretofore passed more than once, I believe, almost if not quite unanimously, and there is a full report made, Report No. 367, in relation to all the particulars about it. Upon full consideration by the committee they believe that this is the best and most economical solution of the question as to a city post-office and as to the enlargement of the General Post-Office, which has been so often called for by the Postmasters-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be stated.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 9, before the word "agents," to insert the word "their," so as to read:

And that where any of the said parties, owners, or their agents may be unable promptly to execute a full and valid title to such parcel or parcels as he or they propose as by Schedule A to sell at the price named, then the same shall be likewise condemned, by agreement with such agent or owner, at the price named in the said schedule for such parcel or parcels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, to strike out the words "any such condemnation of one or more or of all" and insert "condemning, if necessary, any of;" in line 4, before the word "application," to insert the word "written;" in line 6, to strike out the word "containing" and insert the word "giving;" in line 7, to strike out the word "required" and insert "sought to be condemned;" in line 9, before the word "court," to strike out the word "which" and insert the words "and the;" in line 13, before the word "manner," to insert the word "same;" and, after the word "manner," to insert "and with like notice and proceedings as;" and in line 15, at the end of the section, after the word "Columbia," to insert "under existing laws;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of condemning, if necessary, any of the parcels of real estate comprised in the said square, the said board is empowered and directed to make written application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia at any general or special term, giving a particular description of the property sought to be condemned, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, and his, her, or their residence, as far as the same can be ascertained, and the court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to ascertain and assess the fair value of said real estate to each owner thereof, or to any person having a legal claim to the same, in the same manner and with like notice and proceedings as provided with reference to the taking of land for highways in the District of Columbia under existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 6, after the word "possession," to insert the word "taken;" and in the same line, after the word "property," to strike out the word "taken" and insert "so condemned;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the fee-simple of all premises so appropriated for public use, of which an appraisement shall have been made under the order and direction of said court, shall, upon payment into the said court of the amount so ascertained and assessed as to each parcel, be vested in the United States and possession taken of the property so condemned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 4, to strike out the words "giving possession" and insert "that purpose;" in the same line, after the word "the," to insert the word "costs;" and after the word "costs," to strike out the words "occasioned by" and insert "of;" in line 5, after the word "the," to strike out the words "inquiry and assessment" and insert "condemnation proceedings;" in line 6, after the word "and," to strike out the words "as to;" in line 7, after the word "arise," to strike out the word "they;" and in the same line, after the word "be," to strike out the words "charged or;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That said court may direct the time and manner in which possession of the property condemned shall be taken or delivered, and may, if necessary, enforce any order or issue any process for that purpose. The costs of the condemnation proceedings shall be paid by the United States; and other costs which may arise shall be taxed as the court may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 1, after the word "whenever," to strike out the words "and as;" in line 2, after the word "acquired," to strike out the words "as aforesaid;" in line 6, after the word "ascertained," to insert the words "and judgment of condemnation rendered;" in line 8, after the word "and," to strike out the word "directed" and insert "required;" and in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out the word "requisition" and insert the word "order;" in line 9, after the word "purchase," to strike out the word "or" and insert "money to the parties entitled thereto or;" and in line 10, after the word "court," to strike out the words "the condemnation price of such property, parcel by parcel" and insert "as the board may direct;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That whenever title to the several parcels of such real estate shall be acquired, and the same shall be ready for delivery, and the sufficiency thereof shall be certified by the Attorney-General of the United States, or whenever by condemnation of any parcel the fair value of the same shall be ascertained and judgment of condemnation rendered, the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and required, upon the order of the said board, to pay the purchase-money to the parties entitled thereto or into court, as the board may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if authority is given in the bill to the parties intrusted with procuring the title to the property to secure some other site, provided the site named can not be obtained upon reasonable terms?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir. We believe that that site can be procured on the most reasonable terms of any site in the city, after investigating in relation to quite a number.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe there is a necessity for a building of this character, and I have no objection to procuring a proper site for a post-office building in Washington; but I do not like to see the parties intrusted with that power so restricted that they can not procure any other site, provided such an extravagant price is demanded for the site named as to render it improper to purchase it.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Government is as fully protected as it can be. There can be no enlargement of the present Post-Office building without an extension in that direction.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that certain exhibits appear printed in connection with the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. They are of no consequence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be omitted, then, in the printing and engrossment of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL subsequently said: In the bill passed this morning for the Post-Office extension, there is a reference to the exhibit at the end thereof, and the exhibit must accompany the bill. I ask consent that the exhibit may follow the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that a certain exhibit referred to by him, accompanying the bill passed this morning, respecting the extension of the Post-Office Department, be attached to the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 117.

Mr. HALE. That is the joint resolution, I believe, that was debated at some length yesterday. I am desirous, as I think the Senate is desirous, of taking up and finishing the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill. If the Senator from Arkansas believes that the joint resolution which was up yesterday can be finished in a short time now, without further debate, I will not seek to interfere; but if it takes a long time I shall try to get up the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. BERRY. I will state to the Senator that my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] desires to make a very short statement, and after that is made the joint resolution, I think, will pass by unanimous consent. He proposes to make a statement in regard to his amendment, withdrawing it, as I understand him, and I do not think it will take five minutes.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that if it takes long I shall seek to bring up the urgent deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, to strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to take possession of all bath-houses and fixtures now upon the reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and place them under the control of the superintendent of said reservation, to be controlled by him under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to ascertain the value of the property taken by him under the foregoing provision, and report the same to Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, after conference with my colleague and some other gentlemen, I have determined to withdraw the amendment which I offered yesterday to the pending joint resolution. I do so, however, with the intention of presenting the same measure as a bill and having it referred to the Committee on Public Lands, hoping that it may be returned at an early day to the Senate and that it may become a law.

As I said yesterday, I think the idea of sending the water off this reservation at all is a mistake; it is wrong; but if the Government is going to allow one set of bath-houses in the upper part of the city above the reservation to be supplied with water off the reservation, there is no reason why citizens of the same town, living at the lower part of the town below the reservation, should not have the same privileges. I believe that that is right. If one proposition prevails the other should. While I am opposed to both, and while I think that the Government should, in the line that is suggested by the amendment which I had the honor to offer yesterday, take possession of and control absolutely all these bath-houses and the hot water, I do not want to antagonize the joint resolution further at the present time.

When the Committee on Public Lands report upon the measure which I shall offer, fully satisfied that they will make an adverse report, I hope the Senate will be kind enough to pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections the committee may have to it. I therefore withdraw the amendment which I offered yesterday.

The PRRESIENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be offered in the Senate. The bill is open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. I offer as an amendment the proviso which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the joint resolution:

Provided, That the new bath-houses which may be so erected shall not be owned or controlled by any person, company, or corporation which may be the owner of any other bath-house on or near the Hot Springs reservation; and if the ownership or control of any such bath-house be transferred to the owner of any other bath-house on or near said reservation, such bath-house shall for that cause be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to take the necessary steps to enforce said forfeiture of any such bath-house.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know that that amendment is matured properly, as it has been prepared on the spur of the moment; but the object of it is to prevent making any further monopoly of the bath-houses at Hot Springs. The country has suffered enough from that. I wish to put a restriction on the joint resolution. I do not know that the amendment is in such form as it ought to be, but the substance of it, I think, ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON AND EDWARD L. HEDDEN.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill 1198, Order of Business 258, reported unanimously by the Finance Committee with a short report. It is the bill for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs at the port of New York, who can not settle their accounts until it is disposed of. If there shall be debate, I will withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1198) for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York.

It provides for the allowance to William H. Robertson, collector of New York, in settlement of his accounts, a credit for $2,346.25, now charged to him as collector for moneys received at the post-office in the city of New York, and for remittances made by postmasters at other points, for duties collected on books imported through the mails between the 21st of August, 1882, and the 30th of June, 1885, and for which one Douglas Smith, a late clerk in the custom-house at the port of New York, assigned to the duty of verifying such moneys, failed to account, without default or negligence of Collector Robertson. It also provides for the allowance to Edward L. Hedden, collector of New York, in settlement of his accounts, a credit for $3,073.74, now charged to Hedden as collector, for moneys received at the post-office in the city of New York, and for remittances made by postmasters at other places, for duties collected on books imported through the mails between the 1st of July, 1885, and the 29th of August, 1886, and for which Douglas Smith also has failed to account, without default or negligence of Hedden.

Mr. BECK. There is a report accompanying the bill which may be printed in the RECORD. It sets forth all the facts, and the members of the House can read it in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. BECK February 7, 1888, is as follows:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1198) for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York, have had the same under consideration, and report:

It is provided in the seventeenth section of the act approved March 3, 1879, volume 20, United States Statutes at Large, page 355:

"That books which are admitted to the international mails, exchanged under the provisions of the Universal Postal Union Convention, may, when subject to customs duty, be delivered to addresses in the United States under such regulations for the collection of duties as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General."

That by regulations dated September 13, 1879, and June 27, 1882, agreed upon by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury and the honorable Postmaster-General, copies of which are hereto annexed, it was incumbent upon the several postmasters in the United States "to collect and remit to the collector of customs" the duties on "books forwarded to their offices for delivery to addresses."

It is shown by the papers in the case that one Douglas Smith was, by and with the approval of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, appointed a clerk in the customs service in the said district of the city of New York on the 27th day of January, 1882, and assigned to the special duty of verifying the remittances of money from postmasters for duties on books imported through the mails; that on the 27th of August, 1886, irregularities were discovered in the accounts kept by said Smith, a full investigation of which developed that he had failed to account for the sum of $2,346.25 during the incumbency of the office of collector of customs by the said William H. Robertson, and for the further sum of $3,073.74 during the incumbency of the said office of collector of customs by Edward L. Hedden, according to the adjustment of the accounts of your memorialists by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

I further show that the said Smith, who is without pecuniary means, was in due course indicted for malfeasance in office and is now, and has been for some time past, incarcerated in the Ludlow street jail, in the city of New York, awaiting the result of the criminal proceedings instituted against him for his said wrongful acts while in office.

The records of the Treasury Department show that for the official term of William H. Robertson as collector, his accounts with the Government, covering receipts to the amount of $549,729,636.59 and disbursements to the amount of $35,404,265.19, have been adjusted and closed, except as to the aforesaid shortage of $2,346.25; and that the accounts of Edward L. Hedden for his term of office, covering receipts in amount $159,214,708.35 and disbursements in amount $13,899,399.39, have also been adjusted and closed, except as to the aforesaid shortage of $3,073.74.

The bill was submitted to the Treasury Department and was returned with the annexed replies:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS,
"Washington City, D. C., January 30, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the letter of Hon. JAMES B. BECK, inclosing for recommendation the bill for the relief of Messrs. Wm. H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York. As set forth in the bill, the balance claimed by the United States as due from them arose by charging them with the amount of the defalcation of Douglas Smith, a clerk. It appears that no blame can be attached to the collectors, and as it has not been unusual for Congress to pass relief bills under such circumstances, I can see no objection to a favorable report of the bill under consideration by the committee. The last Congress under similar circumstances granted relief to Mr. Robertson and also to Hon. C. A. Arthur, and Mr. W. J. Smith, former surveyor of the port of Memphis, Tenn.

"The amounts named in the bill as being due from each are correct as taken from the books of the Treasury.

"Respectfully yours,

"JOHN S. McCALMONT,
"Commissioner of Customs.

"The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, D. C., January 31, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 27th instant, requesting a report as to what ought to be recommended in regard to the relief asked for Collectors Robertson and Hedden, in Senate bill 1198, entitled 'A bill for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York,' and to transmit herewith a recommendation of the Commissioner of Customs in the matter, which is approved and indorsed by this Department.

"Respectfully yours,

"C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

"Hon. J. B. BECK,
"Chairman Subcommittee on Finance, United States Senate."

Your committee therefore recommend that the relief asked for be granted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. DANIEL N. BASH.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the urgent deficiency bill, House bill 6437.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to ask the consent of the Senator from Maine, representing the Committee on Appropriations, in charge of the deficiency bill, to allow me to call up Senate bill 258, Order of Business 229, with the statement that if it requires any further remark than that of the chairman of the Committee on Claims I will not press its consideration at this time.

I ask this for the reason that this paymaster was brought here and the Department are anxious that he should go off upon duty, and he would like to have this bill passed before he leaves the city.

Mr. HALE. I consent on those conditions.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 258) for the relief of Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster United States Army.

The bill was read.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish that might lie over a day. I have received some information from the Pay Department this very morning by accident which leads me to think that the bill should be considered further. If the Senator from Illinois will let it lie for a day, I will make inquiry.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course, if the Senator wants time, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid over.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HALE. Let us go on with the deficiency bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, in section 1, on page 29, to strike out the clause from line 16 to line 18, inclusive, as follows:

And the Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the department under his charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the reading of the amendment or a statement of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, on page 29, the Committee on Appropriations report to strike out lines 16, 17, and 18, as follows:

And the Public Printer is hereby directed to rigidly enforce the provisions of the eight-hour law in the department under his charge.

Mr. HALE. A "yea" vote will strike out the clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is absent because of the serious illness of his wife. He is now absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on general questions.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. As he is absent, and I do not know how he would vote on this question if present, I refrain from voting.

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and after voting I noticed that he was not in the Chamber. I voted "yea," but I am not advised how the Senator from Alabama would vote if present. Therefore I withdraw my vote unless I am assured that he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. I think he would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. EVARTS. I withdraw my vote unless I am definitely advised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Coke,	Hale,	Payne,
Allison,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Ransom,
Bate,	Daniel,	Harris,	Reagan,
Beck,	Farwell,	Hawley,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	George,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Gibson,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Call,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—20.

Blair,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Frye,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,	Teller,
Davis,	Manderson,	Sherman,	Turpie.

ABSENT—24.

Berry,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Butler,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Vest,
Chace,	Hearst,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 29, after line 23, to insert:

SENATE.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay E. C. Goodwin, clerk to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America, for services as such clerk from the 13th to the 19th day of December, 1887, inclusive, $42.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 47, in the clause making appropriations "for support of Indian school, Carlisle, Pa.," in line 24, to change the spelling from "Extiveecu" to "Executive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 50.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine, who has the bill in charge, whether it contains the claims reported upon by the Treasury Department as late as the 18th of January last.

Mr. HALE. I have an amendment which covers the call made by the Senate for those claims, to be added to the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Will that take in all the claims up to that date in January?

Mr. HALE. Up to February 28, I think.

Mr. PLUMB. I knew that a large class of claims such as I had in mind were placed in the bill, but I was not sure as to the date. I knew there had been some communicated as late as the 18th of January, which I desired to have embraced.

Mr. HALE. The added claims are brought down to as late a date as is possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 3, on page 51, at the beginning of line 13, before the word "subsistence," to change the word "or" to "for;" so as to read:

For subsistence of the Army, 1885 and prior years, $877.45.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment as an additional section, simply saying that it embodies one of the documents sent in in reply to a request from the Senate for additional claims down to as near the present date as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the close of the bill it is proposed to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 4. That for the payment of a portion of the claims certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1885 and prior years, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 101, Fiftieth Congress, first session, there is appropriated as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY FIRST COMPTROLLER.

State Department—Foreign intercourse:

For contingent expenses United States consulates, 1885 and prior years, $7.73.

Treasury Department—Internal revenue:

For salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, 1885 and prior years, $3.27.

Interior Department:

For expenses of the Eighth Census, $143.33.

For expenses of depositing public moneys, 1885 and prior years, $5.60.

For surveying private land claims in California, 1885 and prior years, $608.25.

For reimbursement to receivers of public moneys, excess of deposits, $350.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 35 of the bill, in line 8, the name is misprinted. It should be Hendee, so as to read "George E. Hendee," instead of "George E. Hende."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. After line 4, on the same page, I move an amendment to cover additional judgments of the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 35, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

Mr. HALE. On the next page, page 36, the total should be made to conform with the amendment just adopted. In line 14 I move to strike out "$263,595.52," and insert instead "$455.273."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 21, after line 16, I move to insert:

Support Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum: For subsistence, $1,800; for repairs of steam-boilers, $900; in all, $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 19, after line 19, I move to insert:

HEADSTONES FOR GRAVES OF SOLDIERS.

For continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines at national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy-yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, and February 3, 1879, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask that two letters of the War Department, which I submit, explaining that appropriation, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. It is so ordered.

The papers are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith communication dated February 23, 1888, from Hon. W. B. ALLISON, chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, requesting information as to the present condition of the appropriations for headstones for the graves of ex-soldiers buried in village and town cemeteries; also what, if any, additional sum is required for that service for the remainder of the current fiscal year; and respectfully report:

The appropriation of $15,000 (sundry civil, approved March 3, 1887) was exhausted in supplying headstones applied for prior to March 25, 1887, and the Department has therefore been unable to furnish any called for on applications received since that date.

There are now in this office unfilled applications for upwards of 15,000, to supply which will require an appropriation of at least $75,000, of which amount $60,000 was asked for in estimates for the next fiscal year.

It is manifest, however, that this amount will be insufficient to meet the requests on this account until another year; that is, it will not be sufficient to enable the Department to make a contract for the entire number required to the end of the current fiscal year.

It would be best, therefore, to increase this amount to at least $85,000.

There are many requests for these headstones to be supplied before next Decoration Day, and this could be done in most instances if the appropriation were made at once and made immediately available.

An abstract of the applications for headstones for soldiers' graves received at this office to February 29, 1888, inclusive, and now on file unfilled, is transmitted herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 6, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter of the 23d ultimo from the clerk of your committee, requesting to be informed as to the present condition of the appropriations for headstones for the graves of ex-soldiers buried in village and town cemeteries, and as to what additional sum is required for that service for the remainder of the current fiscal year.

In reply I beg to inclose a report, of the 3d instant, on the subject from the Quartermaster-General, with its accompanying abstract of unfilled applications for headstones, which, it is believed, contains the information requested.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance, and Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. On page 29, after line 8, I move to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Pay of Shirley C. Ward, of Los Angeles, Cal., $2,500 for his services to that date as special attorney for the Mission Indians of California, under appointment by the Attorney-General made at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Is the Senator from Maine through?

Mr. HALE. There is one more amendment which ought to be made. On page 6 the amendment striking out lines 12, 13, and 14 should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment, which has been agreed to, striking out, in section 1, on page 6, lines 12, 13, and 14, as follows:

Post-office at Jersey City, N. J.: For necessary extension of the building, $12,200.

Mr. HALE. The clause is right as the House left it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment having been agreed to, the question is on reconsidering the vote by which it was agreed to. If there be no objection, the reconsideration will be made. It is so ordered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. I gave notice of an amendment on the 1st of March, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I now offer the amendment, to come in after line 11 on page 6:

For pay of assistant custodians and janitors for the current fiscal year, $60,000.

Mr. HALE. What foundation under the rules is there for the amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator from Ohio, under the rules applicable to appropriation bills, consider this amendment to be in order?

Mr. PAYNE. I have submitted it to the committee.

Mr. BECK. There was a report referred to our committee on that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is this appropriation estimated for by a Department?

Mr. PAYNE. There was an estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was the amendment offered by the Senator and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PAYNE. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is in order.

Mr. PAYNE. It is perfectly pertinent to the object of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Here is the document, and I will ask the ruling of the Chair on it:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter addressed by the head of this Department to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in which were inclosed reports and recommendations of the officers of the Department having the matter in charge, requesting an additional appropriation of $60,000 for expenses——

I think that is a regular estimate, so that I can not make any point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It being estimated for by a Department, it is clearly included under the rule.

Mr. HALE. Unless it comes under the provision of exclusion provided in clause 2 of Rule XVI:

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment was offered in the Senate and referred to the committee on the 1st day of March.

Mr. HALE. That has been done, then?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the conditions have been complied with, the Chair understands. The amendment is in order.

Mr. HALE. Then I wish to address myself to the merits of the amendment; but I will give way to the Senator from Ohio, if he wishes to state the ground on which it is offered.

Mr. PAYNE. It appears that for the regular appropriation bill passed at the last session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury estimated that $534,000 would cover the expenses of custodians, janitors, and all the men employed in the custody and care of the various custom-houses, post-offices, and other public buildings of the United States. Congress cut down that estimate to $420,000, leaving $114,000 unappropriated of the estimate of the Department.

It is to be presumed that the estimates were carefully made, based on the reports of the various customs officers of the United States as to the expense of taking proper care of the buildings, watching them, and cleaning them. Congress saw fit to reduce the estimate, as I have said, $114,000; and in that same law it was provided that the expenditures should not exceed the appropriations. The Secretary of the Treasury has tried to keep the expenditures within the appropriation, but he has found himself unable to do so and take proper care of the public buildings. So he needs $60,000 more to compensate those having charge of the buildings until the close of the current fiscal year.

The law prohibits the Secretary from expending more than was appropriated, to wit, $420,000. It is evident that he can not do the work if he is thus limited. He is unable to bring the expenditure within that limit. Now, one-third of the year remains, four months. The House of Representatives has declined to make an appropriation for this item, and the Appropriations Committee of this body has acquiesced in that non-action of the House. I think it a very great mistake. I assume that no Senator will doubt the necessity and the propriety of keeping the public buildings in good condition.

I have here some memoranda sent me by the Department of some of the items that have been cut down necessarily under this limited appropriation made for the current year.

It appears that in the custom-house at Baltimore, Md., the assistant custodian is reduced to $1,200 a year, thereby saving $17 a month. I do not know that $1,200 a year is enough for a person who has charge of a large building in Baltimore. Then there are dispensed with there three laborers at $60 per month each, one janitor at $1,000 per annum, and one watchman; and at the court-house in that city one laborer.

At the Boston post-office and subtreasury the pay of the assistant custodian is reduced to $1,400 a year, dispensing with the services of one janitor, three watchmen, one clerk, two laborers, and three elevator conductors.

At the custom-house at Cincinnati, Ohio, the pay of the assistant custodian is reduced to $1,400 per annum, and there are dispensed with one superintendent of closets, one janitor, two assistant janitors, two elevator conductors, one watchman, and five cleaners. In that building there are five or six terms of the Federal courts held during the year. There is the post-office, there is the custom-house, there is the independent treasury, and there is the internal-revenue collector's office, all in that one building; and after these reductions there are but three persons to take charge of that building. Neither the Departments, nor the courts, nor the postmaster, nor the collector of customs, feel that the building is safe in that condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio will please suspend. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, which is Senate bill No. 181.

Mr. HALE. I hope that may be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, in order that the Senate may consider the urgent deficiency bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to know from the Senator from Maine what the probability is as to the length of time the bill will consume.

Mr. HALE. I expect to finish it within a very short time. We are all through with the bill and the committee amendments. There are only a few amendments to be offered.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I hope it will be allowed to run on for fifteen minutes; but if there is no more prospect that it will be finished then than there is now, we shall, I trust, go on with the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. This is a very important bill, which has been hanging along for some time. It is difficult to say whether it will be finished in fifteen, sixteen, or eighteen minutes.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not ask any very great accuracy, but I should think that within half an hour——

Mr. HALE. I think it will be finished within half an hour.

Mr. MANDERSON. I would not be urgent were it not for the unanimous consent of the Senate yesterday that the pension bill should be voted upon finally to-day. Every minute of time is important.

Mr. HALE. I was entirely willing yesterday to give way to the pension bill, and gave it the whole day; and I hope the Senator will not interpose now.

Mr. MANDERSON. I only interpose because of the unanimous agreement of the Senate yesterday that the pension bill should be finished to-day.

Mr. HALE. No hour was fixed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the pension bill being informally laid aside in order that the deficiency bill may be proceeded with? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. PAYNE. I find further in the memoranda to which I have referred that at the Chicago custom-house the assistant custodian is reduced to $1,400 per annum, and that there are dispensed with one superintendent of closets, one janitor, two assistant janitors, two elevator conductors, one watchman, and five cleaners.

At the New York City subtreasury, two janitors, at $60 per month each, are dispensed with. At the New York City court-house and post-office the salary of the custodian is reduced to $1,400 per annum, dispensing with one messenger, one janitor, three watchmen, two elevator conductors, one assistant foreman of cleaners, five cleaners at $60 per month each, and two cleaners at $1 per day each.

At the New Orleans custom-house there are dispensed with five assistant janitors at $40 per month each, one assistant engineer at $75, and one superintendent of filters at $60.

At the Philadelphia court-house and post-office the pay of the assistant custodian is reduced to $1,400 per annum, dispensing with the services of one messenger at $2 per day, one janitor at $58.33 per month, one elevator conductor at $60 per month, five laborers at $1.50 per day each, one janitor at $58 per month, and one lamp-trimmer at $1.75 per day.

I need not go into further details. These are very large reductions throughout the public buildings of the country. The opinion of the Department is that it is absolutely impossible to keep these public buildings in decent order for the remainder of the year without an additional appropriation. The Secretary of the Treasury has every disposition to obey the law, which absolutely prohibits the expenditure of one dollar more than the appropriation.

I do not think it is necessary to explain the necessity of this additional appropriation further. There can be no question, I am sure, on that point. These public buildings, many of which are very elegant and very costly, must be kept in decent order; they must be swept; the windows must be washed; the elevators must be kept running. In large cities, for instance, like New York, men who do business with the custom-house are not going to be satisfied without an elevator, and the elevator should be kept in order. I do not wish to cripple the efficiency of the service by not maintaining the public buildings in proper order.

Mr. HALE. I only want to submit this matter briefly to the Senate for its action. This large fund which the Treasury Department expends for assistant custodians and janitors all over the country has been for years a vexed subject before the Committee on Appropriations and in Congress. Investigation has shown from year to year that in many places all over the country where there are small post-offices and court-houses and custom-houses the Department allows too large a force. If any Senator will take the pains to examine the estimates submitted by the Department, which the Senator from Ohio has referred to, as to how this money is spent, he will see why it was that last year Congress by the accord of both Houses put a provision on the appropriation bill intended to hold the Treasury Department up to its appropriations, and declaring in terms—

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Notice was given to the Secretary that he must do the work for the money that Congress gave him, and that notice was given in terms because Congress believed from investigating the estimates that the sum voted was ample; and I believe not only that it is ample, but that it is more than enough.

Look at some of the small buildings that are estimated for, like that at Aberdeen, Miss. There is a little building in a small town where one man as a janitor could care for it, sweep it, and keep it in good condition; $500 a year would be ample for that; and yet the committee found that, in estimating for the sum the Treasury Department calls for, it provides for a janitor there at $720 a year and a laborer at $540 a year. The committee believed that in the apportioning of this fund, if New York is short, or Cincinnati is short, as the Senator from Ohio declares, one of the two men at a little place like Aberdeen should be dispensed with. There is no reason that I can see why the court-house and post-office at Charleston, W. Va., should have a janitor at $720 a year, a laborer and a fireman at $540 a year each. One man can do all that is necessary at that court-house and have the easiest time of any man in that town and have plenty of spare time on his hands. There is no reason why at Clarksburgh——

Mr. PAYNE. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention before he leaves Aberdeen——

Mr. HALE. I left Aberdeen some time ago.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the Committee on Appropriations might possibly stop something at Aberdeen, Miss., but I do not know. It is a new court-house and post-office, and I find that the Federal court is held there. I do not think it is very clear that two persons are not required to take care of that building.

Mr. HALE. At Clarksburgh, W. Va., there are a janitor at $600 a year, an engineer at $720 a year, a laborer at $540 a year. Then I find other custom-houses and post-offices and court-houses in places as important and larger than these where only a single janitor is allowed at $540 a year.

In Jackson, Miss., the custom-house and post-office has a janitor at $720 per year, a laborer and fireman at $500 per year, a watchman at $600 per year, making $1,820 for that place, while at New Bedford, Mass., a much larger custom-house, where force is much more needed, where twenty times the business is done, a single janitor at $600 per year is all that is allowed and all that is needed.

So I might go through what the Appropriations Committee has gone through in both the Senate and House, and has determined, and did a year ago, that the sum that it gave was liberal, was ample, more than needed to be expended, but erring upon the side of large appropriations and to hold the Department, or to try and see if it is in the power of Congress to hold the Department, to responsibility, it put in this provision, which I will read again:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

If that can not be observed on a fund of this kind by the Treasury Department, then it is useless for Congress to make any direction or serve any monition on any Department. Now we are told that the Department waits until the last hours of this bill, then comes in and undertakes to increase this appropriation against the monition served upon it last year, when ample appropriations were given, upon the claim that in New York and in Cincinnati and other important places it will have to stop the elevators unless Congress gives this appropriation. That is not an ingenuous way of dealing with Congress. It is not a fitting thing that this menace that business will be stopped or that conveniences will stop in large custom-houses should be held up and brought in at this time. Let the Treasury Department, in accordance with the direction that Congress gave last year, cut off the extra men on whom money is uselessly expended in small court-houses and post-offices in different parts of the country, and keep the elevators running in New York and in Cincinnati and in other large cities. To secure that is what Congress is trying to do.

This is not an effort of the committee of the Senate to interfere with the House of Representatives. The appropriation that is sought here by the Senator from Ohio is additional to the sum the House committee allowed. That committee, in sympathy with the adminstration that controls these appointments and employs these men, considered the whole subject and gave the amount it believed to be necessary under existing circumstances, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have simply reported to agree with the House. We do not strike down a House appropriation, but we believe it to be ample under all these conditions. I believe it to be more than is needed. I believe in regard to any of the small public buildings throughout the country that one man to be janitor over it and keep it in order and control it, a little building in which there will not be more than three or four or half a dozen clerks employed, is ample, and the time will never come when the single janitorship of the building, having the entire control of it, will not be sought for in those small places by a hundred men when the appointment can be given to only one.

The Senate may do as it will in this matter. It may go back on its declaration of last year, which said the Secretary should apportion this fund so that every quarter he would have enough; and it is not pretended that he did that. It is not pretended that that direction has been complied with. I, for one, object now and here to such appropriations as are sought to be put upon this bill by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GIBSON. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has not recommended this?

Mr. HALE. I did not say so. I said precisely the contrary. I say the Department have gone on under that direction which was given last year, and instead of apportioning the money from quarter to quarter and withdrawing useless force and putting men where they were needed, it has waited until the last days and comes in now under the threat that it will stop the elevators in New York and Cincinnati unless it gets an increased appropriation. I do not say that the Secretary has not estimated for this, but I say that the Treasury Department, whoever has charge of this, has directly countervailed the statute that was made last year for the management and expenditure of this fund, and that Congress ought not to listen to any such proceeding.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, this is the first time I have heard there was any extravagant amount paid to employés of the character covered by this amendment—janitors, firemen, and others who are employed in taking care of the public buildings. Last year the Treasury Department sent an estimate to Congress stating that in view of the great number of public buildings under construction and already constructed, the sum of $534,250 would be necessary for the proper care of the buildings. Congress appropriated $425,000. It was recognized at the time as being inadequate when the bill came from the other House, observing at the same time the provision which the Senator from Maine has read to the Senate that the Secretary should not exceed the appropriation. The Department has gone on. The Secretary has found that it was impossible, as I understand the report which I hold in my hand, being Executive Document No. 80, to reduce the compensation of engineers and firemen and at the same time get competent men. So they have gone on at the rate they have been paying for many years, a rate which is not extravagant, until the Secretary has reached the point where a reduction of the force is absolutely necessary. Now, to make that reduction, as the Senator from Ohio has shown, they have been compelled to cut down the force in all sections of the country, in the large custom-house buildings at New York, Baltimore, Cincinnati, and others, as well as at smaller ones all over the country, until unless this increase of $60,000 is given the public service will be crippled.

The Senator from Maine knows perfectly well the position in which the Senate has been placed by the course adopted elsewhere, by which the Senate is sometimes compelled to increase appropriations. I have stood by the Committee on Appropriations, and believed it was right to do so; but here is a case where the public service will be crippled and public property will be jeopardized, for I am told that in one instance, at least, which has been brought to my attention, at Columbia, S. C., the officers of the internal-revenue department and other officers of the Government necessarily keep money on hand, and there is but a single man to guard the building at night; and so it is at other places.

This is an extreme case; it is an emergency. It is perfectly well understood by the Senator from Maine that if this appropriation is not made the Treasury Department will continue to make reductions so that the expenditures shall not exceed the appropriation; and that is an economy which jeopardizes the interests of the country.

The Senate, in my judgment, should give the other branch an opportunity to consider this matter. It is an exceptional case, I submit to my friend from Maine. While I am prepared to stand by the Appropriations Committee against any attempt to force the Senate into a position of extravagance, this does not come within that rule. I trust my friend will give way and allow this amendment, which is so necessary, to prevail.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that there is ample room for the Department to reduce its force and still maintain every convenience that the public require in the great custom-houses and post-offices if the appropriation for this purpose remains as it is; as the House has fixed it. I have no doubt the Secretary will be able to do that. I should like to see him compelled to try it in accordance with the provision of last year.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate at any length on this question; but I think it my duty to reply to a few observations made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on the 9th of February last.

On the 9th of February a bill was brought up here making an appropriation for the erection of a public building at Pensacola, Fla., whereupon the Senator from Kansas and other Senators took occasion to refer to bills which had been proposed for public buildings, and scattered their animadversions around so miscellaneously that it was difficult to understand upon whom their censure was directed.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] referred to the fact that in St. Louis a building had been commenced with an appropriation of $3,000,000, and under the influence of public dinners at St. Louis, given to the public Architect, that appropriation was increased to $7,000,000. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] followed up with some general observations on the subject, concluding with these remarks:

> But something has been said about the reasons for these deficiencies. Mr. President, it is the old story of $1 for the dress and $10 for the trimmings. Every public building which is put up costs ten times more for superintendence and extras and contingencies than it ought to do. Out of $100,000 appropriated to erect a building, say, out in Kansas, at least $10,000 of that money will be spent before ever a lick is struck. There is the city of Wichita, where the Government has simply a naked lot. There is no more danger of its being carried away than of this Capitol being carried away, and yet it has a watchman and a superintendent, but no man at work.
> Mr. HALE. They are watching the land.
> Mr. PLUMB. Yes, they are watching the land. I do not know but that they are watching the Republican politicians out there. At all events, the watchmen are there, and they are getting paid for it. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] says to me that the Republican politicians there need watching. If they do you will have to appoint a great deal more clever people than you have done out there in order to make that watching very effective.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that there has been very gross extravagance in the matter of public buildings, and I am not disposed to hold any one to responsibility for remarks which may inure to its correction; but I think it would be well if those gentlemen who are indulging in severe criticisms upon this floor and who are holding up a system of extravagance to public opprobrium would at the same time inform the public that their criticism partly belongs to an administration of which they were themselves supporters, and that their criticisms can not possibly be directed to those public officers who are now conducting this branch of the public service.

It is true that there is a public building in the city of Wichita, Kans., in process of erection, and if there be delays about it, or if watchmen have been retained there unnecessarily, and if that matter is to be made a subject of censorious comment upon this floor, it is fitting that with those comments should go to the public the reasons for the action taken, and so that responsibility should be fixed upon the proper persons. I hold in my hand a letter of October 4, 1887, addressed to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department by the Senator from Kansas:

> DEAR SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the public building which you are proposing to erect at Wichita. Since provision was made for this building Wichita has grown very greatly, and buildings five stories in height have been erected by private capital. I am informed that the plans as prepared in your office contemplate a building two stories in height merely. This will result in an inferior-looking building. I doubt also if the necessary room can be provided in a building of two stories, as you perhaps know there is a United States land office at Wichita, and United States court is held there, and there will need to be a room for a post-office which does more business than any other post-office in the State of Kansas.
> I write to suggest that you enlarge the building by adding a third story. If this should necessitate the omission of heating apparatus from the estimates, I think without doubt this could be provided for at the next session of Congress. It would certainly seem advisable that the Government should erect such a building as would meet not only present but future wants in a satisfactory manner.
> Respectfully, yours,
> P. B. PLUMB.
> SUPERVISING ARCHITECT OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, D. C.

The Senator from Kansas, who led in these censorious comments on the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, is the Senator who signed that letter; it was under his advice and under his suggestion that any change which has taken place in the process of construction has occurred.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish the Senator would point out in that letter any recommendation or any suggestion or hint in regard to the employment or retention of watchmen or other employés about that building.

Mr. DANIEL. It is not my custom to find out in communications things that do not exist; and if the Senator from Kansas would conform himself to the same method of debate he would not have had this reply.

I am not attempting to hold that gentleman up to any reproach for writing this letter. I conceive that it is within the province of a Senator on this floor, or any representative of the people, to give his advice to those who may be in process of executing laws of this character. I do not charge him with usurping any function; but it does seem to me, as a gentleman fair-minded and just towards those whom he criticises, that when the Chief Architect was held up and pointed out as one who should receive public censure, instead of joining with the hounds to run him down, he might at least have taken his place with the hares on that occasion. I do not hold that gentleman responsible, or say more about him than simply this, that in telling a part of the story it would have been becoming if he had told all.

Now, sir, let us see about this matter of a watchman.

Mr. DAWES. Before the Senator goes further with his complaint, he seems to suggest that I have joined in the hue and cry against this Administration——

Mr. DANIEL. Not at all, sir.

Mr. DAWES. By some remarks I made the other day with reference to public buildings at St. Louis, and at New York, and at Boston. If the Senator were more familiar with the record of the past than he seems to be, he would have recognized those remarks of mine as an old story repeated before the Senator came into public life ever so many times by me in another place and here, and I supposed he as well as everybody else would recognize it as that old story of mine.

Mr. DANIEL. There are so many stories told on the other side of the Chamber that it would take a gentleman of much larger mind than I possess to retain memory of them all. But I do not deem it unfitting to accompany these old stories with reminders to the general public of the persons who are responsible for the fact that they are ever told.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator ought to have some compassion on me, for I have been lashed a great deal in the past for my criticism of the party to which I belong, and this is the first time that I was ever accused of blinking anything that was done by the party to which I belong to which my attention had been called. I happened to be on Appropriation Committees elsewhere as well as here, and what I said the other day I have said time and again of the men belonging to my own party; and what I said of it the other day, with the dates, ought to have shown the Senator that they antedated the recent coming into power of his party.

Mr. DANIEL. I am not criticising the Senator from Massachusetts, nor have I any disposition to do so. I do not believe that he intended to be or that he was in the least unfair in his statement, and I am very far from making any reflection upon him. But as the whole course of that debate was directed to a censure upon the present Administration, I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts, out of his own fairness, will not esteem it improper in me, although I have not had the opportunity of familiarity with such subjects as he possesses, to point out that this criticism, by whomsoever delivered, belongs in a different direction from that which I defend.

Mr. DAWES. It was only nunc pro tunc.

Mr. DANIEL. Now, sir, I will return to the subject of the naked land which it is claimed is being watched at Wichita. In the course of the construction of a public building at Wichita the Supervising Architect is informed by a distinguished Senator on this floor that he had better not go on with the appropriation as it came to him from the law, but to wait a little, and that an appropriation would, in his judgment, be made which would extend that building and require additional plans. He arrested temporarily his work pending this session of Congress, and there is a bonded officer in charge of it and one workman. Now the question arises and addresses itself to his mind, whether he shall for a temporary period, and in view of the fact that he has employés who are suitable for that work, turn them out in the dead of winter and await some distant and indefinite period.

While this question was up there was another gentleman from Kansas who appeared upon the scene. It was not the Senator who addressed himself to one point of this building, but it was the distinguished Representative from the district in which the building is located. On January 25, 1888, he addressed this letter to the Supervising Architect:

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to request that no further steps be taken in the matter of a public building at Wichita, Kans., as I have introduced a bill to increase the amount of the appropriation, so as to secure a larger building. This bill will be referred to you for your consideration, and I shall be glad to have you recommend it. The city now has 40,000 people, and the interest of the Government, as I think, requires an additional appropriation of $100,000.

Thus, sir, so far as the plan of that building was concerned, and its management, the Supervising Architect is advised from both sides of Congress as to the course which he shall pursue. If that gentleman had failed to heed the advice which was given to him by the Kansas Senator and the Kansas Representative, I imagine that you would have heard strictures indeed upon this Administration for its wastefulness and its extravagance in persisting in the scheme when warned by members of Congress that that scheme was under revision.

But this was not all that we heard from this Representative of the Kansas district. On February 4, 1888, he addresses to the Supervising Architect the following letter:

MY DEAR SIR: In view of the prospect of securing an increased appropriation for a public building at Wichita, I do not think it would be advisable for the Department to discharge the men now in charge of that public work. I believe the bill will pass the House during the present month, and the Senate during the first of next month, when the work can proceed without further delay.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. R. PETERS,
Member of Congress, Seventh Kansas District.

I submit to the fairness of this body, is it just and right that a public officer acting in communication with representatives in both Halls of Congress, heeding, as I shall presently show, that advice in the most modified and economic form, should be held up to public censure, and not one word said in his defense by those who must have been privy to, if not particeps, in the course which he pursued?

When the Chief Architect received these messages from these representatives of the people in whose midst this building was located he did not altogether pursue it, but he cut down the pay of the employés to one-half, and in view of the fact that only a few weeks, or a month, or some slight, trivial time would elapse, according to their prophecy, and in the nature of things it could not be very much prolonged, I submit to the fair and righteous judgment of the Senate if he did not act as a wise and prudent public officer in this behalf.

Furthermore, the Senator from Kansas does not seem to possess very accurate information, to say the least, as to the condition of the public building at Wichita. It is not a mere naked lot, as he seems to surmise. It is a lot upon which the foundations have been built. It is a lot which has connected with it the office of those who are engaged in that work, with all their valuable papers. If the work in that condition had been abandoned, with no guard, and those papers had been lost, and that property in process of erection had been spoliated, then we would have seen the obverse of the picture raised up before the Senate and derision visited upon an inefficient public official.

When I saw these matters in the RECORD, and indeed heard part of them upon the floor of the Senate, being a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I deemed it not unfitting that I should inquire into them. I addressed a letter to the Supervising Architect. I have the honor to present his reply thereto, and to request that it may be made a part of my remarks.

One thing I will further say in this connection, for I have no desire too long to impose upon the kind attention of the Senate. In the statements which are given me here from the Chief Architect's office it will appear that in the period of a little more than six months since the time that he received his commission he has so cut down the excrescences of expenditure in his department as to amount to a saving of $322 per day. He has taken a long step in the right direction, and in the matter of advertising for public buildings, in the matter of drawings for public buildings, and in the matter of husbanding the appropriations which are put into his hands for the purpose of constructing them, I venture to say that when the eye of Senators shall fall upon these papers they will be pleased to see that there is at least one department and branch of this Government in which true reform is being practically carried out, and that in the matter of economy and of methods alike the present Chief Architect of the Treasury is at least devoting himself to duty in a manner not to call for their censure, but worthy of their approbation.

I ask now that these letters and exhibits thereto affixed may be inserted as part of my remarks, or read in the Senate, if such be its pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers will be printed as a part of the Senator's remarks, if there be no objection. The Chair hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, February 13, 1888.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 10th instant, and referring to page 1081, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 9, 1888, I have the honor to state that when I assumed charge of this office in July last I found the public building at Pensacola, Fla., completed, and it is now occupied by the various Federal officers. There was referred to this office Senate bill 1723, providing for the completion of the building in question as originally designed in February, 1884, and appropriating therefor the sum of $50,000.

An estimate having been prepared, the report was made to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, under date of the 4th instant, that the work contemplated by the bill in question could be completed within the amount proposed to be appropriated. It is presumed that I am not asked to defend the action of previous administrations, and therefore I will make no further reference to this subject.

The matter of asking in the urgent deficiency bill for amounts in excess of the limit fixed by law can in most cases be accounted for in this way. Congress has in the past limited the cost of site and building separately and in other cases has placed the limit including both site and building in one amount, and again has placed a limit on the cost of building only. In the latter case Congress has, at various times, by making appropriation for approaches and for heating apparatus, verified the interpretation prevailing in this Department at one time, that the limit placed upon the building did not include the cost of approaches and heating apparatus. In July, 1886, however, the Department directed that in future, in preparing estimates, such estimates must include all expenses of site, building, approaches, and heating apparatus. As the greater portion of the buildings included in the urgent deficiency bill are those for which the estimates were prepared and contracts entered into prior to July, 1886, it became necessary when I entered upon the duties of this office to ask that Congress should appropriate a sum sufficient to cover expenses which were not included in the estimates by my predecessors.

To remove the possibility of the impression prevailing in regard to the cost of the St. Louis public building, that this administration is responsible, it may be well to state that all legislation in regard to this building was enacted between the years 1870 and 1884, and it was completed and occupied in 1885, and of course any reflection that is cast must be upon the past action, and not in any way upon the present administration of affairs. It may be stated, however, in passing, that of the entire appropriation made on account of the St. Louis building, after paying the cost of site, 35 per cent. of the appropriation was expended in the State of Maine, and the people of St. Louis must "have reckoned without their host" in having the limit expended with the expectation that the appropriation would be expended in the State of Missouri.

Reference having been made to the public building at Wichita, Kans., it may be well to use this as an illustration of the difficulties an executive officer meets in the performance of what he understands to be the law and the desires of Congress.

In July, when I assumed charge of this office, I found a law directing the erection of a public building at Wichita, Kans., and placing the limit of cost of site and building at $100,000. I found also that the excavation and concrete foundation had been completed and a contract made for the supply of the masonry of the basement and area walls. Operations were commenced upon this work and preparations were made to place upon the market invitations for proposals for the supply of superstructure. At this juncture, and at the time when the masonry of the basement was approaching completion, a letter was addressed to me by the Hon. P. B. PLUMB, under date of October 4, 1887 (copy herewith), stating that the building as then contemplated by the plans was entirely too small and asking practically that the approved plans be modified by the supply of an additional story, and that, to secure the necessary money, the estimates should also be modified by omitting the cost of the heating apparatus, and that Congress should be asked at some future time to do that which is now censured, namely, asked for an amount for heating apparatus or practically asked that the amount of limit be exceeded.

Without acceding to this request, proposals were invited specifying that each proposal should submit a separate and distinct amount for the supply of the additional story in question in order that full information should be in possession of the Department for such action as it might determine. While these proposals were being considered by the Department the honorable Representative from the Wichita district, personally and by letter (see copy January 25, 1888), urged that the Government was doing a most unwise thing in erecting a structure as small as was contemplated under the limit, and inclosed H. R. bill No. 1457, providing for the extension of the limit from $100,000 to $200,000. I impressed upon the honorable gentleman the fact that the delay now taking place would at some future time be lost sight of and the charge would be made in brief that much time had been lost in the completion of the building.

In regard to the employment of what is known as the contingent force at Wichita—namely, a superintendent, who furnishes a bond in the sum of $5,000, a clerk, and a watchman—I submit that it would be a most unfair and unbusiness-like proceeding to employ these men, taken from other service, and discharge and re-employ them spasmodically, basing such action upon the probabilities of legislation; and, referring to this, I may be permitted to submit a copy of a letter of the 4th instant, from Hon. S. R. PETERS, in regard to this very point, in which he states that the contingent force should remain. The contingent force has been retained, but at half-pay, the watchman referred to being paid but $1 per day. The statement that the Government has no interests to protect is scarcely just, as there has been completed over $12,000 worth of masonry of the basement and area walls, and there is a superintendent's office, with valuable papers and records.

As an earnest of my desire to reduce the method of administering the affairs of this office to business principles and to the lowest cost consistent with competent service and the best interests of the Government, I submit a tabulated statement, showing that on July 31, 1887, what is known as contingent expense at the various buildings being constructed under the control of this office was, per day, $800.91, while the expense at present is, per day, $468, or a saving per day effected of $332.91, or, say, 40 per cent.

In conclusion I may say that there seems to be an insinuation that the Department is desirous of securing the extension of limits, which, I think, is scarcely warranted by referring to page 48 of the annual report of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for 1887, in regard to the delay and expense resulting from the mode of making partial appropriation, and also in regard to work now being done on buildings where the estimates were prepared as far back as 1882.

Thanking you for the interest you have taken, and trusting that I have not been too prolix, I have the honor to remain,

Respectfully yours,

WILL. A. FRERET,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, February 15, 1888.

SIR: Supplementary to my letter of the 13th instant, I have the honor to request your perusal of the accompanying memoranda in regard to the methods adopted in this office in the past, as compared with the efforts which I am making to reduce all transactions to the usual business principles which prevail in professional practice and which resulted in benefit to myself in my profession, and which would fulfill all the requirements of contemplated legislation before Congress.

[Inclosed.]

"Memorandum of drawings required under the past and present methods.

"Memorandum of results of the publicity now given to invitations for proposals for work to be done under contract as compared with that obtained in the past."

I may state in connection with the work of preparation of drawings that the system of permitting drawings to be made under the direction of the superintendents located at various points has lately been abandoned, and the saving thereby effected is included in the tabulated statement sent you on the 13th instant.

Respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM A. FRERET,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL,
United States Senate.

COMPARISON OF PROPOSALS FROM 1882 TO 1888.

In 1882 work was advertised in one building paper, the American Architect and Building News, Boston, Mass., and in the local papers.

In 1888 the office has the assistance of sixteen building papers (publishing free) located in the following cities: New York, 1; Washington, 1; St. Louis, 1; San Francisco, 1; Cleveland, Ohio, 1; Atlanta, Ga., 1; Pittsburgh, 1; Kansas City, Mo., 1; Des Moines, 1; New Orleans, 1; Philadelphia, 1; Ottawa, Ill., 1; Chicago, 1; and in five paid building papers located as follows: New York City, 2; Chicago, 2; Boston, 1.

In 1882 the limited number of plans furnished by the office were distributed on application to individual contractors. As a result contractors nearest Washington obtained possession of the plans to the exclusion of others. For example, the plans for work on the Toledo (Ohio) building in June, 1882, were obtained by parties in the following cities: Washington, New York, Rockland, Me., and Portland, Me.

In December, 1887, was introduced the system of issuing plans to the building exchanges throughout the country, giving contractors of every section equal chance to submit proposals.

In this the office has the co-operation of the building exchanges located in the following cities (at present over thirty-three in number, and increasing from time to time): Albany, N. Y.; Boston; Brooklyn; Baltimore; Chicago; Concord, N. H.; Cincinnati; Columbus, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Denver, Colo.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Kansas City, Mo.; Louisville, Ky.; Lynn, Mass.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Newark, N. J.; New Haven, Conn.; New Orleans; Oakland, Cal.; Petersburgh, Va.; St. Louis, Mo.; Providence, R. I.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Richmond, Va.; San Francisco; St. Paul, Minn.; Troy, N. Y.; Wilmington, Del.; Worcester, Mass.; Charleston, S. C.; Buffalo, N. Y.

As a result forty-four proposals were received for the erection of the public building at Wichita, Kans. (the first placed in the hands of the exchanges).

Proposals were forwarded from the following places: Buffalo, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Mankato, Minn.; Quincy, Ill.; Wichita, Kans.; Washington, D. C.; Winfield, Kans.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, it is very difficult for me to determine whether there was any intended criticism of the administration of the office of the chief Supervising Architect. There were a great many criticisms indulged in——

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. EUSTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The subject-matter which has been introduced by the Senator from Virginia has nothing whatever to do with the appropriation for assistant custodians and janitors. That is a matter entirely outside. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury has nothing to do with this fund, and in any remarks that I made touching the method of expending and of not keeping within the law of last year no allusion was made to that officer.

I am entirely willing to say here that the Committee on Appropriations in its examination of the subjects-matter under charge of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, Colonel Freret, was well impressed with his methods of doing business, and ascertained that he had saved largely in the direction indicated by the Senator from Virginia; and instead of censuring him or in any way finding fault with him, the committee is in accord with him as to the methods which he is introducing into that office to do the important work he has under his charge. He has nothing to do, as I understand, with the fund that is provided for in the amendment, that is sought to be increased by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. EUSTIS. I am exceedingly gratified to have heard the statement which has been made by the Senator from Maine. I did not rise for the purpose of defending the administration of that office, but simply for the reason that it was very difficult to draw the line of demarkation when criticisms were made with regard to the administration of that office, whether there was any odium to be attached to the present incumbent as regards the question of economy, the question of competency, or the question of fidelity to the public interests or not. For instance, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who is now absent spoke with great vehemence and great earnestness, and said that so far as the publication for bids was concerned it was a notorious fact that there were favorites, that there was a clique, a syndicate, a ring, to whom, as it were, those proposals necessarily came, because there was not sufficient publicity given when the erection of a public building was contemplated.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the difference between the old and the new method with regard to advertising and bidding. Here is a comparison of proposals from 1882 to 1888. In 1882 work was advertised in one building paper, the American Architect and Building News, of Boston, Mass., and in the local papers. In 1888 the office had the assistance of sixteen building papers, publishing free, located in the cities named, and in five building papers located, two in New York, two in Chicago, and one in Boston. The comparison of proposals to which I refer, giving the names of the cities, is as follows:

That is the reform which has been accomplished with regard to the system of receiving proposals and of giving publicity to the fact that a public building is to be erected.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another reform which has been accomplished in that office. It is with regard to the number of drawings required for buildings. By the old method, taking the approximate cost of a building, for instance, at $66,000, there were fifty-four drawings, there were six specifications, and the estimated cost of the specifications was $297. Under the new system a building whose approximate cost was $50,000 at Jefferson, Tex., instead of the number of drawings being fifty-four, they were fifteen; instead of the number of specifications being six, there was one; and instead of the cost of the specifications being $297, the cost is now $10. I will have inserted in the RECORD this memorandum, showing the great economy which has been accomplished in that branch of the service.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. EUSTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that the Senator has called the attention of the Senate to the fact that accompanying this saving of expenses by reducing the number of specifications and drawings is also another great saving which the Architect proposes in having fewer contracts for a public building, fewer contractors to deal with, and that he desires gradually to so go on narrowing this that in the end one or two or three contracts will cover the entire work to be performed on a public building. In that I think the Architect is right. I think he has struck there a thought which if carried out will be very valuable not only in saving money but in expediting the work on these buildings.

Mr. DAWES. And the character of the work.

Mr. HALE. And the character of the work also.

Mr. EUSTIS. That statement is accurate. The Supervising Architect, in his report which he has made to the Secretary of the Treasury, recommends that whenever Congress has determined that a public building shall be erected there ought to be one appropriation made for the building instead of detailed appropriations. He thinks that that would be a great saving of money and a source of great economy to the Government, and all these complaints that we hear with regard to the change of the dimensions or of the character of a building, and so on, will be entirely obviated from the fact that he recommends, as the Senator from Maine states, that there should be no day laborers on public buildings, that the work should be given out by contract, and that the contractor should be held responsible just as a private person would hold an individual contractor responsible.

With regard to the saving which has been made by reducing the contingent expenses and the pay of the subordinates who are in charge of public buildings during their progress of erection, the Supervising Architect has made a reduction which amounts to $332.91 a day. I have here a statement showing the reduction which has been made with regard to public buildings, which has been submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

I make these few observations, Mr. President, not to defend this public official, but simply to call the attention of the country to the fact that he has been in office only a very few months, and that all the deficiencies which have been so much deprecated do not arise from any contract that he has made. They are deficiencies arising from contracts which were made by his predecessor. He is in no sense responsible for them. I desire to say that if he called attention to these deficiencies immediately, he did it in the interest of economy, as it was his duty as a public official not to allow any time to elapse which would increase these expenses.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I think it is but just to say that many of these deficiencies arise from the fact that the cost of the material of which the buildings are composed and the cost of labor have advanced since the time the original contracts were made, and also that there have been changes made in the buildings so as to make them fire-proof, which also is an element in these deficiencies. Therefore, agreeing with what the Senator has said respecting the present Architect, because he made a good impression upon the Committee on Appropriations—we had him before us—I want to say that in justice to his predecessor, who I think was also a good officer.

Mr. EUSTIS. I was not criticising his predecessor; I was merely stating the fact that Mr. Freret is not responsible for these deficiencies. They are legacies which came to him in the due order of official succession.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, there does not seem to be any particular reason why this question should be lugged in at the present time, but if I had had my way about it I should have had the present Supervising Architect of the Treasury brought here under a subpœna duces tecum, with instructions to bring my letter, in order that it might be made public. It has no more to do with his employment of watchmen or superintendents of the building at Wichita than it has with the last change of the moon. I am so enamored of that letter, on looking it over, that I will ask to have it read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, Emporia, Kans., October 4, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the public building which you are proposing to erect at Wichita. Since provision was made for this building Wichita has grown very greatly, and buildings five stories in height have been erected by private capital. I am informed that the plans as prepared in your office contemplate a building two stories in height merely. This will result in an inferior-looking building. I doubt also if the necessary room can be provided in a building of two stories, as you perhaps know there is a United States land office at Wichita, and United States court is held there, and there will need to be a room for a post-office which does more business than any other post-office in the State of Kansas.

I write to suggest that you enlarge the building by adding a third story. If this should necessitate the omission of heating apparatus from the estimates, I think without doubt this could be provided for at the next session of Congress. It would certainly seem advisable that the Government should erect such a building as would meet not only present but future wants in a satisfactory manner.

Respectfully, yours,

P. B. PLUMB.

SUPERVISING ARCHITECT OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. PLUMB. I reiterate all I there said. Wichita is a city of 40,000 people, and it is a better town than any other town in the world outside of Kansas having twice the number of people. There is more activity in business, more business transacted, more necessity for a public building in Wichita than in any town in the United States outside of that State possessing 100,000 people.

The Congress of the United States was guilty of the worst kind of parsimony in providing for a building at that place to cost only $100,000. I was noticing the debate in another place the other day on a proposition to erect a public building at Birmingham, Ala., and it was stated with a flourish of trumpets that the postal receipts of that city were $36,000 a year. The proceeds of the post-office at Wichita are more than twice that much. Another branch of this Congress has voted $300,000 to erect a public building at Birmingham, on the basis of the gross postal receipts of $36,000, while it was only willing to go $100,000 for the public building at Wichita. Since the time when that appropriation was made for Wichita single buildings have been erected in that city costing $150,000, and when we consider the extravagance which the Government always indulges in in the building of public buildings it is readily to be seen that a building which would cost the Government $100,000 could not be in any possible way more than one-quarter the size of a building which private parties would build with $150,000.

Therefore, observing that the Government was about to erect a building in Wichita, not only inferior in character, but not up to the average of the business blocks in that city, I said to the Architect I thought on the whole he had better put on another story; but I omitted to say, as the Senator from Virginia did not seem to observe, that I thought he ought to keep up the quota of watchmen while he was waiting for an appropriation.

What I said about the Wichita building in the debate which is referred to here was merely an incident of what I was saying about the Library building. I do not intend that the Senator from Virginia, acute as he is, shall take me away from that fruitful subject. I do not mean that he shall get me into a contemplation of some practice of the office under preceding administrations, and thereby divert attention from what has been going on under this Administration in regard to the Library building in the shadow of this Capitol.

It was not a very heinous offense to keep a superintendent and watchman at Wichita notwithstanding there was neither Government building nor Government property there, and I freely say that, so far as I have observed, he has economical tendencies. How soon he will get over them I can not say. I think, on the whole, he has introduced some economies in the management of his office.

I had a talk with him on the subject of the watchman and superintendent being employed at Wichita. He said to me in substance, "If you want a superintendent and watchman kept there you will have to write me a letter recommending it." I said, "I do not think they ought to be kept there, and consequently I will not recommend it." He then said to me by way of palliation, very well illustrated by a story which I will not tell, that he would reduce the salaries, and consequently the offense of keeping them would not be a very large one.

I think that he intended to reduce the expenses of that building to the minimum. I believe he is sincerely desirous of economizing as far as possible in the expenditure of the public money. He can not go too far, so far as I am concerned, in that direction. If he only spends in a judicious way the money that Congress appropriates, there will be no cause of complaint. But while this officer has been in office only six months the Administration which is responsible for him has been in power for over three years, and it will not do to say that because it has retained in office men whom it found here prior to that time somebody else is responsible and not the Administration.

But the matter of watchmen is not so conspicuous in the Wichita building as it is in the Library building. I have in my hand the report of the commission created by law to erect a Library building, and I find that in one year, in a single twelve months, that commission spent for watchmen $2,772.95.

The Pension building has been referred to sometimes in debate here, not always with words altogether complimentary for its architectural proportions, but it cost $800,000 and was nearly five years in building. The entire amount expended for watchmen during the nearly five years that building was in process of construction was only $2,711.10. In other words, there was expended for watchmen about that building during the nearly five years it was in process of construction less money than has been expended in one year—I will not say in the process of the construction of the Library building, because its construction has not yet commenced. Why, Mr. President, the plans for the basement for the Library building have not yet been drawn.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is not true.

Mr. PLUMB. It is true.

Mr. VOORHEES. I say it is not true.

Mr. PLUMB. I say it is true.

Mr. VOORHEES. I say it is not true, of my personal knowledge.

Mr. PLUMB. They will not be ready until to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. I say they have been ready for six months.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I am informed on what I believe to be good authority that there is an advertisement in one of the city papers stating that the plans or specifications for the foundation of the basement of that building are not completed, and will not be until to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. There is no such statement in any advertisement in any paper in the city.

Mr. PLUMB. I am informed, upon what I believe to be good authority outside of that, that when a few days ago the Secretary of the Interior came to consider the question of letting the contract or of advertising for a contract for the basement of that building, he was informed that the plans and specifications for the basement had not yet been drawn.

Now, of course, I am not going to dispute with the Senator from Indiana in a way involving his veracity. He is unduly sensitive about this matter. I do not know that he has any more responsibility about it than I have. He has chosen to defend some things, and he is welcome to his defense; but so far as responsibility is concerned, I do not understand that he has any more responsibility than any other member of this body, or any other member of Congress, so far as that part of it goes, unless he makes himself so. If he proposes to defend these expenditures, then, of course, he becomes responsible. But what he says as of his own personal knowledge I will not dispute.

I said, and I repeat, that I have been told upon what I consider to be perfectly good authority that the plans and specifications for the basement story of that building have not yet been drawn, and I was told that I could find in a city paper, if I would look for the evidence of that fact, an advertisement made for contracts, stating in substance that plans and specifications would be furnished on the 8th day of March, which is to-morrow.

I am not going to say that it does not take more watchmen under this Administration than it did under former ones. There may be more to watch; there may be more necessity to keep on hand a big corps of men to see that somebody does not carry off the property or something of that kind; but the fact is, as I have stated, that on this Library building during twelve months $2,772.95 were expended for watchmen, while on the Pension building, which cost $800,000 and was in process of construction nearly five years, the entire amount for similar services was $2,711.10.

I have here a list of the employés of the Library building whose services cost last year nearly $29,000. A secretary cost $1,800; the messenger cost $600 a month; an accountant cost $1,500.

Mr. VOORHEES. No messenger ever cost $600 a month.

Mr. PLUMB. Sixty dollars a month I said, or meant to say.

Mr. VOORHEES. You said $600 a month.

Mr. PLUMB. Did I? Mr. President, I wonder he did not cost $600 a month.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wonder the Senator did not call it $6,000 a month.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the wide field opened by this expenditure, I wonder myself the commission did not think it should be paid $6,000 per month on this work. It would have been a hundred times more judicious expenditure of public money than some I have evidence of here.

The disbursing agent cost $2,500 per annum. A man to help him cost three-eighths of 1 per cent., amounting to $253.23. Then the architect cost $5,000. Of course he had to have some one to help him, and he cost $3,000. Then there was a computer, who cost $125 a month, and then there was an expert in iron construction at $6 per day. In iron construction, Mr. President! Why, all the iron-work over there is not only in the imagination, but is in the bowels of the earth. An expert in iron construction at the Library building, which consists up to date of a hole in the ground! No contract was let for anything beyond the footing course for the walls. He and the civil engineer cost $6 a day each; an expert in heating cost $6 a day, and another expert in iron construction cost $7 per day; a draughtsman cost $7 per day, and the plans for the basement are not yet drawn! Then there is another person who was employed as draughtsman at $5 a day, and another draughtsman at $4 and $5 per day. Whether that meant $9 per day, or whether he was worth more some days than others, I am not prepared to state. Another draughtsman cost $5 a day, and another one cost $3 and $4 per day. Some days I suppose he was better than others. Another draughtsman cost $2 a day, and then another draughtsman cost $125 and $150 per month. I suppose he was employed on the evolution plan, so to speak. They got better as they went on; they were more competent to do that nothing which the commission seemed to be determined upon doing. The further they got the longer they were employed; certainly the less chance there ever was of having a building, their services becoming more ornamental and less useful, and consequently they were entitled to greater pay.

Mr. HALE. What is the item the Senator read in regard to a disbursing officer?

Mr. PLUMB. There was a disbursing agent at $2,500 per annum.

Mr. HALE. What has the disbursing agent to disburse?

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator had looked at these figures he would see that the disbursing agent has been the most laboriously occupied of all the persons employed about that building.

Mr. HALE. In paying these employés?

Mr. PLUMB. He has disbursed $98,000 during the past year. All that has been done over there, it seems, is the disbursement.

Mr. HALE. For which he has had $2,500.

Mr. PLUMB. That man, in comparison with the other persons employed there, ought to have received $10,000.

Then there is a clerk at $120 per month. Then there is another clerk at $120 per month; there is another messenger at $60 a month; another one at $2 a day, and a sculptor at $5 a day.

That is the list of the employés, the total compensation for whom amounts to $28,839.88, and does not include the watchmen, who received during the same period $2,772.95. I am willing to admit that any possible condition of things existing in Wichita is a mere bagatelle by comparison with what has been going on here under our very eyes. If the Architect of the Treasury had been intending to follow the example which has been set by the Library Commission there would not have been anything left of the Wichita appropriation of $100,000—not a dollar—it would all have been gone.

But as the Senator from Louisiana says, very properly, he has had nothing whatever to do with these expenses. I think I am willing to go further, and I say in view of the letter which was written to him by the member of the House representing the district in which Wichita is situated, that he was fairly warranted in maintaining for the time being a force there in anticipation of an appropriation which may or may not come.

One thing, however, I have observed, that whenever any Republican on this floor or elsewhere has anything to say about any mismanagement or extravagance on the part of this Administration, some one turns around and says that all grows out of the fact that some Republican had something to do with it. I have heretofore spoken of that as pleading the baby act. I can not think of anything more expressive than that phrase. Who is responsible for the Republicans who are in office to-day? Of course, I think on the whole it would be pretty well to follow Republican advice, but to say that because certain persons are in office who are members of the Republican party relieves the Administration from responsibility is going too far.

Mr. President, I do not intend to work this deposit out now. I intend to keep this thing on hand. I have only just simply got under the cover. When I look at the milk in this cocoanut, when I contemplate all this array of figures from the advertising in the newspapers, the taking down of the houses, the cleaning away of the material at the expense of $13,000 at a return of about $2,000, the erection of a carriage-house for the architect, the fitting up of the blue-print room, and so on, I realize that I can not do the subject justice at one effort, nor perhaps at twice trying. So I think I will leave the balance of it until further debate. Whenever the debate shall lag, and whenever my friend from Indiana shall have gotten into that good humor for which he is proverbial and can bear a little more, I think I will go further into this great mine that has been opened up here in regard to the construction of this Library building, which is so dear to his heart, for which he has labored so many years of his public life. I was not on his side, but still I responded most thoroughly in my admiration for him in his faithful, eloquent work to bring about the erection of a Library building, and the surprise I have is that there is nothing now but a hole in the ground after this great expenditure of public money in place of a building.

I shall hope that under the admonition which has been had we may have a little more economical administration of the Architect's office. When I heard the Senator from Louisiana speak of the determination of the present Architect of the Treasury to let all work by contract I at once thought of the message of the President of the United States in 1886, in which, in dealing with the question of convict labor, he uttered the following words:

> Upon consideration of this subject it might be thought wise to erect more than one of these institutions—

That is to say, national penitentiaries.

Upon consideration of this subject it might be thought wise to erect more than one of these institutions, located in such places as would best subserve the purpose of convenience and economy in transportation. The considerable cost of maintaining these convicts as at present, in State institutions, would be saved by the adoption of the plan proposed; and by employing them in the manufacture of such articles as were needed for use by the Government, quite a large pecuniary benefit would be realized in partial return for our outlay.

So, following out this idea which the Senator from Louisiana says the Architect of the Treasury has adopted, I shall expect to see not only contracts for public buildings let according to the plan proposed, but I shall expect to see those contracts carried out by the convict labor of the United States in accordance with the recommendation of the President.

Mr. GIBSON. That is prohibited by statute.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Louisiana says that is prohibited by statute. It is presumable that the President knew that. He was recommending to Congress a plan, and if a statute can make, a statute can unmake. It was in substance a recommendation that Congress enact a statute providing for penitentiaries and for the manufacture of articles for the use of the Government by the convicts in those penitentiaries.

There used to be a good deal said about extravagance in expenditures and about the wantonness of executive officers in transcending the limit prescribed by law in expending public moneys. Last year on the sundry civil appropriation bill there was an appropriation for the pay of assistant custodians and janitors, in these words:

For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, $425,000.

Up to that point the appropriation was in the ordinary terms, but Congress went further and it said to the Secretary of the Treasury this:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Could anything be more specific than that? If the law-making power controls the expenditure of money, how could it have put into any more apt phrase the determination that the Secretary of the Treasury should not make a deficit in the expenditure of money for this purpose than by the language used in that section? That meant simply this: "If you have got more janitors than can be paid for out of $425,000 for the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made, if you are paying them salaries which can not be accommodated to this gross appropriation, you must discharge from your force or you must cut down the salaries you are paying them in such a way as to bring it within this gross sum of $425,000." The Secretary of the Treasury did not pay any more attention to that than he would to a——

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I am quite certain he does not desire a statement as broad as that to go out to the country in the face of the fact that when Congress appropriated only $425,000 instead of $534,000, the Secretary of the Treasury did in fact reduce the pay of janitors, firemen, and all of that class of employés who were illy-paid already, averaging only $700 per annum. He has made a reduction in their salaries, and he finds at the end of the third quarter that, notwithstanding the reduction made to a point where it was impossible to make it lower to secure first-class engineers and mechanics, he is compelled now to reduce the number to a point where the public service can not be carried on. I am certain the Senator from Kansas has read Executive Document No. 80, and all the facts stated therein as well as in the general reports of the Treasury Department. It is not a question of the Secretary of the Treasury violating that law, but he is carrying it out, and if he is required to carry it out to the end by the failure to make this appropriation, then these men suffer by having their salaries reduced to a point below which I am sure the Senator would not have them go, or else leave these public buildings without proper attention.

Mr. PLUMB. That, of course, is a very good argument. I do not mean to say that there was not done with the money what ought to have been done with it, but I mean to say that there was a positive command of the law that that money should be so expended, and there should be no deficiency.

Now, I want to know who is to deal with the question of convenience or inconvenience, of proper or improper salaries, of the proper or improper number of public employés? I do not desire to speak with any personal disrespect of the present Secretary of the Treasury at all, but I call attention to the fact, for the purpose of illustrating this point, and it is a point that arises through all this deficiency bill, that Congress practically does not control the public expenditure.

The law which I have quoted is no more mandatory, no more emphatic, than other provisions of the permanent law of the United States upon the question of the expenditure of public money, and still we appropriate each year from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, and sometimes as high as $9,000,000, to make up deficiencies, although the money has been spent by the executive officers of the Government in defiance of law, and for which, probably in many cases at least, if there was a strict construction of the statute, they would be liable to indictment.

I think it very likely Congress did not appropriate enough, but the Senator from Maryland will not dispute me when I say that that provision was inserted in the bill in the House of Representatives. It was not the act of a hostile branch of the legislature. It was not the language of persons seeking to obtain a partisan advantage against the Administration, nor was the sum of money inserted there fixed by the action of the Senate, but the limitation of $425,000 put in the bill was done by the House of Representatives, under the control then as now of the Senator's own party.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, the point I desire to make, and I am sure he will admit it, is that in this particular the Secretary of the Treasury has complied literally with that act. He has not expended or contracted to expend one dollar beyond the appropriation made under the provisions of the act to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. PLUMB. I think he has.

Mr. GORMAN. Not a dollar more.

Mr. PLUMB. Well——

Mr. GORMAN. Not a dollar more; but when he reached the last quarter, beginning with the present month, he found that the balance on hand would not enable him to keep up the organization that had been in existence for years, and therefore he is compelled not only to reduce the compensation, but to reduce the number below the point that the public service requires.

Mr. PLUMB. No, Mr. President; that misses the point. Here was the sum of $425,000 appropriated for the entire fiscal year. However inconvenient it might have been, however destructive of the interests of the public service, according to the view of the Secretary of the Treasury, it was his duty to have adjusted the expenditures for each one of the four quarters in such a way as to absorb the $425,000 and no more. It will not do for him to say, "I will carry on a full-handed equipment of the building at Baltimore for three quarters of the year, and similarly at Philadelphia and elsewhere, and run the risk of having no money the last quarter and leaving those buildings without any custodians." It was his duty to cut down the force in such a way, and the salaries of the force in such a way, if reductions were necessary, as that the expenditure each of the quarters should bear a proper relation to the total sum of $425,000 appropriated by Congress. I do not say that would not have been a harsh duty to perform. I have no doubt myself that the sum appropriated was too small. The Senator from Maryland knows well, because he is an influential and honored member of the Appropriations Committee, with what freedom and how free from partisan bias these things are discussed in that committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I have so stated.

Mr. PLUMB. He knows that it never has been designed to cripple the service by any reductions of appropriations whatever; but, on the contrary, it has been designed to give them with a liberal spirit, and even increase, as in many cases it has done over and over again, the amounts appropriated by the House of Representatives for the carrying on of the administration of its own party; and in that case the committee has often saved, not only the Secretary of the Treasury, but other heads of Departments from their own friends. I come back to this for the purpose of saying that a very large proportion of what is found in this deficiency bill is made necessary on account of the default of which I have spoken.

I believe that it is not only the duty of the executive officers of this Government to contract the expenses within the appropriations by Congress, but I believe if it were done for one single fiscal year all the pretenses about economy, of which we have heard so much, and in regard to which the Senate has been upbraided for being extravagant and the House of Representatives commended for its economy, would be scattered to the four winds of heaven. I believe in appropriating money enough to carry on the Government properly; but we see the spectacle every year of appropriations cut down by the House of Representatives in such a way as to gain a reputation for economy, an economy which is illy concealed when at the beginning of another session of Congress a deficiency bill has to be brought in to enable the Government to be carried on to the end of the fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, if any one expects that I rise to make any extended reply to the remarks of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] he is mistaken. I am not in condition to speak to-day, and I do not desire to do so. If the Senate has a disposition to allow the genial Senator from Kansas to amuse himself by an assault of this kind on those who have charge of the work of the new Library building——

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, yes.

Mr. PLUMB. Here is the advertisement to which I referred:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSION FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING,
No. 145 EAST CAPITOL STREET,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1888.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of this commission until 12 noon on the 31st day of March, 1888, for furnishing the dimension stone required for the walls of the cellar or sub-basement story of the Congressional Library building, to be constructed in Washington, D. C., upon the form of proposals and in accordance with the specifications and plans therefor. Copies of specifications, etc., will be furnished to intending bidders on application to the architect at this office, and detailed plans of the same may be seen at the same office on and after Thursday, March 8, 1888.

WILLIAM F. VILAS,
EDWARD CLARK,
A. R. SPOFFORD,
Commissioners.

Mr. VOORHEES. You will find the advertisement says that bidders can have the specifications to-morrow, but it does not say they are not prepared.

Mr. PLUMB. No, but it is significant that they are not already prepared.

Mr. VOORHEES. Everything is significant to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. The advertisement bears date the 1st day of March. It was published on that day——

Mr. VOORHEES. Please get through. I am tired.

Mr. PLUMB. I will get through now or some other time.

Mr. VOORHEES. It does not make any difference to me.

Mr. PLUMB. It is a little bit significant, and I think supports the allegation which I made, that for seven days after the advertisement was printed the specifications could not be seen in the office of the architect.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Kansas said I was sensitive in regard to this matter, as if I was more responsible than others on the subject. I confess to the fact that this building for the Library is a favorite measure with me, but I stand charged with no more responsibility about it than any other Senator here. It is now eight years since the committee to which I have the honor to belong was created to take in hand the subject of the erection of a library competent to take care of our great wealth of books. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], on whom I look as a father in this great measure, had for years before been engaged in it. We have worked together from that day to this as best we knew how. It took us six years before we got a law through both branches of Congress. The law had all manner of attacks. In fact, there were a good many men, some in this body and perhaps some in the other, who did not want a shelter for the Library, possibly for the reason that they did not need books.

I do not remember that we had the support of the distinguished Senator from Kansas for the original proposition to have a Library at all; but be that as it may, when we passed the bill for the erection of a Library it was after the utmost care and consideration by a committee of five gentlemen from this body, and perhaps the same number from the other House. It was not done in haste, not done in a corner; but considering everything in connection with it, we thought it was best to intrust the construction of the Library building to a commission, to be composed of men who were well known, and must necessarily be men of high character.

I hope I may have the attention of the Senate, because the question turns upon this very point that I am stating. In the law which passed Congress and was signed by the President it was provided that the construction of the building—which covers everything, covers the employment of skilled labor and of common labor, covers the question of purchasing materials, of contracts, and all cognate questions—should be committed to a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, who, while the incumbent may change in that place, would naturally be supposed to be an honest man, and was an honest man when this bill passed, two years ago. It will not do to say that the Secretary of the Interior then or now would connive at dishonest practices. Then who was the next commissioner named to take charge of the construction of this great building? It was Mr. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress. I have known him almost thirty years. He was appointed here by Abraham Lincoln, and if the Senator from Kansas can convince the country and can convince the Senate that Mr. Spofford is an improper man to have charge of a work of this kind, and would allow improper charges and waste the public money, he will have more of a task, I think, than he has bargained for. The next man named on that commission was Edward Clark, the honored Architect of this Capitol. We have all known him a long time. I want to justify the action of the committee of which I am a member, and justify the two branches of Congress to everybody, except the Senator from Kansas. I despair of doing that to him. But we thought that these three men might safely be trusted with the expenditure of the public money upon a building of this kind.

Were we mistaken or not? I am not going into the intricacies of how much was paid for a watchman, a little more or a little less. There may have been one or two salaries paid that are too high here. I think perhaps in one instance a man is paid beyond the duties of his position; but that is a small matter and a matter of opinion. The three men composing the commission are men of high character. They have absolute control on this question, and they have the employment of the architect. He has no power except as an architect employed to furnish designs, plans, and specifications. He can not receive a bid; he can not make a contract; he can not judge of material, even, except subject to the commission; and it seems strange to me that a Senator rises here with a paper in his hands to pick out a little bit here and a little bit there and to expose expenditures that are necessary and that took place in the beginning of the work. All these expenditures, with every step in the progress of the work, have been under the charge of men whom you and I and every one of us would trust in any and every affair of private life.

What is more, I say if there has been malfeasance in office there, it would be a most amazing thing to me, for these are among the most perfect men known here—the past and present Secretary of the Interior, Justice Lamar and Mr. Secretary Vilas. The Senator from Kansas, for the first time I ever heard it, going into party politics, drags into this matter the Democratic party and the Republican party. We have never remembered that there were parties when discussing the Library bill. We have never remembered that there were parties in our Chamber when we have met in our committee-room and considered the question. But if that be a thing to be mentioned here, allow me to say, and I do it with the greatest possible respect, that two of these commissioners, Mr. Spofford and Mr. Clark, are pronounced, square, out-and-out Republicans, and I respect them as such, for I want no neutral tints in anybody's politics. So far as I am concerned, if a man belong to a party let him be there.

Here, then, are three commissioners; one of them, it happens for the time being, is of one party and two of the other party; but I care not a fig about that. I have divested myself largely of care on this subject because I have felt secure in the men in whose hands this whole business is confided. I have not felt that it was necessary for me to hunt up whether this dollar or that dollar was wrongfully spent because I felt that I could go to bed at night trustfully and confidently that matters would be right to-morrow morning; and if there are any discordant elements that creep in in connection with the construction of this building I know the men who have the honor to compose the committee of the Senate desire to meet such questions with honesty, economy, and candor, and push on the work on this building as rapidly as possible.

It is unfortunate that material was offered that was found not acceptable to the commission. We heard of no trouble until that question was raised; and if I desired to say any unkind thing, which I do not, to the Senator from Kansas (and he knows I do not), I would say that it was singular what a noise and trouble one discontented contractor can make, and if every time a man offers a bid which is not accepted such a racket as this can be raised, we may despair of ever having a Library.

Allow me to say a word further, Mr. President. This is a great work. I had occasion to talk a little the other day on this floor about it. I repeat myself when I say that it is 21,000 square feet a larger building than the State, War, and Navy Department building. The law for the construction of that building was passed in 1872, nearly sixteen years ago, and it is just finished. The bureaus of the War Office have just moved into it. This building, I say, is 21,000 square feet larger. It is the largest building the Government will own except this Capitol, and it is more than two-thirds as large as the Capitol. It will be the largest Library building on the globe, and will be an honor to this country when it is erected.

I have devoted time, labor, thought, and enthusiasm to this question; and my greatest hope, in which I know my distinguished and beloved friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] joins me, is that we may live to see its spire reach the sky and see the books of this great Government housed in it and the accumulations of the age added to it. When that shall be done, the small bickerings and fault-findings of the present hour will be forgotten in the joyous feat that has been accomplished.

I have no fears of the future. I believe this work is in the hands of honest men, and when I believe in a man's honesty I feel secure.

Mr. PLUMB. It will be news, I think, to the Librarian, Mr. Spofford, that he is a Republican; but in the mutations which are going on in the political world——

Mr. VOORHEES. I care not whether he is or not; he is an honest man, appointed by Abraham Lincoln. I supposed he was a Republican, and suppose so yet.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt he is an honest man; but the Senator from Indiana certainly is not going to say that on account of any eminence of this Library Commission they are to be left to expend money at their will.

Mr. VOORHEES. Undoubtedly not. If you can make it appear that they have spent a dollar and a half apiece wrongfully, we will call them to account.

Mr. PLUMB. That is exactly what I am coming to. I propose to criticise, and I suppose the Senator will think it just that I should criticise——

Mr. VOORHEES. I will call a meeting of the committee and ask the Senator to come before it to show wherein anything is wrong. This committee is not here to cover up wrong.

Mr. PLUMB. I think on the whole they have had something to do, as shown in their report; and I have a right to refer to what has been done under their auspices and control. The fact that they are eminent and honest men does not relieve me from my responsibility in regard to the expenditure of public money which I vote.

I have had nothing to say about any contract. The Senator from Indiana seems to have got it in his mind that there is some contract about which I am concerned. I do not know any contractor and do not know anything about any contractor in connection with this work.

I simply spoke of expenditures not relating to any contracts, not relating to construction, and said they were of a kind which have been extravagant and almost, if not wholly and totally, unaccompanied by any result to the Government, and I so characterized them. If the Senator wants to commend the commission because they have dealt harshly with contractors, I have no objection; that is his business and not mine.

If I were conscious of a desire for a long life, I should join most heartily in the aspirations of the Senator from Indiana that I might live long enough to see the spire of the Library raised to the skies. I never expect to see it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, now let us get back to the bill itself and have a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

For pay of assistant custodians and janitors for the current fiscal year, $60,000.

Mr. PAYNE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. HALE. The amendment adds $60,000 to the House appropriation.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I refrain from voting.

Mr. GORMAN. My colleague, if here, would vote for the amendment.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore shall not vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question, as on all political questions, I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If I were not paired, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. PLUMB. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Missouri to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. I therefore vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bate,	Call,	Gorman,	Pasco,
Beck,	Cockrell,	Gray,	Payne,
Berry,	Coke,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Harris,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Brown,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Voorhees.

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Hale,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hoar,	Platt,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Reagan,

ABSENT—27.

Blair,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Pugh,	Stanford,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Quay,	Stewart,
Cameron,	George,	Ransom,	Vest,
Chace,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,	Wilson of Md.
Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 31 of the bill, at the end of line 5, to add:

With interest at 5 per cent. since the date of the award.

The firm of Wood, Dialogue & Co. constructed a vessel for the United States Government about twenty years before the award here named was made by the Court of Claims, and I ask that interest may be paid since the date of the award at 5 per cent. It is certainly proper that after waiting twenty years for their pay from the Government, and then being obliged to resort to the Court of Claims, these men should be allowed interest since the award was made. I notice in other items of the bill, especially on page 35, where awards have been made, interest has been granted at the rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. HALE. The reason why some of the judgments that are found in this bill that come from the Court of Claims carry interest in terms with them is that the law requires it in certain cases. In a case where the United States itself appeals from a judgment against it, and the case is carried from the lower to the upper court, and the original judgment is sustained, the United States being the moving party, and the party at fault under the final decision, the law declares that interest at the rate of 5 per cent. shall be paid. That is the case in regard to certain items in this bill, and in no other items. The item referred to by the Senator from New Jersey does not come under that head any more than the other large number of items upon which no interest is to be paid.

The amendment offered by the Senator is, of course, subject to a point of order. It does not come under the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine raise a question of order?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Is the point of order sustained?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] being suddenly called from the Chamber, requested me to offer an amendment for him to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To come in at what point?

Mr. VANCE. The amendment specifies—on page 36, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Mattie S. Whitney, as administratrix of the estate of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, the sum of $22,224, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States, for supplies furnished to the Army and Navy of the United States, the same being the amount found to be due her by the Court of Claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How shall the question be taken on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole—in gross or separately? ["In gross."] If there be no reservation, the question will be put on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PAYNE. I now offer in the Senate the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, on page 6, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

For pay of assistant custodians and janitors for the current fiscal year, $60,000.

Mr. PAYNE. I merely wish to say that the result of making no appropriation for this purpose will be that three-fourths of the public buildings will have to be closed before the end of the fiscal year. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. This is the same item which the Senate in Committee of the Whole has just voted down.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. KENNA. If it will be satisfactory to the Senator from Rhode Island, he may transfer his pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], and then he and I can both vote. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CHACE. Still I wanted to announce the pair on account of the Senator who is absent.

Mr. KENNA. If the Senator will vote I will vote, and let the pair stand between the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. VEST] is detained by the illness of his wife, and he is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. GORMAN. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Maryland] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. BLAIR. I announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Berry,	Daniel,	Kenna,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Walthall.
Blodgett,	Gibson,	Pasco,
Brown,	Gorman,	Payne,
Call,	Hampton,	Ransom,

NAYS—30.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Hale,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Platt,	Teller,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Reagan,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—21.

Blair,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Vance,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Pugh,	Vest,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Cameron,	George,	Sabin,
Colquitt,	Gray,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Hearst,	Stewart,

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

FRENCH PROHIBITION OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suspend that motion while it lays before the Senate the unfinished business. But the Chair will first submit to the Senate messages received from the President of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire whether there was any arrangement made about what is the proper disposition of the dependent pension bill this morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will please suspend until the messages are laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 24th of February, 1888, calling for information as to whether the Government of France has prohibited the importation into the country of any American products, and, if so, what products of the United States are affected thereby; and also as to whether any correspondence upon said subject has passed between the Governments of the United States and France, I transmit, herewith, a report from the Secretary of State on the subject, with the accompanying correspondence.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 7, 1888.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the Senate proceeds now to executive business, what becomes of the unanimous agreement that the vote should be taken on the pension bill to-day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair it leaves that agreement unexecuted and leaves it an open question.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suggest that the order made yesterday for to-day be applied to to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before that matter is acted on the Chair desires to know what disposition shall be made of the message from the President which has been read.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the message just read is in response to a resolution offered in the Senate by myself in regard to correspondence with the French Government about American products.

Mr. SHERMAN. That should lie on the table. A bill has been reported on the subject.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the message lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents be authorized to employ a stenographer to take the testimony and arguments before that committee on the question of international copyright, and to print the same, together with other testimony and arguments on the same subject taken before said committee during the Forty-ninth Congress, for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

MRS. ELIZABETH B. DYER.

Mr. PASCO. Yesterday an unfavorable report was made on the bill (S. 1348) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth B. Dyer, and it was postponed indefinitely. I ask that that vote be reconsidered by unanimous consent, and the bill placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill referred to by the Senator from Florida, with the adverse report, will be placed on the Calendar, the vote indefinitely postponing the bill being reconsidered.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the pension bill be considered to-morrow immediately after the morning hour, being made the special order immediately after the morning business.

Several SENATORS. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent that that order be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the pending pension bill be taken up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. And the same order in reference to its disposition that was understood to apply to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the same order in reference to its disposition to-morrow that was heretofore made in respect to to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 8, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 7, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D., president of Dakota University.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EMPLOYÉS IN SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Surgeon-General, the petition of certain employés for extra pay; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 60) directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs in the arid regions of the United States, and to report to Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EDUCATION.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD, without the names, a petition from citizens of Ohio, relating to education, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

Petition for national aid to common schools.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of Ohio, believing that the prosperity and perpetuity of all free institutions depend upon the intelligence and virtue of the people; that ignorance exists to an alarming degree, and endangers the general welfare of the Republic, we therefore earnestly pray for the enactment of a law which shall authorize the appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States for temporary aid in the establishment and maintenance of free public schools, and for such other remedial legislation as is necessary, to the end that the number of illiterates in the country, now exceeding 6,000,000 persons, ten years of age and over, shall be reduced to a minimum.

MATHEW H. FULTON.

Mr. SENEY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Mathew H. Fulton; and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $37.02 to Mathew H. Fulton, postmaster at Bucyrus, Ohio, the said sum being the amount of money stolen from the safe and from registered letters in the post-office at Bucyrus, Ohio, on the night of May 9, 1883, and which sum the said Fulton made good to the claimants from his own means.

Mr. PEEL. I think I must insist upon the regular order. This day has been set apart for the business of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we have some important measures to bring before the House.

Mr. SENEY. I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PEEL. I withdraw the objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SENEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. GRAHAM.

Mr. HOUK. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6922) for the relief of George W. Graham, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as will cover the regulation pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from June 15, 1863, to November 1, 1863, and of a captain of infantry from November 1, 1863, to September 18, 1864, to George W. Graham, of Campbell County, Tennessee, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States as a lieutenant and captain in the Eighth Tennessee Volunteer Infantry: Provided, however, That any sum he may have received as an enlisted man during the period he served as second lieutenant and as captain shall be deducted by the proper disbursing officer in making the payments provided for in this act.

Mr. HOUK. This is a unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOUK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIUS WITKOWSKI.

On motion of Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, the claim of Julius Witkowski was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

EDMUND D. TAYLOR.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask that the bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of Edmund D. Taylor, with the letters attached to the report of the Committee on War Claims, be printed in the RECORD and placed on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill, report (by Mr. LAWLER), and accompanying letters are as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to Edmund D. Taylor, for moneys expended and personal services rendered by him to the Government of the United States during the years 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1864, at the request of the President.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of Edmund D. Taylor, report as follows:

That there is no evidence before the committee to warrant them in making a favorable report, and therefore report without recommendation. The committee are constrained to take this action for the want of proper evidence to warrant the claim. Still the committee have the utmost confidence in Col. E. D. Taylor's statements of his valuable services rendered President Lincoln, as it seems he not only acted as confidential adviser, but as bearer of important documents from the President to General Grant when in command at Cairo, Ill., and also for his generosity in aiding with his means the supplying the volunteer troops raised in Illinois with clothing, etc., and believe that while the evidence necessary to establish his claim has not been presented, with proper diligence Colonel Taylor will be able to furnish the committee hereafter with evidence on this subject.

WASHINGTON, D. C., —— ——, 18—.

The United States, Dr., to E. D. Taylor, of Chicago, as bearer of dispatches from Washington to General Grant's headquarters at Cairo, Ill., during the war, which I did whenever called on, night or day, at the request of President Lincoln.

E. D. TAYLOR.

I paid all of my expenses for the four years out of my own money.

LINCOLN'S LETTER TO COL. E. D. TAYLOR, OF CHICAGO.

MY DEAR COLONEL DICK: I have long determined to make public the origin of the greenback, and tell the world that it is one of Dick Taylor's creations. You had always been friendly to me, and when troublous times fell on us, and my shoulders, though broad and willing, were weak, and myself surrounded by such circumstances and such people that I knew not whom to trust, then I said in my extremity, "I will send for Colonel Taylor; he will know what to do." I think it was in January, 1862, on or about the 16th, that I did so. You came, and I said to you, "What can we do?" Said you, "Why, issue Treasury notes bearing no interest, printed on the best banking paper. Issue enough to pay off the army expenses, and declare it legal tender." Chase thought it a hazardous thing, but we finally accomplished it, and gave to the people of this Republic the greatest blessing they ever had—their own paper to pay their own debts. It is due to you, the father of the present greenback, that the people should know it, and I take great pleasure in making it known. How many times have I laughed at you telling me plainly that I was too lazy to be anything but a lawyer.

Yours, truly, A. LINCOLN, President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 2, 1888.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:

In the spring of 1861 I was living in Cairo, Ill.; employed with the Illinois Central Railroad Company. It was in this same year I met Col. E. D. Taylor at General Grant's headquarters at Cairo several times. Asking General Grant if Col. E. D. Taylor belonged to the Army, General Grant said to me that Colonel Taylor was a special agent for President Lincoln in this war from Washington, D. C., to my headquarters at Cairo. I saw Col. E. D. Taylor during 1862 and 1863 frequently at General Grant's headquarters at Cairo. I had known Colonel Taylor for over five years in Chicago. He had made frequently speeches and raised two companies of volunteers in Illinois for President Lincoln, more than were accepted, and advanced money to raise those companies, but how much I do not know. I see by his bill Colonel Taylor has charged $15,000, which I think is a very moderate charge for his services.

THEO. F. COOK.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 6th day of February, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.] R. B. NIXON, Notary Public.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1887.

I herein forward my application for a clerkship in the office of the Interstate Commission, having been employed in the office of three different Western railroads.

Most respectfully,

THEO. F. COOK.

To the COMMISSIONERS OF THE INTERSTATE COMMISSION.

Mr. Cook is a brother of the late Isaac Cook, of St. Louis, and is a worthy man, well qualified for a clerkship. He will make a good officer.

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned respectfully state that they are citizens and tax-payers of the State of Illinois. That Col. E. D. Taylor has been a citizen of said State since 1814; that he was receiver of public moneys at Chicago, appointed by General Jackson in 1835, and sold the ground upon which the city of Chicago now stands; that he is now eighty-three years of age; that he was always a bosom friend of Stephen A. Douglas and also of Abraham Lincoln, and while his political associations were always with the Democratic party, yet in 1861 he gave all his influence and support to the administration of President Lincoln in the war in defense of the Union.

That at the time he was quite wealthy, and had intimate acquaintance with General Grant and General McClernand, and other generals in command of the Union forces. That his relations were such with Mr. Lincoln and the leading Democrats of the North, as well as with the generals, as to have the unlimited confidence of them all.

That under those circumstances Mr. Lincoln, on several occasions, by letter and telegraph, asked him to come to Washington to consult with him, and to become the bearer of messages, sometimes in writing and sometimes by parol, between the President and General Grant, and other officers, in a strictly private and confidential manner. That this was at a period when the Government was greatly straitened and embarrassed in its finances, and before the issuance of Treasury notes, commonly called "greenbacks," which brought relief.

That he being then a man of considerable means, presented no bill to cover any part of his time or his expenses, Mr. Lincoln assuring him that he should be reasonably paid for the same.

That afterwards, in October, 1871, by the fire in Chicago, Colonel Taylor lost his property, fourteen stores having been destroyed by fire, upon which, unfortunately, he was insured in Chicago companies alone, all of which were made insolvent by the same fire which took from Colonel Taylor all the savings of his lifetime.

We therefore respectfully ask Congress to pass a bill for the relief of Colonel Taylor, by paying to him such sum as shall reasonably compensate him for the money and time thus actually spent by him in the service of the Government at the most trying crisis in its history.

Dated July 4, 1887.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, February 18, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant is a most welcome one. It is a grateful reminder of our past relations as friends in times of peace and war, and, not least, of your intimate association with leading personages, who, together with yourself, essentially contributed to the advancement of Illinois from the stage of her infancy and obscurity to the standard of her present greatness and renown. I allude particularly to Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Douglas, and Colonel Baker, whose names have become household words and gloriously historical. They deserved well of their country, and so do you—not only as a co-worker with them, but as their patron and friend, when your older age and pecuniary prosperity made your patronage valuable. I distinctly and gratefully remember your patriotic activity in the early stage of the civil war—how you came and went hither and thither, by land and water, at your own personal expense, to assist the plans of Union officers and the Union cause. Your efforts were the more admirable because they were spontaneous and unselfish; they were the more useful because they were coincident with the initial and preparatory stage of the war. Your hopefulness and energy were inspiring.

I shall never forget our frequent conferences at Cairo in 1861, when I was in immediate command of that post. That was a gloomy period; the financial credit of the Government was strained to extreme tension; the soldiers had not been paid for some time. In this exigency you suggested and advocated the expedient of issuing Treasury notes as a circulating medium, to be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private. You not only advocated that recourse as an expedient, but as a principle and system. In the same interview you informed me that you had unfolded this scheme to General Grant, and that you would immediately proceed to Washington City and lay it before President Lincoln, which, I am convinced by what followed, you did. What further followed from the adoption of the scheme is historical.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN A. McCLERNAND.

Col. E. D. TAYLOR.

REVISION OF TARIFF.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to have the resolutions which I send to the desk, adopted by labor organizations in the State of Ohio, printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas from all indications it is the intention of certain members of Congress to once more put a check to the prosperity of the business of this country by the introduction of a bill requesting a revision of the tariff; and

Whereas we, as workingmen, know that any reduction on the present tariff would mean a reduction of wages for those who have to earn their living by the sweat of their brow. We believe that any agitation of the tariff question would be a direct cause of ruining the business of a large majority of the citizens of this country who have invested their capital in enterprises that are supporting thousands of families which, under a free-trade government, would be forced to seek the same remedies that the colored people of the Southern States are seeking at the present time: Therefore,

Resolved, That we, members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, expressing the sentiments of thousands of workingmen employed at our trade, emphatically protest against any legislation that would tend toward crippling the industries of one of the grandest countries on the face of the globe.

Resolved, That we believe in strictly adhering to the doctrines of that immortal man, Henry Clay, who once said in the Senate of the United States that "if this great Government could protect the person of an American citizen under the Constitution and teachings of the apostles of liberty of the Revolution, of the men who framed our Constitution, they had also the right, and it was their duty, to protect his interest and his business."

Resolved, That in our judgment the citizens and industries of this country can not be protected in any better way than by placing a protective tariff on all articles imported from other countries that can be produced by our own people, in order that those who produce them may be better able to demand that to which as citizens and upholders of this Government they are justly entitled, an equitable share of the profits of their toil to maintain their families in decency, that they may be able to educate their children and teach them as they advance toward manhood to defend the principles of our system of government.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded, through our officers, to our Representatives in Congress, requesting them to use all honorable efforts to protect the interests of the toiling masses of this country, in order that the peace and prosperity under which we have been smoothly sailing may still continue, and that harmony and good-will may exist between capital and labor.

At a regular and full meeting of Buckeye Lodge, No. 25, State of Ohio, held at Steubenville February 22, 1888, the above resolutions were adopted unanimously, and as directed therein we take pleasure in forwarding them to you.

WILLIAM LINDSAY, President.
JOSEPH W. REED, Recording Secretary.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN BRITISH GUIANA AND VENEZUELA.

Mr. BELMONT. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, having had under consideration the following resolution, referred to the committee on motion of Mr. McADOO—

"Whereas it is stated that the British Government has made claim to a considerable portion of valuable territory now and hitherto in the possession of the Republic of Venezuela, and is, through its agents at Demerara, in British Guiana, proceeding without legal or equitable right, and in defiance of the protests of Venezuela, to exercise dominion over the same, and has refused to arbitrate the question of disputed boundary; and

"Whereas the United States has, by its settled policy and practice, defended the existence and independence of all American countries against European domination and control, and is particularly interested in maintaining republican government and rights in both Americas: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to send to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, all documents and correspondence, if any there are, between our Government and the Governments of Great Britain and Venezuela, or either of them, relating to the question of disputed boundary between said British colonies and Venezuela"— have amended the same to read as follows, and recommend its adoption:

Whereas it is said that there are pending questions of disputed boundary between the Republic of Venezuela and the colony of British Guiana; and

Whereas it is alleged that the British Government has made claim on behalf of said colony to a considerable portion of valuable territory now and heretofore in possession of said Republic of Venezuela, and has refused to submit to arbitration said question of disputed boundary: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to send to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, all documents and correspondence, if any there are, between our Government and the Governments of Great Britian and Venezuela, or either of them, relating to the question of disputed boundary between said British colonies and Venezuela.

Mr. ADAMS. I think there should be some explanation from the committee as to what the change is from the original resolution.

Mr. BELMONT. The purpose of the substitute is to avoid any statement which would commit the House. As the resolution is intended to be simply a resolution of inquiry, it seemed proper that the committee should present it with a preamble leading to such a resolution.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the change merely in the preamble?

Mr. BELMONT. It is merely in the preamble.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, should not this go over under the rule?

Mr. BELMONT. It has already been before the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a question of privilege.

Mr. STEELE. But under the rule would it not go over for one day unless by unanimous consent?

Mr. BELMONT. I do not understand the objection of the gentleman. The committee have already considered this resolution under the rule.

Mr. STEELE. But the House has had no time to consider it or to examine the report.

Mr. BELMONT. They have had this resolution before them for nearly a week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think that this is in order now as a question of privilege. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECORD OF REFERENCES UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 1, 1888.

Resolved, That J. B. Holloway is hereby appointed to prepare and continue a digest of all claims referred to the Court of Claims under the so-called Bowman act and the act approved March 3, 1887, to provide for bringing suits against the United States, to keep a record of the findings of the court in each case reported to Congress, and perform such other necessary duties as the position may require, and that he shall be paid the same compensation as is now paid the clerk of the Committee on War Claims, out of the contingent fund of the House; and that the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, instructed to provide for the annual salary of said clerk for the next fiscal year in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution submitted February 1, 1888, by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The Committee on Accounts find by inquiry that there were filed in the office of the Quartermaster-General, under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, 53,505 claims, amounting to $38,084,066.55. Of these 20,115 were rejected, the amount of those disallowed being $18,061,416.06. The owners of the claims rejected are now coming before the Committee on War Claims asking for their claims to be referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act, so called. Your committee are advised that it is the intention of the House Committee on War Claims to refer a large number of the said claims to the Court of Claims for findings of fact. Under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, there were filed before the Commissioner of Claims 22,298 claims coming from claimants residing in the States formerly in rebellion. Of this number 11,481 were rejected. These disallowed claims are now before the Committee on War Claims, which committee will also refer a large number to the Court of Claims, as provided by the Bowman act. Your committee are advised that there have been referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act nearly 2,000 claims. With but few exceptions, all so referred are claims which had been presented to and disallowed by the Southern Claims Commission or the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General. Furthermore, there were presented to the War Claims Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, 6,660, and up to the present time there have been presented about 5,000 cases.

Nearly all of these claims belong to the class above referred to. In many of these cases the grounds of rejection are good, and a number were disallowed on alleged untenable grounds. In all cases it is quite essential, both for the protection of the Government and as a matter of justice to claimants, that the facts in each case be judicially determined, and it was with these ends in view that the Bowman act was passed by Congress. It is absolutely necessary that an accurate record of claims referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act aforesaid be kept for the information of Congress. Your committee learn that several bills have been introduced covering the same claims, and that in some instances the same case has been more than once referred to the Court of Claims.

The duties which now devolve on the clerks of the Committee on War Claims are already so onerous that it is impossible to keep a separate record of the Bowman-act cases. Furthermore, references to the Court of Claims are made by other committees of Congress, and nothing appears in the records of the House to show such action.

Your committee therefore conclude and recommend that a clerk should be employed by the Committee on War Claims for the special purpose of keeping a record of references by all committees of this House of Congress of claims to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act. Such record would avoid much unnecessary duplication and would serve the purpose of keeping Congress fully advised as to the disposition of claims of this nature. Inasmuch as 43,256 of these claims of record, involving millions of dollars, are likely to come before Congress in their order, your committee think it wise to recommend the passage of the above resolution with an amendment to add, after the last word, the following: "During the recess of Congress said J. B. Holloway, or his successor, shall be subject to the direction of the Clerk of the House."

The Committee on Accounts recommend the passage of the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this resolution now?

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This does not strike the Chair as presenting a question of privilege; it appears to embrace more than that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to considering the resolution; it will take but a few moments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish merely to suggest an amendment to this proposition to which I think the Committee on Accounts will agree.

Mr. PEEL. If this is going to cause debate, I must object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there will be no debate at all. I wish to suggest to the gentleman reporting this resolution the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the words "reported to Congress," the words "and shall note in each case whether the claim had been considered by the Quartermaster-General or by the Southern Claims Commission, and the action thereon."

Mr. O'DONNELL. I accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution reported by the committee will be considered.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the question is put on agreeing to the resolution let us have some explanation from the gentleman who presents it. It seems to me that the proposition is simply to provide, if I may use the expression, a sinecure for somebody at a high rate of salary; for we all know that the references of matters to the Court of Claims by this House or by any of its committees are comparatively infrequent. The employment of a clerk at an annual salary, such as is paid regular committee clerks, in order that he may simply keep an index and digest of such matters as are referred by this House to the Court of Claims, seems to be a prodigal expenditure of public money. Certainly it should not be agreed to without some satisfactory explanation, which I should be glad to hear. It appears from this report that the total number of cases which have been referred by this House or its committees to the Court of Claims from the time of the passage of the Bowman act to the present time is only about 2,000. Hence the position of a clerk whose only duty it shall be to keep a record of cases transferred from this House to the Court of Claims would be, it seems to me, practically a sinecure. I would like to hear some explanation showing what, in the judgment of the committee, will probably be the extent of the duties required of this clerk.

Mr. O'DONNELL. If the gentleman had heard the report he would have observed the concluding recommendation of the committee, that during the recess of Congress this clerk shall be under the direction of the Clerk of the House, who will find abundant work for him to perform. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE], who argued this matter before the Committee on Accounts, can give a full explanation as to the necessity for this clerk.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the resolution be read once more. I did not hear any clause in regard to the employment of this clerk during the recess by the Clerk of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The resolution as proposed to be amended was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think in my amendment the words "or Commissary-General" ought to be inserted after "Quartermaster-General." I modify the amendment in that way.

Mr. PAYSON. I did not hear in the resolution as just read the provision mentioned a moment ago by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. O'DONNELL].

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask the Clerk to read the concluding part of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inasmuch as 43,256 of these claims of record, involving millions of dollars, are likely to come before Congress in their order, your committee think it wise to recommend the passage of the above resolution, with the amendment to add after the last word the following: "During the recess of Congress said J. B. Holloway, or his successor, shall be subject to the direction of the Clerk of the House."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment from the committee as just read.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there not an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment just read comes from the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Ought we not first to act on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana? Does it not modify the amendment of the committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood there was a substitute reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee does not report a substitute, but reports back the resolution with an amendment. The first question is on that amendment.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as modified by himself.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope there will be some explanation from somebody in reference to this resolution.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand the resolution, if the clerk named in it should happen to die, this business will stop.

Mr. O'DONNELL. Oh, no; there is provision for a successor.

Mr. STEELE. Why should any particular person be named in the resolution anyhow? Why not provide simply for the employment of a clerk?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I can explain why Mr. Holloway is named. Without exception during the Forty-ninth Congress he was connected with this committee. He has been connected with it ever since its organization. He knows more about the work of the committee than any member of Congress. I venture to say, you can not organize a committee of this House as the Committee on War Claims and send them into the committee-room to go to work upon these war claims without some one who understands the routine of the work, for otherwise the members of that committee would not be able to go forward in the discharge of their work within six weeks or two months. Everybody who has had connection with the committee or who has had business before it knows the efficiency of Mr. Holloway.

Now, the necessity for the adoption of this resolution is just this. This Committee on War Claims has six thousand bills before it, four thousand of which will be referred to the Court of Claims if members continue to request their reference as they have done for the last two months. Besides the Court of Claims requires each case to be transmitted with a letter, and a letter in each case, it will be seen, will make a large amount of work. Members of Congress too are coming continually to inquire about papers the Committee on War Claims sent at their request to the War Department. In the case of many of these papers it is found they have been lost in transmission in the beginning to the Committee on War Claims, and then at the close of the session of Congress to the Clerk of the House, and at the next session again to the committee. In these various handlings of the papers in the cases referred to the committee, papers valuable to claimants all over the country have been lost. These things being true, the Committee on War Claims consider it economy to the Government, and at the same time in the very best interest of these war claimants, to ask Congress to give us this man who understands these matters. If he had been in charge of the removal of these papers there would not have been so many lost. I believe it to be in the best interest of the Government and of members of Congress and of the claimants themselves that the resolution reported from the Committee on Accounts should be adopted.

In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to say this place is no sinecure. It is needed because there is more work than the clerk of the committee can do. I am no advocate of giving persons salaries without an equivalent in work, and this man will have all he can do.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. O'DONNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McRAE. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports.

THOMAS MATHEWS AND OTHERS.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 4581) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MOBILE MARINE DOCK COMPANY.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 3102) for the relief of the Mobile Marine Dock Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, submitted in writing the views of a minority of the Committee on War Claims upon House bill 3102, just reported; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee.

EXECUTORS OF LEVIN R. MARSHALL.

Mr. STOCKDALE also, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 8187) for the relief of Stephen Duncan Marshall and George M. Miller, executors of the will of Levin R. Marshall, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

C. M. STINSON.

Mr. BROWER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3595) for the relief of C. M. Stinson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1627) to amend section 25 of the act of March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND LABOR.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported as a substitute for House bill 3408 a bill (H. R. 8181) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture and Labor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanyfng report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 3408 was ordered to be laid on the table.

PROCEEDS OF CAPTURED COTTON.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, having considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

"Whereas Senate Executive Document No. 23, Forty-third Congress, second session, pages 36, 37, shows that there were collected by E. B. Fugua, an agent of the Treasury Department appointed for the purpose of collecting captured and abandoned property in the county of La Fayette, Arkansas, two lots of cotton, one of 150 bales and one of 70 bales, the net proceeds of which two lots in the Treasury aggregate $11,176.87: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed at his earliest opportunity to report to Congress, for its information, whether claim has been made for the proceeds of said cotton or any part thereof, and what action was taken thereon."

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. LANHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOME, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8192) to provide for the incorporation of the National Temperance Home in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

TEMPORARY USE OF LANDS, ALASKA.

Mr. CUTCHEON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8193) to set apart certain lands in Southeastern Alaska for the temporary use of certain native people; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now call the committees for one hour for the consideration of bills under the rule. The hour begins at twenty minutes before 2 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEDALIA, MO.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the unfinished business, the bill H. R. 1599; and I also move that general debate be limited to twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I want twenty-five minutes myself. I move to amend by making the time forty-five minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. Say thirty-five minutes. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to thirty-five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I will agree to that if I can have twenty-five minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make it part of my request that the gentleman from Missouri shall have twenty-five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request of that nature coupled with conditions. Is there objection to limiting general debate to thirty-five minutes?

There was no objection.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the unfinished business. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building at Sedalia, in the State of Missouri; reported with amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. On this bill general debate, by order of the House, is limited to thirty-five minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. As we are still proceeding to dispose of the surplus upon wasteful measures and unnecessary appropriations for public buildings, I deem it my duty to again call the attention of the House and of the country to the situation of the people who have these enormous taxes to pay and these unnecessary expenditures and burdens to meet. As a part of my remarks, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an extract from the Missouri Republican, showing the condition of the great agricultural portion of the population of this country which at last pays all these expenditures.

The Clerk read as follows:

WHO OWNS THE WEST?

All the advocates of a high protective tariff have one refrain to their songs, speeches, magazine essays, and sermons—the vast wealth of the country. "We are the richest country on the globe," they assert, "and the protective tariff has made us so;" and then they present us with a bewildering array of figures towering up into the billions to show how prosperous the land has been under the protective policy of the last twenty-six years. In 1862 we had only 32,000 miles of railroad; now we have 150,000. In 1860 we had only $200,000,000 deposits in savings-banks; now we have $1,100,000,000. In 1860 we had 2,044,000 farms; in 1880 the number had increased to 4,008,000, and at the present time it can not be less than 5,000,000. All this they tell us has been brought about by the protective policy—as if the industry, enterprise, and patient, hard work of the people had nothing to do with the matter.

It may be admitted that the country is rich, and growing more rapidly in wealth than any other country on the globe. But the people have made it so, not the tariff. It has thrived in spite of protection. That policy has drawn enormous wealth from the twenty-nine agricultural States and concentrated it in the nine favored industrial States; and it is in the latter the affluence that excites the admiration of the high-tariff advocates is most conspicuously illustrated.

But, they tell us, the agricultural States have grown rich, too. They also have prospered under protection. See how farms have multiplied in the West and Northwest, and see how railroads have been built in Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin and the States and Territories west of the Mississippi, even to the Pacific, and how this vast region has been subdued to settlement.

All true. But who owns these farms and railroads in the Western States? In one word, who owns the West? The people of the West, it might be answered. But the answer would not be true, as a few indisputable figures will sufficiently prove.

First, as to farms. In 1880 there were 138,500 farms in Kansas, 256,000 in Illinois, 194,000 in Indiana, 247,000 in Ohio, 185,300 in Iowa, 154,000 in Michigan, and 134,300 in Wisconsin—making a total of 1,309,100 in the seven States named. Recent statistics collected by Granger associations and printed in farm journals make the following exhibit of farm mortgages in these same States:

Kansas	$255,000,000
Illinois	1,000,000,000
Indiana	635,000,000
Ohio	1,227,000,000
Iowa	567,000,000
Michigan	500,000,000
Wisconsin	357,000,000
Total	4,521,000,000

These figures are so startling in their enormity as to seem incredible. We do not vouch for their accuracy. They present the 1,309,100 farms in seven Western States as encumbered with an aggregate of four and a half billion mortgage indebtedness, or an average of over $3,400 for each. The assessed valuation of property in these States in 1885 was as follows:

Kansas	$275,500,000
Illinois	797,000,000
Indiana	793,000,000
Iowa	625,000,000
Michigan	850,000,000
Wisconsin	496,000,000
Ohio	1,671,000,000
Total	5,507,500,000

It will be seen that the reported mortgage debts cover about four-fifths the assessed value of the farms; and the bulk of these mortgages are held in the Eastern industrial States.

Next, as to railroads. In the seven Western States named there were, in 1885, 37,000 miles of railroad with a stock and bond account and net earnings as follows:

States.	Stocks and bonds.	Net earnings.
Kansas	$195,700,000	$9,440,000
Illinois	740,000,000	16,000,000
Indiana	320,000,000	5,700,000
Iowa	105,000,000	2,180,000
Michigan	214,000,000	5,000,000
Wisconsin	236,000,000	6,900,000
Ohio	767,000,000	12,300,000
Total	2,537,700,000	57,520,000

These 37,000 miles of railroad, having a nominal value of $2,537,700,000 (over two and a half billion dollars) and yielding annual net earnings of $57,520,000, are put down in the statistics of the day as part of the property of the States in which they lie. But it is a notorious fact that only a very small fraction of their values is owned in these States. The last report of the Iowa railroad commissioners states that only one out of forty stockholders in Iowa roads lives in the State, and only one-seventieth of the capital stock is held in the State. In Illinois a similar condition of things prevails. The official report of the railroad commissioners does not state what proportion of the aggregate capital stock of the Illinois roads is held in Illinois, but the location of the capital stock of the leading roads will assist us in forming an estimate. The Illinois Central has $29,000,000 capital stock, only $685,000, or less than 3 per cent., of which is owned in Illinois. Of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, about 5 per cent. of the capital stock is owned in Illinois; of the Ohio and Mississippi stock, only one-half of 1 per cent.; of the St. Louis, Alton and Terre Haute, less than one-half of 1 per cent. Taking these figures as a guide we may safely estimate that of the 19,000 miles of railway in Illinois, valued in stock and bonds at $740,000,000, the people of Illinois own 5 per cent.; the other 95 per cent. is owned in the rich industrial States of the East.

As Illinois is called the most prosperous and one of the richest agricultural States of the West, it may be inferred that the other States are in no better condition than it in the matter of railroad ownership, and therefore it may be broadly asserted that practically all the railroads in the seven States named, valued at $2,537,700,000 (two and a half billion dollars and over), are owned in the industrial States. The industrial States are therefore drawing a pretty round sum of money for one thing and another from the seven Western States named every year. The items may be stated as follows:

In protective taxes	$150,000,000
In interest on mortgages	270,000,000
In railroad net earnings	57,000,000
Total	477,000,000

The Western States are, in fact, being bled to death. Western farmers are actually becoming poorer and poorer every year. As a body they do not make a living, and the convincing proof of this fact is that their farms are fast passing under mortgage to the money-lending manufacturing States of the East. Twenty-five years ago these mortgages were few in number and small in amount; now they number millions and cover an aggregate value of thousands of millions, and all bear 6 to 8 per cent. interest.

The West does not own itself. It is owned by the industrial States. Twenty-six years of the malign, sectional, and oppressive policy of high tariff has done the work and done it effectually. The industrial States of the East, enriched beyond estimate by the annual tribute of $600,000,000 exacted for a quarter of a century from the other States under the false pretense of building up home manufactures, own all Western railroads, telegraph lines, and bridges, and hold mortgages on nearly all farms, their cities, and towns.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, that is a showing which it seems to me ought to call the attention of this House, and especially the attention of the gentlemen who are representing agricultural constituencies. It so happens that people engaged in agriculture, scattered on farms, are not able to meet and organize, as those living in the larger cities and manufacturing districts can, for the purpose of urging legislation here for their relief. They must bear these burdens in patience, and they have borne them for the last quarter of a century. While we are here passing without challenge bills in every form, exacting from them an excessive tribute in the way of taxation, we are denounced by the monopolists and the beneficiaries of this system of taxation whenever any move is made in this House for the purpose of reducing these taxes and these burdens or to call a halt in these extravagant appropriations of public money.

Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the erection of public buildings where they are required and necessary, if there were some general law upon this subject; and I am sorry my friend from South Carolina and his committee have not reported some general bill by which the Departments can designate and inform Congress as to the particular points and places where public buildings are needed. We are going on erecting public buildings in towns of ten, fifteen, or twenty-five thousand inhabitants, where the rentals are not more than four or five hundred dollars per annum, mainly for the purpose of ornament and for adorning the abodes of those living in ease and leisure at the expense of the farmers, who, as all who live in agricultural districts are aware, are ground between the upper and nether millstones of taxation.

We find that mortgages cover not only the great Northwestern States, the newly settled States, but even the older States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri pay every year on mortgages on their farms and on investments in railroads amounts running up to half a billion of dollars annually. And how have these mortgages accrued? Loan associations of the industrial States have their agents all over our Western country who loan there their money at 9 or 10 per cent. and sometimes 12 or 15 per cent.; and so far as my personal experience goes, these mortgages are required to be paid, not in the lawful currency of this country as provided by law, but they always contain a clause, inserted at the instance of these Shylocks, that the money shall be paid in gold, and gold only. So that the attempt is made to cause the debts of this country, not only farm mortgages amounting to billions of dollars, but railway mortgages and national and State debts to be paid on a gold basis by the limitation of the issue of money in any other form than that of gold. And by the protective-tariff scheme that we have, the duties on imports are enhanced in value and made more onerous and burdensome from the fact that they are to be paid in gold, or at the gold valuation.

Thus it is that we go on here, sir, session after session, refusing to reduce taxes, refusing to give better facilities for a currency that may be adequate for the business of this country, until the agricultural people, as is known to every gentleman who represents an agricultural district, are overwhelmed with debt and despondency and they look to Congress for some relief, and this is the character of the relief we are giving them.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. In the statement which the gentleman had read at the desk a few moments ago as to the mortgages on Illinois farms the amount was set down, in round numbers, at $700,000,000. Now, the total area of Illinois is, in round numbers, 36,000,000 acres, and not over two-thirds of that can be called farm lands, but if you take every acre of land in the State, the gentleman's figures would make an average mortgage of over $20 to the acre on the whole State of Illinois, and if you take the farm lands, it would make nearly $30 an acre. Now, Mr. Chairman, while I have nothing to say in favor of this public-building bill, I want to say to the House that the mortgages on the farm lands of Illinois do not average $5, no, not $3 an acre, instead of $30.

Mr. BLAND. Well, take the gentleman's own statement, $5 an acre; that is enough to bankrupt his constituency, and it will do it. I am glad to see that side of the House and gentlemen pretending to represent Western constituencies undertake to excuse the enormities of this taxing system and the poverty it has brought upon the people. I want the gentleman to understand that his constituency are not in favor of this system of public buildings nor in favor of this system of taxation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does me injustice. I am not in favor of this public-building bill.

Mr. BLAND. I am not talking about the public-building bill in itself, but about the system of taxation that we have adopted here to meet these expenditures. That is the burden we have to look to.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FUNSTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. BLAND. I can not yield. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that these gentlemen who are questioning me now and pretending to represent Western constituencies have not raised their voices against these extravagant appropriations and are not in favor of relieving the people of their burdens.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing the House on the question before it.

Mr. FUNSTON. The gentleman from Missouri has spoken for the farmer. I want to ask him this question: What is there that the farmers have to buy that is not cheaper to-day than it was in 1860, in free-trade days?

Mr. BLAND. Everything is lower that the farmer has to sell than it was then, considering costs of living, for everything is higher that he has to buy.

Mr. FUNSTON. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. BLAND. I decline to yield.

Mr. FUNSTON. I did not get through with my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. FUNSTON. He gave me permission to ask a question, and I did not get through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. BLAND. No, sir.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GEAR. I want to correct a statement of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I decline to yield.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman has made a misstatement in regard to my State, and I want to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is entitled to the floor, and he declines to yield.

Mr. GEAR. I want to correct the gentleman's statement about my State.

Mr. BLAND. Let the gentleman correct it in his own time.

Mr. GEAR. But the statement goes into the RECORD as a part of the gentleman's speech, and I want to correct it. I ask the gentleman if he will not yield for a correction?

Mr. BLAND. I will not yield.

Mr. GEAR. Will not the gentleman yield for a correction of his statement?

Mr. BLAND. No, sir; I decline to yield.

Mr. GEAR. If the gentleman can afford to stand there and make statements that he knows are not true and decline to yield for a correction——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri declines to yield.

Mr. GEAR. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I hope you will yield and quit. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman declines to yield for a correction.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I hope this will not come out of my time. I do not know why gentlemen should appeal to me to yield them time. They have time of their own if they want to oppose this bill.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I want it understood that I do not ask a minute out of the gentleman's time. I want a minute to myself to correct a statement that he has made about my State.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman can correct in his own time all the statements he wants to correct. I gave the authority for the statements I made. If that authority is not valid——

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman gave as his authority a newspaper article, which is no authority at all on a matter of that kind. I have here the figures from the official records.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman can produce the records in his own time.

Mr. GEAR. When the gentleman undertakes to state the assessed valuation of farm lands in Iowa he ought to base his statement upon the record. I have the record here.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country have been promised, under this protective system, a market for their products; they have been told that they would share in the benefits of this system of taxation, which raises a hundred million dollars of surplus to be placed in the Treasury. But where is the market of our farmers to-day? I want gentlemen to point out in what respect the value of the live-stock or the lands or the agricultural products of the farmer has been raised under this system. On the contrary, the value of all the products of the farmer has been going down from year to year for the last quarter of a century, until now scarcely anything that is produced on the farm pays the expense of its production. Prohibited from access to a market abroad, the farmer, by this infamous system, is confined to a market at home, which does not furnish a sufficient demand for his products.

And, sir, these public-building bills, one hundred and fifty, I think, in number, carrying appropriations in the aggregate of $25,000,000 to $27,000,000, are the sort of legislation calculated to tax the agriculturists for the benefit of the cities. So the protective tariff and the various governmental measures affecting the financial question tend to draw population to the large cities, to adorn and beautify the abodes of those living in palatial mansions, until we see our cities growing wealthier year by year and the rural portions of the country becoming more and more impoverished.

So far as this pending bill is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I think it wholly unnecessary. No courts are held at Sedalia, and without making an appropriation for constructing any building, it would be easy enough to procure for an annual rental of $400 or $500 accommodations amply sufficient for all the business that the Government is required to do at that place.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Half a minute.

Mr. BLAND. I will reserve that half minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIBBLE. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] on my right.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my colleague [Mr. BLAND] during time given under the rules for the consideration of this bill proposing to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of my home—a young city of which every citizen of the State is proud—has felt impelled by a sense of consistency, if not of duty, to demand five-sevenths of the entire time allowed for debate, and, ignoring the issue before the House, consume such time in discussing the question of protective tariff and high taxes.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not make any point against me in the State of Missouri or on this floor when he comes to compare his tariff record and votes with mine. I, too, believe in reforming the tariff, as I believe also in the sanctity of the Christian religion, the influence of which I wish to see spread all over the earth; but I do not believe this is the proper time for the discussion of either topic. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, a moment in regard to the merits of this bill. Is it an unreasonable request which the people of Sedalia prefer through the unanimous report of this committee? This is a town of about 20,000 people, and which for twenty years has yielded to the Government a net revenue from postal business. In 1886 I submitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House, which then reported favorably on a bill for the erection of a public building at Sedalia, a table embracing statistics of the Post-Office Department, to which I now refer. In the ten years from 1876 to 1886 the post-office at Sedalia, besides paying all its expenses, yielded $123,500 of net revenue to the Government. In the five years immediately preceding the preparation of these statistics the postal business at that place had yielded $66,000 net revenue, and in the last preceding four years $53,000. This bill proposes to make an appropriation of only $50,000—less than the net revenue yielded from its postal business in four years.

Since the time when these statistics were prepared the business of Sedalia has grown immensely. In 1885, the last year embraced in this statistical abstract, the number of pieces of mail matter handled at Sedalia was 880,000; in 1886 the number was 1,489,000, and in 1887 2,076,000—showing a net increase of something like 50 per cent. per annum. Of mail matter originating in this city there were, in 1885, 185,000 pieces; in 1886, 304,000; in 1887, 473,000 pieces. Is there a place in this country which, in the matter of increase of postal business, can make a better showing?

Sedalia is in the heart of the best country in Missouri. It is the focal point of six railroad lines. The county has a tax-list of nearly $10,000,000 and the city a tax-list of about $4,000,000. The population of the county is nearly 40,000 and of the city nearly 20,000. The people of the county have erected in that city for county purposes a building which cost, with its furniture, $125,000; and, while some men undertook, when the proposition was pending, to make a little "buncombe" by talking about high taxes, there is not a man in that county to-day who is not ashamed to admit that he ever opposed the erection of that building.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat the expression of my regret that my distinguished colleague, calculating, as well he may, upon the influence of his long service in this body, should have felt called upon on this occasion to occupy the time, as he has done here to-day, under conditions which I no not think fair to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DIBBLE. All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, in those two minutes is that I am glad to say the time of the House, when a proper occasion offers, will be given to a thorough discussion of the tariff question on both sides, as a number of gentlemen seem anxious to pursue that discussion. But I submit it has no reference to the question before the committee. The only point, of course, upon which the committee might desire a suggestion is as to this public building. They will not have to go to any foreign loan association to borrow money at a high rate of interest to put it up.

As I believe my time is exhausted, I will now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$5,000."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 126.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 161.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 144.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. DIBBLE and Mr. BLAND.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3, noes 160.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment of the committee was then adopted.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment.

Mr. DIBBLE demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEABD withholds his remarks for revision. [See APPENDIX.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the special order fixed for to-day.

Mr. TILLMAN. Pending that motion I desire to call up House bill No. 6894, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; and thus raise the question of consideration.

Mr. STEELE. I take it that it is not necessary to raise the question of consideration in that way, this being a general appropriation bill which may be called up at any time.

Mr. NELSON. I hope the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina will not prevail. The Committee on Indian Affairs got this day under a special order of the House, whereas the Committee on Appropriations have the right of way and can call up their bills at any time. If insisted upon I hope the motion will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have the Clerk read the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday the 7th, Thursday the 8th, and Saturday the 10th days of March, 1888, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, in such order as may be designated by said committee. The order not to conflict with prior orders, revenue or general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of consideration is raised.

Mr. PERKINS. The motion of the gentleman from South Carolina raises that question. The only question, as I understand it, is on that motion, and the vote on that settles the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote in the negative on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina would bring the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas before the House for consideration. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose stated.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the question is submitted, I want to raise this point: I understand the gentleman from Arkansas calls up a special order setting apart this day for the consideration of certain bills. Is it competent to set aside the privilege which has been given to that committee, under a special order of the House, by calling up an appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the question of consideration is raised on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEELE. Does not the order provide that its execution shall not interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills?

Mr. MORROW. This is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. PEEL. I make the point that it is not such a bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the House on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to go into Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill, which the special order excepts.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 9, noes 107.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. PEEL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 19, noes 144.

So the motion of Mr. TILLMAN was rejected.

Mr. PEEL. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill under the special order.

AGREEMENT WITH THE GROS VENTRE, PIEGAN, AND OTHER INDIANS.

The first business on the Calendar under the special order was the bill (H. R. 1956) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Is this the first formal reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. NELSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that the first reading be dispensed with, and that the bill be read by sections.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

The Clerk continued to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON (some time subsequently). I again ask that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be taken up for consideration by sections.

There was no objection.

The bill was read by sections.

When the Clerk had read article 6 of the agreement,

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask my friend from Arkansas whether it is not better after the period of twenty-five years has elapsed, if there is such power in Congress to so modify this contract, that a further extension of the period, in the discretion of the President, may be provided for? The probabilities are that at the end of twenty-five years these Indians will hardly be in a condition to take their lands in severalty. They are as yet an uncultivated people, and twenty-five years would be a short space of time, under their present conditions, to entitle them to the privileges proposed to be granted by this provision. Further, I would ask if the committee considered the propriety of amending or seeking to amend this agreement by subsequent provisions, if Congress shall see proper hereafter?

Mr. PEEL. I think that would be a proper course to pursue. But this bill is simply to ratify the agreement already made, and the provision to which the gentleman has referred is not one of the terms of the agreement.

I would say further to the gentleman from Indiana that if it becomes manifest to Congress that the Indians are not ready in twenty-five years to take their lands, Congress would then have power to extend the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that clear? We make an agreement that after twenty-five years they shall have the lands absolutely. It appears to me that that is not a long enough period.

Mr. PEEL. I will say that that is the longest period that I have ever known in any bill ratifying agreements with Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the other clause has been incorporated, that the President might, in his discretion, extend the time. These Indians, it should also be considered, are among the most uncultivated of our tribes. I perceive, however, that we can not amend this agreement, and that all that can be done by Congress would be to declare a modification by a subsequent provision. I will call the attention of the committee to it hereafter.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the signatures to the agreement.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Two verbal amendments in the preamble, to substitute "John" for "Joseph," and to substitute "or" for "of," were agreed to.

The enacting clauses of the bill were read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the terms of said agreement the sum of $430,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available.

Mr. PEEL. As the provisions of the bill are so very plain on its face and they have gone through the revision of this commission and also of the Indian Department and have been duly considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have made a unanimous report, if no other information is desired I will move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will permit me, it may be of interest to most gentlemen present to have some knowledge of the boundaries of the several reservations for the Indians. The committee has dispensed with the reading of the names, but I think it would be well to have the descriptions of those boundaries read.

Mr. TOOLE. The Clerk will find them on pages 7, 23, and 33.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is hereby agreed that the separate reservation for the Indians now attached to and receiving rations at the Fort Peck agency, Montana, shall be bounded as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point in the middle of the main channel of the Missouri River, opposite the mouth of Big Muddy Creek; thence up the Missouri River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to a point opposite the mouth of Milk River; thence up the middle of the main channel of Milk River to Porcupine Creek; thence up Porcupine Creek, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to a point 40 miles due north in a direct line from the middle of the main channel of the Missouri River opposite the mouth of Milk River; thence due east to the middle of the main channel of Big Muddy Creek; thence down said creek, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the place of beginning. And said Indians shall have the right to take timber for building and fencing purposes and for fuel from the bottom lands on the right bank of the Missouri River opposite the reservation above described.

It is hereby agreed that the separate reservation for the Indians now attached to and receiving rations at the Fort Belknap agency shall be bounded as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point in the middle of the main channel of Milk River, opposite the mouth of Snake Creek; thence due south to a point due west of the western extremity of the Little Rocky Mountains; thence due east to the crest of said mountains at their western extremity, and thence following the southern crest of said mountains to the eastern extremity thereof; thence in a northerly direction in a direct line to a point in the middle of the main channel of Milk River opposite the mouth of People's Creek; thence up Milk River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the place of beginning: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, set apart a tract of land, within said reservation, not to exceed 160 acres in extent, for the establishment and maintenance of an Indian mission and industrial school, under the auspices of the Society of Jesus, to include the site of their present mission buildings; but such privilege shall not debar or exclude other religious societies from establishing Indian missions and schools within said reservation, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

It is hereby agreed that the separate reservation for the Indians now attached to and drawing rations at the Blackfeet agency shall be bounded as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point in the middle of the main channel of the Marias River opposite the mouth of Cut Bank Creek; thence up Cut Bank Creek, in the middle of the main channel thereof, 20 miles, following the meanderings of the creek; thence due north to the northern boundary of Montana; thence west along said boundary to the summit of the main chain of the Rocky Mountains; thence in a southerly direction along the summit of said mountains to a point due west from the source of the North Fork of Birch Creek; thence due east to the source of said North Fork; thence down said North Fork to the main stream of Birch Creek; thence down Birch Creek, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the Marias River; thence down the Marias River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the place of beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The third section, which was proposed, is not embraced in this bill?

Mr. PEEL. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to make any motion, although it seems to me from what is known of the condition of those Indians it would have been better if this agreement had provided that after the lapse of twenty-five years the period might be prolonged. I have no idea that these Indians will be in a condition to take their lands in severalty within a period of twenty-five years. Still, I make no motion, as I do not see how that can be provided for at this time.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DIVISION OF SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into smaller reservations, and for other purposes. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the Clerk proceed to read the bill until we can get copies of it.

The Clerk read the first and second sections of the bill, the second section being as follows:

SEC. 2. That the following tract of land, being a part of the said Great Sioux reservation, in the Territory of Dakota, is hereby reserved for the Indians receiving rations and annuities at the Rosebud agency, in said Territory of Dakota, namely: Commencing at the mouth of Dog Ears Creek, on White River, running thence directly south to the north line of the State of Nebraska; thence west along the north of said State to a point due south from the source of the principal branch of Pass Creek; thence due north to the said source of the said principal branch of Pass Creek; thence down Pass Creek to White River; thence down White River to place of beginning, at the mouth of Dog Ears Creek.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand it is proposed by the committee to strike out the second section and adopt a substitute for it, I ask that that be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read the second section.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did the Clerk [illegible] as it appears in this bill which I hold in my hand, or the original second section? I wish to know whether the Clerk has before him the bill in which the original second section is stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has been reading the bill which is on the Calendar, and he has read section 2, which, it has been stated, the committee propose to strike out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Clerk to report the second section as finally reported by the committee.

The proposed substitute for the second section is as follows:

Strike out section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That the following tract of land, being a part of the said Great reservation of the Sioux Nation, in the Territory of Dakota, is hereby set apart for a permanent reservation for the Indians receiving rations and annuities at the Rosebud agency, in said Territory of Dakota, namely: Commencing in the middle of the main channel of the Missouri River at the intersection of the south line of Brulé County; thence down said middle of the main channel of said river to the intersection of the ninety-ninth degree of west longitude from Greenwich; thence due south to the forty-third parallel of latitude; thence west along said parallel to a point due south from the source of the principal branch of Pass Creek; thence due north to the said source of the said principal branch of Pass Creek; thence down Pass Creek to White River; thence down White River to a point intersecting the west line of Gregory County extended north; thence south on said extended west line of Gregory County to the intersection of the south line of Brulé County extended west; thence due east on said south line of Brulé County extended to the point of beginning in the Missouri River, including entirely within said reservation all islands, if any, in said river.

The substitute for section 2 was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause certificates to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which certificates shall be of the legal effect and declare that the United States does and will hold the lands thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, to his heirs, according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs, as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever, and patents shall issue accordingly; and if any lease or conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such lease or conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void: Provided, That the law of descent and partition in force in the State or Territory where the lands may be situated shall apply thereto after certificates or patents therefor have been executed and delivered. Each of the certificates and patents aforesaid shall be recorded in the General Land Office, and afterward delivered, free of charge, to the allottee entitled thereto.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to the provision in this section as to the time that is named for obtaining title, which is fixed at twenty-five years. It seems to me that it would be probably advantageous to the Indian, and could not possibly result to his injury, if some discretionary power in regard to that matter were left to the President. I, therefore, suggest that this section be amended by inserting, after the words "twenty-five years," in line 6, the words "or for a longer period, in the discretion of the President of the United States."

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, while I am not authorized by the committee to accept the amendment, I have no objection to it myself; and if no member of the committee or of the House objects to it, I will accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN (when section 12 was read). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the twelfth section shall be passed over informally, with the right to return and amend.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the passage and approval of this act, and the benefits accruing and to accrue to said Sioux Indians, and the allotment of lands in severalty as herein provided, and the establishment of the separate reservations hereinbefore created shall be taken and held to be an extinguishment of all title and claim on the part of said Indians to any part of the Great reservation of the Sioux Nation mentioned in the first section of this act and not included in the separate reservations in this act created, and on the part of the Indians receiving rations and annuities on each of the said separate reservations, to the lands described in each of the other separate reservations so created. This extinguishment shall not affect the title of any individual Indian to his separate allotment on land not included in any of said separate reservations provided for in this act, nor any agreement heretofore made with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company or the Dakota Central Railroad Company for a right of way through said reservation; and for any lands acquired by any such agreement to be used in connection therewith, except as hereinafter provided; but the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company and the Dakota Central Railroad Company shall respectively have the right to take and use, prior to any white person, and to any corporation, the right of way provided for in said agreements, with not to exceed 20 acres of land, in addition to the right of way, for stations for every ten miles of road; and said companies shall also respectively have the right to take and use for right of way, side-track, depot, and station privileges, machine-shop, freight-house, round-house, and yard facilities, prior to any white person, and to any corporation or association, so much of the two separate sections of land embraced in said agreements; also, the former company so much of the 188 acres, and the latter company so much of the 75 acres, on the east side of the Missouri River, likewise embraced in said agreements, as the Secretary of the Interior shall decide to be absolutely necessary upon each side of said river for approaches to the bridge of each of said companies to be constructed across the river, for right of way, side-track, depot, and station privileges, machine-shop, freight-house, round-house, and yard facilities, and no more: Provided, That the said railway companies shall have made the payments according to the terms of said agreements for each mile of right of way and each acre of land for railway purposes which said companies take and use under the provisions of this act, and shall satisfy the Secretary of the Interior to that effect: Provided further, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be sold or leased by the company, and they shall not be used, except in such manner and for such purposes only as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railroad; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used, such portion shall revert to the Government: And provided further, That said payments shall be made and said conditions performed within six months after the passage of this act. And said roads shall be constructed over said lands and right of way within two years from the passage and approval of this act, or the balance of said lands and right of way not occupied shall be forfeited and revert to the Government and be subject to the other provisions of this act.

The committee recommended striking out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and part of line 9, down to and including the words "created and," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That the acceptance of this act by the Indians in manner and form as required by the said treaty concluded between the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians and the United States, April 29, 1868, and proclaimed by the President February 24, 1869, as hereinafter provided, shall be taken and held to be a release of all title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] that the provision at the end of section 15 in regard to forfeiture ought to be made a little more explicit. As it reads now, it provides that in case the roads are not constructed over said lands and right of way within two years of the passage and approval of this act the balance of the lands and right of way not occupied shall be forfeited. It seems to me that in this case there should be an unconditional forfeiture; so I suggest an amendment of the provision so as to make it read:

And said road shall be constructed over said lands and right of way within two years from the passage and approval of this act; and unless said roads shall be constructed over said lands and right of way within two years from the passage and approval of this act, all of said lands granted and said right of way shall be forfeited and revert to the Government and be subject to the other provisions of this act.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I am not authorized by the committee to accept that amendment, but I really believe it expresses what was the intention of the committee when the provision was placed in the bill. I note the distinction between the provision as it stands and the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The provision now is that in case they fail to complete the roads within two years only so much as is unoccupied shall be forfeited; while the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, as I understand it, goes to this extent, that unless the roads are completed within two years the entire grant provided for in this bill shall be forfeited.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. About how many miles of road are to be built?

Mr. GIFFORD. One line is 150 miles, and the other 120 miles.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the object of this amendment, it is to provide that if one of these companies should have built 100 miles of its road within the two years, but not the other 50 miles, it shall forfeit the right of way, etc., not only for the 50 miles unbuilt, but also for the 100 miles that was completed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that would be a most unreasonable amendment, and one which I think will not be found in any other act. Let me call the attention of the committee to the situation here. There is granted to these railroad companies merely the right of way across this reservation, so that they may build their roads there.

Mr. PERKINS. It is not even that. They pay for it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes, the right of way is not given them, but they pay for it more than the lands are actually worth.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The State in which I live is very deeply interested, and the Territory in which the gentleman on my right [Mr. GIFFORD] lives is very deeply interested in having these roads built so as to connect one part of that Territory with another, and in order that the people of the Black Hills can purchase our products and that we may sell to them our commodities. The construction of these roads is very greatly desired by the people of that country; yet it is proposed here that if either of these companies, after having built, say, 100 miles of road, and paid for every foot of the right of way, depot grounds, etc., shall then fail for any reason whatever to complete the road within the specified time, it shall forfeit not only the remainder of the right of way, but the road built, the bridges, structures of every kind, stations, etc.

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman from Minnesota will yield to me a moment, I think I can suggest a way out of the difficulty.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. PEEL. In grants of rights of way made by Congress the limitation of time for the completion of the work is generally two years, but in some instances it is three years, and I presume there would be no objection to striking out "two" here and inserting "three," provided the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] will suspend his remarks for a moment until a message from the Senate is received.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; when a message from the Senate, by

Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1040) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building, and to provide accommodations for the city post-office; and

A bill (S. 1198) for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York.

DIVISION OF SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. PERKINS. Before the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] proceeds, I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. Perhaps that gentleman in offering this amendment did not remember the fact that these railroad companies pay to these Indians $110 a mile for the right of way in addition to paying them $5 an acre for the land. If the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana is to be adopted, it should of course go further and provide for returning to the railroad companies this money which is now in the Treasury of the United States and has been for several years.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will explain to my friend from Kansas the reasons on which this amendment rests. This whole movement takes its origin from the necessity for the construction of railroads through that region of country. The pressure for the right of way for the purpose of reaching the Black Hills region of country was irresistible. The motive in that direction is not so strong now as it was formerly. The construction of what is known as the Elkhorn Valley Railroad, which reaches the Black Hills region by running around this reservation, has in part furnished the people of the Black Hills region with a proper outlet. But still every person must concede that roads running directly east and west are desirable.

Now, inasmuch as this movement which has been set on foot operates, as I think, somewhat to the disadvantage of these Indians, it seems to me a restriction of the kind proposed is not at all improper. It is to be borne in mind that under the arrangement by which the Government obtains the control of this large portion of that reservation you are compelled to do what seems to me some injustice to those Indian tribes. The Indians at Pine Ridge, the Ogalalla band of Sioux, occupy a comparatively poor region of country. We are adopting in this instance, as we have adopted very generally, the policy of crowding these unfortunate people upon the poorer kinds of land, land not well adapted to cultivation, thus retarding their progress in civilization.

While in the Pine Ridge agency there may be some good tracts adapted to cultivation, the character of the great body of the land is indicated by the title—it is "pine ridge." It is covered with a slight growth of timber; the soil is sandy. With the exception of a few good valleys, the land is not adapted to irrigation or cultivation.

When this scheme was first set on foot by a body of very intelligent gentlemen—members, perhaps, of both Houses of Congress, certainly of the Senate—there was not, I think, careful consideration of the character of the country, or a different principle would have been adopted with special reference to this particular agency—the Pine Ridge agency. By the arrangement proposed, while there is secured to the Indians, I concede, some capital which may be very important to them in the early future, we at the same time put them to some disadvantage in taking from them a large portion of the best quality of land on this large reservation, not only upon the eastern side, but clear through to the land we bought a few years ago from these Indians for the benefit of the Black Hills. Under these circumstances it seems to me we should return to our earlier policy, in accordance with which, whenever a valuable concession was made to a railroad corporation, it was expected to carry out the contract within an express and specific period of time.

That is the principle we adopted in regard to the "Backbone grant," and I may say all the grants made in the more cautious periods of our legislative history. The "Backbone grant" and a large number of grants made in the Southwest were made upon absolute condition of forfeiture unless the work should be completed within a definite period of time. I think it not unreasonable to provide that these roads, both of them, shall be constructed within the time named, or otherwise the companies shall lose the rights conferred by this legislation. The privileges which these corporations will acquire under this legislation are especially valuable to them, and they can afford to submit to this condition.

A MEMBER. Would you agree to extend the period to three years?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should not object to such an extension of time; but I want a definite period fixed within which these roads shall be constructed. If the roads be not built within that time, let there be a forfeiture, and let other parties construct roads through that region of country.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if there has ever been in any other charter or grant of this kind a provision of such severity I have not seen it. I can not say positively there has been no such provision, because I have not seen all of these grants; but I have seen a great many of them.

I am not here to vote for any land grant or subsidy. I believe, Mr. Chairman, I shall never vote for a land grant or subsidy to any railroad company or other corporation. But in this instance there is nothing granted but the land which it is necessary these companies should have for their tracks, depot grounds, etc. And for these they pay full value. In my judgment, the people there are more anxious and more interested to have the roads built than these corporations are to build them.

Mr. WEAVER. Would the gentleman not be willing to compromise?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not speak for any one but myself, and in my judgment this amendment will rather retard than hasten the building of these roads.

Mr. WEAVER. I thought you spoke for your district.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes; but I have not the right to speak in reference to this matter but for myself.

Mr. WEAVER. Would not the gentleman be willing to compromise on three years?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I can not say that; and I see no good, but possible harm, to result from such a restriction or forfeiture. Different circumstances that can not now be foreseen might postpone the construction.

I remember well when the Winona and St. Peter Railroad was built, that, in order to comply with the requirements of the land grant which provided for a forfeiture if the road was not completed within a given time, the company sent out a large force in winter, which, on account of the severity of the weather and the distance from settlements, was in great danger of perishing before it could be succored, and which had to be withdrawn before the work was finished.

Either one of these companies could build its line across this reservation in one year if it was at liberty to direct its undivided energy to that end. But it may be that neither would be at liberty to do this. Even after the work was begun a financial crisis might arrest its progress; and there is no reason why these companies should be required to proceed at the peril of forfeiting millions of dollars on account of embarrassments which they could not foresee. The franchise here granted prejudices no one; and the building of the roads would especially benefit the Territory of Dakota and the States of Minnesota and Iowa.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the amount proposed to be paid to the Indians a reasonable amount?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I believe the amount proposed to be paid is a great deal more than the land is worth or can be sold for to anybody else.

Mr. LIND. How long did it take the St. Peter and Winona Railroad Company to construct the 200 miles of their road from Tracy to the Missouri River immediately east of this reservation?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not know. But this is wholly immaterial, for I have admitted that if these companies are at liberty to go on with these roads unobstructed and regardless of anything else, they could build them in one year. But who can say that either their finances or their other engagements would admit of this?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PEEL. Are we proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. We are, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if the facts were understood about this matter there would be no desire to make this amendment. These Indians entered into a treaty with these railroad companies, with the sanction of the President and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, by which they were to give these Indians $110 a mile for the right of way and $5 an acre for their lands. The lands not needed by the railroad companies were to be opened to settlement and the Government proposed to sell them to white men for 50 cents an acre. And they require these railroad companies to pay about $15 an acre for the right of way and $5 an acre for land used for depot purposes. The companies have complied with the treaty and the understanding between the Indians and the Government of the United States, and have deposited the money in the Treasury, where it remains and has remained for eight years past, subject to the order of the Indians.

Now, sir, the proposition which is suggested here is, in my judgment, the most unreasonable provision that could have been suggested; that is to say, that if the companies fail for a single day to complete the entire line of road, that not only shall they forfeit the money which has been paid and the right of way and the land, but even the railroad itself so far as it has been completed. I think that is inequitable and unjust.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the whole bill in relation to this matter is unjust and inequitable. It imposes harsh restrictions. It provides that after the Secretary of the Interior shall have found out how much land these companies need for depot purposes, the companies shall then, under no circumstances, have the right to lease or dispose in any manner of any portion of the land, when everybody knows, who knows anything about that country at all, that it is necessary to have elevators, coal-bins, coal-houses, and other conveniences of that kind on the line outside of the mere railroad business. How are they to get sites for such structures?

The Indians will occupy all the lands adjacent under allotments. In point of fact, they are occupying them now under virtual allotments, and there will be no chance for anybody to occupy any of the Indian lands or the railroad lands for such purposes, in order to carry on the commerce of that region.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. If I can be recognized I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is very doubtful whether it will be of any advantage to the railroad companies to accept the provisions of this bill; but even if they do, and go on and complete the roads, then by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], if incorporated upon the bill, they are to lose everything they have done if they do not finish every foot of the roads within a certain limited time.

The Backbone railroad to which he refers, to establish a parallel case, did not pay $15 an acre for the right of way and $5 an acre for depot purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. No.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. They paid nothing whatever; and so the citation he makes to support his amendment, as an example, has no relevancy at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Only in this, that we are amending legislation to furnish facilities to get through this country.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say in conclusion. The entire provision, and some of the provisions of the bill, are contrary to the agreement of the Indians, and, in my judgment, are unreasonable and unjust. It makes it hard for the companies, and unnecessarily so, to accomplish anything in the way of completing their lines, and is not beneficial to the Indians or to the white men there. If the railroad is to have the right of way at all, let it be fairly treated; and certainly the provisions of this amendment do not accomplish that.

Mr. PEEL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has my hearty concurrence. What is the purpose of this provision of the bill? It is to give to those corporations a large and valuable franchise, carrying with it certain privileges—the right of way and land. Now, if they do not want the right of way this bill would not be here.

What does the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana propose? That if a railroad company does not build the railroad within a certain fixed period, the right of way, land, and other rights shall be forfeited to the Government. It is as fair and straightforward a proposition as I can well conceive of. The time has gone by when there should be too much consideration given to these railroad corporations; but if we are to give them such privileges let the grant be properly guarded, and if they fail to execute their side of the arrangement with the Government, the Government should undoubtedly retain the power to repossess itself of the land which has been devoted to the object named.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. They ought to have their money back, then.

Mr. RANDALL. In addition, Mr. Chairman, let me say that if the time fixed by the bill is not long enough, if two years is not deemed sufficient to construct the roads, give them three. I do not object to a reasonable liberality in reference to the time allowed for the completion of the roads; but I say, on the naked proposition, that if they do not construct the roads for which they are asking land and the right of way, that then the rights and privileges and the ownership of the land shall terminate and come back to the original owner, and I am surprised that there is any objection to such a reasonable proposition.

I conferred with one or two members of the committee on the subject, and I did not find that they objected to it. True, I may not have talked to all of them; but I think it a most equitable proposition and one not intended in the least to hamper or interfere with the construction of the roads, but, on the contrary, each company is authorized to go on and build its road and enjoy the privileges, rights, and liberality which the Government has been willing to concede to them. If they do not build their roads, then all we ask is that this legislative provision shall be incorporated in the bill by which the lands and the rights shall revert to the Government.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes; but you take not only the lands and the right of way, but you take that part of the road that they may have built.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has three minutes remaining.

Mr. PEEL. I hope discussion will now cease on this question.

Mr. RANDALL. If the friends of the bill want the period to be fixed at three years let them say so, and I will make that motion.

Mr. PEEL. I am willing to agree to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I accept that amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. RANDALL to the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 16, as follows:

SEC. 16. That it is hereby enacted that the seventh article of the said treaty of April 29, 1868, securing to said Indians the benefits of education, subject to such modifications as Congress shall deem most effective to secure to said Indians equivalent benefits of such education, shall continue in force for twenty years from and after the time this act shall take effect; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, from time to time, for the use of said Indians, such and so many American breeding cows of good quality, not exceeding 25,000 in number, and bulls of like quality, not exceeding 1,000 in number, as in his judgment can be, under regulations furnished by him, cared for and preserved, with their increase, by said Indians: Provided, That each head of family or single person over the age of eighteen years, who shall have or may hereafter take his or her allotment of land in severalty, shall be provided with two milch cows, one yoke of oxen, one plow, one wagon, one harrow, one hoe, one ax, and one pitchfork, all suitable to the work they may have to do. That for two years the necessary seed shall be provided to plant five acres of ground into different crops, if so much can be used, and provided that in the purchase of such seed preference shall be given to Indians who may have raised the same for sale, and so much money as shall be necessary for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and in addition thereto there shall be set apart, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, which said sum shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians as a permanent fund, the interest of which, at 5 per cent. per annum, shall be appropriated, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the use of the Indians receiving rations and annuities upon the reservations created by this act, in proportion to the numbers that shall so receive rations and annuities at the time this act takes effect, as follows: One half of said interest shall be so expended for the promotion of industrial and other suitable education among said Indians, and the other half thereof in such manner and for such purposes as, in the judgment of said Secretary, shall, from time to time, most contribute to the advancement of said Indians in civilization and self-support: Provided, That after the Government has been reimbursed for the money expended for said Indians under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend, in addition to the interest of the permanent fund, not to exceed 10 per cent. per annum of the principal of said fund in the employment of farmers and in the purchase of agricultural implements, teams, seeds, and other articles necessary to assist them in agricultural pursuits.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In line 20, after the words "suitable to the work they may have to do," insert "and also $20 in cash."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make some remarks upon this section. The policy of the House for a number of years back has been against permanent appropriations. I think that a few years ago when the permanent appropriations were not more numerous than they are now no subject engaged more attention in this House than that. The objection to permanent appropriations is that the country is never fully informed of the condition of the public expenditures.

When Congress appropriates by its twelve or thirteen great bills annually the amount of money necessary to carry on the Government all our citizens are informed of the condition of the expenditures covered by those bills; and gentlemen will remember that the amount of permanent appropriations is seldom referred to in connection with the amounts appropriated in those great appropriation bills. It is a matter of the highest moment that we of the House and our successors all through coming time should every year, by the great bills that are presented by the respective committees, be informed as nearly as may be of the exact condition of the expenditures of the Government. Now, this bill provides for an unusual number of permanent appropriations. I do not understand that it contains any provision for annual appropriations. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], in reporting the Indian appropriation bill, will report the amount to be expended for each tribe, even though the money to be appropriated be the result of treaty obligations and be in the form of money in the Treasury invested in Government bonds. Year after year the exact sum of money to be expended for the use of each tribe is presented in an appropriation bill to the House and Senate, so that we are everlastingly admonished of the condition of our expenditures of the public money and of moneys set apart for a specific object, as for the benefit of Indian tribes under treaty stipulations.

It does not seem to me, unless there is a strong reason to the contrary, of which I am not aware, that a different principle should be adopted here. I suppose the real intention of the committee in this bill was that the 50 cents per acre to be paid by these two railroad corporations and the 50 cents per acre to be paid by the actual settlers should constitute a fund for the benefit of the Indians. I think we should not have gone beyond that. We should make this provision for the benefit of the Indians in the administration of their own land, and provide that as the money comes into the Treasury for their benefit the interest on it should be appropriated for their benefit the same as the interest on similar funds.

My friend from Arkansas and his able committee no doubt had some good reason why they departed from this safe policy, which was deemed so valuable in former years.

Mr. PEEL. Does the gentleman from Indiana intend to submit an amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. The trouble is that to carry out the idea I have suggested the whole section would have to be remodeled. It occurred to me the true way would be to manage the business so as to sell those lands, and that the 50 cents an acre received from the railroad corporations and the actual settlers should be set apart as a fund for these Indians. But instead of that by this bill we make a large appropriation of money, and we then make what seems to me to be a permanent appropriation in this form:

In the purchase of such seed preference shall be given to Indians who may have raised the same for sale, and so much money as shall be necessary for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The spirit of that provision I think is found there, and the section generally is framed on that idea. If it is intended that that shall only be an annual appropriation, that is right enough, but it does not appear to me that that is what is here provided.

Mr. PEEL. I desire only to say that all the appropriations in this bill from one end of it to the other are to be deducted from the proceeds of the sales of land and the amount of money received from the railroads. The money for the right of way and the proceeds of sales constitute the Indian fund. I understand the objection of the gentleman from Indiana is that this appropriation for farm implements, seeds, etc., is not an annual one, but simply a specific appropriation, made at one time.

Mr. PERKINS. Will my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] permit me to suggest that the bill provides for this appropriation and then authorizes its expenditure, but provides that the Government shall be reimbursed from the sale of these lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. But take this next provision:

That there shall be set apart, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, which said sum shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians as a permanent fund—

It is to be withdrawn from the Treasury proper and deposited with the Treasurer to the credit of the Sioux Nation as a permanent fund—

the interest of which at 5 per cent. per annum shall be appropriated, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the use of the Indians receiving rations and annuities upon the reservations created by this act, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. But observe the proviso for reimbursement in line 45. You will see there that the Government is to be reimbursed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, that is all right; but my friend must concede that extraordinary power is here conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior when he is allowed to appropriate this money from year to year without any actual, definite appropriation by Congress. This authorizing a public officer to appropriate money from year to year without the direct authority of Congress is what I object to.

Mr. PEEL. Will the gentleman move to strike it out?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would have been very glad if the bill had provided, as was suggested by me, that this money should go into the Treasury as it came in from year to year, and should go to the credit of the fund belonging to these Indians. However, I will not make any motion on the subject.

The committee recommended an amendment in section 16, line 41, inserting, after the word "purposes," the words "including reasonable cash payments per capita."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also a like amendment inserting the same words in line 51, after the word "seeds."

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That all the lands in the Great Sioux reservation outside of the separate reservations herein described are hereby restored to the public domain, except American Island, Farm Island, and Niobrara Island, shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead and town-site laws of the United States: Provided, That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead acts shall pay to the United States, for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of 50 cents for each and every acre, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor, according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said sum of 50 cents per acre therefor; but the rights of soldiers, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be abridged, except as to said 50 cents per acre; and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same, or lien thereon, created prior to the date of final entry shall be null and void: And provided, That lands entered for town-site purposes shall be paid for at the rate of $1.25 per acre: And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the right of Congress or of the Territorial government of Dakota to establish public highways or to grant to railroad companies the right of way through said lands, or to exclude the said lands, or any thereof, from the operation of the general laws of the United States now in force granting to railway companies the right of way and depot grounds over and upon the public lands. American Island, an island in the Missouri River, near Chamberlain, in the Territory of Dakota, and now a part of the Sioux reservation, is hereby donated to the said city of Chamberlain: Provided further, That said city of Chamberlain shall formally accept the same within one year from the passage of this act, upon the express condition that the same shall be preserved and used for all time entire as a public park, and for no other purpose, to which all persons shall have free access; and said city shall have authority to adopt all proper rules and regulations for the improvement and care of said park; and upon the failure of any of said conditions the said island shall revert to the United States. Farm Island, an island in the Missouri River, near Pierre, in the Territory of Dakota, and now a part of the Sioux reservation, is hereby donated to the said city of Pierre: Provided further, That said city of Pierre shall formally accept the same within one year from the passage of this act, upon the express condition that the same shall be preserved and used for all time entire as a public park, and for no other purposes, to which all persons shall have free access; and said city shall have authority to adopt all proper rules and regulations for the improvement and care of said park; and upon the failure of any of said conditions the said island shall revert to the United States. Niobrara Island, an island in the Niobrara River, near Niobrara, and now a part of the Sioux reservation, is hereby donated to the said city of Niobrara: Provided further, That the said city of Niobrara shall formally accept the same within one year from the passage of this act, upon the express condition that the same shall be preserved and used for all time entire as a public park, and for no other purpose, to which all persons shall have free access; and said city shall have authority to adopt all proper rules and regulations for the improvement and care of said park; and upon the failure of any of said conditions the said island shall revert to the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] in charge of the bill an amendment which I have no doubt he will consent to. When this treaty was first made and the subject first came into the House a number of gentlemen were here from this region, and the subject was thoroughly discussed, and it was generally agreed, not only by those gentlemen, but by members who were familiar with this class of legislation, that the homestead law proper should be applied to the lands so acquired. Indeed, my friend will remember that when we appropriated the money to negotiate with these Indians for the purpose of acquiring these lands it was proposed to insert an express stipulation in the treaty that the lands so acquired should be disposed of under the homestead law. I happen to remember it well, for I had the honor to offer such an amendment. Now, we all know that section 2301 of the homestead law, the commutation clause, is an interpolation which is contrary to the general spirit of the law and defeats its object. I therefore suggest to my friend an amendment at the beginning of section 20, so as to make it read in this way:

That all the lands, etc., shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only under the provisions of the homestead law (except section 2301 of said law) and under the law in relation to town sites.

Mr. PEEL. Do you want to strike out the town-site provision?

Mr. HOLMAN. No. My amendment leaves that in, and leaves the homestead law in, with the exception of the commutation clause.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to have this amendment understood. I think we all agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in regard to the purpose he seeks to accomplish; but if I understand the language of the amendment, it suspends, in this case, the operations of the town-site act.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It so reads, although that is not the intention.

Mr. HOLMAN. The excepting clause is in parentheses, and includes only section 2301.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the section as proposed to be amended be read.

The section with the amendment offered by Mr. HOLMAN was read.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The following sections were read:

SEC. 21. That all money arising from the disposal of lands in conformity with the foregoing section shall, after deducting the necessary expenses attending such disposition thereof, be paid into the Treasury of the United States and be applied solely as follows: first, to the reimbursement of the United States for all necessary actual expenditures contemplated and provided for under the provisions of this act, and the creation of the permanent fund hereinbefore provided; and after such reimbursement to the increase of said permanent fund for the purposes hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 22. That all persons who between the 27th day of February, 1885, and the 17th day of April, 1885, in good faith entered upon any part of the Great Sioux reservation lying east of the Missouri River and known as the Crow Creek and Winnebago reservation, which, by the President's proclamation of date February 27, 1885, was declared to be open to settlement, and not included in the new reservation established by section 6 of this act, and who, being legally entitled to make such entries, located thereon homestead, pre-emption, or town-site claims, by actual settlement and improvement of any portion of such lands, shall, for a period of ninety days after the proclamation of the President required to be made by section 24 of this act, have a right to re-enter upon said claims and procure title thereto under the provisions of section 20 of this act, and complete the same as required therein, and their said claims shall for such time have a preference over later entries; and when they shall have in other respects shown themselves entitled and shall have complied with the law regulating such entries, and, as to homesteads, with the special provisions of this act, they shall be entitled to have said lands, and patents therefor shall be issued as in like cases. The price to be paid for town-site entries shall be such as is required by law in other cases, and shall be paid into the general fund provided for by this act.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that section 22 be passed over informally, so that we may recur to it hereafter for the purpose of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that will be done.

There was no objection.

Section 23 was read, as follows:

SEC. 23. That the agreement made with the Sioux Indians, under the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 7, 1882, and said agreement certified to Congress by the President February 3, 1883, is hereby approved, ratified, and confirmed, subject to all of the modifications, qualifications, and conditions prescribed in this act: Provided, however, That the Indians receiving rations at the Lower Brule agency may elect to occupy the reservation reserved for them in this act, or the one described in said agreement, and if they do so elect, the reservation reserved and defined for them in said agreement is hereby released to the Government under the provisions of this bill.

The amendment reported by the committee was to strike out all of section 23, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 23. That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof and consent thereto by the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in manner and form prescribed by the twelfth article of the said treaty between the United States and said Indians concluded April 29, 1868: Provided, That it shall not be necessary to procure the assent or signatures of those Indians who have been at open war with the United States or engaged in open hostilities against the people thereof since the making of the agreement between the United States and the Sioux Nation of Indians in 1876, which said acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation thereof by the President of the United States upon satisfactory proof presented to him that the same has been obtained in the manner and form required by said twelfth article of said treaty, which proof shall be presented to him within one year from the passage of this act; and upon failure of such proof and proclamation this act becomes of no effect, and null and void.

The amendment reported by the committee as a substitute for section 23 was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask attention for a moment to this clause of section 23:

It shall not be necessary to procure the assent or signatures of those Indians who have been at open war with the United States or engaged in open hostilities against the people thereof since the making of the agreement between the United States and the Sioux Nation of Indians in 1876.

I suggest that this language ought to be struck out. The treaty with these Indians is exceedingly positive in its terms. I ask that article 12 of the treaty may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 12. No treaty for the cession of any portion or part of the reservation herein described which may be held in common shall be of any validity or force as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least three-fourths of all the adult male Indians occupying and interested in the same; and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his rights to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 6 of this treaty.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to say to the gentleman from Indiana that we have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let the section be amended by striking out all after the word "that," in line 6, to and including "which," in line 12, so as to read, "Provided, That said acceptance and consent," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Section 24 was read, as follows:

SEC. 24. That sections 16 and 36 in each and every township to which the Indian title is extinguished by the provisions of this act, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, are reserved for the use and benefit of the public schools, and said sections, whether surveyed or not, shall not be subject to disposal under the provisions of this act or any of the laws in relation to the disposal of public lands.

The amendment reported by the committee, to add the following to the bill as a new section, was read:

SEC. 25. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,000, which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians to this act provided in section 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has now read the whole bill; but the twelfth and twenty-second sections were passed over informally. The twelfth section is now before the Committee of the Whole for amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] to this language, beginning in line 14 of section 12:

Whenever it shall come to the knowledge of the President that any land allotted under the provisions of this section shall have been abandoned for more than two years, he may, in his discretion, by proclamation, declare said lands so abandoned open to homestead settlement under the provisions of this act.

This would appear to have a broader effect than the committee probably contemplated. It seems to me it is hardly a safe provision. I move to amend by striking it out.

Mr. PEEL. We do not object to that.

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "provided," in line 14 of section 12, these words: "including American Island, Farm Island, and Niobrara Island."

Mr. WEAVER. What is the effect of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. GIFFORD. It applies only to a few families who are residing there.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask the gentleman from Dakota to explain the effect of his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. We ought to have some explanation of the matter.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have been informed, Mr. Chairman, there are two or three families on the Niobrara who desire to reside there. If they desire to remain they should be allowed to do so.

Mr. GIFFORD'S amendment was adopted.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I desire to turn back to section 7 of the bill, for the purpose of calling up an amendment which I understand was acceptable to the committee, but failed to be acted upon when the committee considered this section. In this section it is provided each member of the Flandreau band——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to recur to section 7 for the purpose of making an amendment to that section. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. The section as it reads now provides—

That each member of the Flandreau band of Sioux Indians is hereby authorized to take in Moody County, in said Dakota, the same allotments authorized by existing treaties and this act on any part of said reservation; and all allotments heretofore made to members of said band in said county are hereby ratified and confirmed, subject to the limitations and conditions of such treaties and this act; and said Flandreau band of Sioux Indians is in all other respects entitled to the benefits of this act the same as if receiving rations and annuities at any of the agencies aforesaid.

It was afterwards noticed in this county there are no allotments which can be taken by these Indians, and it is agreed by the committee, I understand, that an amendment should be made at this point appropriating $100,000, to be paid to these Indians, to have them relinquish the lands they have already taken under the homestead act.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. How many of these Indians are there?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. There are about 350 of them, and there are no lands in this county they can take. I send to the Clerk's desk the amendment I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, The sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the purchase of lands, or otherwise, for the benefit of the Flandreau Sioux Indians, and the acceptance of said sum herein appropriated by said Flandreau Sioux Indians shall be a release and surrender on their part of all their interest in the separate reservation set apart for the benefit of the different bands or tribes of Sioux Indians under the provisions of this act to said several bands as their interest may appear.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do I understand the purpose of this amendment is to buy these lands?

Mr. GIFFORD. These Indians went to Flandreau some years ago. They would not associate with the wild Indians. They would not go there upon that reservation west of the Missouri. They would rather lose all their interest in that Sioux reservation than go there. The object is to allow them to relinquish their interest in the several reservations, and then that the Secretary shall purchase suitable land for them wherever he sees proper.

Mr. WEAVER. How does it come that so important an amendment as this was not incorporated in the bill? Do I understand the committee to approve of it?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. The members of the committee to whom I spoke on the subject consented to it. It was not agreed to in committee.

Mr. WEAVER. It is too important an amendment to be engrafted on this bill without being thoroughly understood.

Mr. MACDONALD. I suggest to the gentleman from Dakota to withhold it.

Mr. WEAVER. Under the bill I should like to know how this money is to be expended. or how much land is to be purchased.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I move in section 22, line 4, after the word "upon," to insert "or made homestead or timber-culture filing upon;" so it will read:

SEC. 22. That all persons who, between the 27th day of February, 1885, and the 17th day of April, 1885, in good faith, entered upon or made homestead or timber-culture filing upon any part of the Great Sioux reservation lying east of the Missouri River, and known as the Crow Creek and Winnebago reservation, etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be again reported, as there was so much confusion it could not be heard.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that intended to apply to lands settled under the proclamation of the President in the latter part of 1885, where the reservation was afterwards made on more careful examination? It is a part of the Sioux reservation. It is a part of the Sioux lands. The effect would be to certify and remit those lands.

Mr. PERKINS. The amendment merely gives to those people who made their homestead and timber-culture entries in good faith the preference. It gives them ninety days to take the lands under the provisions of this act.

Mr. WEAVER. At 50 cents an acre?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas, by what right did these settlers go on these lands?

Mr. PERKINS. By Executive proclamation.

Mr. DORSEY. Let me state to the gentleman that President Arthur threw these lands open to settlers by an Executive proclamation, and settlers went upon the reservation, taking possession of the lands in good faith—on the faith of this proclamation of the President of the United States—supposing they had the same right to acquire homes upon these lands as upon any other part of the public domain.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. By whom were the lands taken up?

Mr. DORSEY. Under this proclamation of President Arthur they were taken up by homestead settlers, just as would have been the case in regard to any other portion of the public domain, as I have said. That continued for a space of about three months. Settlers went in, took possession of the lands, and made valuable improvements upon them.

When the present Administration came in the Land Commissioner found that it was a portion of the Great Sioux reservation which was thus occupied, and that there was no warrant for the action of President Arthur. Hence these men were ordered off by Commissioner Sparks. It has been a great hardship to them. I have had scores of letters complaining of the injustice, and I think it only right that this provision should be adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. The only object is to give those who went upon the lands in good faith the prior right.

Mr. SYMES. The right to purchase?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, the right to purchase.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be a measure of justice in this, although, as I understand, these persons are not there now.

Mr. DORSEY. Some of them are.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand not.

Mr. DORSEY. A portion of them went elsewhere. But some are still holding their claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. They may be in the immediate neighborhood——

Mr. DORSEY. No, they are in actual occupancy—some of them are. I have letters from numbers of them showing the injustice of the order of the Land Commissioner.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have heard it stated as a fact that they were evicted by order of the President. However, I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas that this ought not to go further, in my judgment, than as to the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Mr. PERKINS. Very well; then strike out the timber culture.

Mr. SYMES. That is all right.

Mr. PERKINS. I accept that modification of the amendment.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, it looks very much to me as though this was an invitation to the people of this country who want cheap homes to go out on the reservations given to the Indians by solemn treaty and take up homesteads, and then after awhile come here with a petition to Congress and ask that the Indians be further cheated out of what they have by divesting them of the lands altogether; and because these settlers are on the lands that they shall be permitted to hold them to the exclusion of the Indians.

A case in point: The Miami Indians of Indiana, by solemn treaty of 1854, were promised in 1880 $200,000. They were to have the interest of this $200,000 until that time, at 5 per cent., and the treaty further stipulated that none others than those named in the treaty should participate in the annuities.

Now, in violation of this treaty, in 1858, a hundred, or, to be more exact, some seventy Indians, and in 1867 115 Indians, were taken up on this roll against the protest of the Miami Indians, and several thousand dollars were paid out to them. The matter was officially referred to the Attorney-General, who decided that these Indians were improperly on the roll, and they were taken off; but the money which had been paid to them improperly was never reimbursed to the Miami Indians. Early in this session of Congress I introduced a bill looking to the reimbursement of the Miamis for the amount the Secretary of the Interior found to be honestly due them and equitably due them. That bill has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs since the date of its introduction. It is numbered about fifteen hundred and something, while the present bill numbers seven thousand and something. This bill, coming in at a later date, is on the Calendar, however, for consideration, while the bill looking to the reimbursement of the Miamis can not get a report from the committee, whether adverse or favorable. And I want to say here that this is the third session—last session it was reported favorably, but too late to be acted upon—that this is the third session it has been before the House, and I shall ask the committee, if they do not think it right for these Indians to have what is honestly due to them, that they report the bill back to the House and let the House say what ought to be done.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to say to my friend from Indiana that the Committee on Indian Affairs will give his bill fair, square, and deliberate consideration and make just such a report——

Mr. STEELE. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

Mr. PEEL. The committee will make such a report as will give these Indians just what are their rights under the treaty.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I just want a minute to correct a misapprehension that has been created here.

Several MEMBERS. Let us vote. There is no misapprehension.

Mr. COBB. Very well; I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House favorably.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the amendment I suggested has not been acted upon. I have accepted the modification.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 20 and insert the word "and" after the word "island," where it occurs the second time in line 4. I know there is no objection, and I offer it in order that there shall be no question as to the meaning of the section.

A MEMBER. How will it read then?

Mr. PERKINS. It will read:

And shall be disposed of by the United States, etc.—

which makes the meaning clear.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana withdraw his amendment to the twenty-second section? The Clerk informs the Chair that the amendment relating to timber culture, suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, has not been acted on.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was withdrawn.

Mr. PERKINS. I accepted it and offered it in a modified form.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee here rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration, under the special order, two bills, had directed him to report them back with amendments.

COMPENSATION OF LETTER-CARRIERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York, in relation to compensation of letter-carriers and postal clerks; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

JOINT RESOLUTION ENROLLED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents.

AGREEMENT WITH MONTANA INDIANS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1956) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana.

Mr. PEEL. Let a vote be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIVISION OF SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into several smaller reservations, and for other purposes.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. PEEL (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 8, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents a petition of 104,000 citizens of the United States. The statement accompanying the petition will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A petition of 104,000 citizens of the United States, who, out of love to their country, do hereby earnestly petition that you will not allow Utah to become a State so long as the local civil power of the Territory remains in the hands of the Mormon priesthood, and the people evade or refuse obedience to the present laws of Congress against polygamy.

This petition comes from thirty-three States and Territories of the Union, and contains, by actual count, 102,762 signatures. The States are Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

The Territories are Arizona, Dakota, and the District of Columbia.

Since the meeting of this Congress in December last this petition has been widely circulated; and thereupon, almost as by a spontaneous movement of the people, it has been signed by the very best men and women in all ranks and conditions of life, and without distinction of political faith or religious creed.

The correspondence which authenticates these signatures to the petition is respectfully submitted with it, showing that if more time had been allowed the number of signers could easily have been increased tenfold.

Your petitioners are aware of the ostensible change in the position and professions of the Mormon leaders, and of the fair promises set forth in the documents on which they seek admission. But they also know the fact that aside from the question of polygamy, the Mormon hierarchy is an absolute imperium in imperio, utterly hostile to the spirit of our institutions and our republican form of government; and when Utah is clothed with statehood, with the power of the suffrage in their hands, more serious complications may arise than any which have hitherto embarrassed the Government of the United States from the same quarter.

They therefore pray that the admission of Utah be postponed until the opponents of Mormonism have become a decided voting majority in that Territory.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Winona, Kans., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A petition of citizens of Champion and Warren, Ohio;

A petition of citizens of Kilgore, Carroll County, Ohio;

A petition of citizens of Niles, Ohio;

Five petitions of citizens of Allen County, Ohio; and Seven petitions of citizens of Ohio.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented petitions of Stark Lodge No. 10, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, at Massillon, Ohio, and Laurence Lodge No. 7, of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, at Ironton, Ohio, favoring a protective-tariff policy; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Advance, Yale, and other places in Illinois, and a petition of ex-soldiers of Williamson County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the bill providing for the participation of our Government in the Paris International Exposition, on account of the discrimination made by that country against certain products of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Theodore Mead and 35 others, members of General Lyon Post, No. 86, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, and the petition of C. H. Allen and 15 others, ex-Union soldiers and sailors of Henderson, Mich., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of O. Granger and 41 others, citizens of Memphis, Mich., praying for the protection of the wool-growing and woolen-manufacturing industries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania, of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the passage of House joint resolution 24, in reference to the employment of Army and Navy bands; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Bedford County (Pennsylvania) Union Ex-prisoners of War, praying for the passage of what is known as the prisoners-of-war pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of M. H. Grubb and 241 others, citizens (not ex-soldiers) of Liverpool, Pa., and a petition of 352 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, of Butler County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAYNE presented 6 petitions, signed by 296 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Ohio, and 15 petitions signed by 506 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions adopted by the directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, remonstrating against the passage of the resolution providing for the participation of our Government in the Paris exhibition because of the unfriendly discrimination against this country on the part of the French Government in prohibiting the importation into France of American salted hog products. I believe the bill on that subject has been reported, and I move that the resolutions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 34 ex-soldiers of the Union Army, citizens of Loami, Ill., and a petition of 43 ex-soldiers of the Union Army, citizens of Jasper County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Joseph W. Edwards and other citizens of Island Falls and other places in Maine, ex-Union soldiers and sailors, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of Pomona Grange, No. 1, of the Patrons of Husbandry, of Silver City, in the State of Iowa, praying for the enactment of a law prohibiting pools, trusts, and combinations to prevent competition, prohibiting the adulteration of food, for the imposition of a tax on all compounds in imitation of lard, and protesting against the repeal of the oleomargarine law. As most of these subjects have been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I move that the petition be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of 50 ex-soldiers of the Union Army, members of Gordon Granger Post, No. 64, Grand Army of the Republic, of Grinnell, Iowa; a petition of 30 surviving soldiers of the Union Army, citizens of Victor, Iowa, and a petition of J. M. Huston Post, No. 394, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, of Victor, in that State, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of John W. Dunn Post, No. 480, Grand Army of the Republic, department of Indiana, praying that a pension be granted to Jane Brown Dunn, orphan of William H. Dunn, late private of the Fourth Indiana Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEARST presented a petition of ex-soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, residents of Truckee, Nevada County, California, and a petition of ex-soldiers and sailors of the Union Army, residents of Boulder and Santa Cruz, Cal., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of the councilors of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians, praying for the removal of trespassers from their lands, and for the enforcement of laws in their interest; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER presented a memorial of a wool growers' meeting held at Rio, Wis., January 7, 1888, remonstrating against wool being placed on the free-list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of B. F. Gipple and other citizens of North Bend, Wis., praying that the duty be removed from foreign salt; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Crook County, Oregon, praying that no reduction be made in the tariff on wool, and that Congress adopt the schedule of duties unanimously agreed upon by the representatives of the wool-growers and woolen manufacturers at Washington, D. C., on January 14, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Oregon, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens and voters of Tualatin Grange, No. 111, Patrons of Husbandry, of Clackamas County, Oregon, praying for sundry changes in the postal laws; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Laundrymen's Association of New York and vicinity; a petition of the Northwestern Laundry Union of Minneapolis, Minn.; a petition of the Laundrymen's Association of Washington, D. C., and a petition of the Northwestern Ohio Laundry Association, praying for the speedy passage of a law absolutely excluding the coming of the Chinese to the United States; which were referred o the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DOLPH. I present the petition of Pomona Grange 117, Patrons of Husbandry, of Oregon, praying for the creation of a department of agriculture with its head a member of the President's Cabinet, and that the various divisions as at present constituted be made bureaus for investigation, experiment, and practical test of such matters as are likely to improve the science of this most important industry; that ample appropriations be made therefor, especially for the introduction of foreign seeds and for the extermination of contagious diseases among animals; and further, that nothing be done to impair in any way the usefulness of this department, and that it be devoted exclusively to the interest of agriculture as the most important American industry; that all moneys appropriated for use under the Hatch bill be so guarded as to insure its expenditure for the interest of practical agricultural experiment, and for no other purpose; that nothing be done to interfere with the usefulness of the interstate-commerce and the oleomargarine laws; that in any tariff revision due consideration be given to the interests of the American farmer and the products of his labor; and that the patent laws be so amended as to make the vender liable for infringements to the patentee, and not the innocent purchaser. I also present a petition of citizens of Wasco County, Oregon, of the same character. I move that these petitions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of 70 ex-Union veterans, citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of the I. M. Huston Post, No. 394, of Victor, Iowa; a petition of 55 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, of Strawberry Point and vicinity, Iowa; and a petition of 43 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, of Russell and vicinity, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of Rev. F. R. Waite and 116 other citizens of the First and Second Congressional districts of Connecticut, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 28 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of New York, and a petition of 42 surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union Army and Navy, citizens of Corinth, Saratoga County, New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know whether it is strictly in order, but I should like to present for reference an important communication from citizens of Clinton, Ind., addressed to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, in regard to the construction of a public building at that place. I ask that it be referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be received as a petition, if there be no objection, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Matthew H. Fulton; and

A bill (H. R. 6922) for the relief of George W. Graham.

ENROLLED RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 720) for the relief of H. W. Shipley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WORK IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. The select committee of the Senate appointed under the resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into and examine the methods of business and work of the Executive Departments and the causes of the alleged delay in transactions, etc., have instructed me to submit to the Senate a written report with the accompanying reports from the heads of various Executive Departments, and also to report two bills. I ask that the committee's report and the accompanying documents be printed, and that the two bills be read twice, respectively, and placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 2304) to provide for continuing the work of classified abridgments of letters patent granted by the United States was read twice by its title.

The bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also offer a resolution for the printing of the reports, to be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed of the report of the Senate select committee appointed under resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into the methods of business, etc., in the Executive Departments, and accompanying documents, 6,000 copies, 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the select committee of the Senate be continued during the remainder of this session. I do not know that we shall want to make any further report, but there are certain measures which the committee think require their continued existence. There will be no expense of any kind connected with the continuance of the committee. I therefore ask that an order be made that the select committee be continued during the remainder of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the existence of the select committee be prolonged during the remainder of the session. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HEARINGS BEFORE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] March 5, 1888, authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to employ a stenographer to report hearings in regard to Chinese immigration and other subjects pending before it, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is hereby authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings in regard to Chinese immigration and other subjects pending before it, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am also instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] March 1, 1888, to authorize the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to employ a stenographer to report the hearings before them relative to Senate bill 945, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and they are hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer to report the hearings before them relative to Senate bill No. 945, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, etc., among cattle, and that said stenographer be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ARTHUR KILL BRIDGE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am also instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] March 5, 1888, authorizing the Committee on Commerce to visit and make a personal inspection and inquiry into the necessity of a bridge or bridges across Staten Island Sound, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, in considering Senate bills 1433, 1842, and 1850, touching the construction of a bridge or bridges across Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill and Kill von Kull, be, and it is hereby, authorized to visit the locality for the purpose of making a personal inspection and inquiry into the necessity for said bridge or bridges, and especially to investigate the bridge now in process of construction under authority of Congress, with a view to determining whether or not any change is required in its location or form of structure; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2294) restoring a pension to William Bushfield; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2295) granting a pension to Emanuel Brownmiller; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2296) granting a pension to Mrs. Josephine Amsden; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2297) to place the name of William Patterson, of Lynchburgh, Va., on the pension-roll; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2298) to provide for and regulate leases of lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, in the State of New York, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2299) for the construction of an iron bridge from the military reservation at Fortress Monroe to Elizabeth City County, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2300) granting a pension to John B. Covert; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. 2301) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2302) making an appropriation for the payment of Indian depredation claims allowed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and approved by the Secretary of the Interior in pursuance of existing law since the 3d day of March, 1885; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2303) for the relief of H. C. Ringo, of Oregon, legal representative of Joseph Ringo, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. 1650) for the relief of Maj. Gen. W. W. Averell be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no resolutions, concurrent or other, the order of morning business is closed.

Mr. COLQUITT. Several days ago I gave notice that to-day, after the morning business, I would move, by consent, to take up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's message with a view to submit some remarks upon the subject. If in order, I now make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar being in order, the Senator from Georgia moves to proceed to the consideration of a resolution which will be read.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not in order to call up the unfinished business, which is the pension bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was absent when the Senate went into executive session last evening, and is not advised what the action of the Senate was. The RECORD on that subject will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the pension bill be considered to-morrow immediately after the morning hour, being made the special order immediately after the morning business.

Several SENATORS. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent that that order be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the pending pension bill be taken up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. And the same order in reference to its disposition that was understood to apply to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the same order in reference to its disposition to-morrow that was heretofore made in respect to to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. The order of the preceding day was to proceed to the consideration of the pension bill under what is known as the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands the agreement of the Senate, it is his duty to lay before the Senate at this time as the unfinished business Senate bill 181, being what is commonly known as the dependent pension bill.

Mr. COLQUITT. I was not aware until I came into the Chamber this morning that any such unanimous consent was given yesterday afternoon, and I presumed according to the usual courtesy I should be allowed the floor at the close of morning business to-day. I have no desire, however, to impede progress upon the pending pension bill, and I shall not insist upon claiming the attention of the Senate at this hour, but will, if I can have general consent, postpone the motion and my remarks until to-morrow, after the morning business.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. Is it in order to make a motion at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for a division. I think at this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

There were, on a division—ayes 39, noes 14.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 44, nays 17; as follows:

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 388) for the relief of L. B. Townsend, Louis S. Lovel, W. C. Page, Alonzo Sessions, Hampton Rich, Harvey Harter, Benjamin Harter, and Peter Hackett; and

An act (S. 455) for the relief of Andrew J. Lindsay.

ISAAC D. SMEAD & CO.

Mr. DAWES. On the 6th of February there was laid before the Senate, in response to a resolution of January 25, 1888, a communication from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting certain data respecting work done for the District by Isaac D. Smead & Co., which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed. It is so recorded in the RECORD, but there was some mistake about it, and I should like to have that order now made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order for printing the communication will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in section 2, line 5, after the word "from," to insert the words "the infirmities of age or from;" so as to read:

And who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, etc.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in his remarks the other day, used the following language:

Why, Mr. President, this thing was done in the light of day. Not only that, but when it was finally brought to a committee of conference, who were those conferees who are thus arraigned? Mr. Bayard, Mr. John Scott, of Pennsylvania, one of the most honored members of this body, and myself were the conferees on the part of the Senate. Mr. Hooper, the Senator says, knew it, and I knew it, and there was something devilish about it, something secret. A bill that had been debated for three long sessions, considered line by line and precept by precept, is held up as a matter of reproach against Mr. Hooper, now gathered to his fathers, chairman of the committee on the part of the House, and myself.

The bill to which the Senator referred was the act of February 12, 1873, which omitted the silver dollar from the list of coins.

I was in the Senate at the time that bill was passed, and in the course of his remarks the Senator from Ohio alluded to that fact. I think it would be well for every member of Congress if he could plead that he was entirely ignorant of that transaction. I do not believe that it is to the credit of any man to have knowingly voted for that act.

What was the situation of this country at that time and the circumstances under which the bill was passed? Specie payments had been suspended from 1862 until that time, except in the Pacific States and in the Territories. We were not on a metallic basis at all. It is said that we were not coining any silver dollars. That is not true. On the contrary, there was but one year between 1840 and 1878, to wit, 1858, in which no silver dollars were coined, and the coinage of silver dollars at our mints had exceeded a million annually for the two years previous to 1873. The people of the States this side of the Rocky Mountains were not thinking of the standard, because paper was the only circulating medium.

During the war the credit of the United States was at a great discount. The bonds realized probably not as much as 50 cents on the dollar in coin. They were payable in lawful money. Congress had made legal-tender notes, commonly called greenbacks, lawful money. The interest only on the bonds was payable in coin.

When the war closed there was a large amount of greenbacks in circulation. They were the money of the loyal States. What did Congress do? Did it increase those greenbacks so as to keep the same amount of money per capita throughout the United States when the rebellion failed and a third more population was added? No. The fact that the population was increased operated to contract the currency about 33⅓ per cent. But this fact was wholly disregarded.

This was not all. It was said that the honor of the nation was involved, and it was a duty to resume specie payments; and consequently Congress passed laws from time to time to enforce that demand, and retired a large amount of the greenbacks. This, of course, enhanced the value of the bonds.

But this was not all. It was only one step. In March, 1869, a bill was passed in the Senate and in the other House declaring that all United States bonds were payable in coin—not in the greenbacks which those who had supplied the armies were compelled to receive, and with which our soldiers were paid—they were not good enough for the bondholders. It was the pride of the nation, in which I and others participated, which induced us to redeem a supposed promise of the Secretary of the Treasury that the entire debt would be paid in coin. It was an issue before the people in 1868; and at the time the act passed, in 1869, after the election of General Grant, it was said to be in pursuance of the verdict of the people. The people submitted to this legislation without complaint.

After this was done, on the 14th of July, 1870, in order that there should be no mistake as to the meaning of the general declaration that the bonds should be payable in coin, Congress passed the funding act. I was here at that time and voted for it, and I know that Senators were very particular then to know in what currency the bonds were to be paid, and it was very properly provided in that act that the bonds should be redeemable in currency of the then standard value. The metallic currency then consisted of coin of gold and silver. A dollar in gold consisted of 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine, and a dollar in silver of 412½ grains of silver nine-tenths fine. Every dollar of bonds issued since that act is payable in either gold or silver.

In view of this, and notwithstanding the enormous contraction which was necessary, at the time the rebellion failed and peace was declared, to spread the currency then existing all over the country, the South as well as the North; notwithstanding the enormous contraction subsequently required in reaching specie payments; notwithstanding we had agreed to pay the bonds in coin, the bondholders were not satisfied; they demanded payment in gold alone. Is it possible that any Senator who ever occupied a seat in this Chamber would have openly declared that it was his purpose to take from the people the right to pay these bonds in silver as well as gold? Will any Senator say that the bondholder was not sufficiently favored by increasing the value of his bonds more than 50 per cent. by the acts which had been passed before the world was robbed of more than half of its circulating medium by the demonetization of silver? Is it possible that any Senator now lives who will attempt to justify the act of February 12, 1873? I feel that the fact that I was in this Chamber when that act passed requires from me an apology.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds the Senator from Nevada that under the agreement of the Senate, debate is limited to five minutes by each speaker.

Mr. STEWART. I was not aware of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Nevada proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I regret to occupy the time of the Senate, but I deem an explanation necessary after what has been said by the Senator from Ohio.

As to the history of the bill of which I have been speaking I think I am safe in saying that the Senate passed it in ignorance of its contents or effect; that nobody knew its effect; that nobody knew that one-half of the world's money was to be put out of existence; that the creditor class was to be vastly benefited; that the prosperity of the world was to be checked by the measure which the Senator from Ohio declared was "debated for three long sessions, considered line by line, and precept by precept."

There was at that time in the civilized world twenty-five thousand millions of national debts, and at least three times as much more of other debts. That indebtedness was by contract payable in either gold or silver, and I do not believe that any Senator here thought he was becoming a party to a new contract by which that vast sum should be paid in gold alone.

This is the history of the legislation: John Jay Knox, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the author of the bill by which the war on silver was inaugurated in the United States, made a report which was transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Forty-first Congress on April 25, 1870. This report will be found in Senate Miscellaneous Documents of 1869–'70, No. 132. Mr. Knox's report is explanatory of the bill prepared by him "to revise and amend the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States." It appears in his report that he objected to the silver dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver because it was more valuable than a gold dollar, and proved by statistics that the amount of silver necessary to make a silver dollar had on an average for the preceding six years been worth about 3 per cent. more than the amount of gold necessary to make a gold dollar.

He therefore advised the use of gold, because it was the cheaper metal. He strongly objected to the ratio established in this country, which is about 16 of silver to 1 of gold, and advocated the European ratio between gold and silver, which was and still is 15½ to 1. He contended that the amount of silver in silver dollars was so great that silver had been practically driven out of the country by the cheaper metal, and for that reason he contended that the coinage of the silver dollar should be discontinued, and that the subsidiary coins less than a dollar should be upon the European ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold. He was very solicitous for our Oriental trade, and recommended the coinage of the trade-dollar for circulation in Asia. He said:

However, if such a coin (trade-dollar) is authorized, it should be issued only as a commercial dollar, and not as a standard unit of coin, and of the exact value of the Mexican dollar, which is the favorite for circulation in China and Japan and other Oriental countries.

The bill prepared by Mr. Knox was introduced in the Senate by Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, on the 28th of April, 1870, and referred to the Committee on Finance. (Congressional Globe, 1869–'70, part 4, page 3051.) It was reported with amendments December 19, 1870, and discussed in the Senate January 9 and 10, 1871, and passed.

I have examined this discussion and there was no debate in regard to the discontinuance of the coinage of the silver dollar. The bill was an elaborate one to codify the mint laws. There was no discussion whatever in regard to coins of any kind. The discussion was as to other matters, the salaries of officers, etc.

Whether the bill as reported and discussed on that occasion contained a provision similar to section 15 of the act of February 12, 1873, I am unable to say. I am unable to find that bill. I presume it did, however, because it was prepared by Mr. Knox, and, of course, conformed to his report. Many Senators advocated free coinage, while the chairman of the committee objected to that. I made some remarks on that bill, advocating free coinage. I did not observe the other provisions, and do not know whether the provision as to the silver dollar was in the bill or not. It came here and passed like other elaborate bills, where none but the committee know of every detail contained in them. The whole discussion will be found in the same volume of the Globe, from pages 368 to 378 and from pages 396 to 397.

The bill was received in the House of Representatives January 10, 1871, referred to the Committee on Coinage January 11, 1871, reported with a substitute February 24, 1871, and recommitted. Nothing more was done with the bill in the Forty-first Congress. Nothing was said in either House of that Congress about stopping the coinage of the silver dollar. The bill might or might not have contained this provision. As I said before, I presume it did, as it was prepared by Mr. Knox.

On January 9, 1872, Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill in the House (House bill 5) "to revise and amend the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States." It was discussed at some length and recommitted. (Congressional Globe, 1871–'72, part 1, pages 322 to 328 and 336 to 340.)

The principal topic discussed was the question of salaries of the officers provided for in the bill. On February 9, 1872, Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, reported from the Committee on Coinage a bill "revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States;" which was numbered H. R. 1427. This bill was recommitted to the Committee on Coinage, and ordered printed, and was probably a revised edition of the bill introduced by Mr. KELLEY. It can not now be found. Mr. Hooper's bill was discussed in the House April 9, 1872. (Congressional Globe, 1871–'72, part 3, pages 2304 to 2317.) Mr. Hooper, who had charge of the bill, said with reference to section 16, which was the section relating to the silver dollar, and afterwards numbered section 15:

It re-enacts the provisions of existing laws defining the silver coins and their weights respectively, except in relation to the silver dollar, which is reduced in weight from 412½ to 384 grains—

How they hit upon 384 grains I am at a loss to know. I think that was a new ratio. Three hundred and eighty-five and eight-tenths grains to the dollar is the ratio of 15½ to 1—

thus making it a subsidiary coin in harmony with the silver coins of less denomination to secure its concurrent circulation with them. The silver dollar of 412½ grains, by reason of its bullion or intrinsic value being greater than its nominal value, long since ceased to be a coin of circulation, and is melted by manufacturers of silverware. It does not circulate now in commercial transactions with any country, and the convenience of those manufacturers in this respect can better be met by supplying small stamped bars of the same standard, avoiding the useless expense of coining the dollar for that purpose.

Remarks were made by Mr. Potter, of New York, with regard to the proposed change in the coinage. This was the only time that the subject of silver coinage was mentioned in an intelligible manner. Mr. Potter knew what the bill contained, and expressed his meaning. He said:

Then, in the next place, this bill provides for the making of changes in the legal-tender coin of the country, and for substituting as legal-tender coin of only one metal instead, as heretofore, of two. I think myself this would be a wise provision, and that legal-tender coins, except subsidiary coin, should be of gold alone; but why should we legislate on this now, when we are not using either of those metals as a circulating medium? The bill provides also for a change in respect of the weight and value of the silver dollar, which is a subject which, when we come to require legislation about it at all, will demand at our hands very serious consideration, and which, as we are not using such coins for circulation now, seems at this time to be an unnecessary subject about which to legislate.—Congressional Globe, 1871-'72, part 3, page 2310.

Mr. Brooks, of New York, said:

It seems to me that this is the most farcical spectacle that Congress can present at this time * * * when no member of this House has seen a silver dollar or golden eagle, except as a curiosity in a museum, for some four or five or six or seven years, and when there is no probability of seeing another golden eagle for six or seven years to come. It seems to me to be the greatest of farces for this House to present such a spectacle as this, one fit for the pencil of Morgan or Nast in the caricatures of the day.—Congressional Globe, 1871-'72, part 3, page 2316.

He continued in similar language at some length ridiculing the idea of considering the question. At that time the bill was discussed at some length and some sections stricken out, when the House adjourned. On May 27, 1872, Mr. Hooper again called up the bill and offered a substitute, and proposed to suspend the rules and pass the substitute without reading, but failed to get the necessary two-thirds vote. No examination was made of the changes effected by the substitute. The whole debate consisted of a few questions and answers, which indicated that the substitute was different from the original bill. Mr. Brooks, of New York, in behalf of his colleague, who was then absent, made the following suggestion, to wit:

My colleague from Westchester district [Mr. Potter] stated the other day that this bill provided for the recoinage of more or less of the small currency of the country and the creation of a new currency.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is not the case with the bill as it now stands.—Congressional Globe, 1871-'72, part 5, page 3883.

The substitute was passed after a very brief consideration on the 27th of May, 1872. On the 28th of May the bill was reported to the Senate (Congressional Globe, page 3961); referred to the Committee on Finance (page 3986); reported from committee December 16, 1872 (Congressional Globe, 1872–'73, part 1, page 203); reported to the Senate with amendments and reprinted January 7, 1873 (page 363); reading commenced January 17, 1873 (page 661); discussed January 17 (pages 668–674), and passed.

I now call particular attention to the discussion which took place in the Senate.

It has been said that it was passed in daylight; that everybody understood it. I assert that no discussion with regard to the demonetization of silver was had in the Senate at any time, except what I am about to read. I call on Senators to listen particularly to what I shall now read, because it contains the whole history of the discussion of that particular feature.

Mr. Casserly, of California, in whose State the silver dollar was then circulating, was paying particular attention to this bill. He was rather a scientific man, and was watching the provisions of the bill. He was particular about the inscriptions on the coins, as will be seen by the debate. The following dialogue finally took place between Mr. Casserly and Mr. SHERMAN, the chairman of the Finance Committee, who had the bill in charge:

Mr. CASSERLY. But the half-dollar and quarter-dollar are the money of the people, and they are the leading coins of our entire silver coinage. I do not think it is of so much importance to put the fineness or the weight upon a half-dollar or a quarter-dollar as it might be upon a gold coin. I have never seen any foreign coin, and of course no American coin, marked in that way. To have the weight of the coin upon gold coin may be a useful thing, because of the great preciousness of the metal; but what is the importance of having the weight inscribed upon the half-dollar or quarter-dollar? Does anybody ever weigh half dollars or quarter-dollars in business?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, he will see that the preceding section provides for coin which is exactly interchangeable with the English shilling and the five-franc piece of France; that is, a five-franc piece of France will be the exact equivalent of a dollar of the United States in our silver coinage; and in order to show this wherever our silver coin shall float—and we are providing that it shall float all over the world—we propose to stamp upon it instead of our eagle, which foreigners may not understand, and which they may not distinguish from a buzzard or some other bird, the intrinsic fineness and weight of the coin. In this practical, utilitarian age the officers of the Mint seemed to think it would be better to do that than to put the eagle on our silver coins. I must confess I do not think it is very important; but I think the Senator ought to be willing to defer in these matters to the practical knowledge of the officers who have charge of this branch of the Government service. I will say that Mr. Linderman, whom the Senator must know, has suggested this as being a convenient mode of promoting international coinage.

Mr. CASSERLY. We can not have an international coinage on the basis of our silver coin unless our silver comes up to the standard of all the nations with which we expect to have relations. Now, I ask the Senator whether this bill proposes a silver coinage of that character?

There had been previous discussions with regard to adopting the suggestion to conform our silver coinage to the coinage of Europe. France and the associated nations agreed upon 15½ to 1, which had been the ratio of legal-tender money there for nearly a century, and there was general consent to the standard of 15½ to 1. That had been explained. Mr. SHERMAN replied to this question, "Now, I ask the Senator whether this bill proposes a silver coinage of that character?" as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill proposes a silver coinage exactly the same as the French and what are called the associated nations of Europe, who have adopted the international standard of silver coinage.

The international standard of silver coinage authorized the unlimited use of silver money at the ratio of 15½ to 1. If the Senator understood the purport of that language, it was a declaration that there was in that bill a provision for the unlimited use of silver dollars of the exact ratio of 15½ to 1. In other words, the dollar was equivalent to the five franc piece, and an unlimited legal tender.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will allow me to ask him a question. The coinage of the United States is precisely the French coinage in ratio. The coinage of either the United States or France is on the ratio of 15½ to 1. The token-money is 7 or 8 per cent. below that. That discussion referred to the fractional coinage, the fifty, twenty-five, and ten cent pieces. The Senator gives a different construction to those words.

Mr. STEWART. I give the words as they were uttered. They are plain and need no construction. I will reread what I have already read and continue on with the quotation:

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill proposes a silver coinage exactly the same as the French and what are called the associated nations of Europe, who have adopted the international standard of silver coinage; that is, the dollar provided for by this bill is the precise equivalent of the five-franc piece. It contains the same number of grams of silver, and we have adopted the international gram instead of the grain for the standard of our silver coinage. The "trade-dollar" has been adopted mainly for the benefit of the people of California and others engaged in trade with China. That is the only coin measured by the grain instead of by the gram. The intrinsic value of each is to be stamped upon the coin.

No words can express more clearly the fact that a silver dollar, equivalent to the five-franc piece, was in the bill then pending in the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The half-dollar was provided for by the bill. A silver dollar would have contained more than two half-dollars.

Mr. STEWART. I do not desire to cast any reflection upon the Senator. I simply want to show under what circumstances I acted, and the remainder of us, with what information we acted, and how it was understood in the Senate, and how the Senate had a right to understand it. The question is not what explanations the Senator can now make. I was acting under the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Finance. It was the dollar, not the half-dollar, which was the equivalent of the five-franc piece. I deal with the language that was used, which guided me in giving my vote, and undoubtedly governed the action of the Senate in the passage of the bill. If he had told the Senate that the bill contained a proposition to demonetize silver and adopt the gold standard, there would not have been a single vote in its favor, and the prosperity of the country would not have been destroyed by contraction.

The dialogue proceeded:

Mr. CASSERLY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the intrinsic value of the dollar, half-dollar, and quarter-dollar is raised by this bill?
Mr. SHERMAN. There is a difference of about one-half of 1 per cent.
Mr. CASSERLY. I——

Mr. SHERMAN. The difference between the gram in the half-dollar as provided in that bill was one-half per cent. The object was to unitize our fractional silver coin to the French standard.

Mr. STEWART. I am speaking about the dollar which was then the subject of discussion. The question is what you did say, not what you now think you meant to say.

I suppose it must be raised to the basis of international exchange.

Of course it was not raised. It was lowered, because our standard was higher than the French. That was a mistake, showing that there was no accurate information on the subject, which the following answer by Mr. SHERMAN to Mr. Casserly's question abundantly shows:

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is slightly raised, so as to conform with foreign coins. The Chamber of Commerce of New York first recommended this change, and it has been adopted, I believe, by all the learned societies who have given attention to coinage, and has been recommended to us, I believe, as the general desire. That is embodied in these three or four sections of amendment, to make our silver coinage correspond in exact form and dimensions and shape and stamp with the coinage of the associated nations of Europe, who have adopted an international silver coinage. I do not like myself to break in upon this plan or to change it in the slightest degree, but prefer to leave it to the proper officers of the Mint. Indeed, I would be perfectly willing to leave the whole thing to the officers of the Mint rather than to fix it by law. That was not deemed convenient, and therefore we had to drop the American eagle from these minor silver coins.—Congressional Globe, 1872–'73, part 1, page 672.

If there was any doubt that the silver dollar was then in the bill, or that the chairman of the Finance Committee so declared, the following amendment, which is printed in the Congressional Globe in the column preceding the dialogue above quoted, settles the controversy and corroborates all I have said:

SEC. [19] 18. That upon the coins of the United States there shall be the following devices and legends: Upon one side there shall be an impression emblematic of liberty, with an inscription of the word "Liberty" and the year of the coinage, and upon the reverse shall be the figure or representation of an eagle, with the inscription "United States of America" and "E Pluribus Unum," and a designation of the value of the coin; but on the gold dollar and three-dollar piece, the silver dollar, the half-dollar, the quarter-dollar, the dime, five, three, and one cent pieces the figure of the eagle shall be omitted; and on the reverse of the silver dollar—

Etc., giving inscription on reverse side of the coins enumerated.

The Senate voted upon the faith of the statements of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and the amendment which he offered to perfect the bill, which I have just read. The fact that he offered an amendment, which was read at the Clerk's desk and printed in the Globe, providing for inscriptions upon the silver dollar, was convincing proof that such a coin was provided for in the body of the bill. If anybody had doubted the chairman's declaration that the silver dollar was contained in the bill that doubt must have been removed by the language of the amendment.

The bill passed on these representations. A conference of the two Houses was had on the Senate amendments. The Senator from Ohio said on Tuesday last:

Here is the conference report. They did not in the slightest degree change either of the sections named which suspended the coinage of the silver dollar. The conference had no relation to them. The dispute was about other matters entirely.

The silver dollar is not contained in the bill as it was printed in the statutes. When or how it was eliminated I have no means of knowing, and I deny all responsibility for its disappearance. I charge no man with anything and insinuate nothing.

The scheme to demonetize silver was not of American origin. I must believe that the Senator from Ohio was himself ignorant of what was being done, and that the scheme was accomplished by the cunning of some foreign hand. The discussion in regard to our metallic currency was commenced in Europe.

The immediate discussion which led to the demonetization of silver in the United States was inaugurated by Ernest Seyd, a celebrated German-English banker and author, in a volume entitled "Suggestions in Reference to Metallic Currency in the United States," printed in London in 1871 "for private circulation," containing 253 pages of matter devoted to good English advice for American consumption. It so happened that Mr. Seyd was in Washington in 1870 when Mr. Knox inaugurated the scheme to demonetize silver by his celebrated report mentioned by the Senator from Ohio, and again at the opening of the Congress of 1872–'73, at which the bill demonetizing silver passed.

Let me call attention to the history of the efforts of the creditor class in Europe to demonetize one of the precious metals for the purpose of enhancing the value of securities. I hold in my hand a book written by Chevalier, of France, in 1857, who was regarded as the ablest writer on financial subjects in all Europe. The discovery of gold and silver in California and Australia and the promise of large productions of gold were subjects of great anxiety to the creditor class in Europe. Chevalier's book was written for the purpose of inducing the French Government to demonetize gold for the purpose of enhancing the value of bonds and other securities. He used the same argument against gold which is now used against silver, and assumed that silver would be driven out of the country and France ruined unless gold was demonetized. The object was to demonetize one of the precious metals and enhance the value of bonds. Gold was selected because for the time being it was the plentier metal. Many volumes were written by other authors on the same subject. I now hold in my hand the work of an eminent English writer on finance, entitled "Maclaren's History of Currency," published in London in 1858. Mr. Maclaren reviews many authors on the subject of demonetizing one of the precious metals, and concurs with Chevalier that gold should be demonetized and silver adopted as the single standard. He contended that England, which had adopted the gold standard in 1816, should change from gold to silver, and explained the great benefit of such a change to all persons living on fixed incomes. Holland, Belgium, Germany, and Austria adopted the single silver standard at various times after the discovery of gold in California and Australia and before the discovery of the Comstock silver lode in Nevada.

When there was a prospect that silver might become plentier than gold, Germany first changed her position, and in 1871 demonetized silver, and finally, by the year 1876, every mint in the United States and Europe was closed against silver, and that metal fell more than 15 per cent.

Congress at this juncture appointed a commission to investigate the whole subject and make a report. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] was chairman of that commission. I would suggest to Senators that it might be time well spent to examine that report. The report is an exhaustive review of the whole subject, and contains a full history of the discussion from 1853 up to the time the demonetization of silver was finally consummated. The basis of every argument in Europe was the necessity to demonetize one of the metals for the purpose of enhancing the value of bonds. The report shows that Germany adopted the silver standard in 1857 and the gold standard in 1871, and that the same reason was given in each case—the necessity for contraction in aid of the rich.

There are libraries of books advocating the demonetization of one or the other of the precious metals, and the same reasons are always assigned, no matter which metal is to be discarded. In every case the moneyed aristocracy is to be benefited, enterprise retarded, and the people robbed. There is no necessity for a concealment in monarchical countries, where the people do not vote; consequently Chevalier, Maclaren, and others were not required to disguise their purposes from the people. The people of this country were not consulted when the great change, which robbed them of the right to pay their debts according to contract, was made. It was done without their knowledge or consent. Our finances were discussed in Europe in books printed for circulation among the moneyed aristocracy of that country, not in the Congress of the United States or before the people.

If the daylight of which the Senator from Ohio speaks had been let in upon the designs of the bondholders of Europe and America, the silver dollar would never have been demonetized. No man in either House of Congress would have sought the bad eminence which he would have attained by voting for the act of February 12, 1873.

How has this action affected the prosperity of Europe and America? Why is business depressed and all great enterprises trembling on the brink of financial ruin? Universal peace and abundant harvests furnish no sufficient answer. In other periods of the world's history financial distress has always been accompanied by contraction. Every advance in civilization has been accompanied by an abundant supply of the precious metals, and every retrograde movement in the progress of the advancement has occurred at a time when the supply of the precious metals has been inadequate. Historians tell us that at the commencement of the Christian era about two thousand million dollars of metallic money were circulating in the Roman Empire, then the civilized world, as money among the people, and that at the commencement of the fifteenth century, when gold and silver were discovered in Mexico and South America, the volume of the precious metals in the civilized world was less than one hundred and fifty millions.

Fifteen hundred years of contraction, at the rate of more than one hundred millions each century, were accompanied by fifteen hundred years of misery and decay, and constitute the period known as the Dark Ages. The three hundred years from the fifteenth to the eighteenth century witness the revival of civilization and the reformation of the world, attended with all the advantages of material, moral, physical, and intellectual progress. During this same three hundred years the supply of the precious metals from the New World furnished an abundant circulation, which constantly increased with the increase of population. At the commencement of the present century the Spanish-American wars greatly diminished the supply of the precious metals. The depression and hard times which followed are still fresh in the memories of living men. The financial struggles through which the country passed from 1810 to 1850 were the most trying that had been experienced for centuries. The year 1849 witnessed a lower range of prices than had been seen for one hundred years. An event then occurred which removed the universal depression and financial distress which were retarding the progress of the civilized world and infused new life in every channel of commerce and every department of business and enterprise. From 1850 to 1875 the average price of labor and all commodities is shown by the statistics of Mr. Wells, Mr. Sauerbeck, and others to have risen more than 30 per cent. In an article in the Popular Science Monthly for October, 1887 (page 770), Mr. Wells says:

Compared with the average prices of general commodities from 1867 to 1877, the period from 1878 to 1885 shows a depreciation of 18 per cent. But if the average prices of 1885 alone be taken, the decline from the average for 1867-'77 is 28 per cent.; or continuing the comparison through 1885 and embracing a somewhat larger number of articles, the average depreciation, in the opinion of Mr. Sauerbeck, has amounted to 31 per cent. Furthermore, the average level of prices for 1886, according to the tables of Mr. Sauerbeck, was considerably below the average for the year 1848, which in turn appears to have been the lowest previous point for the century subsequent to 1820.

Look at that period, notwithstanding all the disasters of it—a period of twenty-five years, in which there were more wars than ever occurred in a century before. The Italian-French war, the German-Austrian war, the Franco-German war, the Crimean war, the war of the Rebellion were all crowded in that twenty-five years; but property rose and population increased, notwithstanding those calamities, more than in any period of a century beside.

In 1850 the property of the United States was valued at seven thousand millions; in 1870, notwithstanding eight thousand millions had been destroyed by war, it was valued at thirty-one thousand millions; and a similar increase in the value of property, though not so great as ours, occurred throughout the civilized world. What controlling influence produced this if it were not caused by the life-giving power of an increasing circulating medium, resulting from the vast increase in the production of the precious metals occasioned by the new discoveries in California and Australia?

The commencement of this era of prosperity is graphically described by Sir Archibald Alison, the great historian. After having devoted a half-century in writing history and discussing the questions of tariff, free trade, money, and other kindred subjects, near the close of his labors, in the last volume of his "History of Europe" (Chapter 56), he says:

It will belong to a succeeding historian to narrate the wonderful spring which the country made during the five years which followed 1852 under the influence of the gold discoveries in America and Australia. * * *

The annual supply of gold and silver for the use of the globe was by these discoveries suddenly increased from an average of £10,000,000 to one of £35,000,000.

The words of poetic genius were more than realized. "Methinks, as I gaze around, I see the scheme of the all-beneficent Father disentangling itself clear through the troubled history of mankind."

How mysteriously, while Europe rears its populations and fulfills its civilizing mission, these realms, which have been concealed from its eyes, divulged to us just as civilization needs the solution to its problem; a vent for feverish energies, baffled in the crowd, offering bread to the famished, hope to the desperate in very truth, enabling the New World to redress the balance of the Old. Here the actual Æneid passes before our eyes. From the hearts of the exiles scattered over this hardier Italy, who can not see in the future

A race from whence New Albion's sons shall come,
And the long glories of a future Rome?

Most of all did Great Britain and Ireland experience the wonderful effects of this great medium of our globe.

That which for five and twenty years had been awanting, a currency commensurate to the increased numbers and transactions of the civilized world, was now supplied by the beneficent hand of nature. The era of a contracted currency, and consequent low prices and general misery, interrupted by passing gleams of prosperity, was at an end. Prices rapidly rose; wages advanced in a similar proportion; exports and imports enormously increased, while crime and misery as rapidly diminished; emigration itself, which had reached 368,000 persons a year, sank to little more than half the amount. Wheat rose from 40s. to 65s.; but the wages of labor of every kind advanced in nearly as great a proportion; they were found to be about 30 per cent. higher, on an average, than they had been five years before. In Ireland the change was still greater, and probably unequaled in so short a time in the annals of history. Wages of country labor rose from 4d. a day to 1s. 6d. or 2s.; convicted crime sank nearly a half; and the increased growth of cereal crops, under the genial influences of these advanced prices, was as rapid as its previous decline since 1846 had been. At the same time decisive evidence was afforded that all this sudden burst of prosperity was the result of the expanded currency, and by no means of free trade, in the fact that it did not appear till the gold discoveries came into operation, and then it was fully as great in the protected

From 1850 to 1875 the annual product of the precious metals was from one hundred and seventy-five millions to two hundred millions; from 1875 to 1888 the annual supply of the two metals has been fully equal to two hundred millions. Why, then, have prices declined 33⅓ per cent. in the last thirteen years? The Silver Commission of 1876 investigated that subject and furnished a key by which the present financial depression is explained, which will be found on page 85 of that report, as follows:

First, the demonetization of silver, by Germany in 1871, by the United States in 1873 and 1874, and by the Scandinavian states in 1874; the limitation on the coinage of silver imposed by France, Belgium, Switzerland, and Italy in 1874; the closure of the Holland mint against the coinage of silver on private account in April, 1875; the refusal of Switzerland, in 1875, to coin silver at all, and in the summer of 1876, by authority given to and actually exercised by the President of the French Republic, the suspension of the silver coinage altogether; the Spanish royal decree (1876) closing the mint of that kingdom against private depositors, and declaring the purpose of that government to demonetize it for all sums exceeding $28 at the earliest practicable moment; and the submission (1876) to the Dutch legislative chambers of a ministerial project of demonetizing silver in Holland, and of extending to the mint in Java the restriction against coinage for individuals already imposed (April, 1875) upon the mint in Holland.

Although Congress demonetized silver in February, 1873, the fact was not discovered by the general public or by the executive department of this Government until all the mints in the United States and Europe were closed against silver. Then it was that silver fell near 20 per cent. and the discovery was made.

President Grant, who signed the bill, wrote a letter on the 6th day of October, in the same year—about eight months after silver was demonetized—to his friend, Mr. Cowdrey, in which he said:

The panic has brought greenbacks about to a par with silver. I wonder that silver is not already coming into the market to supply the deficiency in the circulating medium. When it does come—and I predict that it will soon—we will have made a rapid stride toward specie payments. Currency will never go below silver after that.

The circulation of silver will have other beneficial effects. Experience has proved that it takes about forty millions of fractional currency to make the small change necessary for the transaction of the business of the country. Silver will gradually take the place of this currency, and further, will become the standard of values which will be hoarded in a small way.

I estimate that this will consume from two to three hundred millions, in time, of this species of our circulating medium. It will leave the paper currency free to perform the legitimate functions of trade, and will tend to bring us back where we must come at last—to a specie basis. I confess to a desire to see a limited hoarding of money. It insures a firm foundation in time of need. But I want to see the hoarding of something that has a standard of value the world over. Silver has this; and if we once get back to that, our strides toward a higher appreciation of our currency will be rapid.

Our mines are now producing almost unlimited amounts of silver, and it is becoming a question, "What shall we do with it?" I suggest here a solution that will answer for some years, and suggest to you bankers whether you may not imitate it: to put it in circulation now, keep it there until it is fixed, and then we will find other markets. The South and Central American countries have asked us to coin their silver for them. There has never been authority of law to do so. I trust it will now be given. When it is given it will be more than the equivalent of becoming exporters of articles of manufacture which were previously articles of import. Orders will come for large amounts of coin. It will be all in silver, while payments are not necessarily so. We become the manufacturer of this currency, with a profit, and will probably secure a portion of our pay in the more precious metal.

Did President Grant know what the bill contained? If he did, that was a very foolish letter.

But this is not all. He sent a special message to Congress in January, 1875, on the day he signed the specie-resumption act, which proves that he was utterly ignorant of the fact that silver had been demonetized by the act of 1873. Listen to his recommendation two years after the passage of the bill demonetizing silver was passed:

In fact, to carry out the first section of the act, another mint becomes necessary. With the present facilities for coinage, it would take a period probably beyond that fixed by law for final specie resumption to coin the silver necessary to transact the business of the country.

There are now smelting-furnaces for extracting the silver and gold from the ores brought from the mountain Territories in Chicago, St. Louis, and Omaha—three in the former city—and as much of the change required will be wanted in the Mississippi Valley States, and as the metals to be coined come from west of those States, and, as I understand, the charges for transportation of bullion from either of the cities named to the mint in Philadelphia, or to New York City, amount to $4 for each one thousand dollars' worth, with an equal expense for transportation back, it would seem a fair argument in favor of adopting one or more of those cities as the place or places for the establishment of new coining facilities.

Did the Executive understand when he made this recommendation that silver had been demonetized? Did the light of day in which the Senator from Ohio alleges the bill was passed reach and illuminate the Executive Mansion?

I have already shown that from 1850 to 1875 population and wealth throughout the world increased beyond a parallel, and that, according to Alison, the historian, the high-tariff nations and the low-tariff nations prospered alike. What they wanted was the life-blood of an abundant circulating medium regardless of the question of tariff. During that period of twenty-five years, with all its wars, prosperity was the rule. What has occurred in the last thirteen years? A shrinkage in values of over 33 per cent., paralysis of business, hard times, and general depression throughout the United States and Europe.

We are coolly informed by the bondholders that this shrinkage in prices is beneficial; that as values decline less money is needed because there is less value to represent. The following from our author, Mr. Wells, is cool and refreshing. In the December number of the Popular Science Monthly, he says (page 176):

Furthermore, an average decrease of at least 30 per cent. in the prices of the commodities that represent the great bulk of the world's production and consumption, comparing the data of 1885-'86 with those of 1867-'77, has in itself been equivalent to largely or entirely supplementing any increased demand for the use of silver and gold as money consequent upon any increase in the volume of the world's business during the same period.

I agree with Mr. Wells that the value of property has shrunk, and will continue to shrink as long as contraction continues, and that money will buy more property the less money there is in circulation. This is consoling doctrine for the bondholder and creditor. His demand does not shrink; it simply requires more property to satisfy it. I commend this doctrine of the bond-holding, gold-standard aristocracy to the farmers of the Mississippi Valley, and ask them if they desire wheat and cotton to further decline in price to correspond to a shrinking volume of currency; if a further reduction in the price of farm products will aid them to remove from their homes twelve hundred millions of mortgages? It may enable the creditor to get their farms for a small amount of money and be very gratifying to the usurer. But what will become of the farmer and his family?

We have already seen that the annual production of gold and silver from 1875 to the present time is over two hundred millions, and that since the war on silver began, in 1873, the aggregate production of the two metals has reached the enormous sum of thirty-two hundred millions. If the production of the precious metals has not failed, why has prosperity been checked and enterprise paralyzed? Because silver has been demonetized, excluded from the mints of the United States and Europe and driven to Asia for a market. Of the sixteen hundred millions of silver produced since 1873 only two hundred and eighty millions have been coined in the United States, and not exceeding two hundred and twenty millions of legal-tender silver coined elsewhere outside of Asia, leaving the enormous sum of about eleven hundred millions to find a market in the arts or be banished to Asia never to return. If one-half of the production of the precious metals had been stopped by natural causes the world would have attributed the evils which now exist to a failure in the supply of metallic money, but one-half of the supply having been cut off by legislation for the benefit of bondholders and money-lenders, an influential and powerful class are flooding the world with literature to deceive the people and induce them to tamely submit to the robbery of contraction under the name of a gold standard. Suppose the act of 1878, requiring the coinage of silver, had never been passed, and the two hundred and eighty millions of silver coin resulting therefrom did not exist, what would be the present condition of the finances of this country? What is the prospect if the gold standard could be maintained? The production of gold is diminishing while population is increasing. From 1870 to 1875 the average annual product of gold was one hundred and thirteen millions. For the last five years, according to the reports of the Director of the Mint, the average annual product of that metal has been less than one hundred millions, and I doubt very much, if the actual facts were known, whether it would exceed ninety millions.

The volume of gold must necessarily shrink. The world has been explored for gold. Gold in its free state appears on the surface and in the beds of streams. Since the discoveries in Australia and California the whole world has been explored, and new placer mines can not be expected to be discovered to any considerable extent. One-third of the product of gold is found in combination with silver. When the silver mines are stopped, as they will be if we cease to use silver as money, there will be an enormous decrease in the production of gold. Still the creditor class insist that we must adhere to gold, notwithstanding the shrinkage of production; notwithstanding the stagnation of business and the impending bankruptcy which overshadows the land.

The only reason given for using either metal generally accepted is for the purpose of fixing a limitation upon the amount of money that shall circulate among the people. The two metals were used as such limitation of quantity for more than two thousand years prior to 1875. The charge was that governments could not be trusted to fix the amount of the circulation.

But if governments could not be trusted to fix the limitation upon the circulating medium, and the experience of two thousand years has indicated a necessity to use both gold and silver not only as money, but as a limitation upon the amount of money in circulation, how can such governments be now trusted to discard either one or the other of the precious metals as money and thus change the limitation at pleasure? If governments are after all to say how much money shall be in circulation by dispensing with one or the other of the precious metals at pleasure, why not discard them both and fix some other standard? If the standard can be changed in the United States without debate it is absurd to talk of metallic basis.

I can not close without referring to the most atrocious and insulting argument used by the bondholding aristocracy, which is that the fall in silver, as compared with gold, was produced by overproduction of the former metal. The fact that it was legislation and not production that produced this calamity is evidenced by the fact that silver did not fall until it was excluded from the mints of the United States and Europe, although its production, as compared with that of gold, was less when the two metals parted company in 1876 than at many former periods. From 1500 to 1846 the aggregate production of the two metals was about 70 per cent. silver and 30 per cent. gold. From 1846 to 1850 their production was about equal. From 1850 to 1875 the aggregate production was about 70 per cent. of gold and 30 per cent. of silver.

For two hundred years previous to 1875 the two metals never parted company, so that 14 ounces of silver would buy an ounce of gold, or an ounce of gold would buy 16 ounces of silver. The average ratio between the two metals was comparatively stationary at 15½ to 1. Since 1875 the product of the two metals has been about equal. This shows that they parted company by legislation and not by production.

Why may not the United States have an independent financial policy? The representatives of the bondholders tell us it is impossible, because the restoration of silver to its place as money by the United States alone would overwhelm us with an avalanche of silver. I answer before that avalanche can come there must be a source of supply somewhere to produce it. There is no accumulation of silver bullion in either Europe or America. Five million ounces can not be found in both countries. The efforts of the rulers of the moneyed aristocracy of Europe and America to totally demonetize silver has so intimidated the purchasers of silver bullion that they dare not let it accumulate on their hands a single hour. The avalanche can not, therefore, come from an accumulation of bullion. No silver has ever come or ever will come from Asia.

But one other source of supply besides production has been suggested, and that is the coin silver of Europe. The total amount of token-money and legal-tender silver money in all Europe is a little more than thirteen hundred millions. Near four hundred millions of this amount is subsidiary coin, greatly debased by other metals, and valuable only for circulation in the countries where it was coined. It could not be brought to our market. There is less than one thousand millions of legal-tender coin in all Europe. This coin is circulating in the countries where it was made on a par with gold as a full legal tender at the ratio of 15½ to 1. It would take an ounce of gold to buy 15½ ounces of this coin silver, which, when transported to the United States, could not be sold for an ounce of gold until an addition thereto of another half ounce of silver was made to bring it to our standard, for our standard is about 16 to 1. This would be a loss of over 3 per cent. besides transportation and insurance.

A large supply from that source, therefore, can not be anticipated. Our principal supply must come from silver hereafter to be produced from the mines. How much silver would it require to supply the wants of circulation in the United States? Coin certificates based on gold and silver might be substituted for all the paper money now outstanding without detriment to a sound and conservative policy of finance. This would create a demand for over five hundred millions of additional bullion. Three hundred millions additional circulation on a metallic basis would secure universal prosperity, making a present total demand for about eight hundred millions of bullion, with an increasing population, requiring a constant increase of money. Under such circumstances overproduction from the mines can not be anticipated. The avalanche or flood of the precious metals is not an imminent danger even with the use of both metals. On the contrary, after the full restoration of silver, legal-tender notes would be necessary for an indefinite period to avoid contraction.

It seems strange that a country like the United States, abounding in resources, and rich with gifted and intelligent men, capable of meeting every emergency of war or peace, is unable to devise any financial policy which can be stated or understood. The national-bank scheme, viewed in the most favorable light, waiving the expense to the Government of maintaining it, is a weak and inconsequential expedient. The seeds of dissolution were planted in it when it was born. The currency which it provided was ephemeral, and its days were numbered by the limit of payment in the bonds deposited for the security of the issue.

The Comptroller of the Currency, in his last annual report, mourns the demise of one hundred and sixty millions of this ephemeral currency occasioned by the payment of bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury is required, several times in each year, to invent new schemes to furnish the people with money. His pilgrimages to Wall street are watched by sixty million of people with trembling anxiety as their only source of relief from impending financial ruin. The stock-brokers of Wall street are thanked by the people and congratulated by themselves while accumulating millions by the fluctuations in the value of money when they do not exact so much as to produce panic and immediate ruin.

Under these circumstances we have been coolly informed by the Treasury Department for the last fifteen years that there is no relief for these evils unless the bondholding aristocracy of Europe will grant such relief and allow us to remonetize silver. Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary of the gold-standard aristocracy of America are annually accredited to the same class in Europe to enjoy themselves in the best society that can be furnished by the money kings at the capitals of the great powers. These distinguished ambassadors always inform us that Europe will not allow us to use silver, and that we must conform to their wishes. Still each administration regards it as an especial duty to continue these missions. The beauty of this philosophical and patriotic performance is that the executive department at all times recognizes the practice as indispensable, no matter whether a Democrat or a Republican occupies the Presidential chair.

I hope that my explanation, together with my denial that I was knowingly a party to the demonetization of silver, will be accepted in the spirit in which it is offered.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, in what I may have to say on the bill which is under consideration, I will try to confine myself to matters strictly germane to the bill and keep myself within the limit of time prescribed by the rule under which the Senate is acting. I will not follow the lead of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and attempt to talk upon the tariff issue on this pension bill, nor will I stray with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] along the attractive paths of the silver question. I shall simply seek to correct a few misstatements that have been made as to facts which should be well known, notably by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is absent from his seat.

The Senator from Missouri, in his remarks on the first day of this month, made the following statement, and it was in such direct conflict with statements made by myself and others in the discussion upon this bill that I was greatly surprised to hear it. I read from his remarks:

We have heard a good deal upon the floor about almshouses and Federal soldiers. I do not know how it is in the rest of the Union, but in the State of Missouri there are no Federal soldiers in almshouses, and I am proud to say that there are no Confederate soldiers in almshouses either.

And again he said:

They—

The Confederate soldiers—

ask no pensions. God be thanked, they would not take them. They are not in almshouses, and no man has ever seen one of them begging for bread.

Whence comes this talk of Federal soldiers in almshouses? They are not there.

Mr. President, I quoted a few days ago from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions for the year 1886, and I beg to reread a part of that report, showing that there had been careful investigation by that officer into this subject-matter. He says:

About the first of the present calendar year I directed an investigation to be made with a view to determine the number of soldiers and sailors who, having served in the Army and Navy of the United States, were supported in whole or in part from the public funds or organized charities. To this end the gentleman having charge of this investigation communicated with the county officers, clerks of courts, county judges, overseers of the poor, etc. The reports as to Connecticut and Michigan were made by State officers. Two of the States, New Jersey and Delaware, did not furnish the information as called for. Partial information has been furnished from nearly all the remaining States, however, and full reports have been received from 1,240 counties of the United States. The inquiry does not include those in the soldiers' homes supported by the United States. Upon the information thus furnished computations were made which are believed to exhibit approximately correct results. The number so found receiving support, as before stated, is, in round numbers, 9,000.

I feel that it is matter for congratulation that I am not compelled to go to any other source but that report or reports made by a Democratic official properly charged with this exploration, and I found that, pursuing this inquiry, General Black, the Commissioner of Pensions, on the 20th day of September last, issued this circular, sending it to the different county clerks and supervisors of the poor all over the United States:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., September 20, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: Desiring certain information for the use of the Bureau of Pensions, and believing that you share in the great interest ever manifest throughout the country in the welfare of our soldiery—especially the disabled and poverty-stricken—I take the liberty of soliciting your cordial co-operation in ascertaining the number of Union ex-soldiers and sailors and their dependent relatives who, from causes within and beyond their control, are dependent on charity. With that object in view, will you be kind enough to cause the accompanying blank forms to be carefully filled out from the records of the almshouse and other charitable institutions which may be under your charge in your county? In the event of there being one or more such institutions in your county, not under your immediate supervision, where said soldiers and sailors may be cared for, be pleased to lay one of the inclosed blank forms and a copy of this letter before the official having charge of said institution, with the request that he comply with the objects thereof. Please do not indicate herein any State or Government home for soldiers or sailors.

After filling up the blank form, as above indicated, you will place the Bureau of Pensions still further under obligations if you will acknowledge the correctness of the list before some officer authorized to administer oaths for general purposes. The expense thereof will be remitted to you by the special examiner of this bureau in your vicinity when he receives the attesting officer's receipt.

With many thanks, in anticipation of your early compliance with the above request, I am,

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

Under that circular this work was undertaken, and at noon on the 15th day of October, 1887, in every one of the charitable institutions of the character spoken of in the circular, a census was taken of ex-soldiers and their dependents who were in these houses, and the report is most interesting. It most flatly contradicts the statement of the Senator from Missouri as to his own State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The Chair reminds the Senator from Nebraska that under the agreement of the Senate made yesterday his time has expired.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will be permitted to continue.

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall ask but a few minutes longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Nebraska proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANDERSON. I find the interesting fact to appear that in every one of the States of the United States, with the exception of Alabama and South Carolina, there are ex-Union soldiers and their dependent relatives in the poor-houses of the State. I will not take the time to read this list, but I will beg to attach it to my remarks. Simply referring to a few of the States, I find that in Arkansas there are 6 ex-soldiers in poor-houses; in California, 275; in Connecticut, 365; in Georgia, 20; in Illinois, 994; in Iowa, 348; in Kentucky, 150; in Maine, 1,110; in Massachusetts, reported as being either within those institutions or receiving State aid from the institutions under the law of that State, 8,798 ex-soldiers and 112 dependent relatives, about 8,000 being outside of the institutions receiving State aid and about 900 within the walls of the institutions themselves.

Mr. DAWES Those outside receiving State aid are not necessarily paupers.

Mr. MANDERSON. I so understand, but still they are persons who are receiving this charitable aid from the State.

Mr. DAWES. The State has endeavored to supplement what the General Government has been doing for dependent relatives of soldiers.

Mr. MANDERSON. And has done so with exceptional liberality, to a greater extent, I think, than any other State in the Union. In the State of Michigan there are 569; in the State of Nebraska, 17; in the State of New Hampshire, 361; in New York, 1,988; in Ohio, 1,212; in Pennsylvania, 3,670; in Vermont, 174; in West Virginia, 58; in Wisconsin, 170.

So I find the total to be of ex-soldiers who are either within the walls of these charitable institutions or, as in the case of Massachusetts, receiving aid from the State because they need such aid, 16,856 soldiers and 4,945 dependent relatives, making a total, on the 15th day of October, 1887, of 21,801. Deducting from this number the 8,000 or thereabouts in Massachusetts who are receiving aid outside of these institutions, we have 13,801 ex-soldiers and their dependent relatives on that day in the almshouses and poor-houses and charitable institutions of the United States.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON. How many of those persons are pensioners or applicants for pensions?

Mr. MANDERSON. I will give statistics as to that in one moment. I will say to the Senator from Louisiana that I do not know that I read his State in the list. There are 8 ex-soldiers and 6 dependent relatives in the almshouses of Louisiana, making 14 in all.

Now let me refer for a moment to the State of Missouri. I find that in that State instead of there being no ex-Union soldiers in almshouses, there are 138 ex-soldiers and 62 dependent relatives, making 200 that are in the almshouses of Missouri; and in this connection I desire to read a letter received by me yesterday, dated the 2d day of March, Springfield, Greene County, Missouri. This letter comes to me from one of the special examiners of the Pension Office. I believe the writer is of the same political faith as the Senator from Missouri; and he says:

Allow me to call your attention to certain statements made by Hon. GEORGE VEST in his recent speech on the pension bill now pending before your honorable body. In his remarks he says there are no paupers in the almshouses in Missouri.

The writer then goes on to state that there had been received in Missouri this certificate and the blanks sent out by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator give the name?

Mr. MANDERSON. I will give it to the Senator at any time. I will read the rest of the letter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought you had given it and I did not catch it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I say he is one of the special examiners of the Pension Office. I will at any time show the name to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator stated that he was of the same political faith as my colleague.

Mr. MANDERSON. I said I believed he was.

Mr. COCKRELL. In that I am sure the Senator is mistaken, and I doubt whether the writer is now an examiner of the Pension Office.

Mr. MANDERSON. He so signs himself on the 2d of March.

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been one discharge for inefficiency and incompetency within the last few days.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will read what he says. In regard to the question at issue whether he is now in the service or out of it, I can say nothing. All I know about it is that on the 2d day of March he signs himself as special examiner of the Pension Office. He says:

We have in each and every county a great many dependent soldiers, heirs, and minors who are now and have been objects of charity either by the county court or Grand Army of the Republic posts. Greene County, which reports—

Under these reports I have just referred to to the Commissioner of Pensions—one old soldier in its poor-house, has not less than fifteen who are being cared for either by the county court, Grand Army of the Republic posts, or Woman's Relief Corps. Many of the counties in Southwestern Missouri have no poor-houses or charitable institutions, but are dependent for the care of their poor by relations or charity, paying something out of the county treasury each month as their support.

So it seems from this exploration made by the Commissioner of Pensions, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] was laboring under very great misinformation in regard to the condition of affairs in his own State.

I have found that there are 13,801 in these charitable institutions outside of the national homes supported by the Government. There were on the same date, the 15th day of October, 1887, in the national homes 15,152 inmates, making a total of 28,953 ex-soldiers and their dependents who were on that day in the charitable institutions of this country.

Of the whole number supported by State institutions, being 21,801—and this answers the inquiry of the Senator from Louisiana—I find that there are pensioners 7,420; there are claimants for pensions with their cases still undetermined 1,991, leaving as neither pensioners nor claimants for pension 12,390; and in the State of Missouri (and I take this from Commissioner Black's report) of the 138 ex-soldiers in the poor-houses there are pensioners 11, claimants 46, leaving 81 who are neither upon the pension-roll nor claiming pensions at the hands of the Government.

And this, it seems to me, Mr. President, very clearly contradicts another assertion made by the Senator from Missouri, where he referred to the ex-soldiers of the Union Army as being either upon the pension-roll or claimants for pension. This is the language used by him in that connection:

The pension-rolls show that out of 2,300,000 men enrolled in the Federal Army 800,000 were disabled by disease or by shot and shell. Nearly 50 per cent. of all the men enrolled in the Federal Army according to the pension reports are now applicants for pensions, or have been.

* * * * * * *

Nearly 50 per cent. of all these hosts to-day are applicants for pensions. Who believes that all these are honest applicants? Who believes that this thing has not degenerated into a political abuse, which cries aloud in the face of all honest men for redress?

Mr. President, even if the fact were as stated by the Senator from Missouri and it were true that of the survivors of the war who participated on the side of the Republic in that great contest 50 per cent. were applicants for pension or upon the pension-list, that fact should hardly form the foundation of remarks of this character. But it is not true, and I refer again to the late report of the Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, to ascertain what is the number; and let me premise by saying that the number of soldiers enlisted in the Union Army during the war was about 2,772,000. Many of these were, of course, re-enlistments. Discarding those, it is safe to say that from 2,300,000 to 2,500,000 were enlisted during the war upon the Union side.

Of this number there have been applications filed by invalids, ex-soldiers themselves, since the year 1861, 616,963 from the Army, and from the Navy 11,309, making a total of applications from both Army and Navy since 1861 of 628,272. There have been allowed of these applications 367,424, leaving pending cases 260,848. Of the claims of widows, minor children, and dependent parents, there have been filed since the commencement of the war, in 1861, 358,684 claims. Adding to those claims that have been received from the Army the number of Navy applications, 6,202, we have a total of 364,886 applications of widows, minor children, and dependent relatives. There have been allowed of this number 240,662, leaving yet pending 124,224.

In this connection I desire also to show the number now upon the pension-roll. There are of invalids of the Army who served during the war of the rebellion, 294,445; of widows, minor children, and dependents of those who served in the Army, 85,010; on the invalid Navy list, 3,281; widows, minor children, and dependent relatives of those who served in the Navy, 1,973; of the war of 1812 survivors, 1,069; widows, 11,831; of the war with Mexico, 7,503 survivors, and 895 widows of soldiers of that war, making the grand total from all wars now upon the pension-list 406,607.

It will thus be seen that instead of 50 per cent., perhaps 1,250,000 claimants for pension, or those who are now receiving pension, the actual number of those receiving pension is less than 12 per cent. of the whole number that were engaged in that dread struggle, and not to exceed 24 per cent. of both claimants and pensioners.

Mr. President, I have other tables here and other showings that contradict many other statements made by the Senator from Missouri, particularly as to the condition of affairs with reference to the Confederate soldiers. I would be very glad if the fact were, as he says, that there was no Confederate soldier in any of the almshouses or the poor-houses of Missouri, or any other of the States of this Union, and that none were begging bread. Unfortunately, however, that is not so; and if time permitted, or if it were necessary or germane to this subject, I should be glad to make that showing before the Senate.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] criticising somewhat the remarks made by me on this bill a couple of weeks ago, suggested that a statement had been made by myself that a majority of the ex-soldiers of the Republic were not in favor of a service-pension bill. I do not believe that at this time a majority of the ex-soldiers of this country are in favor of a service-pension bill. I would myself be heartily glad to have such a bill, a proper bill, pass the Congress of the United States and become a law; but I do not believe that a majority of the ex-soldiers of this country desire a bill of that character at this time. I believe the time will come before many years have rolled over us when they will so desire, but not at this time.

The Senator from Maryland suggested that this bill certainly then can not be acceptable to the survivors of the war because it was a service-pension bill. It seems to me that he very strangely misconceives what this bill is. It is a service-pension bill to the extent that all pension bills must have in them the element or the ingredient of service. That must be the basis for all pension claims, that there shall have been service; but I submit that that is not the only requisite in this bill. It was not the only requisite in the bill that passed Congress at the last session and was vetoed by the President.

Both had the ingredient of service, but the one of last winter had in it the further and the essential ingredient of dependence, and this has the important essential of disability or incapacity for manual labor; and it is that bill that is asked for by the ex-soldiers of the country at this time. I think the great majority of them would desire to go much further than the provisions of this bill; I myself would so desire. I think the Congress of the United States would desire to go further than the provisions of this bill; but this has in it so much of good, has back of it such character of support that it seems to me the suggestions of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions are most wise when he says that we should return as nearly as possible to the original bill as it was reported by the committee.

I attach hereto the table to which I have referred:

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Nebraska during my brief absence from the Senate alluded to the aid which was bestowed by the State of Massachusetts upon certain soldiers and their widows and dependent relatives—fathers, mothers, and orphans—which makes it proper perhaps for me to say, in immediate connection with what he has said, that this class of persons who are aided by the State of Massachusetts are in no wise to be regarded or treated as paupers. They are persons who undoubtedly, by reason of their dependent condition or their want of full capacity for self-support owing to wounds or disease contracted in the war, need some aid from the public.

The State originated the policy of what is called State aid very early in the war for the benefit of the wives and children of absent soldiers. In nearly every town in the State, first by private association and afterwards by express act of the Legislature, there were arrangements made for seeing that the families of those persons who were absent in the war did not suffer by reason of the absence of the head or other person who was the dependence of the family.

We have paid, since I believe the last of the other American States made any payment for that purpose, upwards of $18,000,000. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts would have been long ago out of debt if it were not for the sum represented by this State aid. I suppose eight or ten years ago our sinking fund would have surpassed our debt for all the other public purposes except this purpose of State aid.

There are agents of the Commonwealth who visit every town and city of the State during the year to inquire personally into the condition of every person who is receiving State aid. The number of such persons is between six thousand and seven thousand all told. In addition to that, the town or city authorities have a full knowledge of the propriety and necessity of the administration of this aid.

For the purpose of setting right some misconception in regard to this matter, although I was not present at the time the Senator from Nebraska spoke, I will state another point which makes it fitting to give these facts in this debate.

We are often reproached both at home and by our antagonists here with undertaking to have a wasteful and extravagant pension system in this country. It is said that our pension system already is larger than that of any other country, or that it is now on more liberal principles than that of this country at any former time, and the inference is that for political or some other purposes the Republican party, which has originated all the pension measures in this country, has originated an extravagant system of such measures, and is now proposing and intending to extend and expand that system to other extravagances which are not to be supported on sound political principles.

Mr. President, there is not a human being in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I will undertake to affirm, of any political party whatever, who questions that this sum—between $18,000,000 and $19,000,000—$18,000,000 brings it up to January, 1887, and it is probably now nearer $20,000,000, certainly between $19,000,000 and $20,000,000—no person will question that that has been wisely, judiciously, and economically bestowed. There is not a dollar of it grudged or condemned by any sane man, so far as I know, within the limits of that Commonwealth.

If that be true, what follows? There is a community where better than any other place in the country, or as well, persons who are willing to work to get their own living can support themselves. There is a compact community, two-thirds of its people living in cities, or near large, populous towns, and although, of course, the disposition to perform does not exist any more there than elsewhere, work may be performed more readily, promptly, and efficiently than in places where the population is sparse. Yet in such a community as that, it is admitted that the pension system of this country is so inadequate to discharge the public obligation to the surviving soldiers, their widows and orphans, that an expenditure of $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 has been well warranted, and required, and demanded in that compact community alone.

Suppose Massachusetts to represent one-twentieth only of the pension wants of this country, there would be $360,000,000 in addition to what has been dispensed by the United States Government in the form of pensions, requisite to do what is only required by decency and strict economical principles for the supply of the proper and reasonable wants of this meritorious class of persons.

It is of no importance who does it. I think that every dollar of this sum should have been paid from the National Treasury. I think it is for the country, which these soldiers saved from death, to save them from poverty and want, so far as it is to be done at all by any form of public aid.

The fact which I have stated demonstrates that the pension system of the United States has been inadequate, insufficient, too economical, and strict by at least the sum of $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 throughout the period which has existed since the close of the war; and that one fact alone is a conclusive and demonstrative answer to any suggestion that the pension legislation of this country has been wasteful, or extravagant, or unreasonable.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I propose to submit a few rather informal observations concerning the pending bill, but first I wish to make a remark upon an entirely different subject.

Whenever a motion is made on Thursday to adjourn over until Monday, the rules forbid debate or explanation of any sort; so I take this opportunity for one to say, knowing that I represent a great many others, that I so vote in order that I may better discharge my duties as a Senator, because the current work is such that if we undertake to go through the form of a session of four or five hours a day for six days in the week we inevitably get behindhand, overwork ourselves, and fail, in my judgment, to do our duty as Senators.

I voted this morning to adjourn over until Monday because of certain committees, and especially of one, the Committee on Military Affairs, an extra meeting of which seemed to be quite necessary, and yet we could not agree among ourselves upon any possible hour of meeting, except that we had a conditional understanding that if the Senate adjourned over until Monday we would meet to-morrow at 12. I have another committee on that day and one on Saturday, and I know other Senators who have three or four committee meetings to attend to in the mean time, besides all the correspondence and the consideration of measures committed to their hands as subcommittees. That is enough on that subject.

I am disposed to vote for this bill for reasons which I will briefly assign. In the first place, the bill begins by saying that in considering the pension claims of dependent parents the fact and cause of death and the fact that the deceased soldier left no widow or no minor children shall be sufficient to establish the relation of dependent father and mother. That is to say, it will be taken for granted that if the son who died in the war had lived until now he would have assisted his parents. We have been in the habit of sending these cases back again and again for some evidence that the father and mother received a few dollars of the boy's pay when he was seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, or twenty years old and was in the Army, or, if he has since died, we have hunted up his history after the war. It seems to me a sensible and generous thing to say, "If we have taken the boy away by war, we will take it for granted that a boy as good as that, on the whole, would have been helping father and mother if he had lived." I am content to stand upon that provision of the bill.

The bill proceeds then to say that all persons who served three months or more, etc., honorably discharged, etc., who may be suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, shall upon due proof be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners and entitled to $12 a month, such pension to commence from the date of filing the application in the Pension Office.

That is substantially the bill. I do not care to refer to the other sections. One of them regulates the compensation of the agent, attorney, etc.

Before passing to further considerations, I wish to observe that it is not right or sensible to attempt to prejudice this bill because it was approved by the Grand Army posts in individual votes of their several posts, in the proportion of about 100,000 to 3,000, if I am right. The Grand Army of the Republic is not a political organization. It is in no sense a political body. Political discussions and votes and work are forbidden by its rules and regulations. In its ranks are many Democrats. Among its prominent officers are some of the leading generals who are known to be Democrats. A very prominent candidate for commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the whole country at the late annual encampment was our distinguished friend and most gallant soldier, General Slocum.

The principles and purposes of the order are sufficiently set forth in its motto, "Fraternity, Charity, and Loyalty." It was an inevitable organization at the close of the war. Similar associations follow every great war in every civilized country. The Order of the Cincinnati is a famous example in this country, but the Grand Army of the Republic has a broader base than that. It recognizes no distinction of rank in its councils; the Lieutenant-General sits by the side of the humblest private of a week's service, if you choose.

The precious comradeship of war and the proud memories of dangers shared and honorable services proved and of record, the organized discharge of the duties of friendship for each other and for their wives and their children in poverty and in sickness and death, and the cultivation and enlargement of their love of country, irresistibly assemble the soldiers of a war, and so glorious a war as that which resulted in the success of the great Republic and the experiment of self-government and the ultimate blessing of foes and friends alike.

It was reported at the last meeting of the national encampment that the charitable expenditures of the year were $253,000. That is a small fraction of the real expenditures of the order during the year. That includes what was formally reported in the statements of treasurers. Every man who belongs to the order, and I have belonged to it for about twenty-two years, knows that a large part of its work, which is incapable of being estimated in dollars and cents, consists in the charitable visits to poverty-stricken or diseased comrades or to suffering wives and children, in attendance upon their death-beds, in attendance upon their funerals, in allowances of relief in forms that do not get into treasurers' reports, in individual contributions, subscriptions raised among the citizens, etc.

Mr. PLATT. And fairs.

Mr. HAWLEY. And fairs; that is one method of raising money. Those funds are sometimes expended in such a manner that they do not get into the national reports.

The impression is created here by the remarks which are sometimes made that it is a great political organization, selecting candidates and putting this man down and the other up, according to his political party affiliation. There comes to my mind as I use those words a picture. Last autumn at home I looked out of my window, hearing the sound of a single mufiled drum. I saw passing up the street thirty old soldiers with the old blouse and cap and one drum and a hearse—no carriage, no persons in civilian dress, no women or children. A soldier without relatives, without other friends, and without money was being taken to the grave by thirty comrades and buried with the help of the $30 that the State always gives under those circumstances. That is one of thousands of cases, and is a simple illustration of the unobtrusive and most honorable charity and fraternity of the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I saw other Senators speaking much longer. I did not know there was a five-minute limit.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the Senator's time will be extended.

Mr. HAWLEY. Thank you. I wish to speak but five or eight minutes longer.

The action of the order in general in national encampment has been eminently conservative. The service pension, which is looked upon with a great deal of dismay because it is likely to involve a very heavy addition to our expenditures, was voted down by it, and this bill, instead of being considered as prejudicial to the reputation of the order, certainly enhanced its character for wisdom and prudence. It is an attempt to give immediate relief to a class of ex-soldiers whose condition appeals to every man. It seems to me that unanimous consent would be given by the people of the whole country to their claim. The bill omits many controverted points. It does not attempt to discuss service pensions or the payment of pensions to ex-prisoners of Andersonville, etc. It selects out of the mass who may need relief, the central point, the 10,000 or 15,000 soldiers and dependents of soldiers, more or less, whatever the figures may be, who are by the judgment of their own State and municipal and local authorities incapacitated, because they are now receiving partially, or in most cases wholly, their support from the municipality or town.

I am justified, I think, in voting for this measure. I know that I am justified in doing so by the action of my State.

I wish to follow in the line indicated by my friend from Massachusetts in showing what is the judgment of the States and the local governments at home immediately in contact with this class of sufferers. I will summarize a few provisions of the statutes of Connecticut. These acts were not discussed as such measures are discussed here in Congress, with an attempt to carefully estimate precisely what they will cost nor with prophecies of their indefinite enlargement till they shall go beyond the means of the State. They are bills meeting the immediate want in the sensible, practical, and economical way of a people who have never been accustomed to waste their money, but have never withheld it when charity and justice called for it.

Section 3766 of the statutes of Connecticut provides that when the soldier, sailor, or marine, honorably discharged, shall die, being a resident of the State and not having sufficient estate to pay the necessary expenses of his burial, the State shall pay such expenses, not to exceed $30, the town first expending the $30, which is a guaranty of reasonable expenditure, and then the State refunding it; and the section also provides that "the burial shall be in some cemetery or plot not used exclusively for the burial of the pauper dead."

The legislation of the State has for some years exempted from poll-tax all soldiers or sailors who served in the Army or Navy for three months and were honorably discharged.

I add that $1.50 a week is allowed by section 3648 for the benefit of each child in the State under the age of fourteen having no other adequate means of support, and is not in any poor-house, whose father served honorably, etc.; but the chief measure of relief, which is very much in the line of this bill, is found in title 72 of the general statutes of Connecticut:

SEC. 3762. All honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Union Army or Navy in the late civil war in the Connecticut regiments or navy quota from this State, and all such soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in said war in the regiments or navy quota from any other State, who at the time of their enlistment therein were residents of this State, and are such residents when applying for such aid—

Observe that we do not require that the man shall have been a soldier from Connecticut, only that he was one of our residents when he enlisted in whatever State, and that he now has come back and is now residing in Connecticut. All such—who from disease or wounds may need medical care and treatment shall be entitled to receive such medical care and treatment as may be necessary at the Hartford Hospital, the hospital of the General Hospital Society of Connecticut, at New Haven; the Fitch's Home for Soldiers, at Darien; the Bridgeport Hospital and the Connecticut Hospital for the Insane, at Middletown; and the expense of such medical care and treatment shall be defrayed by the State.

The Hartford Hospital and the hospital of the General Hospital Society of Connecticut are two State hospitals. Besides that the Fitch's Home for Soldiers, at Darien, is now a State soldiers' home, and with the Bridgeport Hospital and the Connecticut Hospital for the Insane there are five hospitals of various classes, to all of which any soldier suffering from disease or wounds, no matter whether or not his disability can be traced to his service, shall be admitted, and all his expenses are paid while he is there. That is precisely in the line of this bill, and was enacted some years ago, without flourish of trumpets and without consideration of the precise number of dollars involved. Title 72 provides in another section:

SEC. 3763. All honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Union Army or Navy in the late civil war in Connecticut regiments or in its navy quota, who shall from wounds or disease become unable to earn a livelihood, or shall become insane, and who have no adequate means of support, shall be entitled to a home at the hospitals named in the preceding section, and to such food, clothing, and medical treatment as shall be necessary, and the expense thereof shall be defrayed by the State.

So far from entertaining any prejudice toward the Grand Army of the Republic, the Legislature of Connecticut recognized it as a valuable ally in the discharge of its business in these matters, and provided in section 3764 that—

All persons who may wish to avail themselves of the benefits of this chapter shall make application to the governor, who, with the adjutant-general and surgeon-general, and three honorably discharged veteran soldiers, residents of this State, who shall be nominated by the commander of the Department of Connecticut, Grand Army of the Republic, and confirmed by the governor, and who shall hold their offices for and during the term of two years succeeding their appointment, and whose successors shall be selected in the same manner, shall constitute a soldiers' hospital board with sole power to admit to or discharge any soldier, sailor, or marine from any hospital or home in this State, and shall have full power to make all necessary rules and regulations for the admission to and government of such soldiers, sailors, and marines who may avail themselves of the benefits of this chapter while they are inmates of such hospital or home, and to appoint such agent or agents as they may deem necessary to see that such rules and regulations are enforced, and to fix the sum to be paid for such medical treatment, care, and support.

I may well add what my colleague reminds me of, that from in some year shortly after the war the State of Connecticut made its adjutant-general the pension agent of all the soldiers of the State free of charge. During the war the sagacious Commonwealth required every colonel in transmitting his muster-roll to make an extra copy for the adjutant-general's office of Connecticut, and, excepting the hospital rolls, our record of service at Hartford is excellent. The adjutant-general, free of all expense, prosecutes every claim that the soldiers may commit to his hands.

I may add that the State sees to it that every soldier's grave shall be marked by a stone, not expensive, of course, but sufficient for the purpose, in case it is not done under national laws; and if any one can to-day find the grave of an old soldier in Connecticut which has not been so honored, a stone will be promptly supplied.

Mr. PLATT. And the State exempts from taxes to the value of $3,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is another statute, which I might have overlooked. Besides exempting a soldier from the poll-tax, the estate of every soldier, marine, and sailor, who served honorably, to the extent of $3,000 is exempted from taxation in the State.

Now, a figure or two more here. In 1885–'86 the expenditure of the State for sick and wounded soldiers in hospital was $37,707. Every one could come totally free of charge. The burial of soldiers cost the State about $5,000; the children of soldiers of the State cost $6,000, making $48,884. The expenses have grown, naturally. For the current two years—we have adopted biennial sessions—the appropriations are as follows:

For board and clothing of sick and wounded soldiers in Fitch's Home and the hospitals, $137,000.

For burial expenses of deceased soldiers, $16,000.

For the support of soldiers' children, $16,000.

Making a total for two years of $169,000, or at the rate of $84,500 a year.

To that extent duties are discharged by the State which might appropriately be discharged by the United States. Those things which are regarded by our State as deficiencies in the management of the United States would cost, if the expenditures were in proportion all over the Union, five or ten millions in addition to what is now expended.

Connecticut makes no complaint about this. Connecticut has never even taken the trouble, so far as I am aware, to pass a resolution asking that you shall enlarge the pension-list or take off her hands any of these measures of relief, while she is expending at a pro rata rate that would considerably enlarge the additional expenses of the Federal Government. I have said that this is a practical and a sensible bill. I believe it to be a patriotic bill. I see clearly that it is sanctioned by the legislation of my State, which takes great care to relieve the suffering of every man who served honorably in the war, and without pretending to find out whether he is suffering from the direct result of his service or not. Upon that I plant myself; and therefore I can vote for the bill.

The last time that the great General Grant appeared in this building, to my recollection, about three and a half or four years ago, he came into that adjoining chamber, the cloak-room. He did not come in here to attract public attention or interrupt the progress of business. Nearly every Senator called upon him, however, while he sat there, and he engaged in familiar conversation in characteristic style. Some remarks were made concerning pensions. I will not try to repeat all he said, but substantially he said this: He was speaking of some demand made outside that he should sign a petition for a service pension. "If I were to be President again," said he, "I would sign any reasonable bill to relieve the sufferings of a soldier or his family, no matter what they arose from, but I would not sign a bill to give a dollar to any able-bodied man."

I stand on that. The soldier who was fit to be a soldier and now can take care of himself is unutterably proud of his record, and does not beg. The soldier who suffers to-day I will not put under the thumb-screws of an examination, any further than to ascertain that his suffering is not due to vice, but I will vote to have him so far relieved that he need not go to the poor-house.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 5, after the word "from," it is proposed to insert the words "the infirmities of age or from;" so as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from the infirmities of age or from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and who are without other adequate means of self-support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive $12 per month.

Mr. HAWLEY. I omitted to utter one sentence more. I shall vote against every amendment that it is proposed to put upon this bill, both in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate. I desire to take the simple, straightforward measure of immediate relief of real sufferers as proposed by the committee. I do not say that some of these amendments are not of themselves wise and might not well be incorporated in some independent bill; but I know that the bill as it came from the committee is sensible, reasonable, and practical. I do not know how much the amendments may embarrass its passage.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I should like to follow the Senator from Connecticut in the line he has just mapped out. No one appreciates more than I do his loyalty to the soldier or that of the Committee on Pensions. The committee have very frankly stated the reason why they have submitted such a bill as they have, and why, while thinking that there ought to be more substantial aid granted to the soldier, they have stopped short of what they would desire to do.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has given a very accurate construction of this bill. If any one supposes that any other construction can possibly be put upon it, I think, if it becomes a law, he will be deceived. The Senator from West Virginia says, first, that under the second section of the bill he does not believe it possible that there will be any different grades of pensions, that there will be either none or $12 a month, and that he does not believe a partial incapacity is in the meaning of this bill a total incapacity. How anybody can come to any other conclusion in reference to this bill I do not see.

Therefore it is that this is a bill to meet the necessities to some extent of those, and those only, who are totally, in the English sense of that word and in no other, incapacitated to do anything toward their own support.

I understand the members of the committee on this side of the Chamber to agree in that construction. It, with that construction, will meet a need of the soldier made quite striking by the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska this morning, and to that extent and for that purpose I can well vote, and am glad to vote, for this bill. But the Senator from West Virginia and the committee have very clearly indicated the reason why he does not desire on his part to go further, and why they do not feel that they can go further, though desiring to go further, on their part with this measure. It is because going further encounters elsewhere an insurmountable obstacle where a different opinion obtains.

If nobody had offered an amendment to this bill and called upon me to vote for that amendment, going, as I think it ought to go, further and reaching cases which I think should be provided for, I would vote for the bill and say nothing; but I am asked by the committee to do two things: first, to vote against an amendment which my convictions determine that I ought to vote for, and that I think ought to be a part of the law of the land. That is not all. They ask me to record a vote that shall stand as an approval of that position which is held up by some one else, who is responsible for his own convictions, as a barrier. I am to be quoted as indorsing that position if I vote against the bill going any further than some one else says that, in his opinion, it ought to go.

Some one elsewhere says that in his opinion provision for the soldier should go no further than to provide for total incapacity. I think it ought to go further, and when I am called on to vote upon that question I do not feel quite at liberty to say by my record what I do not believe.

I do not offer these amendments myself. I can appreciate the embarrassment of the committee. I want to assure the committee that I desire to stand by them, and I should do so if they had not proclaimed and put upon the record that by standing by them in the position which they call upon me to take in thus voting I should not only vote against my own conviction, but I should be quoted elsewhere for what it is worth as indorsing a position of some one else that the bill ought not to go further.

Who can criticise, for instance, the veto, if that shall embrace any such sentiments as that, after having recorded his own vote in accordance with the veto itself? I do not see how anybody on either side of this Chamber who records his vote here against extending the law as far as he thinks it ought to go for the reason avowed openly and frankly on one side and lamented on the other, does not stand estopped hereafter from saying that the position thus taken was a wrong position, for he stands recorded in favor of it.

Therefore, much as I should regret not giving my vote in accordance with the suggestions of the committee, when I am called upon to vote whether I believe that an increased pension ought not to be extended to those who are partially incapacitated, I can not so record myself.

As I said, I should have voted for this bill just as it came from the committee, understanding that I voted for it because it was all I could get elsewhere; but when I am called upon to indorse what is done elsewhere by voting against a proposition to go further, I am estopped from criticising any position which is in accordance with that vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if it should be proposed to add the Ten Commandments to this bill, I should not expect to be charged with opposition to the Ten Commandments for objecting. The Senator from Massachusetts is afraid that it will be quoted against him if he shall vote against incorporating some reasonable or proper provision in this bill by way of amendment. The critic, he says, will quote it against him. Suppose he ventures to say to the critic, "The friends of this bill who had studied it most aimed at a certain definite and unquestionably just object, and they begged their friends not to tie too many things to it, but let this great good thing go through, and then add the rest in good time." I think he could have the courage to make that answer. I do not see how he can possibly be embarrassed. I will quote to him the language of a very distinguished citizen, the noble old man, Hannibal Hamlin, who was in the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, and discussing this identical bill there said:

Commander-in-Chief and Comrades, I do not know what are the words which I can utter in supplement to what has so much better been said by other gentlemen; and yet, as a member of that committee, five minutes having been assigned me, I will occupy at least a portion of that time. I said yesterday that this organization was based upon a design of the grandest charity known to any institution within the world. I repeat it now. And still, with all the efforts and with all the aid of the mothers and the sisters in the Woman's Relief Corps, there are yet uncounted thousands of the poor who have been in our service that neither the Grand Army nor the Relief Corps can reach. We have a bill before Congress designed to reach them, and I am here the advocate of that bill, and every man who is urging a service-pension bill here, not designedly, but by his acts, is opposing that measure. I have a little knowledge and experience in legislation in this country, as you all know I know the methods of legislation. I know the manner in which bills pass Congress, and I know the adroitness and the ability with which minorities always seize upon every opportunity of defeating a measure they do not approve; and it is quite as often they seek to kill it by kindness as by the opposite. In other words I have heard it said so often that a bill don't go far enough, but that is the policy of the adroit politician, and he adds to it until the thing breaks down. Now, if there is any man in this assembly who is more in favor of the disability pension bill than myself, I would like to have him walk up here and let me look him in the eye. My heart is in it. I want to see it become a law. I think there is a reasonable prospect that it may become a law within the coming two years.

That was to defeat the President who vetoed it.

Let us be careful and wise in what we are doing. Keep within proper limits. We simply say now we will express no opinions. Don't kill the disability pension bill by asking for a great deal more.

The Senator from Massachusetts is not one of the adroit politicians seeking to kill this bill by superserviceable kindness, but he is a man who is obliged to vote for amendments having exactly the same tendency, to bury the bill with superserviceable kindness.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

The second section of the bill is intended to provide pensions for persons who have become disabled by reason of causes not having their origin in the service. In other words, if, since his discharge from the service, a person has become disabled he is to be placed upon the pension-roll under the second section of the bill. If a person since his discharge from the service shall have become physically disabled by reason of disease or accident or other external cause, he is to be placed upon the pension-roll and receive a pension.

But if a person since his discharge from the service, by reason of accumulating years becomes disabled on account of the infirmities of age, he is not to be placed on the pension-roll.

The chairman of the Committee on Pensions dissents from this view, and the committee claims that the terms of the bill would include this latter class as well as the former. I was of that impression originally myself, but as I stated to the Senate a day or two ago, I have taken the trouble to advise myself concerning this particular feature of the bill, and the result of that attempt has been that I am persuaded that there is so marked a distinction in medical authorities between an incapacity the result of the infirmities of age and that of physical disability that I can not be true to the class who have received their incapacity from the march of age without voting for the amendment that I have offered.

As I said the other day, I expect this amendment to be voted down. I do not know that it will receive any other vote than my own, but it shall have that one, because I want to include this class, borne down by infirmities resulting from age, in the provisions of the bill.

I am not asking an extension of the effect of the bill one step beyond that which the committee says it is intended to reach, but so firmly have I become convinced from inquiries I have made that the class which would be included by this amendment would be excluded without it, that if I vote alone I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know why the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] should undertake to insist upon it that everybody who differs from him as to what is his duty here is lacking in courage or anything of that kind. I have no authority to speak for anybody but myself, much less for the soldier, and I do not desire to pose as a better friend of the soldier than anybody else in this Chamber, least of all than the Senator from Connecticut.

I have this to say, which I tried in a feeble way to say, that for one I do not intend to be estopped by my own voluntary vote from criticising and condemning here and everywhere else on a proper occasion a position taken that nobody is entitled to any further benefits under the pension law but one who is totally incapacitated to support himself. I shall not; and that is the governing principle with me.

I vote according to my convictions upon this amendment, and I at the same time put myself where I intend to be put whenever I am called on to express an opinion upon the position that has been taken heretofore, and which is held up in terrorem over every one who desires to enlarge the benefits of the pension-roll. It is held up in terrorem over us, and we are told that if we vote our convictions we shall not only encounter it but we shall put ourselves where we can not say that it is wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and if present would vote "nay." He is detained from the Senate Chamber by the illness of his wife.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the present occupant of the chair [Mr. HALE].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Allison,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Wilson of Iowa.
Bowen,	Dolph,	Palmer,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Teller,

NAYS—43.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Hampton,	Reagan,

Blair,	Davis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Stewart,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Turpie,
Butler,	George,	Morrill,	Vance,
Call,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Gray,	Ransom,

ABSENT—20.

Beck,	Hale,	Payne,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Sherman,
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,	Stanford,
Faulkner,	Kenna,	Quay,	Vest,
Frye,	Morgan,	Riddleberger,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to introduce at this time a bill for reference.

No objection being made, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. 2306) for the relief of soldiers of the late war, honorably discharged after three months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have offered this bill just presented for reference to the Committee on Pensions for the purpose of indicating to and paving the way for those Senators who are placed in an embarrassing position by the report of the pending bill, to see the undoubted fact that the committee will soon report for the consideration of the Senate such a bill as to a great extent, at least, is expressive of the real sentiment of the majority of the Chamber with regard to the adequate provision for the disabled and suffering soldiery of the country.

The bill which I have just introduced is the same which the Senate passed during two former Congresses, and the same bill which was sent to the House of Representatives by action of the Senate in the last Congress, and which failed in the House, and in return for which we received the vetoed bill. It undertakes to make provision for the dependent soldiers of the Union, rating the pension according to the degree of disability and of necessity from $4 to $24 per month; and it makes other provisions in reference to other classes of those who are dependent upon the soldiers and upon the country for support.

I have no desire to enter into the discussion of the bill itself. I indicated earlier in the discussion the reasons why, inadequate as I believe it to be, almost unjust in its negations, I yet feel constrained to support the bill and hurry it along in the several stages that lie between here and its enactment into law in the hope to get something that it is thought is the best that can now be done.

Mr. CALL. I find in the RECORD of February 29 that the following amendment to the bill was adopted:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes prior to 1861, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, etc.

That amendment was modified on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. It does not appear, although it was reported to the Senate, ever to have had any final action according to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so far as I am able to observe. If so, I should like to be informed by the Secretary. I see it is not in the printed bill now before the Senate. I desire to have it incorporated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment as modified has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the vote in the Senate be taken on the amendments separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota desires a separate vote on the several amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The first amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Are we to vote on each amendment separately?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota so demands. The first amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, in section 1, line 8, struck out the words "or have been" after the word "are," in line 7; so as to read:

That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor child or children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 1, line 10, after the word "Provided," to strike out—

That all pensions allowed under this section of this act shall commence from date of actual dependence, if claim was filed prior to July 1, 1880, and in case of applications thereafter made, the pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, or from date of subsequent dependence.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That all pensions allowed under this section shall commence from the date of the passage of this act, or from the date of subsequent dependence, and shall continue no longer than the existence of such dependence.

Mr. DAVIS. That is a committee amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "rebellion," to insert:

Or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes.

So as to read:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, or in the war with Mexico, or for thirty days in any of the wars with the Indian tribes, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, etc.

Mr. DAVIS. It is hoped on the part of the committee that this amendment will not prevail. Ample and special provision has been made by the act of last winter on behalf of the survivors of the Mexican war; and if it is thought desirable to extend the principles of this bill to them, it can be done by subsequent legislation. The survivors of Indian wars were admitted the other day to be amply provided for by other bills now before your committee to the entire satisfaction of Senators. There are before the committee at present some three bills, either of which is amply sufficient to cover the survivors of Indian wars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment which has been read.

Mr. BROWN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HEARST. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bate,	Coke,	Hampton,	Vance,
Berry,	Daniel,	Harris,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Walthall.
Brown,	Eustis,	Mitchell,
Butler,	George,	Pasco,
Call,	Gibson,	Reagan,

NAYS—37.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Allison,	Davis,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Beck,	Dawes,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Farwell,	Palmer,	Teller,
Blodgett,	Frye,	Payne,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Hale,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Colquitt,	McPherson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—18.

Bowen,	Gray,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Stanford,
Evarts,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Vest.
Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Gorman,	Kenna,	Ransom,

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next amendment made, as in Committee of the Whole, was, in section 2, line 6, after the word "which" and before "incapacitates," to strike out "totally;" so as to read:

And who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits, which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no disposition to re-enter upon the discussion as to the question of total incapacity in this bill. I will merely say that, in connection with the word "incapacity" adopted by the framers of this bill, it was certainly thought by the committee who considered it that the phrase thus used had a certain technical application and meaning which made the presence of the two words taken together legitimate, appropriate, and proper.

It is claimed, with how much precision and warrant I am not now prepared to say, that the subtraction of this word "totally" from this bill will open a field of speculation and conjecture which may afford a pretext for objections which were designed to be obviated by those who framed the bill and for whose relief it is desired. Under these circumstances, feeling and knowing as we do the ends and objects, restricted and limited as they are designed to be, subserved by this bill, I sincerely trust that the word "totally" will be restored to the place from which it was stricken, and that the amendment by which that was done will not prevail in the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. If this were a question as to whether I would vote for the passage of a bill the benefits of which were limited to those soldiers who were totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, I would vote for such a bill without a word.

A Senator asks me to speak louder. It is useless to attempt to speak louder in this Chamber, for no voice of any Senator can drown the hum of the conversation by other Senators and in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will be in order and desist from conversation.

Mr. PLATT. I said that I would vote willingly for a bill which was a measure of relief for those who are totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor and relieve no other class of soldiers. But when I am asked to reinsert the word "totally," which has once been stricken out in committee, it seems to me that I am then called upon to say whether I, as a Senator, desire to limit the relief which shall be given under this bill to those soldiers who are so incapacitated by sickness, by disease, by mental and physical infirmity that they can perform no labor at all. In other words, it seems to me that I am called on as a Senator to express my own view by my vote as to whether that relief ought to stop there or ought to be further extended.

I have no doubt what the construction of this bill will be if the word "totally" is restored to the bill. No old soldier who for a half hour can hoe in his garden, no old soldier who has strength enough left to bring an armful of wood to his wife to build a fire with, will receive any consideration under this bill. Its beneficiaries will be those who are totally incapacitated from the performance of manual labor, and they only. Even the old soldiers who are in the poor-house, if they have strength enough left there until the final release shall come, to perform any manual labor whatever, will be excluded from the benefits of this bill. There is no other construction that can be put upon it if that word is restored, in my judgment.

I should be glad to believe that it would or could have a wider construction than that; but it seems to me that the language limits it to that. It seems to me that the plain meaning of the English language limits it to that, and that the Senate has fallen under some spell, some baneful spell. I know that Senators are not permitted here in voting upon the question of these amendments to express their real sentiments as to the extent to which this relief should be given. If it does not mean just what I think it does with the word restored, then why should there be any question about its restoration? I can scarcely tell what this spell is, but for one I object to coercion from any quarter as to how my vote should be cast.

We are told that this bill has to run the gantlet, and I suppose it has; but the allusion is not a happy one. In the days when Indian atrocities were more frequent than they are now some captive who had excited in the breasts of his savage captors some little sentiment of savage pity was given a chance for his life by running the gauntlet, and so he went through rows of enemies who stood there with war-clubs and scalping-knives and tomahawks to smite and stab and brain him. And so we are asked to take this bill because it has got to run the gauntlet, and it is to be smitten and thrust at and afterward brained if it does not conform to what has been laid down outside of this Chamber as the limit of the bill.

Mr. President, while I would gladly follow the committee, I can not surrender my independent judgment in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment which has been read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is that amendment to strike out the word "totally?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, to strike out the word.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. INGALLS. I think it is evident that the effect of the vote on this amendment was not understood—at least I know it was not by some who sat around me—and I think there should be a further statement in order that the Senate may vote intelligently upon the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 6, after the word "which," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the word "totally;" so as to read:

Which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment which has been reported by the Chief Clerk, which amendment strikes out from the bill the word "totally."

Mr. TELLER. Then how shall those vote who want the word "totally" left in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators in favor of keeping the word "totally" in the bill will vote against the amendment agreed upon in Committee of the Whole. Those in favor of striking it out will agree to the amendment, and vote "aye." The vote "aye" strikes the word from the bill, and the vote "no" retains the word in the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe I understand this vote. I want to vote to strike the word "totally" out, and not to retain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator will vote to sustain the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole, which strikes the word "totally" out.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. Then I understand it. I want to give in the briefest possible language my reason.

I believe, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that if the term "totally" is left in, the bill will be so construed that practically nobody will get any benefit under this bill; and I, for one, do not propose knowingly to engage in any attempt to deceive any portion of the people of the United States by my vote. I do not propose to say to the Grand Army people, or to the soldiers who are not Grand Army people, that I have been engaged in voting for their benefit, when my judgment is that it will be practically of no benefit whatever.

I do not conceal from myself, and it need not be concealed from anybody, that if this bill is to run a gauntlet, it is the same class of men who control the lines of the gauntlet that will control its execution, for a time at least; and if it is necessary that we should adapt it to their wishes and to their will, because they are opposed to pensions, because they insist that we are extravagant in this matter, they will have the same sentiment when the executive department construes this statute that they have in the legislative or the semi-legislative branch of the Government, which is said to be the gauntlet through which it has to run.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me to suggest that it is openly declared in the Senate here by members of the committee that that is the only construction which can be placed upon it, that nobody will be entitled to the benefit of the provision who is not absolutely, totally incapacitated from manual labor.

Mr. TELLER. No one can be said to be absolutely incapacitated except a man who is paralyzed, except a man who lies upon his back, except a man who is in such a way that he can not use his members at all.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to be interrupted much, as I understand we are under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to ask the Senator, if an ex-soldier has lost or shall hereafter lose his arm, would not that incapacitate him from performing manual labor? If a soldier shall become insane, not on account of any cause arising in the line of duty, because that fact is not required to be proven under this section, would he not be entitled to the benefits proposed to be extended by this provision?

Mr. TELLER. I should say that if a man was so insane that he had to be confined in an asylum, that would do; but he may walk around with one arm off, or with both arms off, and he is capacitated to earn a living to some extent.

Mr. PADDOCK. Not by manual labor.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, by manual labor.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think not.

Mr. TELLER. By labor.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill says "manual labor," and to perform such labor a person must have the use of his hands.

Mr. TELLER. What is manual labor? Does the Senator suppose that it means that a man must toil with his hands? I know a man who is engaged in manual labor in the proper sense of the term who has no hands at all, who goes about the streets of Denver with his little box selling things, and he is engaged in labor that supports him. He was a soldier, but he is not a pensioner, because these disabilities came on after the war.

I repeat that the construction that will be put upon this bill will be that a man must be absolutely incapable of any manual exertion, and if that is what the committee want, and if that is what we propose to give, then let it be so understood.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, that is not what the committee want. The committee want the best attainable result; that is, the best attainable in the judgment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. "The best attainable result" means that this committee is afraid of a veto; "the best attainable result" means that they are afraid of the Democratic majority elsewhere. That is what it means. While I have a seat upon this floor I will vote upon my judgment when it comes to a question of this kind. With all due respect to the committee, I will not be, as has been said here, coerced in my vote.

I know that it is becoming the fashion to say, "Why, we are very generous, we are going too fast and too far," and when a Senator said on this floor a day or two ago that he would do and insist upon doing what a national Republican convention had declared with entire unanimity we should do, remove the arrears-of-pensions limitation, I heard Senators say, "That is going too far." It may be that we are approaching a political campaign; it may be that there are some persons who legislate in this country who are afraid of the votes of the people, who think we have been overcharitable to the soldiers, and have given them more than they deserve. We have had very high authority from the executive department that no nation in the world ever did as we have been doing with an army. Why, sir, the French Government has been more liberal towards its soldiers than the American Government, and the Chinese are not much behind when it comes to the humanities that they extend to their soldiers and their soldiers' children.

What have we done so munificent and so great? It is true our pension-roll runs up to fifty or sixty million dollars, and some years to more; but we had a great army, and we have enrolled now 300,000 men on our pension-roll. We have 100,000 of them drawing less than $50 a year; we have 30,000 of them drawing $2 and less a month; and yet we are told over and over again that we have been so extravagant in pensions, that we have been so generous in our treatment of the soldiers! I deny it, Mr. President. It is a standing shame and disgrace as long as any man is on that pension-roll at $1.75 or $2 a month. If entitled to anything at all; if his vital energies have been lowered; if his capacity for the enjoyment of life and the earning of his living has been reduced to a degree that it can be figured in dollars and cents, I repeat it is a shame and a disgrace that he gets no more than $2 a month.

Why, Mr. President, when the French soldier goes into retirement he goes with a bigger pension than the American soldier gets. It is true his service is longer, or generally so; but these men served as long as the Government wanted them to serve; they performed every duty that was put upon them in a way that was acceptable to the people of the country and extorted the admiration of the world, and I propose to vote in such a way that every man of them who is incapable of earning his living shall be supported at the expense of the General Government.

I know it will be said that this is an extravagance, and that we are thus extravagant because we want to keep up the tariff. I will not discuss the tariff on this bill; and I would vote to-day, if we were now providing for the raising of revenue, precisely as I shall vote with a surplus in the Treasury of $100,000,000. The fact that we have more money in the Treasury than all the combined powers of the world does not affect my vote on this question at all. I vote for the greatest pension or a reasonable pension, at least to all these men, because I hold it to be not charity but justice; that which is their due, that which belongs to them from the Government, and that which the Government, I think, would be a craven if it did not give.

I repeat that I shall not vote under the terrorism of adverse majorities or of adverse influences from any quarter or any section.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the extraordinary sensitiveness which is exhibited by Senators on this floor to public criticism in case they should happen to vote for a bill that has a possibility of becoming a law, and which contains in its provisions certainly relief for at least from twelve to twenty thousand absolutely helpless defenders of the Union, I must admit has astonished me.

For my part I am perfectly willing to have it said that I am so cowardly, if you please, that I submit to the coercion of voting for something tangible and practical for the relief of these men. I am not worried about my record in regard to action upon pension legislation. The Senator at my left [Mr. TELLER] need not be worried about his.

Mr. TELLER. I am not.

Mr. BLAIR. In several Congresses he has voted as I have voted, and as the Republican members of this body have voted and many on the opposite side of the Chamber have voted, to give ample relief to all who are in want or in necessity or suffering from disability by reason of their services in the Union Army or by reason of disabilities that have come upon them since through the infirmities of age or for any reason whatever which does not find its origin in a disgraceful cause.

Now, the committee is made up to some extent of those who have seen service, and have naturally as much sympathy, possibly, it may be, with the defenders of the Union as other Senators who have spoken here thus derisively of this bill, and we have endeavored to bring to the Senate a bill which it was supposed could become a law, and we have also indicated an intention, or at least it has been indicated here on this floor to-day, that there might be further action by that committee which would embrace within its limits all that any Senator on the floor has ever asked or urged for the relief of these men.

Now, we are to vote for something which we think may become a law, and we do this going to the full extent that the Grand Army itself asks us to do at the present time, or we are to vote for some intangible impossibility, and thus say by our action that we shall have no legislation at all. I have not sufficient boldness to say to these men all over this country upon beds of suffering and of approaching death, "You shall have no relief whatever," simply because I am a little sensitive in regard to my own record and what may be said by the mouth of the populace as to the vote which I cast here on this occasion.

I do not think that the members of the committee can be taunted with lack of courage when men who come here, knowing well that no bill stronger than this can receive sanction in other quarters which it is indispensable it should receive if it is to become a law, say they will not vote for this bill, that they will not so vote upon the progress of this bill as to facilitate the possibility of its becoming a law, that they will take action so far as they are concerned for its defeat, and they will be regarded as having exhibited an intent to defeat it. I think it is best to be sensible and practical and reasonably courageous, sufficiently courageous to be coerced into doing something practical and sensible for the old, the disabled, the totally disabled soldiers of this country.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I will premise what I have to say by stating that the Pension Committee, composed as it is, does not deserve and should not have received from the lips of the Senator from Colorado the imputations or rather the express charges of terrorism, fear, and coercion, which he stated as their motives for limiting the scope of this bill. That committee presented to the Senate a measure which has been hawked at and rent to pieces by amendments, which have in them the elements of destruction to the bill to an extent which, I have been informed by those of long experience here, is without parallel in this body for years.

I propose to place this committee right. I have sat here as becomes a new member, quiet, and seen all this go on, and I purpose now to restate how this bill came into our hands, the purposes for which it was framed as it was, and the object which is to be brought about if it is killed by the amendments which have been loaded upon it.

This committee did not frame this bill. This committee did not originate this bill. This bill came to this committee under the sacred guise of the right of petition from more than one-half of the survivors of those who fought, encountered disease or were wounded, and are now disabled that this country might live. They asked for what they thought they could get. They knew throughout that they were entitled to more than the present state of political sentiment and ascendency would give them. But looking over the whole ground and seeing, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has shown, that there are 20,000 of these people in the almshouses to-day receiving relief from those not able to share their substance, receiving also relief from great and generous States, they said this year, in these times, with public sentiment as it is, and with the history of the past year to guide us, we will ask for but a tithe of what we think is due to us from our country.

There came with this measure a petition, sacred petition, in the form of a bill, and what happened? Amendment after amendment is superimposed upon it—amendments drawn directly in the light of previous failure and disaster to the measure. It reminds me of the story of the girl who betrayed Rome for that which the soldiers carried upon their left arm, meaning their golden bracelets, and when the betrayal was made the legionaries threw upon her their shields and crushed her beneath them.

Why, I ask Senators, should gentlemen upon this floor insist upon giving these petitioners more than they require? Why should gentlemen upon this floor tell these petitioners, who wish to wait for other and more propitious times, that they need not and shall not wait, but that they must take the full measure of their relief, or rather the hopeless chance of it, now?

The committee receiving a bill thus prepared and for those purposes, substantiated and backed up as it was by petitions of that character, did not feel at liberty to indulge in their own convictions. They knew as well as they who petitioned the Senate knew what was needed. They knew, or thought they knew, what was attainable; and they have simply told these people, "What you petition for we will endeavor to see that you get, and we will not insist that you shall be relieved beyond the measure of your own demand."

I did not want to be heard again on this subject, but a great deal has been said here about the effect of the phrase "total incapacity." The Senator from Colorado has been Secretary of the Interior, and has in a quasi-judicial capacity construed these laws. This phrase or equivalent phrases have a certain technical significance in the administration of the Pension Office. The word "disability"—and "disability" is disability, and the word "total" does not make it any stronger—the word "disability" in the general pension laws has been construed to include anchylosis of the wrist joint, loss of left thumb or the index finger, and a variety of things granting a pension from $2 up to $8 a month.

My own construction of this phrase "totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor" is this, or I would rather state first what it is not. It does not mean that the man must be a paralytic; it does not mean that he must be bedridden; it does not mean that he must have both legs or both arms off; it does not mean that he must be blind; it does not mean that he must be babbling in idiocy or sunk into the depths of senility, or anything of that kind. It means that man who, in the language of common sense, any one would say is incapacitated for manual labor; it means that man who if he approached the foreman of a gang for daily toil would be told, "You are incapacitated, you will break down after an hour; you may tinker on a job for a while, but you can not continue that manual toil which will give you support."

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, if that is the meaning of it, why he seeks so hard to have the word "totally" left in?

Mr. DAVIS. I will tell the Senator frankly. It is because in the bill of last winter, the House bill which was adopted by the Senate and was sent to the President for approval, criticism was made that the absence of the word "totally" threw the phraseology of that bill into so wide a compass of speculation that it was maintained that no one could tell where the expense would end.

Mr. DAWES. Was it criticised because "totally" did not add anything to it, or because "totally" was just the measure to which that functionary would go and no further? Was it because there was no more meaning in the word "totally" than the Senator now puts upon it, or was it not rather because the word "totally" was a word of force, and controlling force, in the mind of the person who had his duty to perform?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not qualified to state what secret processes operated on the mind of that person.

Mr. DAWES. Which does the Senator think it was?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know and I do not care, speaking with all due respect to what the mental processes were elsewhere in regard to the bill. My own opinion is that the act of last winter was not open to the objections which were made against it, and it is also my opinion that the act of last winter is substantially the same as this. But this bill was draughted by those who wished to be correct and safe beyond peradventure. They knew what they wanted. They were not after a service pension; they were not after a measure of arrears. They were not measuring out the degrees of disability under the doctrine of equivalents. But they wanted the law framed to include those who are incapacitated for manual labor, totally incapacitated within the construction which equivalent language had received, that measure of relief which is immediately needed daily during every hour in which we are now sitting and discussing.

Now let us see for a moment. Under the ruling of the Pension Bureau, No. 136, October 7, 1885, the following among many others are laid down as constituting per se cases of total disability:

> Anchylosis of ankle, anchylosis of wrist, loss of sight of one eye, loss of index and second finger, loss of thumb.

Now, to illustrate further from the statement I have made, that these or equivalent phrases have come to have a technical meaning in the administration of the pension law; this law was read by me the other day, and also by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], and the practical construction has been this. By the act of June 18, 1874—

> All persons * * * who have been so permanently and totally disabled as to require the regular aid and attendance of another person, by the loss of sight, etc., or by any other injury resulting in total or permanent helplessness, shall be entitled to a pension of $50 per month.

I ask, what language can be stronger than the phrase "total or permanent helplessness?" The helplessness must be total; it must be permanent. Now let us see how this law was construed, and how that construction remains as a precedent in the Department of the Interior from a time not long subsequent to the enactment of the statute.

This act was construed by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Chandler, February 11, 1876, as follows:

> The word "helplessness," as used in this act of June 18, 1874, does not imply utter physical prostration, but should be understood as referring not only to the physical helplessness which compels him to depend at times upon the personal aid and assistance of another person, but also to his helplessness, i. e., inability to gain a subsistence by his own exertions.

That is the humane construction placed upon it by the Secretary of the Interior eleven years ago, and so that construction has ever since remained. Now, it is in vain to insist that a word shall have its primary meaning of utter helplessness or total incapacity when we are informed by the records of the Pension Bureau almost from the beginning, the necessity having arisen at a very early day for the construction of this phrase, that it does not as a matter of practical application have any such strict significance, and so does not become so utterly useless as to prevent any relief whatever.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask the Senator whether similar language has not received in the Pension Office, and is not receiving every day, the construction which I say this will receive. The language of the act of 1883 is, "shall have been otherwise so disabled as to be incapacitated for performing any manual labor," and that carried a pension of $30 a month. I inquire whether every day in the Pension Office now it is not held that a person is not entitled to the full $30 a month who can perform any manual labor whatever? That is the construction which has been put upon this language. Those persons get $30 a month only who are incapable of performing any manual labor, and there can be no difference between that language and this, and that is the construction which is put upon it by the Pension Office.

Mr. DAVIS. I can only say in response to the Senator from Connecticut that I have not read of any such construction. If any such construction has been made it is met squarely by the exposition in 1876 of an act much stronger in its terms, which is utterly irreconcilable with the construction which he says will be applied to this bill.

But supposing it all to be so, supposing that there is this question, I ask the Senator from Connecticut why he will insist upon an amendment of this bill, which it is not too much to say, and I have a right to say, will jeopardize the entire measure in the light of the history and the fate which its predecessor met?

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator wants an answer now, I will give him one.

There was a time in the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States when it was supposed that the provision inserted in the Constitution giving the Executive a right to veto legislation, and providing that that legislation should fail unless two-thirds of the members of each House voted to pass it notwithstanding the veto, would create a one-man power in this Government; and if I were to believe what I hear upon this floor I would say that the prediction made by Roger Sherman, from Connecticut, had come true, and that legislation here had to be shaped to meet the wishes of one man.

While I have made no charges against the committee, while I have not taunted them with the lack of courage, while I have made no reflections upon them, while I intend to make no reflections upon them, while I feel that they have acted for what they believed to be the best and from the highest motives, so that at the hands of this one man some relief might be given to some destitute soldier somewhere in the United States, yet I must act my individual judgment, Mr. President.

Allusion has been made to Rome. I remember a phrase about Rome. It is this: "When could it be ever said until now that the wide walls of Rome contained but one man?" And when it is said deliberately upon this floor, as it has been during this debate, over and over and over again, that this is all the legislation that we can get, and there has been no mistake as to what was meant, we have been pointed to the source, that any other legislation would fail, I say that it is time for me at least not to be influenced by such considerations, as a Senator of the United States.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when I rose the other day to make a very short speech, as I thought, I was dragged off into several other matters. I do not propose to be led off again at this hour of the evening, especially after the agreement we have as to a vote; but I desire to say to the Senator from Minnesota, who has more than once said that this bill was drawn up by the Grand Army of the Republic and not by his committee, that I regret very much to hear him express himself in that way and to be deceived as to the way these things are gotten up, as I believe he is.

In the first place, the Senate and the House of Representatives, the legislative department of this Government, while they may properly hear all that men have to say, receive their petitions, and pay due attention to everything that is offered, of course have to look to the interest of the whole country and determine what is best to be done as between the petitioners, those who desire favors, and the rights and obligations of all the people. Therefore the committee does not and ought not to follow, unless thoroughly convinced of their propriety, the petitions, the requests, or the demands of any body of men however respectable.

In the next place——

Mr. DAVIS. Allow me one minute.

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Pensions examined this bill and cut out several clauses from it.

Mr. BECK. The language of the Senator was so broad that I construed him as meaning that the committee had followed what had been offered to them as a matter of course.

Mr. DAVIS. The action of the committee was according to their own judgment.

Mr. BECK. What I desire to say more particularly is that what appears as a petition, or is presented as a popular demand, is not always so, indeed it very seldom is truly so. When petitions and representations appear to come from the Grand Army of the Republic, and others who are insisting upon obtaining the benefit of these bills, nine times out of ten those petitions and those demands do not come from these sources at all. It is only eight or nine years since the arrears-of-pension bill was passed. Then the Senate and the other House were flooded with petitions, all appearing to be bona fide, honestly and earnestly presented and pressed by the soldiers and by the Grand Army; yet the bill had hardly become a law before a body of men residing in Washington sent out their demands against the men who were to receive the benefits of that act, claiming that they ought to be paid for working it up. They were extorting money from men all over the country because of that fact, until a committee of the House of Representatives, composed of men of both parties, made an investigation and developed the fact that all those petitions, all that clamor, the action of Legislatures, were worked up here by pension agencies at Washington, who made fortunes out of it.

I hold in my hand that committee's report, and I find in it a letter written by a Mr. Dimmick, R. A. Dimmick, chairman of the pension committee of the district agents here, in which he said, among other things:

> After receiving responses from a few hundred, I then made up statistics showing the various causes of delay, and gave the same to General A. V. Rice, now chairman of the House Committee on Pensions, and I compiled the information obtained in an eight-page pamphlet, of which I issued 10,000, sending many to various State Legislatures, to the press, and hundreds of them at various times were placed in Congress. It was entitled Important Reasons why the Pension Laws should be Amended. This has been the fountain from which the public, the press, and the legislators have derived their information as to the justice and merits of the bill. Senators, Representatives, and officials have gleaned most of their information from this source.
> I have written many resolutions for State associations urging Congress to pass the bill, and secured their passage. I also have written every editorial and every article in favor of the bill that has appeared in the daily and weekly journals of this city; also numerous other articles for newspapers in various parts of the country. I have put out over 100,000 pamphlets, circulars, petitions, etc.; and nearly all petitions that have been presented in Congress for the past three years are those which we have issued and sent to the various parts of the country, and have been returned to Congress by our direction. We worked hard and continuously, and our bill passed the House of the Forty-fourth Congress at the last end of the session, and I was greatly disappointed when it failed of passage by the Senate. In consequence of my inability to meet the expense, I had about concluded to give up the prosecution and not try it again, as on every side it was thought the bill involved so much money that it could never pass.
> At the solicitations and appeals of a few earnest men and women, who have nobly stood by me, I was induced to try it again in the Forty-fifth Congress, and we had to repeat all the efforts before made, which have been far greater than any person can conceive; for it is well known here that I have worked unremittingly, and all the petitions and all the letters sent in to legislators have been presented by our dictation.

That is supported by a number of pension attorneys whose names are signed to it, addressed "To pensioners of the country," representing that Mr. Dimmick ought to be paid. They say that—

> He put in the first petition from New York, and has been the means of having nearly every petition and every letter sent to Congress the past three years, and his work has covered from Maine to California. He has placed before Congress over one hundred thousand pamphlets, petitions, and documents, and his compilation of statistical information embracing the most unanswerable arguments, being the result of much study and work, has been the main means of enlightening the public and Congress as to the justice and merits of the claim. Senators, Representatives, and other officials frequently called for the pamphlets.

A circular was issued to a large number of the pensioners in the country, as follows:

> AN ACT OF JUSTICE.
> MARCH 1, 1879.
> In recognition of the labor of Capt. R. A. Dimmick, of Washington, for the past three years in conducting the prosecution of the arrears-of-pension bill, which has resulted in a law, I hereby subscribe the sum of —— dollars toward a testimonial to him, payable when I receive the arrears of pension due me.
> Name. —— ——.
> On the back of this is written the following:
>
> We cheerfully concur in the object of the pensioners of this city in a proper recognition to Capt. R. A. Dimmick of his service respecting the arrears bill, having confidence that it would not have been a law had it not been for his untiring efforts.
>
> If our correspondents desire to recognize this obligation to Captain Dimmick, we will cheerfully hand to the testimonial committee such subscription blanks as may be returned to us.
>
> L. BINGHAM & CO.,
> Patent and Claim Agents, Washington, D. C.

The committee having charge of the matter, composed, as I said, of men of both political parties, made a report to the House of Representatives on the 3d of March, 1879, signed by William A. J. Sparks, William M. Robbins, D. N. Lockwood, T. M. Patterson, Edwin Willits, Addison Oliver, and Thaddeus C. Pound, both Republicans and Democrats, in which they say, among other things:

> Within the past few days evidence came to the committee of what appeared to be a combination among claim agents and others to extort money from pensioners under the pretense of services by one of their number in securing the passage of the bill granting arrears of pension. The principal parties connected with the scheme were brought in to testify, and their evidence, which accompanies this report, shows a plan of operations which was intended to cover every State in the Union, and whereby a large sum of money would doubtless have been filched from the pockets of the poor pensioners. The testimony of Dimmick and Tallmadge shows that, although but a few days have elapsed since operations were commenced, not less than $2,500 has already been received, in sums varying from $2 to $10 each.
> It is believed that the timely exposure of these sharpers will have the effect of breaking up similar attempts elsewhere by unprincipled scoundrels, who, while constantly prating of their love for their "fellow-soldiers" and "comrades," generally manage to give a practical working to their affections which the victim is never likely to forget. The committee are indebted to the Commissioner of Pensions for his active co-operation in making this portion of their investigation.

Therefore it is that I say to the Senator from Minnesota, who is a new member here, a very careful and very intelligent one, as I know that he need not be astonished if he finds out, as was developed after the arrears-of-pension bill was passed, that much of what he now honestly thinks is the soldier demand comes now, as it came then, from the men who seek to obtain the lion's share of these pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator will allow me a word. I want to say to the Senator and to the Senate that no such agency as that to which the Senator refers put in an appearance before the Pensions Committee when this bill was under consideration. The Grand Army of the Republic, through its regularly constituted legislative committee, a committee charged with the responsibility of looking to legislation, a committee made up of members from many different States, men of the highest character and the highest intelligence, came before our committee and presented the claim of the Grand Army itself; and no pension agent, no such person as the Senator has referred to, was heard at all, or his words or wishes considered, by the committee when this bill was before it.

Mr. BECK. It is amazing to me that I can not make a plain statement of recorded facts without getting into a controversy.

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir; that is not it. The Senator, as I understood him, undertook to lead the Senate to believe that that kind of agency had been employed.

Mr. BECK. When?

Mr. PADDOCK. I say the inference to be drawn from the observations of the Senator from Kentucky was that it was this kind of agency which he has described that had been employed to secure the report of this bill from the committee. That is not true, sir. The character of the representation to the committee was such as I have before described, and none other.

Mr. BECK. Now, I believe I may go on.

When the arrears-of-pension bill was up it was no more suspected then than it is now what these men were doing, and when they were exposed by the House of Representatives and denounced in the way they were, no doubt some other means was devised whereby they could bring it up more successfully and without having to go through the same investigation they did before. I know that many of the things that happened under that bill could not have happened if that arrears-of-pension bill had been fully and carefully considered. I know that the leading managers of the soldiers' home, three of the best soldiers in this country, General Franklin, General McMahon, and General Harris, have told me and have told others, repeatedly, that the loose way in which that bill was passed demoralized and almost broke up their homes for years.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish instead of denouncing a bill that passed many years ago, or the means used to pass it, the Senator would take up this bill and show the injustice of its provisions.

Mr. BECK. I will at once speak directly concerning this bill, to gratify the Senator, and will only speak of the first section, as time is precious. Take the first seven lines; I do not have to go very deep into the bill to find a serious objection. The first seven lines read thus:

> That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor child or children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support.

The line might be left out, so it would read that it is only necessary to show by competent and legal evidence that such parent or parents are without other means of support than their own manual labor. Is not that objectionable in many regards? Is that a carefully-drawn provision? The parents of many of these men may have been dependent on their manual labor, may have been without any other means of support than their own manual labor all their lives, and may be as able to perform manual labor to-day as they ever were in their lives; they may be the best mechanics in the country; they may be good farmers; they may be making as comfortable support as they ever made. They are not obliged, many of them, to be over sixty years of age. I am sixty-six myself, and I am as capable of laboring, I think, as I ever was; perhaps I would not like it so well as in my younger days.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. BECK. Of course I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. If the survivors of the war of the rebellion are shown to be people of sixty years of age, I would like to ask the Senator from Kentucky why when Congress pensioned the Mexican war veterans absolutely who had arrived at the age of sixty-two it did not occur to obviate that objection in that case?

Mr. BECK. I never was very much enamored with any of these service-pension bills. My Legislature instructed me to vote for the Mexican pension bill, and I did not choose to look into it and probably voted for it to obey the Legislature. I obeyed instructions, and perhaps set a bad precedent. I make a good many mistakes, no doubt.

At sixty years of age a good mechanic, a strong workingman, is to get $144 a year under this bill out of the tax-payers. That simply demoralizes honest labor, because whenever you take away the necessity of work men quit work.

Another objection to this first provision is in its application to the fathers of enlisted colored men. I have no animosity against the colored race on any grounds, either because they were formerly slaves or anything of that sort; but all over the border States, in Missouri, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Maryland, thousands of negro boy slaves were taken into the Army. Senators have doubtless read a very clever book written by Col. Don Piatt about the heroes of the war, showing how he and others went to Maryland and seized all the slaves, men and boys, wherever they could and put them into the Army in order to force an issue. So it was in the other border States. The relation of slavery existed then in all of them. Those young boys were taken into the Army and they were enlisted as soldiers. They took boys fifteen, sixteen, and eighteen years old, plenty of them. Their fathers and their mothers were slaves as well as they. The father and the mother may have lived in Virginia or in Mississippi, while the boy was enlisted in Kentucky or Maryland.

The boy was carried to Camp Nelson, for example, in Kentucky. He was kicked by a mule, pensioned, and died. The father and the mother were slaves of other people who were living perhaps in the Confederacy, in Louisiana or in Mississippi, body-servants perhaps to the Confederate brigadiers you talk so much about. The father may be yet a strong man, able to work to-day as well as he ever could, yet every one of the fathers of the boys thus abducted and wounded or hurt are to get a pension under this bill of $144 a year. It will be a surprise to them. They and their sons never had any dependence on each other.

Mr. BLAIR. Right.

Mr. BECK. Right, the Senator says; perhaps it may be; but where these young slaves were taken and put into the Army, who never heard a gun fired, who were supposed to be injured while lying by the camp fire, and were pensioned before they died, their parents who never were dependent upon them, who very likely never lived in the same State with them, who never had any of that connection which exists in white families, where the father and mother and son are all disposed to help each other, those negroes are now to be pensioned. That is one objection to this bill.

Do not understand me that I am raising any objection on account of color. I mention this objection because of the relation of slavery that existed and did away with all the natural dependence of father and son and parent and child. It did not exist among them in fact; but whenever there is an able-bodied negro who had a son in the Army fifty eight or sixty years of age you pension him merely because his son was injured in the Army or is dead, when he had no relation of dependence on him and never had. It is not a proper thing, in my judgment, to do; and since I am asked to find fault with this pension bill, I present that as one serious objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Please let me go on.

Mr. BLAIR. I only wish to remind the Senator——

Mr. BECK. The Senator from New Hampshire was at the bottom of a two-hours' speech I made the other day. I do hope he will not cause me to extend my remarks again.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the gross but honest inaccuracy under which he is laboring in regard to the bill. It would require that the soldier should have been regularly mustered into the service.

Mr. BECK. I said that.

Mr. BLAIR. And that he should have been honorably discharged.

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. If any negro slave became a soldier in the armies of the Union and helped the Senator to live within the United States of America to-day, I say give his dependent parent a pension.

Mr. BECK. All that argumentum ad hominem, and the talk about this side of the Chamber and that side of the Chamber being friendly or hostile to this measure, and about one side being loyal and the other disloyal, is not quite worthy of the Senate in discussing a great question that is to involve perhaps a thousand millions of dollars and taxation for forty years.

I am not finding any fault because it helps colored men. It was not the negro's fault that he was a slave. It was not the negro's fault that he and his father did not live together as father and son, or in the same State, and belonged to different individuals, or had no relations of any sort; but it was a fact all the same, and shows how loose the provisions about dependent fathers are.

Senators talk about the neglected soldiers. I said the other day, and I repeat, that every soldier who was wounded or disabled in the service, white or black, was pensioned by law, and if he does not come within it, and he can show any reason why he did not obtain a pension, he has only to come to Congress and make out a reasonable case and Congress gives it to him.

The Senator from Connecticut says that at the other end of the Avenue the President never signs any bills for soldiers. Mr. President, he approves bills giving $80,000,000 a year for that purpose, and with the exception of six or eight, which were shown to be clearly wrong, every private bill that goes before him that has any decent merit in it is signed by him; and yet it is to be said on the floor of the Senate that nobody is pensioned with the consent of the President of the United States. The Senator must think the people of this country are all ignoramuses to believe talk of that sort.

By one construction of this proposed law, and I am not sure that it is not the true construction of it, it will be only necessary to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other means of support than their own manual labor, that the man who owns his home or lands that bring him in nothing, whether it is in the shape of a fifty or a hundred acre farm, or a house in town, or who works for his wages, is entitled to $144 a year because that house or farm does not furnish him the means of support. It furnishes him shelter or a chance to work only. That may be to some extent means of support, or it may be construed not to mean that at all. If he is working a little farm, owning or living in a house, and is still making a comfortable living, in spite of all that, as the farm does not furnish him any means of support, as the house does not furnish him any means of support, if he has to perform manual labor to support himself, even if he does own the property he lives in, he is still entitled to the pension.

I was asked to state my objections to the pending bill by the Senator from Connecticut. I have only gone over the first seven lines, and I think the matters contained in these constitute grave objections to the measure. I do not believe it is any real benefit to a man to induce him to quit work in order to get a pension.

Mr. MANDERSON. Would it relieve the Senator's objections any to the first section if the fact were made known to him that this legislation has been recommended by Secretary Lamar and Commissioner Black?

Mr. BECK. If it were recommended by the Senator from Nebraska it would not meet my approbation, and I would as soon have his recommendation as that of General Black or Secretary Lamar or any other gentleman.

Mr. MANDERSON. I simply call attention to the fact that it has had the recommendation of both those officials.

Mr. BECK. Very well; I care nothing for that. I think it may receive a construction that may work very great injustice. I have as much faith in the judgment and wisdom of the members of the Committee on Pensions as I have in that of Secretary Lamar or General Black or anybody else. I am not finding any fault with those who have brought in the bill, but I was asked what objection I had to it, and I took up the first six or seven lines. I expect the balance of it is just as bad, maybe worse, when carefully considered.

To show that men may be very young and still have done some service, right by me now sits the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] and the other Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. We have been looking at biographies and autobiographies lately. Both those gentlemen have given theirs in the Directory, and I find that the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] was born in 1848, entered the Confederate army a private soldier, was wounded in that service in 1864, and was surrendered in Louisiana in 1865; the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] was born about four or five months earlier. Now, here are two Senators, neither of whose fathers would necessarily be sixty years of age if they were alive to-day, and you are pensioning men by these first seven lines who may be as able as they ever were to do work, and who may be now comfortably well off in their station in life.

Although the Senator from Nebraska may take a different view of it, if the father of a dead pensioner is a mechanic and has to earn a living, although he may own the house in which he lives, he is still entitled to the pension. Although a man may own a little farm and say he can not rent it for enough to live on, he is still entitled to this pension, though by his manual labor in the workshop, the factory, foundry, or farm he has to work for a living to earn his support. That is going altogether too far.

It is because I believed many of these bills are worked up by agencies clearly outside of the men who need support from the Government that I called attention to what was done when the arrears-of-pension bill was up, and because I think in many of the provisions, especially in the first section, when you look at the relations existing among the colored race at that time and even among white men, we are carrying it to a point that is dangerous and unnecessary and which really does the men themselves no good, that I oppose this measure.

Mr. President, one word more. Much was said about the Confederate soldier the other day. I am not going into that controversy, but the truth is incontrovertible that when the civil war ended the Federal soldier came back to a country richer than it was when the war began. All the honors and emoluments that could be heaped upon him were at his disposal; everybody took him by the hand, and he was aided and encouraged in all his efforts, as he ought to have been.

The men who fought against him, many of them perhaps young men like young KENNA, of West Virginia, fifteen or sixteen years old, carried away by sentiment or following some other idea, went into the Southern army; when the war was over they went back and found desolated homes; they found the country impoverished; they found a rule over their country for years that I am not going to allude to now, but it is safe to say that none of us on either side of the Chamber are proud of it. They were disfranchised, and cut off from advancement in every possible way; and yet the fact remains that although the Federal soldiers to-day are getting $80,000,000 a year, and perhaps $85,000,000, and those now legally provided for are being pensioned by private acts of Congress wherever they ask for a pension and can show any sort of right, there are very few, if any—there may be some, but I do not know of any—of those men who went back to the South after the war was over, who knew they had to depend upon their own resources, asking charity, and who are not better off than they would have been if pensions had been given to them. Manhood, individuality, and pluck are subordinated, if not lost, when men rely on charity.

I read some years ago, and it impressed me at the time, of a benevolent lady in England, who, feeling an interest in the city of Bath, saw a great many paupers there, and she wanted to help them. She established a place where they could get food and assistance, and to her amazement when she went back she found that the number of beggars had increased by 50 per cent. over the number existing when she founded her charity. She was told that increased pauperism was the result of her bounty. She changed her policy and began by improving the streets and building public edifices and furnishing them employment, and the number that had increased 50 per cent. was in less than eighteen months reduced below 50 per cent. of the original number. That case only illustrates the good effect of giving a man the means to make a living, and letting him keep what he makes, and not making him dependent upon the charity of anybody, always excepting those who are absolutely compelled to receive it and have a right to demand it by reason of their services when able. I believe that there are very many cases covered by the first seven lines of the bill who would not only not be benefited, but who do not need it, and would absolutely be transferred from useful, hard-working citizens by a pension of $144 a year. That I think is bad legislation. But I will not take any more of the time of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Pensions Committee, both the chairman and the members, are unusually and unnecessarily sensitive about this bill. I am sure I did not criticise the committee at all. I did not intend to do so, and I do not think I did it. I said I should vote without reference to the wishes of the committee, following my own judgment. That is not an unusual thing in this body, and I am not amenable to the charge made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

I have not been afraid of my record and my vote. I am not in the habit of dodging questions in this body. I proposed to vote according to my judgment I said, and I had no reference to the wishes of anybody outside.

I take issue with the chairman of the committee when he says the purpose and the result of the bill will be to take out of the pauper-houses the ex-soldiers who are there. I say that under a construction now being put upon the word "incapacity" in the Department, where this question must be settled, it will only take out a limited number. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that there is a wide distinction between the word "disability" and the word "incapacity." There is no resemblance in the two words. They receive, in the Pension Office, and always have since there has been a statute to be interpreted, an entirely different construction. I say that if the Senate limits it to total incapacity that goes beyond total disability as understood in the Department. I say that takes a man who is practically bedridden. I do not say he would have to be bedridden.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand the Senator from Colorado to say that there is a difference of meaning between "total incapacity" and "total disability?"

Mr. TELLER. Unquestionably there is a difference between "total incapacity" and "total disability."

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator say that there is a difference of meaning between "incapacity" and "disability?"

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to repeat it more than five or six times. I said that and I repeat it again, and that is the construction to-day being put upon the two words in the Department.

Mr. DAVIS. I am very much obliged to you for the repetition.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says that the committee have come here and presented a bill that they thought might pass. I do not know whether that was the entire duty of the committee or not. I suppose they could give us a bill that when it did pass would be of some advantage and some benefit to the supposed beneficiaries under the bill. The difference between the chairman and myself is that he says this will include 20,000 people. My judgment is that it will not include 2,000, and it is doubtful whether it will include 1,000 upon the construction that will be given if the word "totally" is left in the second section.

I do not know why I should yield my judgment on this question to the Committee on Pensions. I have great respect for that committee. I have respect for the members; I have confidence in their judgment; but this is not a new question to me. I have served upon the Pension Committee myself, and it has been my fortune to deal with these questions somewhat. I am not entirely ignorant of the question that is being discussed, and I did not know there could be anybody who would suppose that, because I do not agree with the committee, I desire, as has been suggested, to throw obstacles in the way of the bill. I do not yield to any member of that committee in a desire to help these people. I am as anxious to do them service as they are. If I were satisfied that the word "totally" would be construed as the committee say it would be construed, I should not hesitate to vote for it, because I would take part of the loaf rather than to have none.

I would not be moved by the rumors of danger to the bill somewhere else. I do not think I shall vote in this body with that held over me at any time; or if it is attempted I shall vote according to my judgment, and I am not at all afraid to let that matter go to the country. I am not amenable to the charge of the Senator from New Hampshire that I am afraid of my record.

I do not desire at this hour to continue the discussion of this bill, but I think it must be admitted that every Senator has a right to vote upon the bill as his judgment dictates, and there is no inference that he is hostile to the bill because the chairman of the committee and the consolidated committee do not think as he does. I do not think it has quite come to this, that we are to be terrorized down by some undefined and uncertain influence that nobody dares to name in this Chamber, and that we are to be terrorized by the committee. With all due respect to the committee, I propose to exercise my judgment in this matter. I hope that I am mistaken. If the bill passes, I hope it will turn out that I am in error, and that such a construction will be put upon the law as will give to these people what Senators say they will get; but I can not see how anybody supposes that when the Department to-day is construing the word exactly as it is insisted it will be construed——

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the definition of the two words.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going into any dictionary meanings now.

Mr. PADDOCK. But the Senator has stated that there is a great difference in the definition of the terms.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will conclude my remarks by saying that to-day the Department construes the word "incapacity" exactly as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] stated here on this floor and as I stated. That ought to be an answer; and if he can change the ruling in the Department he will do well.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is very likely the Department makes its ruling wrong. The Commissioner of Pensions is not infallible. This is what Worcester says about these two words: The definition of the word incapacity is, "want of capacity, want of power, or ability; inability." The definition of "disability" is, "want of power; want of ability; inability; incompetency." There are no two words in the English language more nearly synonymous than those two.

Mr. President, I wish to express the hope that our friends on this side who have been so very much embarrassed about accepting the suggestions and the recommendations made by the Committee on Pensions respecting this bill will feel less so since they have heard the Senator from Kentucky with his loud voice on the other side; but however much they may have been or may be now embarrassed, I want to say to them that they are no more embarrassed than the committee would have been if they had undertaken to refuse the suggestions and the recommendations made by the legislative committee of the Grand Army of the Republic when they appeared before the committee in full force and recommended the passage of this bill.

I desire very briefly, on behalf of the committee and possibly for a better understanding between us and our friends on this side, to review two or three of the most important provisions of the bill.

The first section provides substantially that in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and that the soldier left no widow or child or children being determined, it is only required to show by good and sufficient evidence that the parent or parents are without other means of support than by their own manual labor or by contributions of others not legally bound to furnish the same. This is a most favorable change as the Senator from Kentucky discovered.

This is a most favorable change from the present state of the law in two very important respects:

First. Whereas as the law now stands the claimant must prove that the soldier died from some cause originating in the service and in the line of duty, under this section the fact and cause of death only are required to be proven without connecting the same with causalty in the line of duty.

Second. In the present state of the law the parent or parents must prove that they were dependent upon the son before his death for contributions to their maintenance, whereas under this section this is not required. All that will be required under this section will be to show that they have no means of support, except as it may come from their own manual labor or from charity.

Section 2 provides, in substance, as follows: That a soldier being qualified as to his three months' service or more, and his honorable discharge, who is now, or may become after the passage of this bill, totally incapacitated (as the bill was reported by the committee) on account of mental or physical disability to perform manual labor—such disability not arising from his own vicious habits—and who is without "other adequate means of self-support" (these last words being an amendment by the Senate as to phraseology which for one I am willing to accept), is to receive $12 per month.

This is a decided step in advance of the present rule, which requires that total disability must be clearly proven to have had its originating cause in the line of duty. That is what is the trouble. The cases provided for in this section are not cases that go back to where the disability shall have been shown to originate in the line of duty.

It is in the nature of a service pension, not only for the disabled of this class at the date of the passage of this bill, but for those who may become incapacitated hereafter by the loss of an arm or otherwise to perform manual labor. Very many of this class of cases are pressed upon Congress for relief through special legislation continuously.

There are a number of such cases before the Committee on Pensions now, where the cause of the disease or infirmity can not be traced to service in the line of duty.

The proviso in this section 2 authorizes persons pensioned under any existing law, who are now or may hereafter come into any of the conditions described in this section from causes not necessarily originating in the line of duty, to apply for the relief prescribed by this section, or pensioners under this proposed law may make application for any other pension authorized by existing law accordingly as the condition of the pensioner may change with advancing age, but only one pension can be allowed at one time to any person, and the rank of the soldier is not to be considered in granting such pension.

In that respect it is a very democratic proviso.

Section 3 is a very generous provision for the benefit particularly of minor children. It authorizes an increase of the pension for such from $2 to $5, and raises the maximum limit of minority from sixteen to eighteen years, and, in cases of insanity, idiocy, or other helplessness, provides that the pension may be continued during the life of the pensioner or during the period of such disability.

It further provides that if there are no minor children and no widow the dependent mother or father may be placed upon the pension-rolls on the death of the invalid son who was a pensioner, without regard to the cause of his death. In other words, if the son who is a pensioner comes to his death through accident or disease in no way traceable to or connected with his service in the line of duty, the dependent parents are to be placed upon the pension-roll upon the simple proof of the death of the son.

Section 4 furnishes additional safeguards against frauds upon the pension claimants, and is a very useful section.

Mr. President, I desire to say to our friends here that, so far as I am concerned, I will go as far as he who will go farthest to secure the most liberal rule of pensions that it is possible to secure for the ex-Union soldiers of the late war. I will do this because I believe it is due to them, because I believe that when we shall have done all that it is possible to do there will still remain an enormous debt of gratitude to those brave men that never will be discharged.

But, sir, there is another reason. I believe it to be the highest and the best service that can be rendered the Republic here to encourage, to stimulate, to develop, to strengthen in every possible way the volunteer sentiment of this country, because when the day of need comes, in the hour of trial and danger, it is the volunteer soldiery upon whom we must depend to defend the Union, to protect our free institutions, our liberties, our altars, and our firesides. And when these gentlemen come to us as they have done in this case, I want to give to them that which they say is an attainable proposition. It is for that reason that I have sustained this measure substantially as they presented it to us and demanded that there shall be no amendment thereto. But it is late; the time has already passed for the vote to be taken, and I will not longer detain the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the five-minute rule in force?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is reluctant to enforce the five-minute rule, since by common consent it has been dispensed with, and Senators have been allowed to go beyond the time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall insist upon its enforcement hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is the desire of the Senate that it shall be enforced, the Chair will govern himself accordingly.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole? In Committee of the Whole the word "totally" was stricken out. A "yea" vote keeps it out. The vote "nay" restores it to the bill. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR. It is out of order, but I do not understand the question. I ask that the question be restated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 6, after the word "which," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the word "totally;" so as to read:

Which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole? The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] was called from the Senate Chamber a few moments ago, and I agreed to pair with him, but since that time the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] has absented himself, and I transfer the pair to the Senator from Arkansas by agreement with him. If the Senator from Vermont were here he would vote "yea." The Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I ascertain that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] is absent without a pair, and I shall take the liberty, unless some other Senator is paired with the Senator from Florida, to announce a pair between the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GRAY] was necessarily called home to-day. I think he would vote "nay" if he were here, but I do not know certainly.

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted "yea," but I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the negative). I voted "nay," understanding that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], with whom I am paired, would have voted the same way.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Allison,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Teller,
Bowen,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Palmer,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Platt,

NAYS—42.

Aldrich,	Cockrell,	Hawley,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Coke,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Beck,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Berry,	Daniel,	Manderson,	Stockbridge,
Blackburn,	Davis,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Blair,	Eustis,	Pasco,	Vance,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Brown,	George,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,
Chandler,	Harris,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—20.

Butler,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,
Call,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Gray,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Evarts,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Stanford,
Faulkner,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,	Vest.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 7, after the word "labor," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the words, and "who are without other adequate means of self-support;" so as to read:

And who are now or may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits, which totally incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor, and who are without other adequate means of self-support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed upon the list of invalid pensioners, etc.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in the Committee of the Whole was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "same," to strike out "in the degree herein specified;" so as to read:

And such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, after the passage of this act, upon proof that the disability then existed, and shall continue during the existence of the same.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in the Committee of the Whole was, in section 3, line 8, after the word "Provided," to strike out:

That the cause of death of such pensioner was not or is not due to a violation of civil or military laws, or the result of vicious habits: And provided further.

Mr. DAVIS. That is a committee amendment.

The amendment was concurred in, there being, on a division—ayes 28, noes 23.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in section 3, line 12, after the word "act," to insert:

All pensions granted to widows under this or any other general law shall take effect from the date of the death of the husband of such widows, respectively, but not dating back of the passage of this act.

Mr. DAVIS. I will state that this amendment is in the exact language recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions in his last report. ["All right!"]

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amentment made as in Committee of the Whole was to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 5. That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes is hereby modified so that the same shall not apply to this act: Provided, That this act shall not apply to those persons under political disabilities. And no person shall be pensioned under this act for any disability incurred while engaged in any military or naval service against the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. That is substantially a committee amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole are completed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. HAWLEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], but understanding that, if he were present, he would vote on this bill as I do, I record my vote "yea."

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. Knowing that he would vote for the bill, if present, I shall cast my vote for the bill. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). I wish to announce the pair of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If the two Senators were here, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Arkansas "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I desire to announce that my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] has been transferred to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], but understanding that he would vote for this bill, if present, I cast my vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). The pair of my colleague [Mr. SABIN] has been announced with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] on this bill. I suppose, if he were present, he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—44.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Frye,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Brown,	George,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Teller,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Hampton,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,	Walthall,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—16.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Eustis,	Reagan,
Beck,	Coke,	Gibson,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—16.

Butler,	Gray,	Morgan,	Ransom,
Call,	Hearst,	Morrill,	Sabin,
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,	Stanford,
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,	Vest.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2465) for the relief of the heirs of John F. Shorter; and

A bill (H. R. 3796) to purchase of the widow and children of the late General James Shields certain swords.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH VENEZUELA.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution of inquiry, and asked for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not in his judgment incompatible with the interests of the public service, copies of instructions sent to the United States minister at Caracas, and of correspondence between the Government of the United States and that of Venezuela since the message of the President (Executive Document No. 28, Senate, Forty-second Congress, second session), dated February 2, 1872, regarding the seizure, detention, and employment in war of the American steam-ships Hero, San Fernando, and Nutrias, the property of the Venezuela Steam Transportation Company, of New York, and the imprisonment of their officers, citizens of the United States, by the legitimate Government of Venezuela and armed forces in revolt against its authority; together with copies of the correspondence between the said company, its officers or attorneys, and the Secretary of State since the publication of the aforesaid executive document.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to strike out the words, "if not in his judgment incompatible with the interests of the public service."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). Does the Senator object?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am not objecting, but I move to strike out the words "if not in his judgment incompatible with the interests of the public service."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Virginia moves to amend.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the words "if not in his judgment incompatible with the interests of the public service."

Mr. BLAIR. I reserve the right to object to this resolution if it leads to debate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not wish to debate it. I submit the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, after the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] has concluded his remarks, I shall desire to continue the consideration of the resolution referring the President's message, for the purpose of submitting some remarks of my own.

EXCLUSION OF CHINESE LABORERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

A copy of the following resolution passed by the Senate on the 1st day of the present month was delivered to me on the 3d instant:

"Resolved, That in view of the difficulties and embarrassments that have attended the regulation of the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States, under the limitations of our treaties with China, the President of the United States be requested to negotiate a treaty with the Emperor of China containing a provision that no Chinese laborer shall enter the United States."

The importance of the subject referred to in this resolution has by no means been overlooked by the executive branch of the Government, charged under the Constitution with the formulation of treaties with foreign countries.

Negotiation with the Emperor of China for a treaty such as is mentioned in said resolution was commenced many months ago and has been since continued. The progress of the negotiation thus inaugurated has heretofore been freely communicated to such members of the Senate, and of its Committee on Foreign Relations, as sought information concerning the same. It is, however, with much gratification that I deem myself now justified in expressing to the Senate, in response to its resolution, the hope and expectation that a treaty will soon be concluded concerning the immigration of Chinese laborers which will meet the wants of our people and the approbation of the body to which it will be submitted for confirmation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 8, 1888.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 2465) for the relief the heirs of John F. Shorter was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 3796) to purchase of the widow and children of the late General James Shields certain swords was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Matthew H. Fulton was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 6922) for the relief of George W. Graham was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

VALUATION OF IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate now agree to consider Senate bill No. 977. If there is to be any contest respecting it, of course I shall not insist on it at this hour of the evening; but it was the understanding, I believe, that when the pension bill was disposed of that bill should be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the title of that bill be read.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the bill reported from the Committee on Finance relating to undervaluation of foreign merchandise.

The Secretary read the title of the bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill the title of which has been stated.

Mr. ALLISON. Merely for the purpose of having it left as the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I want to give notice that the Committee on Pensions will ask as early a day next week as can be conveniently given them for the consideration of private pension bills.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 12, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 8, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM BRUSH, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OBSERVATIONS AT NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy, requesting an immediate appropriation for reductions of observations made with the west transit circle of the Naval Observatory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of appropriation for constructing building No. 7 at the navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TOTAL ECLIPSE, JANUARY, 1889.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of appropriation for the purpose of observing on the Pacific coast the total eclipse of the sun, to occur January, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS AND MARSHALS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a report from the First Comptroller relative to the compensation of United States attorneys and marshals; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL SERVICE IN THE WEST.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, in response to a resolution of inquiry relative to the mail service in the West; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes; with an amendment by the Senate.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask that the House non-concur in the Senate amendment, and request a committee of conference.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. WADE.

ENLARGEMENT OF POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1040) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building and to provide accommodations for the city post-office; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON AND E. L. HEDDEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1198) for the relief of William H. Robertson and Edward L. Hedden, late collectors of customs for the district of the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

"MARTYRS OF THE PRISON-SHIPS."

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, relative to the erection of a monument to the "martyrs of the prison-ships" at the Wallabout during the Revolutionary war; which were referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolutions relative to erection of monument to the "martyrs of the prison-ships" at the Wallabout during the Revolutionary war.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, February 28, 1888.

Whereas the Society of Old Brooklynites of the city of Brooklyn has presented a petition to the Congress of the United States for the erection of a monument to commemorate the virtues and patriotism of more than twelve thousand soldiers and sailors who perished on board the prison-ships at the Wallabout during the Revolutionary war; and

Whereas those unhappy victims were citizens of the United States, prisoners of war, captured while in the service of this country during its long and desperate struggle for freedom, when the Government was too feeble to afford them protection or relieve their sufferings: Therefore,

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be, and they hereby are, earnestly requested to use all honorable means in their power to secure the passage of the bill (H. R. 1687) having for its object the erection of a monument to the memory of the "martyrs of the prison-ships."

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That a duly certified copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

By order.

JOHN S. KENYON, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, February 28, 1888.

Concurred in without amendment.
By order of assembly.

C. A. CHICKERING, Clerk.

POST-OFFICE CLERKS.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire also to present a petition, signed by 3,500 persons, in favor of the passage of an act of Congress to increase and regulate the salaries of post-office clerks. I ask that the petition without the names be printed in the RECORD, and that the whole petition, including the names, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable members of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned, business men and citizens generally of Brooklyn city and the State of New York, appreciating the great importance of the Post-Office Department to the business public and to all classes of the community, and believing that the steadily increasing population of our great cities and all the immense business connected therewith urgently require that the postal facilities should be kept up with this increasing demand for their services, take leave very respectfully to recommend to your favorable consideration the appeal of the post-office clerks to your honorable bodies for the passage of an act of Congress to increase and regulate their salaries similar to that now in force in the interest of letter-carriers and railway postal clerks.

We would with great respect pray your favorable action in their behalf, believing that the vast amount of labor they are required to perform, requiring much ability and a long period of special training, is of great value to the public, and that their compensation should be such as to secure the services of thoroughly qualified men.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LAGAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for three days, on account of important business.

A. F. SAINT SURE LINDEFELT.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. House bill No. 1151, for the relief of the legal representatives of A. F. Saint Sure Lindefelt, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but that committee decided that they did not have jurisdiction of the matter, and referred the bill to the Committee on Pensions in the regular way. The Committee on Pensions has now referred the bill back to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I wish the Chair would decide where it should properly go.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can make a motion and let the House decide.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to; and it was so ordered.

JOHN F. SHORTER.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2465) for the relief of the heirs of John F. Shorter, and that it be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PEEL. Is it understood that the bill will provoke no discussion?

Mr. LONG. No discussion.

Mr. PEEL. All right.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of John F. Shorter, late a sergeant in the Fifty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant from the 24th day of March, 1864, to the 1st day of July, 1865, being the time during which he acted as second lieutenant in the regiment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWORDS OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 3796) for the purchase from the widow and children of the late General Shields of certain swords, and to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to object to this, for I have concurred with the committee in reporting the bill favorably, but very recently I have seen in the public prints a statement that there is a question as to the ownership of these swords, and I think that question ought to be investigated before we take any action on this bill unless the gentleman in charge of the bill can assure us that there is no question as to the ownership of the swords.

Mr. TILLMAN. I give that assurance, and so does the gentleman who represents the district where the widow and children live.

Mr. MANSUR. There is no question of ownership.

Mr. STEELE. I have no doubt the question is settled to the satisfaction of the gentlemen.

Mr. HATCH. If the guaranty of the entire delegation of the State of Missouri will satisfy the gentleman from Indiana, we will give him that.

Mr. STEELE. Well, it has been very much improved just now. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] that this bill be considered at this time?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill and report are both brief, and I ask that they be both read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the State of Illinois and the State of South Carolina, after the war with Mexico, each presented to the late General James Shields a sword in consideration of gallant and meritorious services rendered by him in said war; and

Whereas he has left surviving him a widow and three minor children, with but limited means of support, and said swords, though costly and valuable, can not be divided and apportioned between said children, and their value is needed for the education and support of said children: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase of said widow and children said swords, at their actual cost and value, not to exceed the sum of $10,000, to be paid for out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and when so purchased the same to be deposited with the other military archives of the nation.

The report (by Mr. TILLMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3796) to purchase certain swords from the widow and children of the late General James Shields, report:

That they have fully investigated the facts recited in said bill, and find that they are in all respects true. The swords referred to as having been presented to the late General James Shields by the States of South Carolina and Illinois, for gallant and meritorious services in the Mexican war, are a part of the history of the country. General Shields died a few years ago, leaving a widow and three minor children in destitute circumstances. The swords, while costly and of great value, can not be divided or held by the widow and children. Their value, whatever it may be, is needed for the support and education of his children. His unselfish services to his adopted country are too well known to need any additional statements from your committee.

The swords would be an important and valuable addition to the military archives of the nation. They are now and have been for many years stored in the vaults of a bank in Carrollton, Carroll County, Missouri, where the general is buried, and where his widow and children reside.

We think it would be a just and proper recognition by the Congress of the nation of the services and disinterested conduct of this great and good man to purchase the swords and place them with the other military archives of the country, and we recommend the passage of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriation for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SWORDS OF GENERAL SHIELDS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR].

Mr. PETERS. Has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of this proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, on the crest of a high elevation, some two miles north of Carrollton, Mo., in my district, lies a modest little country graveyard. Several years ago I visited that graveyard. It is inclosed by a rough board fence. There are scarcely any monuments within its limits. There, buried, lies one of the great heroes of this country, without monument or tombstone to mark the spot. Amid the silence of that prairie graveyard, broken alone by the soft sighings of the wind as they mourned a requiem over his grave, I thought that his life had been more of a romance than that of any other man this country ever saw. Born of poor parents in Ireland in 1810, he emigrated to this country in 1826. Admitted to the bar, he commenced the practice of the law at Kaskaskia, Ill., and soon by his eminent talents and genius brought himself to the front, where men like Lincoln and Baker and other great minds of that State were his compeers and rivals. Shortly afterward he was elected to the Legislature; then made auditor of the State of Illinois, and later elevated to a place upon the supreme bench of that State.

In 1845 he was made Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States. On the breaking out of the war with Mexico he was appointed by President Polk a brigadier-general, and for gallant and meritorious services at Churubusco and Chapultepec, in each of which battles he was seriously if not dangerously wounded, was brevetted, for gallantry, major-general. After peace was declared he was made governor of the Territory of Oregon, but resigned without serving in that capacity. In 1849, so great had become the confidence and love of the people of Illinois toward him, he was made Senator from that great State.

When the civil war came on he espoused the side of his adopted country and was appointed by President Lincoln a major-general. At the battle of Winchester he was for the third time wounded. Some time after the war was over he removed to the State of Missouri. While located at Carrollton, in that State, he pursued for a number of years the practice of the law.

In his latter life I knew him quite well, frequently met him, and spent evenings with him. I found him in conversation one of the most delightful gentlemen that I had ever met. The courage of General Shields was, to my mind, of almost superlative order. He had heard the din of battle. He had heard the roar of great cannon, numerous as musketry and rivaling the artillery of the skies when the lightning leaps and the thunder reverberates through the arched vault of the heavens. And all this was to him simply as music to quiet his nerves and to make him braver and more courageous. This is evidenced from the fact that in battle he was always at the front—always at the point of danger.

In the great honors which he enjoyed his career exhibits remarkable coincidences: A soldier in three wars—the Florida, the Mexican, and the Civil; thrice wounded—at Churubusco, Chapultepec, and Winchester; a Senator successively from three States—Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri.

It was his great courage and integrity, combined with his common sense, that opened for him the way to these honors. As one of the best illustrations of his character, I desire to relate a little incident that he one evening told me. While I can give truthfully the salient points of the narrative, I can not remember the graphic little details connected with it. This incident shows the nerve and courage of the man at the call of a friend, or when his gallantry and sense of honor were appealed to. It was the night before the great battle in which the city of Mexico was taken. The American troops lay surrounding that city. General Shields, as he informed me, was in the front, nothing but a small canal, as I remember, separating him from the streets of the city. General Scott had given the most rigid orders that there should be during that night no stragglers, that no leaves of absence should be given, that no person under any circumstances should be permitted to leave the lines of the army, the purpose being to avoid bringing on a skirmish and possibly a battle before the next day. During the night some bold raiders and free-booters from the city, having crossed the canal, rushed upon one of the tents and captured the young and beautiful wife of one of the officers of General Shields's command. As her screams pierced the silence of the night as she was being borne across the canal, the attention of General Shields was arrested. In spite of the orders of General Scott, the occasion so appealed to his gallantry that he called for volunteers. A hundred men immediately sprang to his side, and, rushing across the canal, they followed them through the midnight streets of the city of Mexico and rescued the woman and punished her assailants, and all of this almost at the risk of being cashiered from the service.

I do not desire, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as several other gentlemen desire to be heard upon this subject, to trespass further upon the time of the House, and will close by appealing to the House, paraphrasing somewhat the language of the poet, and ask them to—

Be men. So vote that none may feel
Ashamed to meet the eyes of other men.
Think each one of his children and his wife,
His home, his parents, living yet or dead.
For them, the absent ones, I supplicate.

[Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, some one has well said that the life of James Shields reads like a romance—uniting as it does the characters of lawyer, judge, Senator, farmer, knight-errant, and general.

Born at Dungannon, county Tyrone, Ireland, in 1810, he emigrated to the United States in 1826, and died at Ottumwa, Iowa, in 1879—thus adding another to the innumerable illustrations of the fine observation of Chateaubriand, that no one knows what corner of the earth will receive his ashes.

These sixty-nine years of life were remarkably interspersed with change. Leaving his Irish home at sixteen, he presently appears as a lawyer at Kaskaskia, in the then Far West. Subsequently he is a member of the Illinois Legislature; judge of the circuit and supreme court of the State; Commissioner of the General Land Office; serving in the Florida war; serving in the Mexican war in so distinguished a manner that his name is immortally connected with the fields of Cerro Gordo, Churubusco, and Chapultepec; appointed to, but resigning, the governorship of Oregon Territory; United States Senator from Illinois; United States Senator from Minnesota; transferring his residence from the West to California; returning thence to break a lance in gallant fashion with Stonewall Jackson in the valley of the Shenandoah; United States Senator from the State of Missouri; and finally, after all this, leaving at his death a property which I hear was not worth more than from three to five thousand dollars—thus adding a crown of becoming glory to a life of long public service, by practically illustrating the fitness of comparative poverty as the ultimate outcome of protracted office-holding in a republic.

I think there is a wholesome sentiment connected with this act. One of these swords was presented to the hero by the Legislature of Illinois, the other by the Legislature of South Carolina. It is now proposed that they be acquired by Congress and deposited permanently, as worthy historical mementoes, in the capital of the nation—a place of deposit which represents the united patriotism of both the donating States and of all the States. Nothing, it appears to me, could be more appropriate than an act so obviously fit in itself, and which thus serves to interlace the patriotic sentiment of the States.

Just sentiments constitute one of the most valuable parts of the life of a nation. Some time since we witnessed on this floor the eloquent presentation of the portraits of certain eminent citizens of Massachusetts, a distinguished State of the North; and we were all moved by the warmth of generous feeling which found expression in the eloquent response from Kentucky, a distinguished State of the South. The portraits were of comparatively small moment considered in themselves, but the historical associations, the enveloping sentiment, elevated the act to a status of national dignity and usefulness.

The other day this House and the Senate passed a resolution providing for the designation of a national vessel of war to convey the remains of a distinguished Venezuelan from New York to his native shore. Here, again, it was the associated sentiment which elevated and gave dignity to the act. It was not an affair involving merely the translation of so much mortuary dust over the sea; it involved the fame of a hero and the sentiment that stirs in the hearts of millions of living men.

So with these swords, the presentation of which by two States, honored the now dead hero with whose fame this act is concerned. It is the patriotic and historical sentiment with which they are associated that justly consecrates them to the custody of the nation.

I knew General Shields well, and knew him for years. His character, like all characters, may be outlined in few words. He was self-contained, courteous, generous, decisive, aplomb, heroic.

The period of his life in America corresponds with a startling and tremendous change in our country. Up to the time of his immigration to our shores the trenchant saying of a distinguished Frenchman in the last century, that America was a giant without bones, still held measurably true. America now is not only ponderous, gigantic, but organized and articulate, and is swiftly becoming the most influential national society, the most advanced and powerful molder of civilization that either has place or ever had place in the world's history. Such a nation should be actuated, as it is actuated, by generous and noble sentiments. Such a nation should cherish well, as it does cherish well, the fair and honorable fame of the builders of its greatness and glory. [Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MACDONALD].

Mr. MACDONALD. I regret to say that it was not until a few moments ago, as I came in from the committee-room, that I learned that this measure was to be brought up for consideration in the House this morning, and this regret is the more keen because I notice that both of my colleagues from Minnesota on this side of the Hall, who with myself were his personal friends, are not now in their seats to give expression to the feelings of our people toward General Shields, which they unquestionably would do with much more credit to the subject than I can. It is therefore with embarrassment that I, thus unprepared, attempt to give utterance to what I know are the feelings and voice of my State upon this occasion.

But, sir, representing in part that State which was once represented in the United States Senate by this grand representative of Irish-American heroism, statesmanship, and patriotic virtue, whose widow and orphans are the beneficiaries in this bill, I would be derelict in my duty to my State, as well as to my own feelings, if I remained silent upon this occasion.

It was my good fortune to have been personally acquainted with the late General Shields. He and I were fellow-pioneers in the Territory of Minnesota, having located there away back in the fifties. He was there in that Territory in those early days, and knew and participated with us in all the hardships and privations of pioneer life, and experienced with us what it is to be a part of that advance guard of civilization and to take part in the opening up of that country to settlement. We who settled there not only in advance of the Government surveyors, but before the Indians who occupied it had removed to their reservation, can be pardoned if we feel toward one of our fellow-pioneers as those do who "drank from the same canteen."

I shall not detain the House with a lengthy reference to the life and public services of this remarkable man; so remarkable, indeed, as to be without a parallel in the history of this or any other country. Other gentlemen have and no doubt will elaborate upon them. I will content myself with simply saying that he was born in Ireland in the year 1810; came to the United States in 1826; that in the brief space of twenty years he had studied law, held successively the offices of representative in the State Legislature, State auditor, and judge of the supreme court of the State of Illinois.

After these triumphs in civil life, he was, in 1846, appointed brigadier-general in the Mexican war by President Pierce, and then began a military career that was in every way as surprising and marvelous as had been his in civil life. He was one of the few men who ever lived of whom it could be said that he had been literally shot through the body, and who lived twenty years later to participate in and distinguish himself in another war of far greater magnitude. Returning from Mexico amid the plaudits of a grateful people, the Legislature of Illinois elected him to the United States Senate in recognition of his bravery, services, and sacrifices in behalf of his adopted country, which position he held from 1849 to 1855. Still imbued with that spirit of energy and progress which is sometimes mistaken for a love of adventure, hearing of the grand field which Minnesota presented to the enterprising he removed to that Territory.

No sooner had he arrived among us than we found him to be such a man as would command attention and respect wherever he was. In proof of this, it is only necessary to state that upon the organization of our first State Legislature that body showed its appreciation of his ability and character by electing him one of our first United States Senators. No higher honor could it pay to any of its citizens.

Although in those days the means of communication were difficult, and it was difficult for men to meet and know each other, widely separated as they were, so well known had General Shields become that he was nominated in the Democratic caucus upon the first ballot. He remained a citizen of our State to the close of his Senatorial term, when unfortunately, suffering from the effects of his wounds received in Mexico and unable to withstand the rigors of our northern climate, he sought a more mild one in California. Not being satisfied with that State, he retraced his steps as far as Missouri, where, after the war of the rebellion, we find him again for the third time, and from a third State of this Union, elected to the United States Senate as the successor of the late Senator Bogy. Thus we see him well named "the hero of three wars and three times a United States Senator from three different and sovereign States!" Am I not warranted in saying he was a man without a parallel in the history of this or any other country?

I will not detain you longer in detailing more at length the incidents in the career of General Shields while he was a citizen of his adopted country or of our State. I shall content myself with saying that he proved himself in every respect worthy the admiration and esteem of his fellow-citizens; and all must confess that his Irish-American fellow-countrymen have just cause to be proud of him as one of them. While he was their idol and admiration, he certainly proved himself to be an exemplary citizen of the country of his adoption. [Applause.]

I trust that we will show our appreciation of his worth and services in behalf of our country by passing this bill by a unanimous vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, it may not be unfitting that on this occasion a few brief words should be spoken in favor of this resolution on behalf of the most distant State on the western confines of this Republic.

Her admiration, sir, for the remarkable life of this distinguished man, as illustrated in his services to the nation at large, as well as in the unassuming and republican simplicity of his private life, is not less profound than that so well and so ardently expressed by the honored Representatives of other States. But, sir, the State of Oregon has also a local, a nearer and closer interest in this commanding figure in American history. He was the first appointed of her Territorial governors.

At the close of the war with Mexico no honor was esteemed more distinguished in recognition of the gallant generals of that memorable conflict than an appointment in the Government service of the immense Territories of the West; and none was more eagerly solicited than the governorship of the Oregon Territory—then just organized. It was even at that time little less than a land of romance. There was an allurement in its very name. President Jefferson with wise statecraft had years before appreciated the incalculable value of this almost unknown empire in the future destiny of this nation. With unspeakable solicitude he fitted and sent out that memorable expedition under the Virginia pathfinders, Lewis and Clark, to cross the trackless continent to the unexplored realms "where flows the Oregon." Their narratives were read like fairy tales by all the world.

The Astorian expedition followed, and its exploits have been immortalized in the prose of Washington Irving, as he portrays, I may say in letters of gold, the marvels of this wonderland of the Pacific West.

The Hudson's Bay Company then quietly planted their standards on the great rivers and lakes and prairies and plains, and asserted their dominion over the rich traffic of this wide expanse. Like the barons of the Middle Ages they made laws and exacted tribute and obedience from all around them, and their sovereignty extended over all the aboriginal tribes inhabiting a country one-third larger than all Europe. Soon their own forts became houses of refuge, and held out the beacon-lights to the restless, oncoming, and triumphant march of American civilization and courage. Under Polk's administration we have not forgotten the unjust and defiant claims of Great Britain as to this land, and in response the prompt and indignant war-cry it inspired of "54° 40′ or fight."

This great empire on the distant shores of the Pacific aroused in the bold, restless, and enthusiastic nature of General Shields an ambition to seek it and to be its first governor. This, however, was in all not realized. The State of Illinois induced him to become her Senator in the United States Senate, and he resigned his appointment to Oregon, and it was tendered to and accepted by General Joseph Lane, of Indiana—he who achieved such splendid fame at Buena Vista and on other memorable fields, and who was crowned by popular consent with the title of the "Marion of the Mexican war," and died, while my neighbor, the last survivor of the major-generals of the Mexican war.

I can not better emphasize the force and character of this great man, whose jeweled trophies are now before us, than to quote the eloquent encomium of the revered Logan as it was uttered in the Senate of the United States on the bill to pension the needy widow of the dead general. He said:

> If there is a case in this country where merit demands recognition for loyalty to this Government, for devotion to his country, for brilliant and gallant conduct in battle, his case, in my judgment, is one. I knew this man, General Shields, when I was but a child. He and my father were friends, tried and true; from the same country, they adopted this as their country and their home. He dandled me on his knee when I was small; he encouraged me, flattered me in my boyhood. I learned to love and revere him. * * *

When the war with Mexico came upon the country he went forward, and in every contest where he was present the bright sword of General Shields gleamed and glistened as he led his unconquered warriors to the conflict. He was wounded twice, once nigh unto death. In fact, it was announced he was killed in battle. Recovering, however, he again resumed his command, and was again severely wounded. After that he was tried in many positions not necessary to enumerate, but there was none in which he was ever tried where he did not prove himself an honest and a faithful citizen and servant of his country.

In the last unfortunate war General Shields came forward unsolicited, presented himself to the President of the United States, and said, "Here am I to tender my services, whatever they may be, to my country." And history records his brave career on these fields.

And none less fervent were the words of a distinguished Senator from Missouri on the same occasion:

> The United States to-day is the only Government in existence that does not reward civilians as well as soldiers for distinguished services rendered to the Government, and reward them in ample and substantial form; and if General Shields, when living, had been a citizen of any nation in Europe, his breast would have glittered with the stars and emblems of his heroism. Coming from a nationality which has been unfortunate enough to pour out its blood like water in defense of every country except their own, there is not an Irish heart in these free United States that will not beat in gratitude to this Congress for this sincere evidence of their appreciation of the services of their heroic countryman, for, sir, he was a knight without fear and without reproach.

Now, sir, let us purchase these inestimable souvenirs of this great soldier and statesman. Let us while we may secure these magnificent reminders, as we have those of other great defenders of our country. Let them be deposited on permanent exhibit in our National Museum, that we, as well as those who shall come after us, may be reminded of the exalted esteem in which this remarkable man was held while he lived—a man who achieved the unprecedented distinction of having been the elected Senator of three great States of this Union, and who won splendid renown on the battle-fields of two great wars. His wonderful popularity among the people wherever he dwelt, his power and ability and purity of character will long be remembered. Though he died poor, yet he has left to his country a rich legacy which will survive to inspire other generations long after the Parian marble which commemorates others shall have crumbled into dust. [Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER. Until a few moments since I did not know that this matter was to be taken up so early in the session. But, sir, having known the distinguished hero of three wars, the statesman of three States, I could not let this occasion pass without expressing my admiration for the man who was citizened by adoption, bringing with him all the warmth, the zeal, the patriotism of his native isle, the man to whom the union of the States and the Constitution of his adopted country were the Ark of the Covenant; the man, sir, who followed the Stars and Stripes, the emblem of liberty and union, whether on Mexican soil or in the late war of the rebellion, as the children of Israel followed the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night through the wilderness. His, sir, was a patriotism and a courage that knew no such thing as questioning. He went where duty called. He had the courage of a Marshal Ney, imbued with the earnest and devout patriotism of an Arnold Winkelried. And, sir, I am pleased that a grateful country remembers the acts, the deeds, the trials, the sufferings, of one of its soldiers as we, Representatives of the Union, are doing to-day.

Nothing that we can do or say can add to or take from the reputation of General Shields. His memory is enshrined in the hearts of his countrymen. We can add to, we can relieve the sufferings of his widow and his orphans. Sir I, for one, believe that the best tribute we can pay to the American soldier is to remember in the days of their adversity his widow and orphans; not by words—words that are the mere children of the wind—but by deeds, deeds of justice and of charity, deeds that are the daughters of the soul; and, sir, when to-day we appropriate $10,000 for the purchase of these swords that were given to him as evidence of his gallantry and patriotism, it is not to aid him, but to teach to the young men and maidens of this country and to teach our children who shall succeed us the lesson of duty and patriotism. It teaches that loyalty is a virtue. He was a heroic figure in history. He came to this country as a teacher. He accomplished his mission. The lesson his life taught the young men of America was:

> Write on your doors the saying wise and old:
> "Be bold, be bold, and everywhere be bold;
> Be not too bold;" yet better the excess
> Than the defect, better the more than less;
> Better, like Hector, on the field to die,
> Than, like a perfumed Paris, turn and fly.

It is well to recognize acts of patriotism, acts of devotion to the country; and I trust I may say on this occasion, when party does not obtrude, that this nation should never forget her debt, her duty, to the hundreds of thousands of brave men who shouldered the musket and fought with all the valor and courage of General Shields, the men who rendered his illustrious career, and even this Congress, possible. May the day never come when the children or widows of one of the least of these shall be seen begging bread within the confines of the American Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. General Shields was a brave soldier and proved his devotion to his adopted country by the liberal shedding of his blood in more wars than one. No one honors his memory more than myself.

But, sir, what is the proposition before the House? It is to appropriate and pay $10,000 out of the Treasury for two swords which he left at his death. It is alleged as one reason for it that these swords can not be divided among his widow and children. Why, sir, could they not be sold for division as other property under the laws of the State of Missouri, where he resided at the time of his death?

It is also stated in the report of the committee, as an additional reason for the purchase of the swords, that his family are poor and needy. That is the excuse. It is in my judgment a mere pretext for that which is simply a gratuity to his family. I do not believe that we can rightfully exercise the power of appropriation in any such manner as this. And, sir, while my feelings are as kind towards the family of General Shields as those of any gentleman in this House, I am not prepared to vote contrary to what I believe to be my duty under my oath of office and according to the constitutional power of Congress to appropriate the money of the people. Such legislation as this is an abuse of the power of appropriation conferred upon Congress, and I will not vote for it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to reiterate the view presented by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES]. In my judgment there are thousands of people in this country, the widows and orphans of meritorious citizens, who perhaps have not ascended as high in fame as General Shields, but who have equal claims upon the bounty of the Government. So far as the widow and children of General Shields are concerned, they have my deep sympathy. So far as the fame of General Shields is concerned, no one places a higher estimate upon it than I do. But when it comes to making a gift by this Congress of money taken from the Treasury of the people—for that is what this bill proposes—I simply desire to enter my protest against it upon general principles, waiving the constitutional point, although I do not believe that this House has the constitutional power to do any such thing as that which is proposed by this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the career of General Shields illustrates one of the grandest features of our form of Government. Born in a foreign land, under a foreign flag, the subject of a foreign power, he emigrated to the United States and became a citizen thereof, and afterwards, by his own efforts, by his own ability, by his patriotism and devotion to his adopted country, he achieved the highest honors that can be given to an American citizen, except the Presidency of the United States. The proposition before the House to purchase the swords that were presented to him by the States of South Carolina and Illinois for gallant and meritorious services to his country, is not a measure to give a gratuity to his family or to indulge in unconstitutional legislation for their benefit. It is but a tribute, and a small one at that, which this country pays to one of the noblest men that have adorned our history. We voted $250,000 in the centennial year of our existence as a nation to complete the great monument to George Washington which now rises on the banks of the Potomac and pierces the clouds with its summit. Was it for its utility or commercial value that that monument was erected? Not at all. It was the tribute of a grateful nation to the Father of his Country. So in this case it is not the intrinsic value of these swords that is in question.

The bill to purchase them and deposit them in the national archives is a proposition to pay a tribute to General Shields's character, to his worth, his patriotism, his devotion to his country. There they will remain as long as our Government endures, as indices pointing to the pages of our history where the illustrious deeds of General Shields are recorded.

General Shields was no ordinary man. He served with distinguished honor in three wars. He represented three great States of this Union in the other end of this Capitol. He sat on the supreme bench of the great State of Illinois. And in every situation in which he was placed, throughout his long career, he illustrated the virtues of a noble citizen, of a great statesman, and of a brave and gallant soldier.

I am, therefore, in favor of purchasing these swords and depositing them in the national archives as a tribute, however slight it may be, to the virtues and memory of one of the most remarkable men who have adorned our history. No State can claim him as her own. Illinois can not appropriate him. Nor can Missouri or Minnesota, or the far-off Oregon, of which he was once governor. His name and fame belong to the whole Union. He poured out his life's blood in defense of his adopted country, he gave his great ability as jurist and statesman to the whole nation. As long as our Government shall endure, the people who will come after us will cherish the deeds and honor the name of James Shields, the hero of three wars, the Senator of three States, the man without fear and without reproach!

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, when I entered this Hall and saw those swords lying on the Speaker's desk, I could not resist the suggestion of a friend that I should say a word on this occasion. Like most of mankind, I admire brave men and noble deeds.

I was but a small boy when the dispatches came announced the crossing of the Rio Grande by our army under Taylor, the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, the storming of Monterey, and the final great victory of that army at Buena Vista. These contests were the prelude to the great campaign, commencing at Vera Cruz, under Generals Scott and Shields; the battles of Cerro Gordo, Churubusco, Molino del Rey, Chapultepec, and the final triumph of our arms in the capture of the city of Mexico.

One of the bravest actors in those conflicts was the Irish-American, General Shields, whose blood flowed freely on the field of Cerro Gordo, and who almost gave his life while leading the assault upon the battlements of Chapultepec.

The famous Palmetto regiment formed part of the command of this distinguished soldier, and it was both creditable and fitting that the State of South Carolina should attest her appreciation of his merits by so beautiful and appropriate a legislative tribute. It was creditable to the people of Illinois that they, in the same spirit, gave evidence of their recognition of the chivalry and courage of their adopted son, who came from far-off Ireland to make his home among them.

I love to contemplate the deeds of that brave people. Can any one say that Irishmen ever faltered in the discharge of any soldierly duty? Always at the front of battle—always ready to undergo fatigue, privation, and suffering with a fortitude bordering on cheerfulness, and ever ready to espouse any cause which appeals to their generous sympathy.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the children of the Emerald Isle have ever done their full duty in the field, and their valor has augmented the power and increased the glory of every nation fortunate enough to number them among its soldiers, and added luster to the arms of every martial people of whom modern history makes mention.

Mr. Speaker, can the Representatives of the people General Shields served so well do less than accept the custody of these trophies, proposed to be intrusted to their keeping by the widow and daughters of this soldier?

They do not ask a bounty from the Government. No such proposition can be found in the resolution, but simply that these ladies be paid the actual value of the gold and precious stones with which their cherished mementoes are adorned.

Let me ask those inclined to oppose this measure, should we do less? Would they have us accept them, and pay nothing whatever, or would they have us reject the proffered honor altogether? For it is an honor that forty-one years subsequent to the time of the glorious achievements on the plains of Mexico these swords should be tendered for our acceptance.

It is our duty to do all we can to commemorate the brave deeds of those who fought for the honor of our country. Without this spirit no people have ever become great. This spirit was sedulously inculcated in the minds of the people in early history. We all applaud the lofty sentiment:

> Said Spartan mother to her son,
> And pointing to his shield,
> "Come with it when the battle 's done,
> Or on it from the field."

Who, upon this floor, or in all this broad land, would have our American mothers feel otherwise when the honor of our country is imperiled? And how is this spirit to be engendered and fostered if the actions of their representatives upon this floor shall seem to justify the fear that the memory of their sons who have bled for their country shall not be honored and revered?

It is our duty to encourage the youth of our land to emulate the example of our great men. For this purpose all nations erect monuments to their famous soldiers and distinguished statesmen. Let these swords be our memorial monument to the character and courage of General Shields. [Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, when the life, character, and military history of James Shields are to be considered in the American Congress and before the people of this country, it is appropriate that the voice of Missouri should be heard, not once only, but again, and not from one party only, but from both.

There is but one parallel, so far as I know, to the history of this distinguished man; and that entitles him to be denominated the "Irish Lafayette." At an early day that inextinguishable love of liberty which characterized his future life drove him from the country of his nativity; and like that superb Frenchman to whom I have alluded, he served his adopted country, not in peace alone, but in war; not in one war only, but in three. In every capacity which can characterize a man he was not only great, but good. And, sir, he had that civic and military courage which is not surpassed in the world—the courage of the Irishman combined with the Irish-American's steady fidelity to every trust.

Born abroad, he represented in the Congress of the United States at three different periods three different States; and at last (and this makes it peculiarly appropriate that Missouri should speak to-day) his worn-out, mutilated, and racked body rests upon the soil of our State like a hero on his unsurrendered shield.

Mr. Speaker, well may the people of the Old World say, and well may that country from whose dominion he fled say, as did once an English king, when he found a body of Irish soldiers fighting upon the soil of France, and stretched in death as they had stood in battle, "Cursed be the laws that deprive me of such subjects!" And blessed are we, blessed are the Irish people, that the freedom of the air of America and the character of its institutions have enabled Irishmen to demonstrate, in spite of the perpetual libel of the English rule, that among the peoples of the world they have as great capacity as any for self-government.

Mr. Speaker, what are those trinkets worth that lie upon the desk? Can honor be valued; can glory be appraised? If so, then they are worth millions of dollars; and they belong not to the heirs of James Shields, but to the people of the United States, as a part of the imperishable glory of their own history. It is due to the Government that it should have them, just as it should have, if it still exists, that tattered ensign which was shot to pieces at the mast of the old ship Constitution. By the same right they are ours, because they are a part of our glory.

Mr. Speaker, in his old age James Shields was not rich. Men who love their country and who defend it with an eye single to its interests rarely are. But I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that as in the last few years of his life he was almost at the doors of want, his history should be held up hereafter, like that of blind old Belisarius, as an illustration of the coldness and indifference of his country. In that view, and that view alone, and seeing that these swords have a value beyond all appraisement as relics of a splendid part of our national history, I am in favor of the passage of this act. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW].

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why the Government of the United States can not buy articles to be made public memorials, and make provision for their preservation for the contemplation of future times. I perceive no objection to this Government's buying from distinguished men, or their families, those things of this kind which we desire, and which are of inestimable value to us as a great people.

I remember that in the days of his embarrassment and financial disaster this Government bought from Mr. Jefferson his private library, at a valuation placed upon it by persons appointed for that purpose, and it became the nucleus of our present Congressional Library. I remember that by public ceremonies in this House and the other House of Congress the sword of Washington and the staff of Franklin were presented to the Government and placed in a proper depository as memorials of two of the great men who assisted in founding this great Republic of ours.

Now, it is proposed that we shall purchase and pay for what we need, what we want, and what will be, in the true sense of the word, of value to this Government and to this people. You have in the War Department memorials stored up, and made provision by law for their protection. Battle-flags and other memorials are there. You had in the Patent Office (now in the National Museum) the military paraphernalia and clothing of General Washington. You have his swords here at the city of Washington for exhibition to the people of future times.

What difficulty is there now in obtaining similar memorials of General Shields—these swords presented to him by two great States of this Union? We do not desire that those swords shall be lost; that they shall go we know not where—possibly to strangers in some foreign land. We desire them to be placed amongst other memorials of our great wars and of the great men who have been distinguished in the history of our country.

What do we propose? We propose to pay the cost of these two swords—no speculation, but simply what they cost—and to preserve them in future for public exhibition, along with other memorials of like character.

I repeat, I perceive no difficulty in the way of voting to expend this small sum of money and for the object proposed, and, therefore, with clear judgment and heartfelt willingness, I shall vote "ay." [Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the hour has expired sooner than I expected. I propose now, if the House will allow me, to take a few minutes, not over ten or fifteen, and I ask unanimous consent for that purpose, when I propose to close this debate and ask for a vote.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to state my position on this subject before we get through with it.

Mr. TILLMAN. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. STEELE. One minute.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the gentleman will take two minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Take it now.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move by unanimous consent that the time be extended for twenty minutes, and that will accommodate both gentlemen.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana for three minutes.

Mr. PEEL. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to dispense this morning with the second hour for the consideration of bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to dispensing with the second hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, I object. I have some bills I wish to have considered.

Mr. PEEL. Then I ask, by unanimous consent, that the first morning hour be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing this morning with the call of committees for reports?

Mr. OATES. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the time as proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to twenty minutes?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I would not detract from the gallant reputation of General Shields. That he was a gallant and a brave soldier we all admit; but I would not have this House or country understand that the people have been derelict, or that Congress has been derelict, so far as the family of that brave soldier is concerned. His widow is provided with a pension of $100 a month, and after her death the pension is to go to the child until it has arrived at the age of eighteen years.

Those beautiful mementoes would be a graceful thing in the archives of the country, but I think it would be more grateful if this widow needs money the country should give it to her; and I will vote to give her whatever is necessary to make her comfortable, as I will for the widow of any soldier. I would therefore prefer, as I said in committee, that she be allowed to keep those mementoes of gallantry. For that reason I opposed the bill in committee. I am not going to make captious opposition, nor am I going to take up the time of the House for the purpose of explaining the reasons for my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped this bill would pass without a word of opposition from any quarter; and above all I hoped there would be at least no opposition from any Representative of any Southern State. It is a source of inexpressible mortification that I have been disappointed, and I must say in all candor that I feel a burning sense of indignation when any member could suggest on this floor that these historic mementoes should be put up at auction for division among the widow and children of the immortal soldier.

Sir, what do they represent? Is it so much cash, or is it inestimable sentiment, patriotism, ambition, gallantry—in short, most of the virtues that adorn the man or ennoble the citizen?

> The bravest are the tenderest,
> The loving are the daring.

By common consent of all parties and all sections of this great country, General Shields was a magnificent soldier, an eminent statesman, a patriot, and an honest man. After having held many offices and having enjoyed numerous opportunities to acquire competence and fortune by disreputable methods, if he had been mean enough to practice them, he always lived frugally and still died poor, leaving his wife and children only a small farm worth about three or four thousand dollars, as I am informed by good authority, but rich, very rich in the name, the fame, and the example that he left to his native and adopted country and to mankind. [Applause.]

However, if these Damascus blades, with jeweled hilt and golden scabbards, were put up at auction they would bring not much below the pittance this bill proposes to appropriate for them. Yes, sir; their real intrinsic commercial value, to say nothing of the priceless memories and associations that cluster around them, is nearly equal to the amount of the appropriation asked; and let me tell the gentleman from Alabama that had they been put up at auction there are thousands of men in the Southern States who would have bought and deposited them in some public museum rather than have permitted them to be displayed among the acquisitions of some ostentatious millionaire. [Applause.]

Yes, sir, the swords speak for themselves. [Holding them up.] They are no shams. They are made of genuine materials, and their workmanship is exquisite. I am reliably informed that the one presented by the State of Illinois cost $3,000, and I am sure that the one donated by South Carolina cost at least $5,000. The latter, in addition to having a rich gold scabbard, has a beautiful hilt inlaid with pearl and adorned with a diamond, a ruby, and an emerald, the last so appropriately emblematic of the hero's native Isle, the land of song, oratory, and valor. My own State, I am proud to say, never does anything of this sort by halves, and she was so grateful to General Shields for his fatherly care of the South Carolina regiment, which was a part of his brigade in the Mexican war, and had so much admiration for his gallantry that she purchased the best sword to present to him that money could buy. The inscription on the scabbard shows the sentiment with which it was presented:

> From the State of South Carolina to General Shields, in testimony of her admiration of his gallantry in the Mexican war, and as a tribute of gratitude for his parental attention to the Palmetto regiment.

Sir, what man in modern times has demonstrated to the world that he was both a soldier and a statesman equal to General Shields? Although he landed here a poor friendless Irish boy, he became the hero of three wars. Three times was he desperately wounded leading his men, his favorite command being "Come on," not "Go on," and he was elected—not appointed—elected United States Senator from three different States of this grand Union, Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri, by the free ballot of the people.

Many men in our own era and in the long vista of the past have proved themselves to be able warriors or able statesmen; but it is a very rare thing to find united in the same individual equal aptitude for both civil and military life. It is of such stuff as this that only Hannibals, Cæsars, and Napoleons are made; and General Shields's career as a military chieftain and as a Senator from three great States by choice of the Legislatures of the people stands without a parallel in the history of this country or of any other country in ancient or modern times.

Just here I know I will be excused for mentioning a striking and touching incident in General Shields's life that admirably illustrates the honesty, simplicity, and manliness of his character. I was told of it yesterday by General John B. Clark, the efficient Clerk of this House, who, as you all know, was both a gallant officer in the Confederate army and for many years a member of this body from the State of Missouri.

While serving in Congress, General Clark informs me that he had General Shields for a constituent, and that on one occasion, while canvassing his district, he visited the little farm of the old soldier-statesman and found him in the field, barefooted, plowing a mule to earn bread for himself and family. Can that scene be matched since the days of Cincinnatus? An ex-auditor and ex-supreme court judge of the empire State of Illinois, an ex-governor of Oregon, ex-Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, ex-United States Senator at that time from two States and ex-major-general of the United States Army in two wars, barefooted, plowing corn, to preserve his independence and self-respect. What a theme for a painter, and what remarkable character, manners, tact, eloquence, ability, and even learning, the man must have possessed to succeed so well in everything he undertook except money-making! In fact he must have been a born Democrat and a genuine friend of the people to please them so uniformly.

Pardon me, sir, for asking, is there nothing in the thought that when all these facts and these associations shall be recalled to the mind of the youth of this land hereafter they will not tend to create a spirit of emulation? Is it nothing that these reminders should be in the National Museum or the War Department, where the boys who are to come after us may see them, and where the foreigners who shall land upon our shores poor and friendless, as Shields himself once was, may have his model to copy?

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] says he can find no warrant in the Constitution for the purchase of these swords. Where did the warrant in the Constitution come from that paid for the pictures of Washington and Lafayette which flank the Speaker's chair? Where did the warrant in the Constitution come from to erect monuments to the gallant dead of the late war, and of all our wars, if it be not inherent in every constitution of a free people to develop the best qualities of head and heart in the rising generation by having a country with a history and splendid examples to follow? [Applause.]

Besides, what more specific authority is needed than the clauses which empower Congress to raise and support armies and to levy taxes, to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare? In what better way could Congress appropriate $10,000 to raise an army and provide for the common defense than by purchasing these swords and depositing them in the nation's Museum at the capital?

Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that I have not more time, but I will not trespass upon the patience of the House by asking an extension. One other thought and I am done, which is, that while General Shields fought in Mexico for the whole Union, and was the idol, I may say, of the Southern States in that war, and while our people admired and felt grateful to him, for the reasons recorded on the scabbard of the sword presented to him by South Carolina, yet, sir, although he afterwards in the unfortunate civil war fought for the same American flag, and against the South, I think I can truly say there is not a corporal's guard beyond the Potomac who feel any ill-will towards his memory for the course he took in that unfortunate fratricidal strife. [Applause.]

I know, speaking for my own State, I can declare we were too sincere in our convictions of duty as we saw it to doubt the sincerity of General Shields's convictions in fighting on the side he deemed right, and whenever men are willing to be shot at and take the chances of losing their lives for their convictions, their sincerity should command not only the respect but the charity of every honest man, even if they should be in the wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to me a minute?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will if my time has not expired.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This bill is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, on which I have the honor to serve. I am in favor of the passage of the bill, but when looking it over I find an expression in it that I did not observe when it went through the committee, and I think a very slight verbal amendment would remove some ambiguity and improve the frame of the bill. The bill provides—

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase of said widow and children said swords at their actual cost and value.

I submit that language creates an ambiguity whether they are to be bought at their cost or at their value. I suggest striking out the words "and value."

Mr. TILLMAN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman from South Carolina accepting the amendment, that is all I desire.

Mr. WARNER. Let me suggest if it might not be better to strike out the provision as to "cost and value" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think it better that the provision should remain for the purchase of the swords at their cost.

The amendment offered by Mr. CUTCHEON was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I now call the previous question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Before the previous question is called I ask the gentleman from South Carolina if the bill is not slightly ambiguous in its closing words as to the disposition of these trophies. It says:

When so purchased the same to be deposited with the other military archives of the nation.

Is that phraseology well understood? What disposition will be made of these swords under the bill?

All the gentlemen who have spoken have referred to the importance of the purchase of these relics and their ownership by the Government as pointing to an example of illustrious patriotism and giving an incitement to the emulation of future generations. It strikes me this bill is slightly vague in its provision in the closing lines, so as to leave some doubt as to whether these trophies shall be placed in a position where they can be seen by the people.

Mr. TILLMAN. In reply to the gentleman from Maine I will say this bill was drawn by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR], and was reported back to the House by the Military Committee without amendment. We thought it was very modest in the price it fixed, and we also thought that the provision leaving the whole matter in the hands of the Secretary of War was ample protection for the Government to dispose of these mementoes properly. I presume they will be deposited either in the National Museum or in the War Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Secretary of War in a recent communication to the House has stated that the lack of legislation or of instructions by Congress as to the disposition of certain relics and trophies has prevented the War Department from making any such disposition of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am ready to accept any amendment which may be suggested by the gentleman from Maine to accomplish his object, and will thank him to suggest one. It occurs to me the National Museum would be the appropriate place.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not particular about the place, but I would suggest some such amendment as this. Let the last clause of the bill be so amended as to read:

When so purchased the same to be deposited and publicly displayed, with the other military archives of the nation, in some appropriate place at the national seat of Government.

I am willing to leave the selection with the Secretary of War.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should prefer it, if the gentleman would suggest in his amendment the National Museum. That seems to me the most appropriate place.

Mr. DORSEY. That is right.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would prefer not to specify the place, for I do not like to dictate the selection. My only object is to provide that they shall be displayed, as was provided by the original law of 1814 in regard to matters of this kind, at some place to be designated by the President and the Secretary of War.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the amendment be reported.

The amendment was read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] one other question; what other trophies or archives he has reference to in the amendment he has offered and in the explanation he has made?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I asked the question as to what was referred to in the bill in relation to that.

Mr. McMILLIN. Some are in one place, some in another. They are not all together. It may be convenient to put these in one place. Is it designed to collect them all in one place and make a public exhibit?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The amendment does not require that they shall all be displayed in the same place.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does this seek to control the display of other mementoes or archives of the war than the two swords?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I had nothing to do with preparing the proposition providing for this purchase. I do not favor the purchase I am simply amending the wording of the original bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Your only object, I understand, is to control these swords as to where they shall be placed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. To perfect the reading of this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. But is your only object to control the location of these swords?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will be kind enough to make a distinct statement of what he wants to know from me, I will try to answer him.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to know what object you wish to accomplish by your amendment?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will endeavor to inform the gentleman very simply. I took up this bill a few minutes ago; I did not frame the bill; I did not originate it, and I know nothing about it. I find, however, that it says, in effect, that the Secretary of War, after the purchase of these swords, shall deposit them with the other military archives of the nation. Now, I do not pretend to say what those are; I do not know; I have no idea what was intended by the wording of that portion of the bill. I presume something was meant; but I suggested that it left the matter vague, that there was no provision that these swords should be placed anywhere for public inspection; and inasmuch as the Secretary of War has stated in a recent report that the want of legislation of that character has prevented him, or prevented the War Department, for many years from making any public disposition or display of articles which may come under the general classification of "military archives," I suggested that if these relics were to be purchased for the purpose of being exhibited to the people, we had better provide for that in the bill. For that reason I suggested such additional words, by way of amendment, as would accomplish precisely that result. So far as the other words that are left in the bill are concerned I have no responsibility for them and no intention in connection with them.

Mr. McMILLIN. But you spoke of the fact that a report has been made from the War Department stating that there is an absence of legislation concerning the public exhibition of the other archives referred to. Now, is it your object to accomplish anything with reference to those other military archives beyond these particular swords? I suspect that is the object, and opposed it.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I think this whole difficulty may be composed by a suggestion in the nature of an amendment providing that these swords be placed on permanent exhibition in the National Museum.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I move that amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposed substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, after the word "nation," insert "in some public place at the National Museum."

The substitute offered by Mr. BAKER, of New York, was agreed to.

Mr. MANSUR. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 50, by striking out the words "actual cost not to exceed," leaving the amount $10,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not insist on that.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I hope that will be withdrawn. It never has been before the committee.

Mr. MANSUR. Well, let the amendment stand, but change the word "ten" to "eight," making $8,000, which is the actual amount the two Legislatures paid for the swords.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no. Withdraw your amendment.

Mr. MANSUR. Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I now move the previous question on the bill as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, one-fifth not voting in favor thereof.

The bill as amended was then passed.

Mr. TILLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS, IOWA.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] rises to present a report.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask that the report and bill which I now present as a privileged matter be printed and recommitted to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURNES. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to object to the reception of this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has taken the floor to present a privileged report. The question of order is raised whether this report is privileged or not. The Chair can entertain but one question of this sort at one time.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the reception of this report as a privileged report, and raise the point that it is not privileged, that the bill does not come under the rule under which it is sought to be brought back to the House. I submit that this report must take the ordinary course adopted with reference to other bills reported; that it has no right of precedence over any other business of the House. I will present my views upon this question now, or will first hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. I shall be glad to hear, before I proceed, the reasons which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] has to submit.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I believe that previous to the Forty-ninth Congress the Committee on Public Lands had no special privilege or priority as to right of way in this House. In that Congress the rule was adopted, which still obtains, that in three specified cases this committee should have the right to treat its bills and reports as privileged matters. The whole authority of that committee touching this point is contained in these lines which I read from clause 49 of Rule XI:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on the Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the preservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

Unless the bill here presented comes within some one of these three classes it has no business here as a privileged matter. The bill presented consists of about three pages—one page of preamble and two sections. The preamble starts out:

Whereas it is alleged.

It does not say by whom; it does not say decided by a court; it does not say it has ever been held by any responsible party, but somebody "alleges" that certain lands lying upon the Des Moines River——

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman will permit me to say that the preamble is not reported. The bill as amended by the committee omits the preamble; it has been stricken out. I know the gentleman desires to be correct.

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. Hence I interrupt him to make this statement.

Mr. PARKER. I commend the taste of the committee in dropping that part of the bill. I come, then, to the two sections of the bill. One of them decides or assumes to decide that the lands in question—

Are hereby declared to be public lands of the United States.

It then goes on to refer to transactions with the State of Iowa, and in practical effect designates the parties affected by the measure as squatters or persons merely in possession. It is then provided that the title of claimants shall be confirmed; that is, when they do not conflict with the rights of these squatters who are in possession. Then comes the second section of the bill, which is the main portion of it:

It is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within three years after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto; and until such suits shall be determined, and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open for settlement or sale except as hereinbefore provided.

Then comes the point of the bill:

And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

This is the gist of the bill as I have read it. Now, I submit that this measure can not by any construction come under the first clause of the rule I have read; for no man, I think, will be so rash as to assert that this is a bill for the forfeiture of land grants to railroads or other corporations. Does the gentleman from Illinois claim that it comes under that clause of the rule?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir.

Mr. PARKER. Then that is disposed of. I ask, in the second place, is this a bill for "preventing speculations in the public lands?"

Mr. PAYSON. No.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman admits that it is not. Then we come to the last question—is this a bill providing "for the preservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers?" Unless it is a measure of this character, it has no business here.

Now, I ask attention to the rule which obtains in all matters of legal construction, that where a bill undertakes to be of a certain character, the whole bill must be of that character. This is in analogy to the law which obtains in most of the States, that in cases of assumption of control over personal property, cases of conversion and the like, a body execution may issue; but it has been held, and I think without error, that if any portion of the subject-matter of the litigation, merged in the judgment, is matter of contract and not of conversion, then no body execution can be issued.

Again, suppose the gentleman from Illinois, or any other member, should introduce here a bill for the erection of a public building and in it should assert that the land to be appropriated for that purpose is, in the language of this bill, "hereby declared public lands of the United States," would that give the member the right to "railroad" his bill through the House under the rule to which I have referred? But that is what is sought here. Therefore, I say, unless the whole bill is inside this section of the rule the whole bill is outside of it, and has no business of priority.

This second section does not provide for reservation of land for actual settlers. It provides for lawsuits. It provides for litigation. It gives men, mere possessors of land, a standing in court.

That is what the bill is for, and every man knows it. It has been decided over and over again these parties have no standing in court; and the present head of the Department of Justice of the United States, when in the Senate, made a report presenting these facts:

By repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States all the lands thus certified to Iowa inured to the benefit of this company under the acts of Congress above quoted, of March 2, 1861, and July 12, 1862. This court decided, May 13, 1867, in the Wolcott case (5 Wallace, 681), that the reservation made by the Secretary of the Interior in October, 1851, was made under competent authority vested in the Department. It results that the settlers could found no valid claims upon the land by settlement and cultivation after that withdrawal was made.

He says further:

Since the acts of 1861 and 1862 were passed by Congress, the rulings of the Supreme Court have been uniform that all the lands embraced in this controversy belonged to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company.

Notwithstanding the opening of the land offices in 1868, by the direction of the Secretary, to the entry of these lands as Government lands, it seems to the committee that the settlers were put upon their guard, not only by the decision in the Wolcott case, but the injunctions granted by the circuit court, that there was a question as to their rights to enter the lands. They chose to take the risk, and the ultimate decision proves they acquired no title. From the very start there was a cloud of doubt. They can not in face of these facts be regarded as innocent purchasers.

Again, the President of the United States, in vetoing just the same bill a year ago, referred to these very lands:

This bill declares that certain lands which, nearly twenty-four years ago, the United States entirely relinquished are still public lands, and directs the Attorney-General to begin suits to assert and protect the title of the United States in such lands.

If it be true that these are public lands, the declaration that they are so by enactment is entirely unnecessary; and if they are wrongfully withheld from the Government, the duty and authority of the Attorney-General are not aided by the proposed legislation. If they are not public lands because the United States have conveyed them to others, the bill is subject to grave objections as an attempt to destroy vested rights and disturb interests which have long since become fixed.

Therefore it has been held by very general authority that the people whom it is sought to put into court have no standing, and against this and to avoid a struggle they argue Congress should give them a new position and standing in court.

Therefore this second section is the core of the bill. And it is intended by the committee to give mere squatters, mere men in possession, men who claim title without color, to give them standing in court, to litigate against this decision, and to claim in court they have some rights the courts have disposed of. Therefore this bill is not for the reservation of public lands for the benefit of settlers, but for the purpose of creating litigation by the United States and joining in and connecting with that litigation any individuals on this land, and thus placing them in court by legislation when they can not otherwise get there. It is against the effort made to railroad this bill through this House I submit these remarks. If we are to have special laws, let it be for wise and proper purposes.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, on the proposition asserted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] there is a disposition on the part of the Committee on Public Lands or any member of the committee to railroad this bill through the House, such a statement is entirely unwarranted by the present parliamentary position of this case. The only question presented is whether or not as a matter of privilege this report may be received and ordered to be printed at this time and the bill recommitted.

Now, I assert, Mr. Speaker, this bill not only comes within the spirit of the rule but within its exact letter, and I can not make a statement more positive than that.

The bill as presented by the Committee on Public Lands comes within the letter of the rule. What is that? On page 245 of the edition of the Rules of the Forty-ninth Congress, Rule XI, is this expression:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated—

After citing other committees—

The Committee on the Public Lands shall have the right to report at any time bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

That, sir, is this bill, and precisely what it purports to do.

The germ of this bill is not the second section of the bill, as the gentleman asserts, but that section which provides the lands improperly certified to the State of Iowa in 1847 or 1848 for the benefit of a certain improvement there shall be declared to be public lands. There is the affirmative proposition in this bill, and it is the germ of this legislation. It is the proposition on which the subsequent proposition of this bill was applied, and to which the subsequent proposition in the bill will relate.

It is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, to go into any question as to who may or may not be ultimately benefited by the passage of the bill, whether or not men who are American citizens and on these lands and who claim rights under the public-land laws against the claim of the corporation the membership of which is largely in the district represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] or not. It is enough for the purpose of this House, so far as this point is concerned, that the Committee on Public Lands reported here a bill which declares about 200,000 acres of land exist in the State of Iowa about which there is a dispute as to its legal status as public land, and subject to homestead and pre-emption entry.

The Speaker can not go behind the report of the committee, as asserted here, and ask the judgment of the House to determine the question whether or not upon some decision of the Supreme Court of the United States or some inferior tribunal, relief may be or may not be granted if the bill passes. You are bound to assume that the report from a committee of the House asserting a given state of facts to be so, and then providing legislation for it, means what it says. If the Committee on the Public Lands assert here by substantially a unanimous vote that these lands to which this bill refers are public lands and are subject to settlement and disposition under the general land laws as other public lands are, then under the letter—not only under the spirit, but under the exact letter of the rule—the Speaker of the House finds it is privileged and should be received by the House at any time.

But, Mr. Speaker, this matter was construed in the last Congress. Substantially this bill was presented and reported as a privileged matter, and was considered as a privileged matter. A Senate bill identical with it came over here and in the House was substituted for the bill, as privileged, in the Forty-ninth Congress; and a bill of a similar character, prohibiting unlawful inclosures of the public lands for the benefit of those who sought to acquire homes upon them, was presented as privileged under the rules of the House in the last Congress. Mr. Speaker CARLISLE decided, in construing this very question—that is to say, the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual settlers—decided, as will be found by reference to page 1806 of the Journal of 1883, when Mr. Henley made the point of order, that the bill was not privileged under the rule. The Journal goes on to state:

After debate on said point of order, the Speaker overruled the same on the ground that the said bill, having for its object the removal of existing obstructions, or the prevention of all obstructions in the future, and enabling people to secure possession and occupancy of the public lands by persons who desire to acquire title under the homestead or pre-emption laws, came within the terms of said resolution and was in order for present consideration.

Now, sir, the point made by the gentleman from New York is that there is a subsequent section of the bill that provides how litigation under it may be instituted, prosecuted, and consummated. But that cuts no figure, for it is subsidiary and subordinate to the main proposition, which declares a certain area of the public lands to be open for pre-emption and homestead settlers, and protects the rights and interests of all those in occupancy thereon under the general land laws of the country.

Mr. PETERS. The rest is a mere matter of detail.

Mr. PAYSON. As suggested by the gentleman from Kansas, it is only a matter of detail and regulation for the ascertainment and consummation of the rights afterwards; and it is only the respect I have for the gentleman from New York which impels me to consume any of the time of the House in the presentation of any suggestions upon a proposition which it seems to me is so plain that it ought to go without saying.

That is all I desire to say.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I only intend to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the Speaker of the House had ruled upon this proposition or upon these propositions. As I understand it, there is no ruling produced where this matter has been considered by the Speaker, nor where he has intended to decide the question as one raised and presented to him under the rules. The case from which the gentleman read does not relate to this land, or to this bill, or a similar proposition, even, as I understand it. It has reference to an entirely different matter in which was used some language by the Speaker that might be applied to this case if it were applicable to it, but it is not.

As to his ruling upon the question now before the House, that was never presented, except informally, and was passed without argument or consideration. The bill was brought up, accidentally of course, at a time when I was not in the House. When I came in the gentleman was making an argument or a speech upon the subject, and that was the first information I had, or the first opportunity of knowing that the business was being proceeded with, taking advantage of this clause of the rule; and it was not presented to Speaker CARLISLE nor argued before him, or assumed to be decided, or the question considered by him.

I do not wish to take further time upon the subject except to reiterate that unless the whole of this bill comes within the rule none of it does. After the gentleman's practical admission that the second section, unless it can be construed in, is outside of the rule, I do not think it necessary to argue the question further than to say that the whole bill is necessarily outside of the rule, any part of it being so.

Mr. WHEELER Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is mistaken in his assertion that this was a unanimous report from the Committee on the Public Lands; and I think he is also in error in assuming that when a report comes from a committee, even though it be unanimous, that the Speaker must take it for granted that the judgment of the committee is correct as to the character of the question which is presented by the report.

The only ground upon which these gentlemen seek to have this treated as a privileged question is to be found in the language of Rule XLIX, the paragraphs referring to bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers. So much of this rule as effects the question being considered, is in these words:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely * * * the Committee on Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

The bill now sought to be reported as a privileged one virtually admits in its preamble that this land is occupied by persons who have no right to it under the law as it stands and as construed by the decisions of the Supreme Court.

This bill proposes to change the law so as to give these settlers new rights. It says:

That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within three years after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper.

The bill also provides that—in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits, may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

Certainly no one will insist that these provisions have any connection with the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers. It is because the settlers are not bona fide that these suits are proposed to be instituted.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is, I think, in error in supposing that this bill, or one similar to it, has been submitted to the ruling of the Speaker of this House. It is true the same bill was acted upon in the Forty-ninth Congress, and it is true the bill was then treated as a privileged question, but I have the records before me and they clearly show that no point was made upon which a ruling by the Speaker was necessary or possible.

It appears on page 1405 that the report was presented to the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] on February 13, 1886, and on page 1745 and following it seems the bill was considered and passed on February 24, but nowhere can I find the question raised as to the privileged character of the bill.

The question now submitted to the Chair for decision is, therefore, a new one in every aspect, and without any direct precedent.

I do not think the decision read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] from page 1806 of the Journal of the Forty-eighth Congress is analogous.

The Chair very properly overruled the point made by the gentleman from California, Mr. Henley.

The bill was to prevent un'awful occupancy of public lands, and the removal of existing obstructions was germane and necessary to the purposes of the bill.

The Speaker also properly overruled the point made by the same gentleman upon the bill to amend the act relating to Alabama lands, because that act had in view the facilitation of the acquisition of homes by the people by securing land from the Government.

I assert, Mr. Speaker, that it would be very dangerous to establish a precedent that would enable a member of this House, or a committee, to make a bill privileged by incorporating in the bill privileged matter.

Should a bill for a public building be made privileged by incorporating in the bill a proviso that the land to be acquired for its site should be reserved for actual settlers, or that certain railroad grant land should be forfeited, and that a court-house should be erected thereon, or that certain land should be set apart for preventing speculating in the said public land, and that a building be erected upon it, such abuses of the rule would be so manifest that they would not be attempted. The part of the bill providing for a public building is not necessary to the forfeiture of land, nor would it be necessary to prevent speculating in public land. It would not be germane.

The rulings of the Chair upon motions to amend resolutions of inquiry are quite analogous to the question now before the House. To one of the latest of such rulings I beg to call attention.

On February 13, 1885, Mr. OATES submitted an amendment to a resolution of inquiry which was in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. Keifer made a point that the amendment was not in order.

The Speaker pro tempore sustained the said point of order, on the ground that a privileged question or motion could not be amended by adding thereto matter not privileged or germane to the original resolution.

Other questions, somewhat analogous, are those where a certain reference of bills is insisted upon because they contain some provisions which seem to jvstify the demand. For instance, in the Forty-ninth Congress, February 9, 1887, Mr. CUTCHEON made the point of order that Senate bill 663 should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but the Speaker overruled the point of order, and held that the bill should, under the rules, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. On the same day, Mr. MCADOO made the point of order that Senate bill 662, to encourage the manufacture of steel for modern army ordnance, should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Speaker overruled this point also, and held that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Under the rules both of these bills properly belonged to the Committee on Appropriations, although it is true both of the bills had features in them which, if not coupled with other matter, would have made their reference to the Committee on Military Affairs a proper one. I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that the bill now being considered lost all its privileged character by the incorporation of provisions which are quite foreign to the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the liberty of interrupting the gentleman to state that he is ready to decide the point of order, having given some study to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to occupy a moment on the point of order

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit me to read a sentence from the Journal?

Journal 2, 48. A privileged question or motion can not be amended by adding thereto matter not privileged or germane to the original question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is aware of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The language of the bill is not ambiguous. It is evidently for the benefit of bona fide settlers. The only question is whether this bill in its proper acceptation is a bill for the reservation of the public lands for that purpose or not. I submit a careful examination of the bill demonstrates that fact beyond question. Whatever other questions are presented, this bill is still an effort to reserve the public lands for the benefit of homestead settlement and settlers. I think that is unquestionably the effect of the bill.

Mr. HOLMES. I desire to say a word on this matter in answer to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMES. I will speak to the point of order. The gentleman from New York assumes that this does not come under the rule. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has clearly shown the basis of the ground he has taken, and has shown by what appears on the face of the bill and preamble that it is a proper bill to reserve the rights of settlers and to protect the public lands against this corporation which has already robbed the United States of several hundred thousand acres of land.

Mr. WHEELER. I call the gentleman to order. He is not arguing the question of order.

Mr. HOLMES. I am coming to that in a moment. This company has taken this land without one dollar of compensation, and, owing to the fact that the land was reserved at one time by the Secretary of the Interior, these settlers have been held in the courts to be trespassers. This bill seeks to invest those settlers with the right the United States would have to defend; in other words, to raise the question whether the conditions of the grant have been complied with by the Des Moines River Navigation Company.

That is the question the bill seeks to open. It does not interfere with decisions of Congress in the past, but raises a new question which has never been before decided in the courts of the United States or any State.

The whole gist of the bill is in the first section. The rest only provides as to the manner of carrying it out. It says:

That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States.

The report made from the Committee on Public Lands by the gentleman from Illinois seeks to set apart these lands to the settlers; and I submit that the bill comes strictly within the provision of the rule that all bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers shall be privileged. The question of the decision of the court about which gentlemen have talked does not come up in this matter at all, and is not a pertinent question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, without desiring to cut gentlemen off, as the time of the House is precious, he is ready to make his decision now.

On February 13, 1886 (see Journal of the House, page 641), it is recorded that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], as a privileged question, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 640) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes—a bill very similar to this, lacking the preamble—reported the same without amendment, etc. The report was referred to the House Calendar and printed.

On page 740, February 24, 1886, the gentleman from Illinois, as a privileged question, reported the Senate bill No. 150, to quiet the title of settlers, etc., without amendment. The House proceeded to consider it, and passed it. It does not appear anywhere that the point of order was raised or that the Speaker ever considered it. In point of fact it was not raised either privately before Speaker CARLISLE or publicly in the House.

On examining the bill it would seem at first glance that it is a measure for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers, which, under Rule XI, forty-ninth paragraph, is made reportable at any time, and therefore privileged.

The word "reservation" has a technical sense, and is used by the Interior Department to signify all lands reserved from entry. But inasmuch as the lands proposed to be affected by this bill are said to be lands which revert to the public domain, they may in one view be considered in the situation of other public lands, and come within the spirit, if not the letter, of the rule. And if they were all involved the Chair would hold, inasmuch as the matter has been already before the House on a question of privilege, that he would not take it out of that relation.

But if the bill reported contains matter that is privileged under the rule, and, in addition, other propositions, the report can not be received as a privilege order.

For example, it has been repeatedly held that a report from the Committee on Printing, which is privileged if it be a measure for printing for the use of the two Houses of Congress, loses its privilege if, in addition to providing for printing for Congress, it also provides for printing for the use of heads of Departments, or for any other persons.

And by the second section of this bill there are provisions which are not privileged, as will be apparent on the face of the bill itself. It would not be a compliance with the rule as to reporting at any time, that unprivileged matter should accompany privileged matter.

In order to fall under the third clause of the rule, the bill must fairly provide "for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers," and nothing beyond. If any part of the bill falls outside of the rule, the whole bill lies outside of it.

An important portion of the bill is comprised in the second section thereof.

This section can not fairly or justly be said to be for the "reservation of the public lands" for settlers.

It is a provision authorizing litigation to be initiated by the Attorney-General, and to be joined in by persons who are merely in possession of the lands, or who merely make a claim of title to lands which, it has been stated upon high authority, belong to other parties.

It appears to give a standing in court for the purposes of litigation to the above-designated parties. The Attorney-General has authority to bring all proper actions by existing law. If this section is not for the purpose of giving private parties a standing in court, so that they may litigate under the circumstances stated, it is without any reasonable object; if it is for such purpose, the section does not come under the subdivision of the rule in question, and this fact carries the bill outside of the rule.

Therefore the Chair will be obliged to sustain the point of order without ruling on the merits of the bill in any way except this, that it is not privileged to come up at any time under the clause of the rule which has been cited by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to inquire of the Speaker whether he understands and concedes, in the opinion which he has just read, that the litigation which is proposed in the second section of the bill has reference only to such lands as are claimed by actual settlers under the general land law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the second section provides for litigation.

Mr. PAYSON. But purely with reference to public lands named in the first section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not within the meaning of this rule as a "reservation" of public lands. Inasmuch as this is rather a complicated question and one of importance, the Chair will be obliged to the gentleman if he will appeal from the decision of the Chair and take the judgment of the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not care to take an appeal, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair undertook to make a somewhat careful study of the question, and at the first glance it seemed that this was a privileged matter, but upon re-examining it the Chair came to the conclusion that it would be impossible to enforce the rule in other cases unless it were restricted as the Chair has undertaken to restrict it in this case.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, if the report is not received, I ask permission to present the views of the minority.

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill returned from the Senate (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and I move that the bill and amendments be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLASSIFICATION AND COMPENSATION OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. BLOUNT introduced a bill (H. R. 8267) to regulate the classification, compensation, and allowances of postmasters, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN RIGHTS IN SAMOA.

Mr. MORROW, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following privileged report:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 5, 1888.

Mr. MORROW submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, requested, if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the House all information in possession of the executive department, together with the correspondence between the Government of the United States and its consular or other agents at the Navigator's (Samoa) Islands touching public affairs at said islands; the seizure and deportation of the late King Maletoa, with whom this Government has entered into certain treaty stipulations, and the difficulties that have recently taken place concerning the government of said islands and the due administration of the law thereunder; and also such other correspondence as may have been had with European governments, and particularly with the Empire of Germany, respecting the government of those islands; and that the President inform the House what measures, if any, have been taken to protect the rights and property of American citizens located at said islands.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, having had under consideration the resolution asking the President for information concerning the condition of public affairs at Navigator's (Samoa) Islands, and what measures, if any, had been taken to protect the rights and property of American citizens located at said islands, report the same back with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

Mr. MORROW. In view of the fact that this resolution is one of inquiry only, I think no discussion will be required, and I therefore demand the previous question on its adoption.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MORROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8044) to change the time of the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. OATES. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. 7417) to amend section 3019 of the Revised Statutes, and to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

CLAIMS.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 6133) relating to certain claims; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHOICE OF POSTMASTERS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. OATES also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 3259) to enable the people to name their postmasters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this will be laid on the table.

Mr. GROUT. I ask that the bill be referred to the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made to laying the bill on the table, it will be referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. SENEY. I ask leave to file in writing the views of a minority of the Committee on the Judiciary upon House bill 1199, to define and regulate the jurisdiction of United States courts.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

FUNDING ACT OF JULY 14, 1870.

Mr. GLOVER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a recommendation that it lie on the table, House resolution for an investigation of the facts relating to the passage, engrossment, and enrollment of the funding act of July 14, 1870.

The resolution was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

TAXATION OF NOTES OF STATE BANKS.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 1816) to repeal all acts and parts of acts discriminating in taxation against the circulating notes of State banks and State banking associations; and

A bill (H. R. 6660) to repeal the taxation of 10 per cent. on notes of State banks used as circulation.

SECTION 566, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 6665) to amend section 566 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REAL ESTATE OWNERSHIP IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 4466) to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," etc., approved March 3, 1887; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. RAYNER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 3404) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill will be referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLOUNT. In reference to the report just made, I wish to say that under the rules of this House the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has jurisdiction of all legislation relating to the postal service, and the Commerce Committee has no jurisdiction over that class of questions. The bill now reported by my friend from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] is, I understand, a bill to establish a postal telegraph system. I wish to know at what time a question of order can be raised upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce in regard to this matter. The subject is now before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Georgia can reserve the right to raise that question, if he is entitled to raise it, at some future time—not during this hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I desire at this time to reserve whatever right the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads may have to question the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce over this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman from Georgia, when is it likely the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will report on this subject?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not answer that question of my friend from Pennsylvania any more than he could answer a similar question in regard to the various bills before his committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Can not the gentleman answer approximately?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not, because the different measures on the subject are being considered by subcommittees; and the general committee must wait, I presume, until those subcommittees report. Quite a number of bills on this general subject have been referred to our committee. As to when the subcommittees will report to the full committee, I can not answer.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an important subject——

Mr. BLOUNT. I know it is; and it is being considered by our committee.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask by unanimous consent for leave to present the views of the minority on the bill reported by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

STATE PILOTS.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1494) exempting American coastwise sailing vessels, piloted by their licensed masters or by a United States pilot, from the obligation to pay State pilots for services not rendered, and moved that it be laid on the table and the accompanying report be printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not make an appropriation or require one to be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is relief from pilotage.

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not affect the general question at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be referred to the House Calendar, and the report will be ordered to be printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask leave to present the views of the minority, and that they be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PRINTING.

Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back a resolution to print a second edition of the special report upon insects affecting the orange crop; and also a resolution to print a special report on white scale and other insects; which were referred to the Committee on Printing.

INDIAN CRIMINALS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3383) to amend section 9 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department," etc., approved March 3, 1885; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NASHUA, N. H.

Mr. SOWDEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. 4274) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. 8268) for the erection of a public building at Nashua, N. H.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ANNAPOLIS, MD.

Mr. SOWDEN also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. 6644) for the erection of a public building in the city of Annapolis, Md.; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. 8269) for the erection of a public building at Annapolis, Md.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 3566) for the relief of Catherine O'Malley; and

A bill (H. R. 3570) for the relief of Mary Kaylor.

EDWARD DURANT.

Mr. LANE also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (S. 765) granting an increase of pension to Edward Durant; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILHELMINA KUHLMAN.

Mr. PIDCOCK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4845) granting a pension to Wilhelmina Kuhlman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NOAH S. CRAMER.

Mr. PIDCOCK also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5237) granting a pension to Noah S. Cramer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

M. V. B. SUTTON.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5144) for the relief of M. V. B. Sutton, late postmaster at Williamsburgh, Ky.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TERRITORY OF WYOMING.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, this morning, during the call of committees for reports, I reported, under the instructions of the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill (H. R. 4456) granting certain lands to the Territory of Wyoming for public purposes, and by unanimous consent I now ask that the bill be recommitted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, that the second morning hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees be dispensed with.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I have an understanding with the gentleman from Arkansas that I will be permitted to call up from the Committee on Labor a resolution providing a time for the consideration of the business of that committee. I will not therefore occupy the morning hour against that committee.

Mr. PAYSON. That does not preclude the Committee on the Public Lands from its hour on the next legislative day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. MCKENNA. If that is understood, of course I do not object. But I do object to anything which will take from the Committee on the Public Lands any right which it now possesses. I wish to ask the Chair, so there may be no doubt on the subject, whether on the next morning hour it will be the privilege of the Committee on the Public Lands to proceed with the consideration of its business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be the effect of the postponement.

Mr. McKENNA. The effect of the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], if granted, will be merely to postpone until next Saturday the call of the Committee on the Public Lands for reports.

Mr. NELSON. That is all it does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suppose that would be the effect.

Mr. PERKINS. The call would still remain with that committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. That undoubtedly would be the effect of the proposition, and I trust there will be no objection.

Mr. McKENNA. I have no objection, if it be distinctly understood that on Saturday the call will rest with the Public Lands Committee, and that no portion of its time will be considered as having been consumed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nothing is lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is understood.

Mr. McKENNA. Then I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am yielding to the wishes of the gentleman from Arkansas, because we have consumed so much of the time of the committee to-day; but there is a proposition which I desire to couple with it.

The Committee on the Public Lands reported to the House some time since a bill to secure the remaining public lands to actual settlers and to protect the forest lands. I think gentlemen will agree with me that this is one of the most important measures before the present Congress. That committee, of course, has the right to report it any time; yet it seems to be proper before bringing it to the attention of the House that some notice of that intention should be given. For that reason I wish to ask unanimous consent that the 17th day of March, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Say after the hour for consideration.

Mr. REED. I think that proposition ought to go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. REED. It seems to me that the regular order had better go on. I do not know what the bill is, but we are piling up these special assignments without any distinct reference to the time that is to be consumed.

Mr. PEEL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the title of the bill, so that gentlemen will be informed.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Arkansas has called for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman has demanded the regular order.

Mr. PEEL. I will withdraw that demand for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman did demand the regular order I still have the floor. The concessions made to the committee at the request of the gentleman from Arkansas were made conditional upon presenting this subject, if not in so many words at least in effect.

I sought the floor to present this question to the House, coupled with the consent given to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas. I have not yielded the floor, and I ask that the title of the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7901) to secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests on the public domain, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I ask that after the morning hour, on the 17th, this bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman will make his request after the hour for consideration. A large number of the committees of the House have no other opportunity to secure consideration than in that hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask that the 17th, after the hour to which the gentleman from Maine refers, be set apart for the consideration of this bill. I hope the bill will pass promptly; but if it shall not have been disposed of on that day, I ask, further, that the 20th instant be also set apart for its consideration, after the same hour.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. What day is that?

Mr. HOLMAN. The 20th.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I object. I want the 20th for the Committee on Labor, if I can get it.

Mr. PETERS. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana if this is the bill that repeals the pre-emption and timber-culture laws?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the bill, sir.

Mr. PETERS. Then I shall object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I demand the regular order. I give notice that on Saturday, the 17th, after the reading of the Journal, I will ask the House to consider this bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for consideration. The hour commences at ten minutes after 3 o'clock.

Mr. PERKINS. I thought that hour had been dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. PEEL. No; the regular order has been demanded.

Mr. PERKINS. But it was decided, I thought, some time ago, to dispense with the hour for consideration to-day.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that this day will be practically consumed before reaching the special order. Inasmuch as we have yielded our time, I ask unanimous consent that Tuesday next be substituted for to-day for the consideration of business from the Indian Committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. After the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas to set apart next Tuesday for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Indian Affairs, after the hour for consideration?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call in the hour for the consideration of bills rests with the Committee on the Public Lands.

PUBLIC LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 1235), and yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. McKENNA].

Mr. McKENNA. That bill is identical with the Senate bill which I call up.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 418) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State.

Mr. JACKSON. I make the point of order that the bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McKENNA. I was about to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a Senate bill, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 418) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State.

Whereas the States of Ohio, Louisiana, Mississippi, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Arkansas, Michigan, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Oregon, Kansas, Nevada, Nebraska, and Colorado, constituting the list of all the public-land States except California, have each received a certain percentage of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands situate within their limits, respectively; and

Whereas California is the only public-land State that has not received any percentage of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands in said State: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of the public lands which have been made by the United States since the admission of said State, or may hereafter be made, in said State, to aid in the support of the public or common schools of said State; and the sum of money necessary to pay said 5 per cent. to said State is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. McKENNA. As will be seen, this bill is an effort to put California on an equal footing with all the other public-land States of the Union. The first inquiry that would probably be made in reference to it would be, why did not California as did the other States receive this upon her admission to the Union? It now can only be conjectured, but I think we can conjecture with almost absolute certainty that the reason was that the time California was admitted to the Union was a very eventful time, and indeed might be called epochal; and that the effect of the admission of California upon the dominant purposes of parties was the only matter of serious consideration.

There was a party for admission which made everything subservient to that. There was a party for exclusion which made everything subservient to that. Besides, the condition of the affairs of California and of her territory was not very familiar to those who were then legislating for her. She was the remotest land of the nation, remotest in every other sense as well as geographically. The Great American Desert at that time had a place on the maps and was even considered to have a place in reality; and on account of the want of knowledge of California, or rather of want of sufficient knowledge to legislate for her, nothing was considered at the time of her admission but the bare fact and its simple effect.

Senator Foote, of Mississippi, who was of the party of exclusion, moved to amend by giving to California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the public lands, and also giving to her four sections of land for school purposes. Mr. Douglas, of Illinois, who had control of the measure in the Senate, objected to the amendment; not that he opposed the gift of 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands to California or the gift of four sections of school lands. But he said on account of the ignorance as to her condition, notwithstanding that in his judgment she was entitled to more than four sections, yet he would oppose the amendment. Jefferson Davis, then also a Senator in Congress, did not oppose the amendment, but urged as an objection to it the ignorance about the condition of the State and of the titles to land. The whole matter was, by an amendment which Senator Douglas moved, postponed till some other occasion.

During that debate Mr. Soulé, of Louisiana, objected to the act admitting the State of California into the Union, because there was no contract with the State with reference to the taxation of public lands. He said that was the supremest attribute of sovereignty, and unless there was some such contract that would necessarily adhere to the sovereignty of California after she was admitted to the Union. Mr. Douglas took a different view, but, to avoid all question about the matter, introduced an amendment that now stands in the act admitting California, and also introduced at the same time—and I draw the attention of the House particularly to the circumstance—introduced at the same time resolutions passed by the convention at Monterey, and also a section of the constitution of the State of California, which constitution she proposed to adopt, and urged upon the Senate the fact that she would not claim—indeed, had distinctly disclaimed in her constitution and constitutional convention—any desire to tax the public lands, but would be content with the usual gifts or donations to the State and the gift of 5 per cent. of the net cash proceeds of the sales of the public lands. The whole thing was then remitted to subsequent consideration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what next? The public-land system was not extended to California until 1853, three years after her admission. There were no sales of public lands in California, and no payments for public lands until 1857. Therefore, as I have said, during that exciting time, in ignorance of her condition, not knowing what sort of legislation to extend to her on account of the vast private land claims in the State, until that should be settled the matter was postponed until a subsequent time.

Now, then, it seems to me that as far as the argument for the passage of this bill is concerned, its force lies in the simple statement that she has not been treated as the other States have been treated, and the best argument that can be urged for the passage of the bill will turn somewhat upon the consideration of the objections urged in the minority report against its passage.

What are they, sir? It first asserts that efforts have been made in the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses, respectively, to pass this measure. That allegation, Mr. Chairman, is not true in any sense in which it is entitled to be urged against the passage of this bill. Why? Because, sir, if that suggestion had any force, every bill that failed of consideration in those Congresses and that was reintroduced in this Congress could be objected to on the same ground.

Why, sir, I am surprised at the objection coming from experienced gentlemen who should know that it is one of the tantalizing, disappointing, almost hopeless things that surround a member of this House that he is compelled, Congress after Congress, to see his bills not passed upon. While we, Congress after Congress, roll the legislative stone to the top of the hill, it is only to find it at the next session at the bottom again.

A MEMBER. Good.

Mr. MCKENNA. Look at the number of bills introduced in the last Congress and in previous Congresses that have failed of consideration. In the Forty-seventh Congress 10,704 bills were introduced. Of that number only 772 became laws; leaving 9,932 that failed of success. And will you, Mr. Chairman, or will anybody venture to say that all those bills were without merit? In the Forty-eighth Congress there were 11,441 bills introduced, of which only 966 passed, leaving without success 10,775. In the Forty-ninth Congress there were 15,002 bills introduced, and 1,442 passed, leaving without success, though efforts were made to pass them, 13,560. Now, Mr. Chairman, this mere statement almost annihilates the objection. But, sir, the allegation of the minority is so far from being true that wherever this bill has been considered it has been considered and passed upon with approval.

It passed the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress; it passed the Senate in the Forty-ninth Congress with but five dissenting votes; it passed the Senate in this Congress with not a single dissenting vote, and it has been recommended favorably by every committee to which it has been referred.

The next objection is that it is impossible to equalize the bounty of the Government at this late day. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible if you do not want to, but it is not impossible if you do want to. A generous and just nation, a generous and just man, finds no difficulty in equalizing his bounty or his justice. It is not only the sluggard, but it is he that would not do a thing that finds a lion in the way and makes the objection.

About this matter of equalization, you can do as Horace Greeley proposed about resumption: the way to equalize is to equalize; and the passage of this bill does that.

The next objection is that California is a rich and prosperous State, containing a million of inhabitants. Well, sir, I do not know exactly how to treat that objection. It is confused and confusing. Do the minority mean by that, Mr. Chairman, that California is rich as a State in property, rich in realized revenues, rich in the fact that it has no burdens, and is under no necessity of imposing burdens on its citizens? If that be the meaning of the objection, was there ever any State in such a condition as that? Or does it mean that all that million of inhabitants (because that is the correct number) are rich and prosperous, and that therefore the State is exempt from all concern for them, or all care of them, and is under no necessity of taxing them at all, or, if at all, only their ease and their riches, and never their toil or their poverty? If that be so, Mr. Chairman, I ask again, was there ever any State or people under the sun in that condition, and will there ever be any people or nation in that condition?

But if the objection does not mean either of these things, does it mean that the State is rich in resources? Granted, sir. But was not Ohio rich in resources? Were not Illinois, Nebraska, Michigan, and Wisconsin and all the other public-lands States rich in resources, and was it not the intention of the Government to develop those resources into realized wealth? And, sir, what better or greater wealth can there be than educated men and women? What wealth is comparable to educated men and women? What wealth is anything but a curse without educated men and women—educated, Mr. Chairman, so that every caprice of their hearts becomes reduced from waywardness to steady and useful purpose, that every desire of their hearts is reduced to obedience and feeling and subordination and duty?

Why, sir, this objection is hard to consider and hard to treat. It is not for me, Mr. Chairman, to stand here and make vain professions for my State, and it would ill become me to undertake to underrate or belittle her. But, sir, it would be still more unbecoming in me to come here with a beggar's voice and ask for a beggar's alms. It is worthier of her, and of me, and of this House that I come here with respectful voice, asking that this Government shall give to my State what it has given to every other public-land State.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of right.

Mr. MCKENNA. As a matter of right, as suggested by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]. But, Mr. Chairman, if I mentioned the prosperity of my State at all, it would be to point to it and the qualities that have made it as a sure guaranty that the bounty of the nation would be usefully and honorably employed; and if I admitted here that she has struggled along to success without that bounty, I would have to add that further success would be greatly aided by it, for it would be ridiculous for me to assert, Mr. Chairman, no matter what California has achieved, that there is not much still left for her to achieve, which, both in the achieving and in the achievement, would be no less honorable and strengthening to her than to this nation.

The next objection is that California has already received the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, while some of the other public-land States have only received the sixteenth section for public-school purposes. Mr. Chairman, that is correct; and why has California received two sections while some of the other States have received only one? The former policy of the Government was to give to the public-land States one section of the public lands; one thirty-sixth part of every township; and I want the House to mark this point, because it is important to be considered, the gift was not to the State as a State, but it was to the townships as townships for the purposes of public education in the townships.

It commenced with the ordinance of 1785; it was continued in the ordinance of 1787, and was given to every public-land State up to 1848, when Senator Douglas, who believed in educating the masses of the people, who believed in grants, and liberal ones, to the States for this purpose, moved as an amendment to the Oregon act, or reported as part of that act, I have forgotten which, a grant of not only the sixteenth but the thirty-sixth section of townships for educational purposes within the township. And from that time all the public-land States to the number of seven, including California, have received the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

I have said this was a grant to the township as a township. Yet this minority report somewhat artfully enumerates the number of acres given to California under that donation to show that she has received more than certain other public-land States. The statement is that she has received something more than 6,000,000 acres. That is a mistake of over 1,000,000 acres—a pardonable mistake, however, because the statistics as published give that number, whereas, in fact, it is only something over 5,000,000 acres. But, sir, that acreage is computed on the basis of taking all the public lands in the State. It allows nothing for deficiencies on account of mineral lands or on account of swamp and overflowed lands; it allows nothing for any deficiency.

Mr. LANDES. Does the gentleman state that California has not received indemnity lands in lieu of the overflowed and mineral lands?

Mr. MCKENNA. Yes, sir; I do say distinctly, plainly, clearly, that California has not received any indemnity for swamp and overflowed lands, or for mineral lands. Why? Because as to mineral lands the Supreme Court of the United States decided that she was not entitled to indemnity for mineral lands; and as to swamp lands, because the Interior Department decided she was not entitled to indemnity for swamp lands.

Mr. Chairman, all the public lands in California have not been surveyed. Some say there are 29,000,000 acres yet to be surveyed; some say 32,000,000 acres. A great deal of this is waste and desert land.

Bright and blooming as she is, California is not exactly all gardens. Some portions of her territory are desert or mountainous lands, and some portions need yet to be developed.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I have answered all the objections made by the minority to the passage of this bill. In the first place, it has been objected that California is rich and prosperous, with an overflowing school fund. She has a very good school fund, but it is not overflowing, and unfortunately her rate of State taxation is greater than that of any other State in the Union, except, I think, one or two—certainly not more than two.

Every public-land State except California has received a certain percentage of the sales of the public domain. In 1841 a policy was adopted giving to every State enumerated by the minority in their report 10 per cent. of the net proceeds of the public lands after that time, and the proceeds of the public lands then in the Treasury were at that time distributed. That policy, under which some of the States received thousands of dollars, was continued until it was suspended by a clause in one of the tariff acts.

This minority report says that California has received lands which other States have not. Mr. Chairman, that is not true. With the exception, possibly, of about 500 acres around San Quentin, the State of California has not received one acre of public land that every other public-land State has not received; and some of the States enumerated in the minority report received saline grants which California did not receive. This bill is designed simply to equalize California with the other States in respect to this matter. California did what the other States did—she surrendered her power of taxation, if she had it. She entered into the same compact that the other States entered into; and this bill proposes merely to give her what was given to all the other States.

Mr. Chairman, as the time is limited, and as I have really occupied more than I intended, I shall not say more at present.

Mr. LANDES. Does the gentleman claim this grant as a gift from the General Government, or in consideration of some surrender by the State of California to the Government?

Mr. MCKENNA. I claim this grant, so far as any member of this House is concerned, from his generosity, from his justice, and from his sense of right. I do not care upon what basis he votes for it. I think, however, the bill can be put on all three grounds.

Of course I do not wish to be misunderstood about the question of taxation of the public lands. As a matter of law, I do not know whether the State had that power or not; but I do know that as great men as Mr. Soulé, of Louisiana, Mr. Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, and Mr. Hunter, of Virginia, thought the State had that power, unless in her admission she consented to release it. Those gentlemen made this matter the basis of a protest, recorded upon the journals of the Senate, against the admission of the State in the form adopted, because this right of taxation belonged to her as a sovereignty and could be exercised as such. And Judge McLean, in a case reported in 6 McLean's Circuit Court Reports, declared that evidently, in the opinion of Congress, unless such a compact was made with the States, they would have this power of taxing the public lands. I do not wish to go into a legal discussion of that proposition. I have only said this in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES]. I reserve the residue of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MCKENNA. I am willing to give twenty-five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. MCKENNA. No; I reported the bill and have, as I understand, thirty-five minutes of my time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA], in charge of the bill, was entitled to an hour, and has remaining of his hour thirty-two minutes. He can either yield that time or reserve it.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do not yield the floor, but am willing to yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON], if he will take it from me.

Mr. JACKSON. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. MCKENNA. I propose to give some of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he will accept it.

Mr. JACKSON. I propose to take up an hour in my own right when I can do so.

Mr. MCKENNA. Then I move the committee rise in order that we may go into the House and settle this matter.

Mr. JACKSON. Under the circumstances I will take the floor and will accept the time extended me by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] on condition that at the proper time I shall occupy an hour under the rule.

Mr. MCKENNA. If I give you twenty-five minutes, does the gentleman propose to take an hour in addition?

Mr. JACKSON. I will tell the gentleman from California that I want an hour in the discussion of this bill. I prefer to take the time in my own right.

Mr. MCKENNA. Then I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA], who advocates and urges the passage of this bill which appropriates money to his State, placed himself, as I think correctly, upon the record a moment before he closed his remarks. When asked the question upon what grounds he claimed Congress should give California this large amount of money, he declined to give the reason. He did not give and could not give a single good reason upon which to base this claim. He was, he said, as I understood him, claiming it for sundry reasons—reasons entirely diverse and inconsistent—and yet he declined to rely on either of them. He asks it simply because he wants the money given to California, no matter whether the giving be right or wrong. He declined most positively to place himself on the record as asking it as a donation on the part of the Government, but seemed rather to want us to consider he was claiming it as a matter of right, without being willing to rely on that position. And well he might, for it is to me entirely clear California has no such claim.

It is, Mr. Chairman, almost a thankless task to oppose bills of this character, in which fellow-members we would prefer to accommodate are so greatly interested. For if Congress in its liberality passes this law and makes this gift to California, I have no doubt it will reflect great credit on the enterprise of the California members among their constituents.

But, Mr. Chairman, my sense of duty and my sense of right will not allow me to support this measure which has been so kindly fostered by the gentleman from California, who has just addressed us, as well as other gentlemen who have occupied seats upon this floor from that State in this and other Congresses.

As a starting point in my argument, Mr. Chairman, I make this proposition to the committee and to members of the House—a proposition that I believe can not be successfully disputed. It is this: there is not a State known as a public-land State, and for that matter any other State in the Union admitted prior to California, as to which it may not be truthfully said that it has as much right to a gift of this kind as California. I go further and assert that each of the States I have referred to has a far greater right to come here and ask for a donation from the Government than the State of California. I say this because the records show that California has succeeded heretofore in obtaining greater and more liberal grants of public lands than any State that came into the Union before she did.

The gentleman from California undertook to analyze the report of the minority of the committee. I observed, and I presume other members of the House did also, that he did not contradict a single fact stated by the minority in its report.

Mr. Chairman, I think this report of the minority in its brief statement of facts meets this case very fully. I desire, therefore, to call the especial attention of the House to it. The gentleman from California dwelt largely on the suggestion that this bill had at different times been favorably considered, without dissent, and that even now only a small minority opposed. But, at least so far as numbers are concerned, the records will show that it is not a very small minority of the committee that oppose this bill. Fewer members who have examined this bill favor it than you would be led to believe from the remarks of the gentleman from California. The minority report is joined in by a considerable number of members of the Committee on Public Lands.

The number present on the day on which this case was considered in the Committee on Public Lands was, I believe, nine or ten, and out of that number three joined in the minority report. But I do not consider that that has much to do with the question. It is, however, important to consider whether the facts stated in that report be true or not, and whether the minority have given sufficient reasons why this bill should be rejected by Congress.

Let us briefly consider the facts and the arguments in favor of the passage of the bill. There is but one reason, so far as I am able to see, given in the majority report and in the gentleman's argument for passing this bill, and that is to make California equal to other States, and that she may receive and have as large donations as other States. The facts to support this assertion do not exist. I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, as I said before, that of the States known as public-land States more than one-half have received far less from Congress in the way of grants of public lands in aid of schools than the State of California.

I am willing in making the comparison that you may even take into account the grants to other States of 5 per cent. of the amount of sales, although these grants were not usually for schools. I admit that California has not in terms received a gift of 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sale of public lands within her limits, and that quite a number of the other States have received a grant in this form.

But California has in other ways received far more than an equivalent for this. The acts of Congress and the records of the Land Office show that she has received most liberal grants and donations of public lands, both directly to the State and indirectly in aid of public improvements.

The claim now of a grant in the particular words of a per centum gift is a species of special pleading that ought not to be offered in this House.

And whilst, as I have stated, she has not received the 5 per cent. from the sales of the public lands in aid of schools, as this bill purports to give, yet I desire to call the attention of this House to the fact that up to the time that California was admitted into the Union, and up to the passage of the act of 1853, no State had ever received a grant of a percentage of sales in aid of its schools, as is asked here. The gentleman from California can not, I believe, show a single act prior to 1853 in which the grant was for school purposes alone. If there be any such act I have been unable to find it, and I have examined the records with some considerable care.

There was a 5 per cent. grant to the State of Indiana, but it was for public improvements and the making of roads. A similar grant was made to the State of Wisconsin for making canals, and some of the Southern States, I believe Alabama and Mississippi, had such grants for like purposes; and it is to be observed that they were granted on the express condition that they should make reports to the General Government as to how they expended the money; and if they ceased to make satisfactory reports the donations were to cease by the express terms of the granting acts.

I can explain, I think, to the satisfaction of gentlemen why the practice of granting 5 per cent. of the sales of the public lands to newly admitted States was not made to California at or about the time she was admitted into the Union. It was, Mr. Chairman, because the State of California was given a double portion of the grant of lands for school purposes, twice as much, proportionally, as had ever been given any State prior to the admission of California into the Union.

This is the reason she did not then get a per cent. grant, and I have no doubt has been ever since considered a sufficient reason to refuse to pass a bill like the one we are now considering. The record will show what I have stated, and the gentleman can not contradict it.

Mr. MCKENNA. I do contradict it.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman does contradict it. Then he does it by making an assertion which the records show is not correct; and every member of this House can verify what I have stated from the records for himself. I shall be very glad to see it done.

Let me tell him now, and this committee, that up to 1853 there was granted to the public-land States for school purposes the sixteenth section of the public lands, while to the State of California a double portion, as I have stated, was granted, namely, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

Mr. MCKENNA. If you will allow an interruption——

Mr. JACKSON. I yield for a question, not a speech.

Mr. MCKENNA. If the gentleman will permit me, I presume he wants to be correct. Of course I stated that, if that is what the gentleman means—that California had received a double portion of the public lands for that purpose. I have already stated it. She happened to be the first that came into the Union after the passage of the act admitting Oregon.

Mr. JACKSON. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. MCKENNA. It was put into the Oregon act, and California being the first State that came in afterwards it was given to her in 1853, but not when she was admitted.

Mr. JACKSON. So she did get it after all, and yet it is not, the gentleman says, a double portion. He does not want to count that. I do not know how the gentleman makes the distinction. There is none, in fact, it must be apparent to all.

The gentleman can not argue facts away. He knows the truth of the statement that I have made, and has to admit it; and that gives away his whole case. The other States have not received anything in lieu of what California received extra—that is, in lieu of the thirty-sixth section which was given to her and which no other State prior to this had received. One or more have since had such grants. Oregon is one, and possibly some others have managed to get larger grants than the rest of the States. This has been due partly to the vigilance of their members on this floor; but still more, I presume, because the great majority of the members of the House overlooked the fact that they were getting an extra gift. I do not believe in a single case it was ever generally so intended.

But go back to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, Michigan, Arkansas, Florida, Iowa, and A'abama, go back to all of these twelve great States that had grants made to them of the public lands for school purposes, and they have only received the sixteenth section, whilst California received the sixteenth and thirty-sixth, both for the same purpose.

This gives California a double portion proportionally, and I presume even our present statistics are not complete; that as part of her public lands are not yet surveyed the aggregate she will get is even much greater than the figures appended to the minority report.

Why, the gentleman when he takes up the statistics appended to the minority report sees that California had millions and millions of acres more than any other State ever has had. He sees that this is apparent, and that it must satisfy all she had already more than her share. To break the force of these facts he undertakes to explain it away by saying that what she got was, much of it, not very good land, that it was desolate, that it can not be used, will not be appropriated. Mr. Chairman, if there be such land in California I do not suppose that they want to build school-houses on that kind of land, although they have got proportionately double what the other States I have named received. Other States which only received the sixteenth section had, we all know, to take poor land with the good just the same as California.

The gentleman comments upon the minority report wherein it states that California is rich. That, Mr. Chairman, is put in the report as a reason why this donation should not be given. Were California a mendicant here in poverty and want, supplicating Congress to give it some little means to educate its poor, indigent, ignorant, and illiterate, we could understand the arguments, and they would appeal to our generosity, and I promise would not appeal in vain; but we mean just what is said in the report. There is no good reason for this appropriation.

The representatives of the Government in the earlier days of the Republic, when they admitted into the Union such States as were new and unimproved and without means to support public schools, States without taxable property, when the people were settling and reclaiming the country, and the country was undeveloped, like Indiana and Illinois in their day, and Wisconsin and others later, thought it a wise and proper thing that the Government should extend a helping hand to them and give them some donations in the way of the public lands to support and maintain their public schools until they became self-supporting. And they did well.

But to-day California is not in that position, and we made the argument in the minority report that California has passed beyond that period when she needs such assistance; that she is now strong and rich, and her school funds are plentiful, and there is no public necessity for such a donation, and, more than that, that it is unfair and unjust to other States to give it.

Mr. Chairman, the statistics sustain me in the assertion that California does not need such a donation as this. I take up some statistics here which I find in the records, and I presume are correct, and I find, comparing California's school funds with those of the other States, that only eleven other States in the Union have funds equal to hers, and these are the rich strong States of the East; that only eleven of the richest of our Commonwealths are so rich in school funds as California.

I find further, that there are but nine States in the Union whose school funds have an income equal to that of California, and that there are only eleven States that have schools open as many days in the year as California, while I find that there is but one State in the Union that spends as much per capita in educating her children as California. I commend her for all this. But it is a condition of affairs that does not warrant Congress in making this donation to that State. I call your attention to still further facts, which show that in all bills granting 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands to other States, no such grant was ever made as is embodied in this bill.

This is an appropriation and grant to California of the money direct, to be used as her own laws provide and as she chooses for school purposes. This is an appropriation of money from the Treasury. It makes an appropriation at once of more than a half million of dollars to that State direct from the Treasury.

No other State ever received that. Other States received 5 per cent. of the proceeds of lands sold after the passage of the acts. California wants now an appropriation of 5 per cent. of the proceeds of all the lands that have ever been sold, and all that may hereafter be sold. And what for? Did she yield anything for it? No; the gentleman can not tell us what equivalent she gave. She yielded up nothing she could hold or have the right to claim. There is not the slightest pretext that she has given the General Government anything as a consideration for this grant.

In calling your attention somewhat in detail to the facts set forth in the minority report, the gentleman from California took exception to the statement that they have made efforts heretofore to secure the passage of this bill. But is not that true? Why he himself supplements his remarks by telling you the efforts were almost successful. That they have only met with discouragement year after year, like many other unfortunates, and find themselves at this late day no further on in obtaining this grant out of the Treasury than when, several years since, they first began their efforts.

I know that many good bills fail to become laws. In the short time I have been in Congress I have frequently been disappointed in the success of bills I wanted to pass.

But, Mr. Chairman, I submit that, if we may judge from the statute-book, bills granting public lands to States have passed very readily. Few seem to have opposed them. Almost all that was necessary was to ask and receive.

Then, Mr. Chairman, knowing this history of legislation in regard to public lands, we have a right to suppose there was some good reason why this grant was not made to California when in 1853 she received the general grant for school purposes. I think the reason is apparent; and it is because she was not entitled to it to make her equal with other States. When California was given the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of land for schools, a double portion, twice as much as had been given to other States in the donation of lands, Congress considered she was getting enough. All the other States and every reasonable man can well say she was getting more than a fair share.

As bearing somewhat upon this subject, I have called attention to some of the provisions in regard to some of the grants made to the older public-land States. They were, as I previously stated, to a large extent made for public works and improvements. They were not specially for schools as this one is. But lest some might overlook the fact that this is no reason for the passage of this bill, I desire to call the attention of the committee to past legislation of Congress, and that in addition to the great and large grants made directly to the State of California no State of this Union ever had indirectly such large grants of public lands for public improvements of which she was especially the beneficiary. The large grants made in aid of the building of the several Pacific railroads and many other roads, branches, and connections, of which she largely obtained the benefit, are many times more than an equivalent of all the grants ever made to the older States.

The 5 per cent. that Indiana got to make her road; the 5 per cent. that went to Wisconsin to build her canals; the 5 per cent. obtained by Alabama, and, I think, Mississippi—although I am not quite certain as to the Southern States—the moneys they obtained they had to use in public improvements that were made for California by other grants. California, over and above the double bounty of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, had corporations making improvements within her borders and from the far East towards her borders subsidized by the most gigantic grants, as we all know.

I know it was often in the past years seemingly considered in this House that the public lands were only in existence for the purpose of being given away, and perhaps it is a thankless task to ask members to stop to consider this question. This appropriation may not in itself be a very large one, but I desire to remind members on this floor in this connection that we have reached a limit when we have not a boundless domain to give away.

I am glad to observe the feeling in this House, that the public lands now remaining under the control of the Government should be carefully guarded for actual settlers. The tendency of all this legislation to donate the proceeds of the public lands is to put them on sale, at least to encourage it, and thus place them in the hands of purchasers who to a great extent are speculators.

The gentleman from California remarked that many other bills had failed. This is true, many of them very just ones. But I think it to be the duty of this Congress to see that it first passes bills to pay its honest debts and liabilities. The Government of the United States should be just and honest before it is generous. Let us first pass laws that will compel the Government to pay what it owes to those who have honest claims against it before it commences to be so liberal in making donations to a rich and wealthy State that has no need of it.

I could suggest many ways to dispose of our surplus, better than by giving it away as this bill proposes. Let us pay claimants who have just demands against the Government. If the majority in this House should promptly act on the many just private bills now pending they could do great good. Let us pay all just claims reported from the Court of Claims. Let us make reasonable appropriations for public works and needed public buildings.

Let us not forget the claims of the men who served the country in the field. Much better to increase your pension-list and appropriate money for needy dependent relatives of the soldiers who fell in battle than to be giving it away in this manner. The money proposed to be given California by this bill would make happiness in the homes of several hundred poor disabled soldiers who are to-day unable to earn a living. For the passage of the bill now before us, I again assert, no good reason can be given.

In my judgment the only claim California has for this donation is her good fortune in having persistent, industrious Representatives on this floor, who session after session, Congress after Congress, present and urge this kind of legislation.

I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANDES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON] has now occupied nineteen minutes of his time.

Mr. LANDES. I desire to call the attention of the House to the statement made by the report of the Committee on Public Lands that California was admitted into the Union upon the same conditions on which all the other public-land States had been admitted prior to that time. The truth is, as will be shown by reference to the acts admitting other public-land States, that a very wide difference exists between the privileges granted to these other States and those granted to California.

What was the reason assigned for the granting of 5 per cent. on the net proceeds of the sales of public lands to the various States? Ohio was the first public-land State, perhaps, that came into the Union. The condition upon which she was admitted was that she should yield the right to the General Government or forego the right to tax the public lands five years after they had been sold to private individuals.

A condition was imposed upon them, and it was the condition upon which the 5 per cent. and the sixteenth section were granted to the State of Ohio, the sixteenth section for school purposes and the 5 per cent. for public improvements. That there may be no doubt about this statement, I desire to read the proviso admitting the State of Ohio into the Union:

Provided always, That the three foregoing propositions herein offered are on the conditions that the convention of the said State shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by Congress from and after the 30th day of June next shall be and remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under authority of the State, whether for State, county, township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale.

The same condition was applied to the State of Indiana, the State of Illinois, and six other public-land States, including Arkansas and Alabama; so that the condition on which those States were admitted into the Union was that they would not tax the public lands for five years after they had passed into the hands of private individuals, thus leaving free from taxation for five years 30,000,000 acres of land in the great State of Illinois; yet it is claimed that California surrendered the same right on her admission into the Union as the other public-land States.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman, unless my recollection is faulty, is in error when he says that Arkansas entered into a compact not to tax the public lands for a certain time. He is right as to Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois; for at the time of the admission of those States the public lands were sold on credit. Afterward, I think commencing with Arkansas, that condition was not inserted, but there was a general exemption of the public lands from taxation. That policy began, I believe, with Arkansas, or possibly the next State admitted.

Mr. LANDES. By reference to the record the House will determine which of us is correct as to this matter. My recollection is that land located under military scrip, perhaps——

Mr. MCKENNA. The policy to which the gentleman has referred obtained as to those States admitted into the Union when public lands were sold on credit. Afterward there was a general provision adopted upon the subject. The gentleman, by reference to the enabling acts, from the time of the admission of Arkansas, or probably before, will find that I am correct. And at the same time there was a change from 3 per cent. to 5 per cent.

Mr. LANDES. Mr. Chairman, it can make no difference whether the lands were sold on credit or not. The State of Illinois lost the right to tax 30,000,000 acres of her public lands for five years, in consideration of which the Government granted to her this 5 per cent.—3 per cent. directly and 2 per cent., which she has never received, even to this day, if I correctly understand the action of the Interior Department.

So that Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, Alabama, Louisiana, and other States surrendered the right to tax the lands for three to five years after they had passed into the hands of private individuals in consideration of receiving from the General Government 5 per cent.

Now, I ask the gentleman, what did California surrender as an equivalent for what was taken from Illinois and other States I have named? The assumption that California came into the Union upon a similar surrender is not supported by the public records.

I wish to call attention to another fact. California, when she came asking admission into the Union, came with a provision in her constitution that any per cent. which might be granted to her by the Government should be held as a public-school fund.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The morning hour expired before Mr. LANDES had concluded his speech, but subsequently by unanimous consent he was permitted to finish his remarks as follows:

Mr. LANDES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the House for the courtesy which enables me to extend my remarks on this bill. Before proceeding upon the branch of the subject upon which I was entering when interrupted by the expiration of the morning hour, I wish to elaborate a little further my criticism on the report made by the gentleman from California, now in charge of this bill.

It is doubtless true that a majority of the members of the House rely upon the statement of facts contained in this report upon which to form a judgment on the merits of the bill; and it seems to me the very gist of the claim, as made in the report, is contained in the statement that the "United States attached all the conditions" to the admission of California "as were attached to all the other public-land States" which received the 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of the public lands, but have not given to "California, in consideration of those conditions, that equivalent which has been heretofore given to all the other public-land States."

Is this statement true? It is conceded in the report that the section containing all the conditions upon which that State was admitted reads as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the said State of California is admitted into the Union upon the express condition that the people of said State, through their Legislature or otherwise, shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the public lands within its limits, and shall pass no law and do no act whereby the title of the United States to, and right to dispose of, the same shall be impaired or questioned; and that they shall never lay any tax or assessment of any description whatsoever upon the public domain of the United States; and in no case shall non-resident proprietors who are citizens of the United States be taxed higher than residents; and that all the navigable waters within the said State shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

I find no condition here providing "that every and each tract of land sold by the United States shall remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under any authority of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale; and that the bounty lands granted or hereafter to be granted for military services shall, while they continue to be held by the patentees or their heirs, remain exempt from all taxes for the term of three years from and after the date of the patents, respectively;" yet these are the very conditions upon which the grant of one section in each township, the salt springs, the five per cent., and the seminary lands, were granted to Illinois. (See act April 18, 1818.) Similar grants made to the other public-land States of Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama were made upon similar conditions, as will be seen by reference thereto. Arkansas, Iowa, and Michigan received similar grants, but the condition as to tax exemption applied to bounty lands only and but for three years.

When it is remembered that the United States sold public lands in Ohio to the amount of 12,805,911 acres; Illinois, 19,879,541 acres; Indiana, 16,124,044 acres; Missouri, 22,963,198 acres; Louisiana, 5,720,349 acres; Mississippi, 12,201,037 acres; Alabama, 17,789,351 acres, and that in Illinois the bounty land amounted to 9,533,653 acres; Missouri, 6,810,242 acres; Arkansas, 2,258,146 acres; Michigan, 3,838,546 acres, and in Iowa over 14,000,000 acres, it can be inferred that those States not only agreed to give a valuable consideration for the grants made to them, but probably gave away a greater consideration than they received. And, so far as they are concerned, the statement in the report that the United States attached all the conditions to California that were attached to all the other public-land States is most emphatically not true. The gentleman, when he wrote that report, fell into a most serious error, from which I leave him to escape as best he can.

When my remarks were interrupted by the expiration of the hour I was calling attention to the fact that when California was asking admission into the Union she came asking for a per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands within her limits, as is indicated by a provision in her constitution, and also by the provision contained in the ordinance adopted by her first constitutional convention. This ordinance was presented to Congress when she was seeking admission into the Union. It can be found in full on page 467, in the volume entitled "The Debates in the Convention of California," by Browne. The Californians were not more modest in their requests then than now. They ask for four sections in every township for the use of schools; seventy-two sections for a university; four sections for public buildings; 1,000,000 acres for defraying the expenses of the State government, as I understand it; 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands, and all salt springs within the State, so that the matter was not overlooked. And this ordinance, among other things, empowers the first Senators and Representatives elected from California to Congress to make or assent to such changes in these propositions for donations as the interest of the State may require. And when the amendment to the act admitting the State was offered by Senator Foote, which provided for much of what she was asking, Senator Douglas, referring to this ordinance, remarked:

By the ordinance adopted by the people of California, their first Senators and Representatives are authorized to negotiate terms of these grants of lands, and I should wish to confer with them on the subject.

Hon. William M. Gwin, the author of this ordinance, was a member of the convention which framed the first constitution of California, and one of the first Senators sent here from that State. He was familiar with all these proceedings, and with this ordinance; and with the constitution of California in his hands, he and his colleagues entered upon the negotiations for the admission of their State into the Union and for these land grants. The result is before us. Upon the conditions stated in the section of the act admitting the State into the Union the United States agreed to admit her into the sisterhood of States, with all the attributes of sovereignty possessed by any other of the States, and in the words of Mr. Kenna's report, "California by accepting such conditions is irrevocably bound to observe them." This solemn compact between the high contracting parties merged all considerations which proceeded from California, and is the just, legal, and equitable equivalent for the same.

The matter remained at rest until 1852, when on the 14th day of July this same William M. Gwin, then in the United States Senate, introduced as a substitute the bill which, without material change, passed the Senate on the next day, and became the law on the 3d day of March, 1853, and is the law which grants to California the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of every township in the State. (See Congressional Globe, first session Thirty-second Congress, pages 1770 to 1773, for debate on this bill.) In the course of the debate Senator Geyer moved to strike the thirty-sixth section out, because to give the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections was a discrimination in favor of California (page 1772.) Senator Gwin, replying to the motion to strike out the thirty-sixth section, said, "All we ask now is simply that we may have the land system extended to California and the same amount of land granted for school purposes as was granted to Oregon." These are the words of Senator Gwin, who was specially charged to negotiate for these land grants. He does not ask in this bill for the 5 per cent., but says all we ask is what Oregon got for schools, to wit, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. He got it; and so well satisfied were the people of California that the first Legislature thereafter to assemble passed a joint resolution, and among other things said, "The proceeds of the sale of these lands to the United States is a mere pittance, but to the children of our State a magnificent fund, securing the benefits of mental culture to all," etc. (page 220, Statutes of California, 1854). Here is found also a joint resolution tendering the thanks of the Legislature to Hon. William M. Gwin and his colleagues from that State in Congress, "for their industry and indefatigable energy in their efforts to advance the interests of California," etc. (page 224). What further evidence is needed to show that California was satisfied then and without the 5 per cent.? If she ever needed the 5 per cent. it was then.

Sir, after thirty years of acquiescence in this settlement the matter was revived, as I am informed, by an enterprising, thrifty, and estimable gentleman by the name of Capt. John Mullan. But for him it is probable this bill would never have been heard from. He, sir, having a laudable desire to make a little money, as well as to help along the school-fund of California, proposed, as I am informed, to the governor of the State and to the surveyor-general of the State to take a contract to collect this claim of 5 per cent. and the direct-tax claim from the United States for 20 per cent. of what he could realize. The State having nothing to lose and everything to gain, these State officers appointed the said Captain Mullan agent and attorney, and the Legislature, by a joint resolution dated March 3, 1883 (just thirty years to a day after the land grant to California), ratified and confirmed the appointment, and directed the compensation to be paid the energetic and gallant captain to be fixed "at 20 per cent. of each of the sums or claims that may be by him collected from the United States, and to pay to him such per cent. out of the moneys that may be colleeted." (See pages 394 and 395 of Statutes and Amendments to the Code California.)

A lobbyist was here urging a similar bill in the Forty-ninth Congress. I have seen the same face about the doors of this Hall during the last few days. But now the redoubtable captain is here in person, and the $107,593, which is his part of the $537,964 now in cash in the Treasury, to be paid over when this bill becomes a law, is a motive power of wonderful energy. This $107,593, according to his contract, will be his cash payment, and it is possibly only one-eighth part of the whole fee, since over 60,000,000 acres of the land of California are still undisposed of, and this bill carries 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of all cash sales yet to be made.

Mr. Chairman, let us see what California has received by way of a bounty and what has become of the 40,500,000 acres of land already disposed of within her limits. As a part of my remarks I read an official communication from the General Land Office, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1888.

SIR: Referring further to letter "M" of this office, dated February 13, 1888, and to your personal request of the 21st instant, I have to state as follows:

The estimated area of the public lands in California disposed of, or to which claim has been asserted, by selection or otherwise, to June 30, 1887, is 40,545,311 acres, as follows:

Grants to the State.	Estimated acres.
School selections	5,610,702.00
Internal improvements, act September 4, 1841	487,709.00
Seminaries	46,080.00
Public buildings	6,400.00
Agricultural college, act July 2, 1862, located in place	150,000.00
Swamp lands (patented 1,464,900)	1,879,527.18
Total estimated area of grants	8,180,418.18

ESTIMATED SELECTIONS, ENTRIES, AND DISPOSALS.

	Acres.
Railroad selections (3,527,391.10 acres patented)	4,809,498.25
Cash sales	8,316,146.97
Homestead entries	5,357,670.17
Timber-culture entries	700,545.54
Private land claims patented	9,130,856.15
Agricultural college scrip locations	1,574,917.40
Military bounty land-warrant locations	824,252.92
Miscellaneous entries private land scrip, etc.	1,650,905.42
Total	40,545,311.00

The figures given herein are not absolutely correct, but are given as the closest approximation that can be given from the data at hand.

Very respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. S. Z. LANDES, House of Representatives.

It will be seen from this official statement, that for educational purposes she has received of the public lands 5,806,782 acres, worth, at $1.25, $7,258,477.

In addition to this magnificent grant—a grant in area equal to the States of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, the State of California has received for State purposes 2,373,436 acres, worth about $3,000,000.

The total for school and State purposes aggregating, at $1.25 per acre, over ten and a quarter millions of dollars.

What State in the Union has secured such splendid dowry? Sir, if we are to equalize the land grants, we must commence at California and level down, instead of adding to the already unprecedented bounty she has received from a generous Government.

Over forty and a half millions of acres of the lands of California have been disposed of, out of which the Government has received the proceeds of but 8,316,146 acres, or $11,954,776 in gross; while in Illinois, out of a total of about 35,000,000 acres, near $25,000,000 have gone into the United States Treasury.

In answer to a question I propounded to the honorable gentleman in charge of this bill, in regard to school indemnity lands in California, he stated, "I do say distinctly, plainly, clearly, that California has not received any indemnity for swamp and overflowed land," etc.

Sir, I place against that declaration so distinctly made a statement from Hon. S. M. Stockslager, Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is as follows:

In adjusting the grant for school lands the law provides that where indemnity is granted the State the principle laid down by the act of May 20, 1826, shall be applied, and the loss to the State by the swamp grant will be made up in the gain under this act, leaving a deficiency to the State in the mineral sections only.

The letter from which I read bears date February 13, 1888. I do not know which is true; I had a right to rely on the official statement. I ask to have the letter printed in full in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

How much, sir, is involved in this bill? Five hundred and thirty-seven thousand nine hundred and sixty-four dollars and ninety-two cents in cash and one-twentieth of the proceeds of 60,000,000 acres of public lands in California still unsold, or 3,000,000 acres, at $1.25, which equals $3,750,000. The total covered by this bill is possibly $4,250,000.

For school purposes but one State in the Union has as yet received the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections and the 5 per cent., and this is Nebraska. She stands alone, affording the solitary precedent for this legislation. And this is no precedent, because when, in 1864, the grant was made Nebraska was poorer than California ever had been in material wealth, and thinly peopled, with a most pressing need for population to protect her from Indian depredations, and hence this extra inducement was offered to settlers.

Are we ready to make this gift? It is a naked gift, nothing more. What right have we to give away the people's money? The gentleman refuses to say anything had been surrendered to the United States as a consideration for this claim. To whom are we to pay this enormous sum? To a State, as has been recently said, even now "rushing to unequaled empire amid gold and sunshine and flowers." She produced, in 1887, 35,000,000 bushels of wheat, 16,000,000 bushels of barley, 31,564,231 pounds of wool, 13,900,000 gallons of wine, 31,000 flasks of quicksilver, and $19,000,000 in gold and silver.

Her wealth increased from 1860 to 1870, 300 per cent., thence to 1880, 225 per cent. Her wealth per capita exceeds every other State in the Union. She has produced $1,000,000,000 of gold since 1848. She has no debt worth the mention, but has a school fund at interest of $2,690,000.

Are the shivering shoulders of the poor in all this land to be further stripped to enable us to pour additional wealth into the lap of millionaires? I hope not. In my poor judgment there is a thousand times more justification in voting for the Blair educational bill than for this.

I ask to have printed at the end of my remarks the letter of February 13, 1888, from the acting Commissioner of the General Land Office; also the statement showing the amount accruing and paid to the several States.

"M." DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiries of to-day I have to state as follows:

The estimated area of lands to which the State of California is entitled under the act of March 3, 1855, granting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for school purposes, is 5,610,702 acres.

This estimate is based upon the calculation of one-eighteenth of the total area of the State, which is 100,992,640 acres, as school lands, and makes no allowance for the school sections which were embraced in selections under the swamp-land grant, nor for the sections that may be mineral.

In adjusting the grant for school lands the law provides that where indemnity is granted the State the principle laid down by the act of May 20, 1826 (4 Stats., page 179), shall be applied, and the loss to the State by the swamp grant will be made up in the gain under this act, leaving a deficiency to the State in the mineral sections only.

The area of school sections found to be mineral can not be determined by this office, for the reason that nearly 30,000,000 of acres of public lands yet remain to be surveyed; and it would require a large force of clerks for an indefinite time to examine the records of this office as to the character of land in each sixteenth and thirty-sixth section already surveyed in the State.

The area of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections given herein differs from that stated in the "public domain," from the fact that the corrected area of California is used in this statement instead of the formerly assumed area.

The area of lands surveyed in California to June 30, 1887, was 71,988,476 acres; of which it is estimated that there have been disposed of under various acts and grants 40,545,311 acres, leaving the estimated area surveyed and undisposed of June 30, 1887, 31,443,165 acres.

The area of California unsurveyed on June 30, 1887, is estimated to be 29,004,164 acres.

The total receipts from the cash sales, not including the amount derived from any location or disposal of the public lands other than cash sales, including mineral lands, to June 30, 1887, is $11,954,776.06.

The expenses incident to the cash sales are estimated at 10 per cent. of the receipts, or $1,195,477.60, leaving the net receipts $10,759,298.46.

Five per cent. upon this amount is $537,964.92.

Very respectfully,

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. S. Z. LANDES, House of Representatives.

Statement showing the amount accruing and paid to the several described States, as 3 and 5 per cent. upon the net proceeds of lands sold for cash.

* This amount represents 3 per cent. paid the State, the 2 per cent. upon the net proceeds not being included.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, DIVISION OF ACCOUNTS,
February 27, 1888.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 418) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State, had come to no resolution thereon.

WILLIAM LOCK AND JAMES H. TENSLEY.

Mr. TAULBEE, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments from the Committee on Claims the bill (H. R. 7303) for the relief of William Lock and James H. Tensley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the House now proceed with the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, without waiving the right of the committee to occupy next Tuesday, which has been given to the committee in lieu of to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] asks unanimous consent that the remainder of this day be devoted to business of the Committee on Indian Affairs, without prejudice to orders heretofore made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the committee should not occupy the residue of to-day and also the day which has been assigned to them in lieu of to-day.

Mr. NELSON. I hope there will be no objection to the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? It is expressly understood that the time the committee may occupy to-day will not be in lieu of the other day which has been assigned to them. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering business on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that many gentlemen have left the Hall with the understanding that as the Indian Committee had obtained another day in lieu of to-day this business would not come up now. I think the present proposition is hardly consistent with the understanding which was had.

Mr. PEEL. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that we desire only to utilize the little time that remains to-day. If any important question arises, requiring a yea-and-nay vote or a quorum, it will not be pressed, I presume. I can see no objection to our going on and discussing the bill which will first come up. I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Calendar reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. ROGERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of such bills as the Committee on Indian Affairs may call up.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. PEEL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians, in the State of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection. The bill will now be read by sections for amendment.

The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, within sixty days after the passage of this act, to designate and appoint three commissioners, one of whom shall be a citizen of Minnesota, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable after their appointment, to obtain and acquire for the United States of America, from all the different bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, their complete cession and relinquishment in writing of all their title and interest in and to all the Indian reservations in the State of Minnesota, except the White Earth and Red Lake reservations, and to all and so much of these two reservations as is not required to make and fill the allotments hereinafter specified, for the purposes and upon the terms hereinafter stated; and such cession and relinquishment shall be deemed sufficient as to each of said several reservations if made and assented to by two-thirds of the male adults of the band or tribe of the —— Indians occupying and belonging to such reservations; and for the purpose of ascertaining whether the proper number of Indians yield and give their assent as aforesaid, and for the purpose of making the allotments and payments hereinafter mentioned, the said commissioners shall, while engaged in securing such cession and relinquishment as aforesaid and before completing the same, make an accurate census of each tribe or band, classifying them into males and females adults and male and female minors, and the minors into those who are orphans and those who are not orphans, giving the exact numbers of each class, and making such census in duplicate lists, one of which shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior, and the other with the official head of the band or tribe; and the acceptance and approval of such cession and relinquishment by the Secretary of the Interior shall be deemed full and ample proof of the assent of the Indians, and shall operate as a complete extinguishment of the Indian title without any other or further act or ceremony whatsoever for the purposes and upon the terms in this act provided.

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend by striking out, in line 27, the letter "s" in the word "males" and the word "females;" also by striking out "the" after the word "or," in line 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, each give a bond to the United States in the sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties under this act, and they shall also each take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully discharge the duties of their office, which bonds and oaths shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior. Said commissioners shall be entitled to a compensation of $5 per day for each day actually employed in the discharge of their duties, and for their actual traveling expenses and board, not exceeding $3 per day. Said commissioners shall also be authorized to employ a competent interpreter while engaged in the performance of their duties, at a compensation and allowance to be fixed by them, not in excess of that allowed to each of them under this act.

SEC. 3. That as soon as the census has been taken, and the cession and relinquishment has been obtained and approved, as specified in section 1 of this act, all of said Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, except those on the Red Lake reservation, shall, under the direction of said commissioners, be removed to and take up their residence on the White Earth reservation, and thereupon there shall, as soon as practicable, under the direction of said commissioners, be allotted lands in severalty to the Red Lake Indians on Red Lake reservation, and to all the other of said Indians on White Earth reservation, as follows (heads of families and adults selecting for themselves, and the commissioners selecting for all minors): To each head of a family, male adult, or orphan minor, 160 acres, and to all other persons 80 acres each; and for the allotments so made, as herein provided, certificates shall issue to the allottees, which certificates shall be of the legal effect and declare on their face that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of fifty years, in trust, for the sole use and benefit of the allottee, or his or her heirs, according to the laws of the State of Minnesota, and that, at the expiration of said period, the United States will convey, by patent in fee-simple, to the allottee, or his or her heirs as aforesaid, the land so allotted, discharged of said trust and free of all liens or incumbrances, which patents shall accordingly issue; and as soon as such allotments have been made and certificates issued therefor, the said Indians to whom such allotments have been made, shall be deemed to be full citizens of the United States, and entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, and shall have the benefit of, and be subject to, the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State of Minnesota; and all allotments heretofore made to any of said Indians on the White Earth reservation are hereby ratified and confirmed with the like tenure and condition prescribed for all allotments under this act: Provided, however, That the amount heretofore allotted to any Indian on White Earth reservation shall be deducted from the amount of allotment to which he or she is entitled under this act.

SEC. 4. That as soon as the cession and relinquishment of said Indian title has been obtained and approved as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause all and so much of said reservations as are not fully surveyed to be surveyed as Government lands are surveyed; and in making such surveys the surveyors shall carefully ascertain and note and return on the plat and in the field-notes all 40-acre or lesser subdivisions on which there is any pine timber standing or growing, and which tracts are for the purposes of this act termed pine lands; and upon the completion of such surveys the Secretary of the Interior shall cause each 40-acre or lesser subdivision of such pine lands not allotted as hereinbefore provided to be appraised by three competent men, to be appointed by him, which appraisal shall in no event be less than $3 per acre; said appraisers shall also, in respect to all portions of said reservations which have heretofore been fully surveyed, and are not allotted to the Indians under this act, make a careful examination of such portions, for the purpose of ascertaining and listing all 40-acre or lesser governmental subdivisions on which there is standing or growing any pine timber, and which tracts are, for the purposes of this act, termed pine lands and which pine lands shall also be appraised by said appraisers, but not less than $3 per acre. All other lands on said reservations which are not pine lands as herein defined, shall, for the purposes of this act, be termed agricultural lands. The compensation of said appraisers shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but shall in no event exceed in the aggregate $4 per day for each, including all expenses.

Mr. NELSON. I move in line 28, page 6, of section 4, to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so it will read:

The compensation of said appraisers shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, but shall in no event exceed in the aggregate $5 per day for each, including all expenses.

Mr. COBB. I move to insert "ten." The object is to get good men, and not men in the neighborhood to make the appraisement, and unless you put the compensation at a proper figure you will not be able to get them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would not do that. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the amendment making it $10.

Mr. COBB. I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I move to make it $5, and I do so at the request of several members of the committee, as it is believed it is necessary to make it $5 a day, in order to get good men for this purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have two land inspectors at $2,500 a year each, and $3 a day for expenses, and these men could be very profitably employed on this work.

Mr. NELSON'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope I will be permitted to recur to this matter if I shall find it necessary.

Mr. NELSON. I do not object to that.

The Clerk proceeded to the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That after the said pine lands have been surveyed, ascertained, listed, and appraised as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall, after having given two months' notice of sale through a newspaper of general circulation, published at St. Paul, Duluth, and Crookston, in said State, through the United States land officers for the district where the said lands are situate, offer for sale and sell the same at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, in forty-acre or lesser subdivisions; but such sale shall not be for a less price than the appraised value, nor shall more than one-tenth of said pine lands be disposed of in any one year, nor otherwise than in this act provided.

SEC. 6. That when any of the agricultural lands on said reservation not allotted under this act have been surveyed, the Secretary of the Interior shall give thirty days' notice thereof, through at least two of the principal papers published in the State of Minnesota, and, at the expiration of said thirty days, the said agricultural lands so surveyed shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him the sum of $1 for each and every acre, in four equal annual payments, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor only at the expiration of four years from the date of entry, according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said $1 per acre therefor; and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same, prior to the date of final entry shall be null and void: Provided further, That settlers who have not had the benefit of the pre-emption laws shall be entitled to enter homesteads under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding they may previously have had the benefit of the homestead laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. In lines 7 and 8 it is provided:

Shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead laws.

There is a subsequent provision, that a settler shall not be entitled to a patent therefor. Now, it does not appear clearly as to whether the commutation section 2301 would be affected.

Mr. NELSON. Let the gentleman prepare an amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. I move after the word "therefor," in line 15, to insert these words, "and due proof of occupancy for said period of four years." That would leave the situation which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will accomplish the same object.

Mr. PAYSON. I move that amendment.

Mr. NELSON. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. PAYSON'S amendment was adopted.

Mr. MCRAE. I move to strike out "four years" and insert "five years."

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MCRAE'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota, in order that the bill may be harmonious, the word "four" should be stricken out in line 13 and "five" inserted there.

Mr. NELSON. I move in that section wherever the word "four" occurs, it be substituted by the word "five;" so it will read "five years" instead of "four years" through the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the seventh section, as follows:

SEC. 7. That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands in conformity with the provisions of this act shall, after deducting all the expenses of making the census, of obtaining the cession and relinquishment, of making the removal and allotments, and of completing the surveys and appraisals, in this act provided, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, payable annually for the period of fifty years after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in manner following: One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years, except in the cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and orphan minors; and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with the like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to all other classes of said Indians; and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians, in their midst and for their benefit; and, at the expiration of the said fifty years, the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living, in cash, in equal shares. The United States shall, for the benefit of said Indians, advance to them as such interest as aforesaid, the sum of $75,000 annually, counting from the time when the removal and allotments provided for in this act shall have been made, until such time as said permanent fund, exclusive of the deductions hereinbefore provided for, shall equal or exceed the sum of $2,500,000, less any actual interest that may in the mean time accrue from accumulations of said permanent fund; the payments of such interest to be made yearly in advance, and, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, may, as to three-fourths thereof, during the first five years be expended in procuring live-stock, teams, farming implements, and seed for such of the Indians to the extent of their shares as are fit and desire to engage in farming, but as to the rest, in cash; and whenever said permanent fund shall exceed the sum of $2,500,000 the United States shall be fully reimbursed out of such excess for all the advances of interest made as herein contemplated; and as soon as the United States have been fully reimbursed for all the advances and expenses contemplated and incurred under this act, and the said permanent fund shall exceed the sum of $2,500,000, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, expend of such excess, not to exceed 10 per cent. thereof annually, for the benefit of said Indians, in the same manner and in like proportion as the interest of said permanent fund.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move a verbal amendment: in line 16, page 8, after the word "and" insert "guardians of;" so it will read:

Be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors.

Mr. NELSON. That is satisfactory to me.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I move a verbal amendment on page 9, line 31, to strike out the word "as" between the word "until" and the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Section 8 was read, as follows:

SEC. 8. That the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for procuring the cession and relinquishment, making the census surveys, appraisals, removal and allotments, and the first annual payment of interest herein contemplated and provided for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest the words should be included in this section, "or so much thereof as may be necessary." One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is appropriated, and only so much should be paid as shall be found to be necessary.

Mr. NELSON. I accept that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not provided in this section who shall exercise the authority, or for what purpose the money shall be expended.

Mr. NELSON. To carry out the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, let it be provided this money shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PERKINS. Which section provides that the Government shall be reimbursed for this particular appropriation?

Mr. NELSON. The preceding section, section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 6, insert "which money shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. RICE. I move to amend in line 29, on page 8, by striking out the sum of "$75,000" and inserting "$90,000."

Mr. Chairman, there are some six or seven thousand Indians there, and the amount appropriated for their immediate needs for agricultural purposes, procurement of seed, and so on, is not adequate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was read and agreed to.

Mr. RICE. In order to make the amount correspond, I move to strike out, in line 32, same section, "$2,500,000," and insert "$3,000,000," so as to make the interest provided in the bill, 3 per cent., conform to the original intention in setting apart a sum for that purpose. This increase is necessary to make up the sum of $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE. I now move to strike out, in lines 42 and 43, "$2,500,000" and insert "$3,000,000," for the same reason.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to know why $500,000 is to be appropriated in this way. I think we ought to have some definite information.

Mr. PERKINS. This is only an increase in the permanent fund resulting from the sale of their land.

Mr. NELSON. It does not increase the appropriation.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. RICE. I also move the same amendment in lines 48 and 49 of this section; so as to make the terms of the bill correspond.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. I know it is the purpose of this bill to reimburse the Government for expenditures made in keeping with the provisions of the bill, but I am inclined to think that the language of this seventh section is not entirely adequate. I move, therefore, to insert after the word "contemplated" in line 45, the words "and other expenses hereunder;" so that it will read:

For all the advances of interest made as herein contemplated, and other expenses hereunder.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment?

There was no objection.

The amendment was considered and adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add, if not objectionable, these words to the eighth section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 8:

"A detailed statement of which expenses, except the interest aforesaid, shall be reported to Congress when the expenditures shall be completed."

Mr. NELSON. That is satisfactory.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to move to go back to section 30. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] has an amendment which he desires to offer to that section.

There was no objection.

Mr. COBB. I had desired to be heard in regard to this bill, but did not know that business from the Committee on Indian Affairs was to be taken up to-day, and hence I was not in the Hall when this bill was called for consideration. If, however, I have lost the opportunity I will content myself with the amendments which by consent I will now present. I move first the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 28, 29, and 30 of section 3 the words "shall be deemed to be full citizens of the United States and entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, and."

Mr. COBB. We are informed, Mr. Chairman, by the Indian Department that these are very uncivilized and ignorant Indians. We have had enough talk of late, it seems to me, about illiteracy destroying this country; and yet you propose not only to include more illiterates, but to admit certain degrees of barbarism also to the rights of citizenship.

Mr. NELSON. So far as I am concerned, I accept that amendment.

Mr. MACDONALD. If the gentleman from Alabama will yield to me for a moment, I think I can satisfy him that it is immaterial. We have already a general provision of law whereby an Indian may be naturalized, upon adopting, in the language of the law, "the habits of civilization," which really means to put on a suit of citizen's clothes and cut his hair short.

Mr. NELSON. Before a vote is taken, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I think the allotment-in-severalty bill gives them all of that already. So that it is immaterial whether this is stricken out or not.

Mr. WEAVER. It should be retained here anyhow.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a good feature and had better be retained.

The question being taken on Mr. COBB'S amendment, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 12.

Mr. COBB. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. COBB and Mr. NELSON were appointed tellers.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. If the gentleman from Alabama will allow me to have that amendment read again, I think it possible that we can agree here without further delay.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MACDONALD. Our general law covers this point anyhow.

Mr. COBB. I understand there is a provision of the general law covering this, and if so I do not care to embarrass the House. Hence I withdraw the call.

So (there being no further count) the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COBB. I now present a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 3:

Provided further, That any of the Indians residing on any of said reservations may, in his discretion, take his allotment in severalty under this act on the reservation where he lives at the time the removal herein provided for is effected, instead of being removed to and taking such allotment on the White Earth reservation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will be accepted.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. I think there is some misunderstanding as to the amendment offered a few moments ago. The effect of this bill is to make these Indians citizens at once; and it is that provision of the bill which the gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out. Then they can be made citizens under the general allotment bill if the President of the United States thinks it best they should be. But if we pass this bill as presented to the committee the effect of it is to declare these Indians to be citizens at the passage of the act. It is well known to the gentleman from Minnesota as to many other gentlemen here that these Indians are not qualified for the duties of citizenship; and yet if we pass the bill it will make them citizens after the passage of the act.

Mr. PAYSON. The bill does not read so.

Mr. NELSON. At the twenty-sixth line the bill provided this:

And as soon as such allotments have been made and certificates issued therefor, the said Indians to whom such allotments have been made shall be deemed to be full citizens of the United States, and entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens.

That is in exact conformity, as I remember, with the bill providing for the allotment in severalty, which is already the law.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. PAYSON. I think the bill is right as it is.

Mr. COBB. I would like to have a few moments without being confined by the narrow limits of an amendment, to make some general observations on the scope of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can only be heard by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last section of the bill is still pending. The gentleman can offer an amendment to that.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out the last word.

I am not antagonizing this bill, but to some of its provisions I can not agree. One of the very important provisions of the bill is, it is alleged, in the general law. If it is, so much the worse for the general law. This provision is that these people are to be made citizens of the United States, with all the rights and privileges of citizenship. That I object to; and the gentleman managing the bill is willing that the words conferring citizenship be stricken out, because, he says, we have a general law, under the operation of which they will become citizens. That being the case, we have on the statute-books of this country a law which provides that men who are wholly and totally unprepared for the duties and obligations of citizenship shall become citizens of the United States. I repeat, if that is the general law of the land, so much the worse for the general law.

There is one other feature of the bill to which I desire to call the attention of the House.

Mr. MACDONALD. Before the gentleman passes from the point to which he has just been adverting, I wish to ask him what he would suggest as an improvement when the Indians are placed on the lands in severalty.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to make a statement here?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman, but I want to say to him and to the committee that under the laws of Minnesota—and they have been such since it became a State—any Indian who severs his tribal relations, owns property, and pays taxes, is a citizen and can vote; and we have a great many Indians in that State who are voters. This bill gives them no more privileges than they have already in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. COBB. That suggests another feature of the bill. Its effect is to force the Indians to take their lands in severalty. If these Indians consent to be removed to the White Earth reservation, they are instantly on arrival compelled, under the operation of the bill, to take their lands in severalty; and thereby under the operation of the law to which the gentleman from Minnesota refers they become citizens of the United States.

I had an amendment which I will not urge, but will merely suggest it to the House. Other gentlemen may offer it if they see proper; but if they think the bill is all right, I do not desire to antagonize my friend from Minnesota. The truth is, he has such a persuasive, clever manner about him that I can hardly find it in my heart to say what I am saying now.

Mr. NELSON. Thank you.

Mr. COBB. If that gentleman were out of the way, I would sail into this bill more than I am doing. The amendment which I have prepared is to this effect, that after their removal to the White Earth reservation they shall not be compelled to take land in severalty without their consent. It goes on to provide how that consent is to be had. As the bill now stands, you force them to take land in severalty and you force them to become citizens of the United States, whether they desire to do so or not. I have heard it urged that there should be great liberality in the law under which foreigners can come here and be naturalized; but this is the first time I have heard that the rights, duties, and privileges of citizenship of the United States should be forced on men, whether they wanted them or not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If a man is born in this country citizenship is forced upon him without his consent. These Indians are born on this soil; why should they not become citizens?

Mr. COBB. They are born on this soil, but they are not born on the soil as the gentleman's children are. That is an evasion of the argument. If they were citizens already, born citizens, you would not require this legislation at all. They were born aliens, and legislation is required to make them citizens, and in this legislation provision should be made for ascertaining their qualifications to receive the high privilege of American citizenship. I pass on.

The proviso that has just been read is not objected to by the friends of the bill. I want to say, and it is fair to say, that these very points that I have been alluding to are in accord with the views of the Indian Office upon this subject. The Indian Office takes the position, as I understand it, that citizenship ought not to be forced upon these Indians; that their tribal relations should not be broken up or disturbed without their consent.

I will go with the friends of the bill this far: if the Indians consent to the destruction of their tribal relations let it be so, but to remove them upon this reservation, their consent being taken for removal and for nothing else, and then to say to them, "Whether you will consent or will not consent, you must become citizens and take your lands in severalty"—to take that course with them does not meet the assent of my judgment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to occupy the time of the House, but merely to state one thing, if the gentleman will allow me. This bill relates to a lot of little reservations, and before it can take effect two-thirds of the male adults on each reservation must consent. The bill, if it is passed, is nothing but a proposal to the Indians; if they don't like it they are not obliged to accept it, and acceptance requires the votes of two-thirds of the male adults.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 6 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear the amendment read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption law, or who has failed from any cause to perfect the title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under either of said laws, may make a second homestead entry under the provisions of this act.

Mr. MCRAE. I move to strike out all of section 6 after the word "further" in the eighteenth line and to insert what has just been read.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is, unless we know the effect.

Mr. MCRAE. It proposes to strike out the words "that settlers who have not had the benefit of the pre-emption laws shall be entitled to enter homesteads under the provisions of this act, notwithstanding they may previously have had the benefit of the homestead laws," and to insert in lieu thereof the amendment that has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman explain the effect of that amendment?

Mr. NELSON. Under the homestead law men get their land for nothing. Under this law they may take up homesteads, but they will have to pay a dollar an acre for the land. This amendment provides that people who have not had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption laws may obtain homesteads under this law by paying a dollar an acre. The bill we passed yesterday required a man to pay only 50 cents an acre, and this requires him to pay double as much, although these lands are farther north and in a colder country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But why should a man have two chances at the homestead law? That is not the general rule.

Mr. NELSON. The explanation is this: Under the homestead law as it is the settler gets the land without paying anything except the land-office fees; but under this law he has to pay for the land—a different kind of homestead in that respect.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then the effect will be that after a man has already taken a free homestead he will still be permitted to take a second one at a dollar an acre.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; by paying for it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would it not be better to keep these lands for people who have not got homesteads?

Mr. MCRAE. My amendment is in the direction of saving the land. The bill, as it comes from the committee, allows a man who may have proven up his title under the homestead law to take the benefit of this act, while my amendment gives it to him only in case he has never had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes. I prefer the gentleman's amendment to the original provision.

The amendment of Mr. MCRAE was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I left the House two hours ago, after another day had been fixed for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and inasmuch as the House had consented to assign another day, and a considerable portion of this day had already been exhausted, I presumed that there would be no consideration of this bill to-day. For that reason I was not present at the beginning of this discussion. Assuming that I still have the right to offer the amendment which I had designed to offer, I send it to the Clerk to be read.

Mr. PAYSON. Let it be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 3 add the following:

"Provided further, That no allotments in severalty shall be made and no sales of land had under the provisions of this act until three-fourths of the male adults of the Indians interested shall consent thereto; and the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations by which said commissioners shall ascertain their wishes; and if the Indians residing on the White Earth reservation, including those removed thereto under the provisions of this act, shall refuse to take land in severalty, then the said removed Indians shall be settled on said reservation in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to entertaining this amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment because I consider——

Mr. NELSON. If the amendment be accepted on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will that be satisfactory to the gentleman without any debate?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. On behalf of the committee I accept the amendment, and ask that the bill be modified accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will be considered as adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it be passed as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is put on that motion I wish to say a word. I made a suggestion that the duty proposed to be required of these commissioners might be performed by the inspectors already authorized by law for the Interior Department. But in the absence of information as to the character of their duties at this time or in the early future, I do not feel justified in offering such an amendment.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. NELSON, it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. ROGERS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, had directed him to report the same back with amendments, and with the recommendation that it be passed as amended.

Mr. NELSON. I call the previous question on agreeing to the amendments and ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote desired on each amendment?

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole may be voted on in gross.

There was no objection.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House adjourn.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 8184, reported yesterday from the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, be reprinted so as to include certain amendments which were omitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

REFUND OF DIRECT TAX OF 1861.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer for reference to the Committee on Rules the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, the 4th day of April, immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill No. 139, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and now upon the Calendar, providing for refunding the direct tax levied in 1861; but not to interfere with revenue bills, appropriations bills, or prior orders; and if displaced by any cause, then Wednesday of each subsequent week shall be so set apart and substituted therefor until the bill shall be considered.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this resolution offered for present consideration?

Mr. CASWELL. I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

MAURICE RUDDLESDEN.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to report a resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. McMILLIN. If this is presented merely for reference I do not object. I object to the presentation of any proposition now, except for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment to Maurice Ruddlesden, in one of the general appropriation bills, the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger at the rate of $3.60 per day from July 1, 1887, to June 30, 1888.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without any definite action now.

Mr. STEELE. I renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred, as indicated below:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 9, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I introduced a private bill, numbered 8250, for the relief of Jonathan L. Dobbs and others, which by mistake, it seems, was referred to the Committee on Claims. It should be referred to the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, and I ask that the correction be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with communications from the Acting Commissioner of the Land Office, supplemental reports of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on private land claims numbered 97, 100, 101, 102, 104, 123, and 153; which were severally referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PHELPS, for one week, on account of sickness; and to Mr. HUDD, for ten days, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. GLASS to print remarks in the RECORD on House bill No. 5030.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, by unanimous consent, the bill H. R. 8184, with certain amendments by the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, and accidentally omitted when the bill was reported, was ordered to be reprinted.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House requests of members to be excused from committee service as follows:

Mr. HERMANN, to be excused from service on the Committee on Manufactures; and

Mr. BUCHANAN, from service on the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims.

There being no objection, the excuses were granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. HERMANN, of Oregon, as a member of the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, in place of Mr. BUCHANAN, excused; and the appointment of Mr. BUCHANAN, of New Jersey, as a member of the Committee on Manufactures, in place of Mr. HERMANN, excused.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHAW. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3727) and put it upon its passage.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, this being private-bill day, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SHAW. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that demand for a few moments.

Mr. STEELE. This is the only day for private business, and I feel compelled to insist.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports on private bills.

Mr. LAIRD also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 2700) for the relief of Augustus Barnes; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back bills of the following titles with the recommendation that they lie on the table without prejudice, the cases being covered by a general bill:

A bill (H. R. 6481) for the relief of A. B. Ackerman;

A bill (H. R. 516) to remove the charge of desertion against Henry King;

A bill (H. R. 4112) for the relief of George W. Bolton;

A bill (H. R. 193) for the relief of James Coughlin alias Charles Andrews;

A bill (H. R. 3900) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Kasimer Seiler;

A bill (H. R. 6324) for the relief of Benjamin F. Shinn;

A bill (H. R. 954) to relieve John M. Hartman from the charge of desertion; and

A bill (H. R. 4261) for the relief of Martin V. Rowland.

B. C. KUEHLING.

Mr. HAYES, from the Committee on Accounts, presented a privileged report, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 23, 1888.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to B. C. Kuehling the sum of $40, being the amount due him for services rendered as locksmith of the House of Representatives from January 18 to January 28, 1886.

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by Mr. MATSON, authorizing and directing the Clerk of the House to pay out of the contingent fund to B. C. Kuehling the sum of $40 for services as locksmith of the House of Representatives from January 18 to January 28, 1886, have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

That on January 18, 1886, the then blacksmith died, and no appointment was made nor the vacancy filled until January 29, 1886, during which interval, and for a period of ten days, the said Kuehling filled the position with efficiency and performed the duties incident thereto, for which he has received no compensation; and that the sum of $40 is the usual and reasonable compensation for such service. But, as this is a deficiency of a prior Congress, and the amount is not properly chargeable to the contingent fund of the House, your committee report the said resolution back to the House and recommend that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to provide for the payment of said Kuehling as aforesaid in the general deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amount?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Forty dollars.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote upon the bill H. R 2952, the "omnibus bill," which was reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House on last Friday. I believe that is the first thing in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless the gentleman makes a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, that is the first thing in order.

Mr. LANHAM. This bill has been already considered in Committee of the Whole.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House certain papers in the case of George Otis, filed with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for the regular order.

WAR CLAIMS FOR STORES, SUPPLIES, ETC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of a bill which on last Friday was reported with amendments from the Committee of the Whole House, and which, in the absence of a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, now comes up as the first business in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act."

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, it is usual to take up a bill of this kind upon the rising of the Committee of the Whole, and not before going into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No member moved to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not care particularly about the matter.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the previous question.

Mr. REED. Does this bill include the claim of the Protestant Episcopal Seminary at Alexandria?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. REED. I should like to make some inquiry about the item to which I have just referred.

Mr. RICHARDSON. When the House adjourned last Friday afternoon, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] had demanded the previous question upon the pending amendments to this bill and on ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] had demanded a separate vote upon the item now mentioned by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. The vote was taken upon the demand for the previous question, the result being, if I remember correctly, ayes 52, noes 59, whereupon the gentleman from Kentucky called for tellers upon that vote. I asked at that moment that the previous question be considered as ordered, but the gentleman from Michigan suggested that the question go over until to-day. That is the present status of the case. So far as I am concerned, and so far as I understand the views of the gentleman from Kentucky, there is no objection to a separate vote on the pending amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. REED. That amendment was adopted in Committee of the Whole without previous notice; and there was no opportunity to ascertain precisely what the facts were. I have since examined the findings of the Court of Claims, and I find it stated that some official of the Government has said the sum allowed would be a suitable rent. I should like to know what was the situation of this institution with regard to the military lines of the United States, what possible rental could have been obtained for the buildings at that time, whether it was possible in any way for the seminary to continue its work, the buildings being so near the line, and therefore, whether any rent was in fairness and justice due. I do not find that the Court of Claims made any report which answers these questions. It seems that the Government expended money to put these buildings in proper order before they were delivered into the possession of the people to whom they belonged.

Mr. RICHARDSON. On last Friday afternoon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia was discussed for some time in Committee of the Whole and was adopted by a vote of, I believe, 102 in the affirmative and 56 in the negative, after, perhaps, an hour's discussion. I do not now undertake to make any point of order against further discussion, but I do submit that under the demand for the previous question, made by the gentleman from Kentucky, debate is not in order upon the amendment. If the gentleman from Kentucky withdraws that demand, I am willing, so far as I am concerned, that there should be further debate.

Mr. REED. It seems to me this matter should be thoroughly cleared up, because while $20,000 would be a very small affair for the United States, the decision on this question may involve a principle of great importance.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Kentucky made the demand for the previous question; and I can not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the demand for the previous question was made last Friday, and was voted down.

Mr. REED. In that event, the matter is open for discussion now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. REED. I desire to take the floor. I am willing to yield reasonable time to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to suggest, as a parliamentary point, that if the Chair will refer to the record, he will find that the gentleman from Kentucky demanded tellers on ordering the previous question. That is my understanding of the record. Of course I am ready to accept the ruling of the Chair on that point.

Mr. REED. I want this matter to be understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal shows that there was a majority against the demand for the previous question; and it stands in that position to-day. The Chair will recognize some gentleman who voted with the majority. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is recognized.

Mr. REED. I should be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Virginia for an explanation upon the points I have named.

Mr. LANHAM. I would be glad if some limitation as to the time to be occupied in this discussion could be agreed upon. The question was fully discussed last Friday.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, the point to which I desire to address myself and in regard to which I hope to have some information from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] is this. I have not the least objection in the world to paying $20,000 or any other sum which is justly due by the United States to any corporation or to any individual. I think it is the duty of the United States to pay its debts, but I think in the payment of a debt of this kind the facts ought to be made so clear that the principle upon which the payment is made shall be also clear to the House that pays it.

I have examined the findings of the Court of Claims. So far as I can judge from their findings, this was an institution having buildings so near the seat of war as to be almost, if not quite, at the seat of war, therefore practically incapable of use by anybody but the Government; that it was not possible in the presence of armed forces and in the situation in which the buildings and the forces of the country found themselves for the institution to go on with its work or for it to rent these buildings to anybody else.

Under those circumstances not only the principle upon which the payments should be made but the amount of the payment would be very seriously affected; and I should like to hear from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] as to the facts on those points which are not stated in the report of the Court of Claims.

Mr. LEE. I will answer the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. When the United States troops took possession of this building, as I understand it, it was in a flourishing condition. Its students were there; its professors were there in peaceable possession of the building and carrying on their daily lectures and duties. The United States Government found it had use for these buildings and it took possession of them. They returned them at the end of four years, and this claim is brought, as I tried to state clearly to the gentleman from Maine on Friday last, as a matter of justice and a matter of right; a claim recommended by the Surgeon-General of the Army of the United States, and, as I am told and believe to be a fact, by the Secretary of War himself.

I do not understand the two armies were so close to the line that it would have interfered with the prosecution of the operations of this institution. I can not recall to my mind but one time when there would have been any interruption, and that was after the first battle of Manassas. With that exception I can not recall a month or a week or a day when the proximity of the Confederate army would have interfered with the operations of this institution.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I voted the other day to ingraft this claim on the pending bill, because I was led to believe the matter had been referred to the Court of Claims with a view to the final action of that court with regard to it. On the contrary, I find it was simply referred to the Court of Claims in order that they might determine the value of this rental and as to its occupancy—referred on agreement—and therefore the court found nothing except as to the matters referred to that court by agreement.

I was also led to believe the Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton, had recommended the payment of this claim. I find, on the contrary, that is not the fact; that there is not in this report any recommendation by Mr. Stanton. I was led to infer the seminary and other buildings were not occupied and used for educational purposes. I find by the letter accompanying this report of George Suckley, brigade surgeon, that one of these buildings has until recently been occupied as a young ladies' boarding-school, evidently having the idea they were not after this used as a young ladies' boarding-school, and the students were not there.

Mr. LEE. These buildings have nothing to do with the young ladies' boarding-school, which is perhaps a mile away.

Mr. KENNEDY. In the bill herewith appended as a part and parcel of the bill, these articles are named as a part of the rent:

High School buildings (six in number) $1,200 per year, four years..... $4,800

I do not understand that the theological seminary and the high school attached to it ever had a young ladies' boarding-school attached to them. I may be mistaken.

Mr. LEE. The gentleman has been led unintentionally into error.

Mr. KENNEDY. Then somebody else must be in error, for this is included in the bill as a part of the claim.

Mr. LEE. I am satisfied that it is a mistake.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is a mistake of some importance so far as the interests of the United States Government are concerned, because it is embodied here in a claim which the Government is asked to pay.

Mr. LEE. They are not asked to pay so far as the ladies' seminary is concerned, as I understand it.

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand it to be a part and parcel of the bill.

Mr. LEE. The high school, or ladies' seminary, was separated at least a mile from this theological seminary.

Mr. KENNEDY. I can only speak of the facts as I find them embodied here in the bill and report. Mr. Speaker, I have acted heretofore in regard to this claim upon the presumption that this was a case against the Government acted upon by a court having jurisdiction, and which court had given judgment against the Government. I have always held it to be right that where the Government of the United States submits a question for judicial determination to a court selected by itself and officered by itself, that the judgment rendered by said court should be final, and that the Government should, in good faith, be bound by that judgment. But I do not find this to be such a case. There was no purpose to submit this to a final determination of the court; and the only question submitted to the court was whether or not this property was occupied by the Government during the time, and if it was so occupied what was the value of the occupancy. These questions were determined and agreed upon before they were submitted to that court at all, and they were found by the court upon an agreed state of facts. So that I do not understand the court found anything whatever in reference to the claim except these matters which had been submitted and agreed upon.

Now, sir, I am like the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], at all times ready to do justice to claimants and to pay whatever the Government of the United States justly owes. I call attention to the fact that there are numbers of honest debts now on the Calendars due by the Court of Claims, which should be paid and which I am ready to stand here and vote to pay. But here is a public building—a seminary or college, if you please—occupied by people who I believe have been disloyal to the Government, an institution whose students, I believe, went into the army of the Confederacy to fight battles against this Government, and they have no right to come here now, having shaken off their disloyalty, and ask to be reimbursed by this Government after their return. I repeat that all honest debts of the Government I shall stand here fearlessly voting to pay; but I do not believe this to be such a debt of the Government, or that under these circumstances and this pretended finding of the court it is a claim which the Government is honestly required to pay.

For these reasons I shall vote against it at this time, and trust it will not pass the House.

Mr. REED. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to this claim; and in order that the House may proceed understandingly I will send up and have read the third section of the Bowman act, it being the statute under which this claim was referred to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read as follows:

The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. You will see, Mr. Speaker, from the section of the statute which has just been read that this law absolutely prohibits jurisdiction to the Court of Claims for the use and occupation of real estate. I hold in my hand the petition filed in the Court of Claims in the pending case, from which I will read one single sentence:

That no rent has been paid your petitioner for the use and occupation of the above-named property, and that they claim a reasonable and just rent for the same is $21,800.

The petition then goes on to allege that this corporation, which is styled "The Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School in Virginia," never aided, abetted, or gave encouragement to rebellion against the Government of the United States. As I spoke of this on a former occasion I shall not do so now.

This is the original petition filed in the Court of Claims of the United States in this case. It was filed on the 31st day of January, 1885, twenty years after the war had closed, and it sets up a claim for the use and occupation of real property, as shown by the language of the petition itself.

The very law under which this claim is referred prohibits, in so many words, any such jurisdiction to the Court of Claims.

Like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY], all the character and standing this claim seemed to have in the House arose from the fact that it was stated in this House and it is stated in the bill itself that this claim had been found due by the Court of Claims.

It was stated here upon this floor over and over that this claim had been passed upon by the Court of Claims, and at the end of one of these bills it says in so many words:

Said amount having been found due by the Court of Claims.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, the Court of Claims never had jurisdiction of any such claim at all. The statute which I caused to be read expressly provides that the Court of Claims shall not have jurisdiction of any claim "for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States."

The Court of Claims had no right to make any findings whatever in regard to a claim for the use and occupation of real estate, as the very law under which it was assuming jurisdiction absolutely prohibits a claim of that kind being considered. No claim for the use and occupation of real property during the rebellion, by any part of the military forces, can be referred to the Court of Claims for determination. And yet this bill has been favorably reported to the House by the Committee on War Claims, and has passed the Committee of the Whole on the strength of the statements that this sum had been found due to this claimant by the Court of Claims.

If I am correct in my view, the question of loyalty does not enter into this case at all. It makes no manner of difference whether these men were loyal or disloyal so far as the Court of Claims is concerned, or any finding or pretended finding it has made. The question of loyalty only arises under the fourth section of the Bowman act, where a claim is made for supplies or stores. When a man makes a claim for supplies or stores he must establish his loyalty in order to give jurisdiction to the court. But this is not a claim for supplies or stores. This is a claim for rent, for the use and occupation of real estate. If it were a claim for supplies or stores it could be referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act, and there would then be no doubt about the jurisdiction of the court, provided the loyalty of the claimant was established. I want to say another thing. This is an old claim. It has been at the portals of the national Capitol, before Congresses and committees, for fifteen or twenty years.

I did not know this case was coming up so soon, and I was engaged up to the time when it was called in looking it up, and I have traced the claim back sixteen years and find that it was before the Forty-second Congress. It was introduced again in the Forty-third Congress, and again in the Forty-fifth Congress. In the Forty-fifth Congress it was taken from the Committee on War Claims and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, because the claim was supposed to be of an educational character. This committee made a favorable report, and that report and bill, which was just like the bill now under consideration, came into the House for consideration. It was considered; it was debated at very considerable length; speeches were made for it and against it.

This whole question of loyalty was gone over and the question as to whether Alexandria was loyal or disloyal territory was carefully considered. The question of jurisdiction which I now raise was not raised or discussed at that time, but the question whether Alexandria was under the control of the National Government by force of war or whether it was recognized loyal territory, where the people were adhering to the Government, was raised and considered. The loyalty of the seminary itself was considered.

The State of Virginia had seceded just two days before the Government took possession of these buildings. That State had gone out of the Union; it had gone out by vote and by proclamation. These trustees had gone out of the Union. Bishop Johns, who lived at the very door of these buildings, had gone out of the Union. He followed the fortunes and the flag of the rebellion. No single trustee was left behind to espouse the cause of his country. In that debate some one stated that this theological seminary and high school was so disloyal that the rats, even, escaped and joined the Confederacy.

I do not vouch for the truth of that assertion, but it was stated in the discussion; and men of the highest character asserted that this institution and the town of Alexandria, where Ellsworth, the first martyr of the war, fell, were disloyal; and I have heard it said more recently that neither the town nor the seminary had a loyal man connected with it in any official capacity. After this consideration the bill was defeated by a vote of 122 to 89.

Although the principle of res adjudicata may not apply to this House as it does to a court of justice, still this case has been adjudicated. It has been considered. It has had its day in court. It occupied the time of the National Congress, and was voted down by a large majority, and this, too, after it had had long and careful consideration. And I submit whether it is right when, as a gentleman has just said, there are hundreds of pending bills which have never been considered, meritorious bills, too, and which probably never will be considered in this House—whether it is right to reverse the decision of the Forty-fifth Congress and pass this bill? If we make this a precedent there never will be an end to the consideration of any claim. Claimants will simply remain here, and if defeated in one Congress will appeal to another, and committees and Congresses will be imposed upon by the persistency of claimants. Where a bill like this has had consideration once it seems to me that it has had its share of time, and we ought not disregard the decision of a former Congress.

There is another point to which I desire to call the attention of the House. The claim, as I said before, is for rent, "for use and occupation," the very thing which the law says shall never be paid by the General Government. The statute under which this claim, with many others, was referred to the Court of Claims of the United States makes this provision. Why, then, should this rent be paid? But if we had no such law as this, why should the Government pay rent for these buildings at a time when they could not have been occupied as a school or seminary? They did not seek to occupy them. Any such occupancy was impossible. It was in the theater of war. These buildings were within the lines of the fortifications. Alexandria was one great camp, and it was on hostile soil. The smoke of battle and the din of war were on every side. It was utterly impossible to have used these buildings for a school or an institution of learning, situated as they were on the border territory of two great armies.

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEE. Were not other institutions of learning in the city of Washington carried on during the war?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEE. And were not armies camped all around Washington?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Not in the city. But these buildings, seventeen in number, were within the lines of the fortifications, and they were used for army purposes after they had been abdicated and abandoned. The owners and proprietors had gone away voluntarily, because they renounced their allegiance to the United States. They did not come back and demand possession. The trustees never thought of using these buildings at that time, and probably never thought that they would ever be used again for school purposes. Other thoughts and other motives no doubt governed them at that time.

Mr. LEE. As I am informed, the gentleman is mistaken in that statement. I am sure he does not wish to make an erroneous statement.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. LEE. As I have stated, the school was in successful operation until it was taken possession of by the United States Government.

The professors were ordered out, and the schools were closed at the command and order, as I understand, of the United States commanding officer.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will be obliged to the gentleman if he will show me any evidence of that. I find no such information anywhere, nor any such statement in the discussion in the Forty-fifth Congress, but I find that these men went out of the building on the approach of the Union Army. The State had seceded only two days before, and these trustees followed the retreating Confederates.

Mr. LEE. Look at the report of the Court of Claims and see if it does not state what I have said.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will find it for me in the report I shall be glad to read it. I have not seen any such statement. I think, Mr. Speaker, we had better consider well what we are about to do, where we shall be led if we adopt the policy of paying for the use and occupation of real estate by the Army during the war of the rebellion. We shall have to follow Sherman to the sea. We shall have to follow Grant to Appomattox. We shall have to follow the armies of the United States up and down the Shenandoah Valley, and everywhere between the Mississippi and the Atlantic where the Union armies marched or fought we will find claims of this kind. If we are going to pay for the use and occupation of real estate, for the houses occupied, for the churches used as hospitals, for the forests cut down by the armies of the United States during the war—if we are going to pay for all these things we shall have a very large contract on our hands. Mr. Speaker, I insist that, so far as this claim is supposed to have any merit because it was referred to the Court of Claims, this delusion be removed. It had no right to go before that court; it never had any business there.

The Court of Claims had no right to consider it. They had no jurisdiction over it, and I am surprised that the Attorney-General never made that point when the case was pending. It seems to have been referred to the court by the committee with some two hundred other cases, doubtless by mistake. I presume the committee did not consider the fact that this was not the kind of a claim that was to be referred to that court. It probably did not occur to them at the time that it was the very kind of claim that was prohibited from being so referred.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this claim was referred to the Court of Claims by the Committee on War Claims or by a special act of Congress? If it was referred by a special act, that act might have conferred jurisdiction upon the court to pass upon the case.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It was referred to the Court of Claims in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress by the Committee on War Claims with more than two hundred others. I have now in my hand the reference of it by the committee, among other claims. I hold the list in my hand.

Mr. BOWDEN. Does not the gentleman admit that, in view of the decisions of the United States courts that this very portion of the State of Virginia was not a seat of war, and that the whole of the country that was represented in what was known as the Peirpont government was as much a part of the United States as any part north of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. REED. I will give the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOWDEN] time to explain that view if he desires it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I say to the gentleman that the whole State of Virginia had seceded and gone out of the Union, and was outside so far as that act could make it so, except in so far as the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln restored certain portions of it, in which this was not included.

Mr. BOWDEN. Of which this was a part.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. This was rebellious territory; it was the seat of war; it was the place to which our armies had marched, and where they were located while they were engaged in carrying on the war for the restoration of the Union.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LEE rose.

Mr. REED. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. LEE. Only a few minutes.

Mr. REED. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to go over the same argument that I made here a week ago to-day, but I will restate it briefly. We claim that the region under discussion was United States territory during the whole war, just as much so as the city of Washington or New York or Philadelphia, and that if any property taken for the use of the United States armies in any section of the United States is justly paid for, it would be equally just to pay for this property which they occupied and used across the Potomac River.

Now, sir, in reply to my friend who has just taken his seat [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], I wish to say that it has been stated to me upon authority, and I believe it to be true—I was not there, but I believe it to be true—that when the United States Government took possession of these buildings the school was in successful operation, the institution was carrying on its regular business, and I find in the report of the Court of Claims a letter from Brigade Surgeon George Suckley, written on the 25th of August, 1861.

On that day Brigade Surgeon George Suckley addressed the following communication to the medical director, which was approved and carried into effect in the manner indicated by the letters following:

"HEADQUARTERS BRIGADE NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS,
"Near Alexandria, August 25, 1861.

"SIR: I have the honor to report that there are now within the limits of the encampment of this brigade several buildings in every way suitable for hospital purposes. One, the Episcopal Theological Seminary, is a fine, large, new building, in a commanding and healthy situation, capable of giving good accommodation to at least two hundred men. Another has until recently been occupied as a young ladies' boarding-school.

I would say to my friend that that building had no connection whatever with the theological seminary. It simply happened to be within the limits of this brigade, just as the grounds of the theological seminary were.

"It contains several good-sized rooms suitable for offices, etc., and in addition a large dormitory, containing 80 bedsteads, with mattresses, etc.

"With the material we thus have at hand, one of the principal objections against the establishment of a brigade hospital—its cost to the Government—is almost entirely done away with; and when we consider the advantages to be gained by having such a hospital in this particular brigade, I can hardly doubt but that the commanding general will, upon your recommendation, order its recognition.

* * * * * * *

"Besides, I do not believe that for healthiness of locality or excellence and suitableness of buildings the general hospital at Alexandria can compare with the seminary buildings in our camp. This I understood Dr. Magruder, who visited us yesterday as acting medical inspector, is also his opinion. Dr. Magruder went further in saying that, as a hospital building, the theological seminary exceeds in structure and advantages any other now in use in the Department of the Potomac.

"I am, sir,

"GEORGE SUCKLEY,
"Brigade Surgeon.

"Surgeon CHARLES S. TRIPLER, U. S. A.

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
"MEDICAL DIRECTOR'S OFFICE,
"Washington, August 28, 1861.

"SIR: Your letter of August 25 is received. We are authorized to establish the hospital you propose, and consider it an aggregation of the regimental hospitals of your brigade. The sick will be attended to by the medical officers of the several regiments under your supervision.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"CH. S. TRIPLER,

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether this claim is included in the bill reported by the Committee on War Claims to the House?

Mr. LEE. It is an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Has this claim ever been considered by the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. LEE. I understand it has, and that it is sustained by a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. REED. In this Congress?

Mr. LEE. That is my understanding. The chairman of that committee [Mr. STONE, of Kentucky] is present and can answer the question.

Mr. REED. I can find no such report.

Mr. LEE. The chairman of the committee can state how the matter is.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I have been endeavoring to find some report from a committee submitting this matter to the House, and have not found any.

Mr. LEE. Well, the chairman of the committee will answer as to that.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] to say that those who were occupying these buildings at the time they were taken possession of by the Government were ministers of the gospel, were at the head of a theological seminary.

Mr. LEE. That is my understanding.

Mr. KENNEDY. And that they were praying alike for Federals and Confederates.

Mr. LEE. I do not think it is worth while now to go into that subject.

Mr. KENNEDY. I find in the report a letter from William Sparrow, which states——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The five minutes of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] have expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to allow me one minute for a brief explanation.

Mr. REED. I yield one minute.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Before the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] sits down I wish to ask him another question.

Mr. REED. I give the gentleman from Virginia five minutes more.

Mr. LEE. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia this question: If this claim has been considered by the appropriate committee and reported in some other bill, why are we now considering it upon this bill? Why should the legislation proposed in the pending bill be lumbered up or weighted down by this claim?

Mr. LEE. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. STEELE. When this claim was offered as an amendment in Committee of the Whole a point of order was made upon it, which the Chair sustained; and then the amendment was admitted by unanimous consent.

Mr. LEE. I hope these interruptions will not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask just one moment.

Mr. LEE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] the gentleman from Virginia made a reply which was misleading, though of course the gentleman from Virginia, as I know, had no such intention. But in point of fact, as I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, this claim has not been reported by the Committee on War Claims in this Congress, though it was reported by that committee in the Forty-ninth Congress. The gentleman from Virginia said he thought the claim had been reported in this Congress. It has not, as I understand, been referred to that committee at this session. There is no pending bill for the payment of this claim.

Mr. LEE. I said I was willing the chairman of the committee should answer that question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. He has informed me that the claim has not been reported in this Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether it would not be better to postpone the further consideration of this claim until we can get a report from the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY. I desire to know this: If the ministers of the gospel who are stated to have been in charge of this institution were inside the Union lines, were praying for both sides alike, and were loyal, why was it necessary for them to take the oath of allegiance at the end of the war?

Mr. LEE. Because they were required to do it, I suppose.

Mr. KENNEDY. Was that an indication of their loyalty during the time those buildings were occupied?

Mr. LEE. At the close of the war there were a great many forms we were required to go through with which we thought unnecessary.

Mr. KENNEDY. I submit that the fact I have mentioned was one indication of the disloyalty of those men.

Mr. LEE. No, sir; I should not think so. I do not know that a corporation can be disloyal, especially a theological corporation.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am talking of those persons who were in charge of the institution at the time of the war.

Mr. LEE. I will say to the gentleman that the three professors who had entire charge of the educational affairs of the seminary were Dr. William Sparrow, from the State of Massachusetts; Dr. Joseph Packard, from the State of Maine, and Dr. May, from the State of Pennsylvania. I should think the localities from which these gentlemen came would be a sufficient answer as to their loyalty.

Mr. KENNEDY. The letter from Mr. Sparrow, to which I have referred, says, "the bishop and all the other trustees of the seminary" took the oath of allegiance.

Mr. LEE. Well, possibly the bishop was a trustee; I really do not know who the trustees were. Dr. May, Dr. Sparrow, and Dr. Packard were the professors.

Mr. KENNEDY. Let me read this brief extract from the report:

> Perhaps it may be proper for me to add that the bishop and all the other trustees of the seminary, so far as I know or believe, have qualified themselves to act in this official capacity by taking the oath of allegiance to the United States.
>
> * * * * * * *
> I am, dear sir, your friend and servant,
>
> WILLIAM SPARROW.
> Hon. Secretary STANTON,
> Washington.

Mr. LEE. Well, the gentleman knows, I presume, that just after the war there were a great many oaths required which some gentlemen may have thought unnecessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] will permit me to say that it is not a matter of any importance whether these trustees were loyal or disloyal——

Mr. LEE. I did not wish to go into that.

Mr. SPOONER. Because they were trustees for the benefit of the cestui que trust.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who was the cestui que trust?

Mr. SPOONER. Those for whose benefit the institution was run.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who were they?

Mr. SPOONER. The theological students.

Mr. KENNEDY. They were in the rebel army.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; on the contrary, many of them were from the Northern States, some from my own State. As I understand, a large proportion of them were from the Northern States.

Mr. LEE. From the catalogue of the seminary it appears as a fact that of the students who have been graduated at the institution more were from what were formerly known as the Northern States than from the Southern States. If there was any politics or any sectionalism in this institution it is news to me.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I ask whether the gentleman from Virginia would not be willing to postpone the consideration of this claim until it has been reported upon by a committee.

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. LEE. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to put himself in my place. Suppose he had a bill or a claim thus far advanced through the House, being so near the fruition of his hope and the accomplishment of what he considered justice, would he regard it as reasonable and right if I should ask him to withdraw the claim from the consideration of the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. If I had a bill which I thought would not stand the test of an examination by a committee——

Mr. REED. We are giving this claim "the test of an examination" here. Let us be fair about this matter.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the position of the gentleman from Virginia, he does not now ask the payment of this claim upon the basis of any decision which the Court of Claims may have made or anything that the court ever did; he bases the right to have this claim paid on the ground that this theological seminary was not on insurrectionary territory. I will answer his question fully by an authority that ought not to be questioned, and I will meet the position he now takes by a case clearly in point. The chairman of the Committee on War Claims in the Forty-third Congress, on the 22d of June, 1874, made a report in regard to the very point which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] now makes, and the case is a much stronger one than his. An officer of the Government took possession of the buildings of the Mount Vernon Manufacturing Company, of Alexandria, Va., under a promise to pay a stipulated price for their use and occupancy.

This, too, was a corporation, and if this is any advantage this case has the benefit of it. This property is also located at Alexandria, and was used during the same period for a prison in which to confine rebel prisoners. It was held, by the Forty-third Congress, that this rent could not be paid, although there was an express contract to pay it, for the reason that Alexandria was in a State proclaimed in insurrection and that this property was occupied during flagrant war. The President's proclamations did not remove the embarrassment the least, as Alexandria was not rescued from the insurrectionary territory.

This case is in point and will answer the gentleman's position and show a precedent that is worthy of consideration by this House, and it shows conclusively that Alexandria was not considered loyal territory.

This claim was not based on a mere matter of occupancy, but was based on a contract under which the Government took possession of it and held it and occupied it. Yet, sir, and notwithstanding this, the Forty-third Congress denied payment of the claim, under the law of 1867, upon the ground that the property was on insurrectionary ground. That was the decision of the Forty-third Congress upon a claim involving the identical question which is now before this House; and if that decision was right—and there must be very little doubt about it, as the city of Alexandria was certainly then in the Southern Confederacy and was not embraced in the twenty-eight or twenty-nine counties which constituted West Virginia—is it possible that we have no right to pay for the use and occupancy of a building in Alexandria, taken possession of under a contract, and yet have a right to pay for a building taken possession of after the trustees had gone into the rebellion, both being corporations and both in the same locality?

Mr. Speaker, in regard to the paragraph which the gentleman from Ohio read, which showed that the board of trustees took the oath of allegiance, I desire to say that no demand was made upon them to do so, but this statement as to the oath of loyalty was incorporated in their application for the possession of the buildings in July, 1865, when the property was still in the possession of the Government and when they desired to repossess it. The proprietors desired to reoccupy it, and made an application to get possession of it, but not a word was said in that application about rent. All they then wanted was the property. It is shown in claimant's petition that the Government spent $900 in repairs and in putting the buildings in order before turning them over to the trustees.

I have no object in presenting these statements beyond a desire to state the facts as they exist, and to put the House on its guard in relation to a precedent that might be dangerous in the future. And as these facts had not been stated by those in charge of the bill, I deemed it proper to present them.

Mr. REED. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, after this long debate, and after this interval of a week has elapsed, there seems to be no concentrated opinion as to the facts in this case. I admonish the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE] in placing his claim on the new and distinct ground he occupies to-day he is hazarding a result which I am sure he would not seek. I think that ultimately we will conclude there ought to be an examination and report from the Committee on War Claims on this particular item or claim.

To begin with, the gentleman states it is his opinion that at the time this occupancy was begun by the Government these buildings were in occupation of this corporation, and their business of delivering lectures and teaching their students was going on. The gentleman must be mistaken, for two reasons: first, it was in August, and I should like to know when a theological seminary down in Virginia was going on with their regular business on the 25th day of August? In the next place, I find in a report at the time the hospital was turned over to the Government, the officer in charge, and who applied for authority to take the property, says he has no knowledge, when he was ready to return it, whether or not any of the effects now in the hospital were in it at the time they took possession, showing that it was an occupation of empty buildings standing there, and that was all there was of it.

Again, when this surgeon of New Jersey volunteers made his application to the War Department for authority to take possession of this building, what he does not say is conclusive to my mind of the facts which I believe to be true. His silence is stronger affirmation of our position than any other fact which the record discloses. It can not be presumed fairly that he failed to make known the most important fact connected with the proposed occupation.

He says:

I have the honor to report that there are now within the limits of the encampment of this brigade several buildings, etc.

He then goes on and simply asks leave to take possession of the buildings in question for the purpose specified. Now, does anybody believe that if there had been a bishop there, if there had been students or professors or any organized body in charge of that institution, that he would have omitted to say to the War Department that it is in the occupation of a corps of theological teachers?

It is not to be supposed for a moment; and I conclusively assume therefore the facts to be against the condition of affairs assumed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LEE], apparently without personal knowledge.

Now, it was stated the other day that the State of Virginia had not seceded at that date, that she did not go out until June, as I understood. That is my understanding of history whatever may be the understanding of gentlemen who were there. The actual vote upon the ordinance of secession did not take place until the 25th of June. I admit, Mr. Speaker, and it is a matter of history, and as such I may well refer to it, that while it is true no ordinance of secession had been agreed to by the people of Virginia, General Robert E. Lee did issue an order assuming command of the army on the 23d day of April, 1861; and it is a matter of history that can not be disputed, that at that time the State of Virginia was for all purposes of the Confederacy out of the Union and did not need to depend upon the ordinance of secession to be agreed upon in convention or ratified by the people. So when you go into these Virginia dates you will find that there was most likely decided irregularity in procedure.

Men were carried out of the Union by the force of the operations of their States, we are told, when in point of fact the State was in the Union and they were carrying the flag out of the Union in advance of any action of the State. Leading and distinguished statesmen and soldiers went out ahead and beckoned to their States to follow on. When secession collapsed and the terrible blow of failure came they plead in mitigation that they "went with their States."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I will yield the gentleman two minutes longer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire now further to say, Mr. Speaker, that so far as the question of loyalty is concerned, this claim is not authorized by the report of the Court of Claims. They did not pass upon it.

Mr. LEE. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. GROSVENOR. If it does not come out of my time, as it is very brief, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEE. On the question of the loyalty of a corporation I would like to have the gentleman's opinion. I do not profess to be lawyer enough myself to advise upon it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am coming to that. Is it possible at this late day that it is necessary to argue that the members of a corporation, its managers, directors, trustees, whatever they may call themselves or whoever they are, may give the character of disloyalty to the corporation? Why, gentlemen say, "What can a corporation do?" I will tell them: A corporation can violate the police regulations of this city and be fined for it; a corporation may sell liquor in violation of the law and be fined; a corporation may violate the laws of the country anywhere and everywhere and be fined, and their officers imprisoned for it. The laws of this country attach to and impute to the intangible thing known as a corporation the conduct of the officers of the corporation, in so far as their acts involve a violation of the laws of the country.

Now a word further. Why do not these gentlemen tell us who this corporation was? They have mentioned three distinguished teachers hired from Northern States to come down here to teach. Will they not give us the statement of when these men were last paid? I will undertake to say they never had a dollar paid during the summer of 1861, nor again until after 1865, and their loyalty or disloyalty has no possible effect upon the question under consideration. The question is, who was this corporation? Who were its members? What are their names? Why after all this week of delay do not gentlemen tell us? I think if we could get their names we should find them with a variety of prefixes to them. We should find them with general so-and-so, and colonel so-and-so, and doubtless would find that their names stand very high up on the scrolls of fame in the annals of the Southern Confederacy. I protest against the payment of this claim. I denounce it as a claim for damages and remuneration for the ravages of war. It belongs to a class of claims dangerous in character, and I assert that the payment of this claim will open the door to an endless line of claims, such as we have never paid and never ought to pay. It will herald the dawning of the day we have so long foretold.

You may as well come and ask for pay for the rental of the hotel where Ellsworth fell. You may as well ask for damages because the blood of Ellsworth trickled upon the floor of that building. I protest—and it is the last word I have to say about it—by the authority of the concurrent action of this Government from the beginning of these claims down to the present time; I protest against the payment of this claim, dangerous as a precedent and without merit upon its own showing. It is a claim in fact that ought to be stated to be a payment of $20,000 for the preservation in good condition of buildings that would inevitably have been destroyed but for the protecting hand of the Government, and which had been abandoned by their officers and owners, who had gone into the rebel army and were fighting the Government.

Mr. REED. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL].

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] that this claim is not covered by the Bowman act, I wish to state that it is for rent and occupation, and not for the destruction or damage of property. The gentleman will see the distinction.

As to the point that this case has never been passed upon by a committee of the House, I wish to state to him that it was passed upon by the Committee on War Claims in the last House—Forty-ninth Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this property were located in any Northern State, not in rebellion or insurrection, there could be no question as to the right of these parties to recover.

I propose to produce right now the decision of the Court of Claims which shows that this was loyal territory from July, 1861, to the close of the war. I have before me the decision in the case of Heflebower vs. The United States, 21 Court of Claims Reports, 1885–'86. After speaking of the various kinds of territory, some in insurrection, some not in insurrection, some held by the Army, and as long as held by the Army loyal, the court goes on to say.

But there was still another kind of territory which has already been a subject of consideration: a narrow strip of Virginia embracing the towns of Alexandria and Norfolk, which was declared in insurrection, but which almost immediately was recovered by the forces of the Government. The peculiarity of its status is that within it sat the recognized loyal government of Virginia, the only government which consented to the cession of West Virginia, and that each of the Houses of Congress recognized it as loyal territory by the admission of Senators and Representatives as early as July, 1861.

So that the Congress of the United States, according to this decision and according to the language of this judge of the Court of Claims, recognized this as loyal territory as early as July, 1861, and admitted representatives in both branches of Congress from that territory.

This property was not occupied until August, 1861, one month or more after this had been recognized as loyal territory by the admission of representatives on this floor and in the other branch of Congress.

If this be the case, can there be any question as to the right of these parties to recover against the Government? As far as the disloyalty of the trustees is concerned, I know not, nor do I care. I lay down the broad proposition that no matter how disloyal trustees may be that can not affect the beneficiaries under the trust. These parties held this seminary for church purposes. It belonged to the Episcopal Church of the United States, as I understand; and I do not suppose there has ever been any decision holding that the Episcopal Church of the United States was disloyal. These parties were mere trustees, holding the property for the benefit of the church and for church purposes.

Then, if it was loyal territory, I repeat, according to the decision of this court and according to the decisions of the Congress of the United States, from July, 1861, on until the close of the war, it was certainly loyal territory in August, 1861, when this property was taken possession of by the Union troops, by the United States Government.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. In what county was this property situated?

Mr. O'FERRALL. In the county of Alexandria.

Mr. BURROWS. Does my friend know that a proclamation was issued in 1862 by Abraham Lincoln, declaring what States were in insurrection against the Government of the United States, and that that proclamation did not exempt the county of Alexandria?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do. I know there was a proclamation issued which embraced a number of counties now known as West Virginia, and two counties afterwards were added, I believe the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson; but here was the Congress of the United States, which was above the President, holding that this territory across the river, within the picket-lines of the city of Washington, was loyal territory. I hold that is over and above any proclamation of the President.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Why was it that the claim of the Mount Vernon Manufacturing Company, situated in the same territory as this, was never paid?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I am not familiar with that claim and can not answer the gentleman's question. If I had an opportunity of examining the case, I might be able to answer it and answer it satisfactorily.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me another word? I want to get at the facts. Under the proclamation of July, 1862, this territory in which this property is situated was declared by the President of the United States to be hostile territory. In the same case from which the gentleman from Virginia read the court said the responsibility of declaring what portions of the country were in insurrection and when the insurrection came to an end belonged to the President; that it rests with the Executive to determine what is hostile territory.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I do not see that that answers what I have read from the decision of the court, or that it meets the fact that Congress itself recognized these representatives as from loyal territory, and that the State Legislature which granted consent to the formation of West Virginia sat in the city of Alexandria.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask him a question before he begins his remarks?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to make the point that the Court of Claims had no jurisdiction of this case. The question I wish to ask, and which I would like answered for my own information, is this: Who determines the question of jurisdiction under the provisions of the Bowman act?

In the third section of the act it is provided that the court shall not have jurisdiction in certain cases. My understanding of the law is that, whenever a provision of that sort is inserted in a statute——

Mr. REED I think, Mr. Speaker, that I may be able to answer that question in the natural course of what I intend to say. I beg to say to the House that in starting this discussion I had no other purpose than to cause the facts of the case to be brought out, both those which I had found upon examination and those which had been ascertained by other gentlemen upon their examination, and I approached it with a very earnest desire to vote for the bill. I have listened to the debate and have freely accorded time to gentlemen on the other side, and I want to state now in a few words the reasons why I think it is somewhat dangerous to pass this bill. I do not feel that the question of loyalty or disloyalty on the part of the trustees of the seminary takes any great, if any real part at all, in the discussion.

The question is as to the liability of the Government under a certain state of facts. In peaceful territory, where civil laws are having their full weight and are carried out to their full extent, a government, in time of war as in time of peace, pays for whatever it takes; but when territory is occupied by the Government in a hostile manner, occupied by its armies, then the question is whether property in the actual occupation of the army, surrounded by troops, is to be paid for by the people who are carrying on the war. I apprehend that that is farther than the United States has ever been willing to go.

It certainly was a great misfortune that this seminary was not allowed to conduct its work. It certainly was a great misfortune that throughout the South many churches were closed and many public buildings were occupied by hostile armies or for army purposes. While that is true, under the general laws of war it does not give any right to compensation. And why? It is because the state of war is such that no nation, as long as it settles its disputes by war, can permit itself, if it is successful, to pay damages or rentals for use and occupation by its troops. Anybody will perceive at once that if the fact of occupation by the Army is to be the foundation for the payment of rent we might even have to pay rent for the fields and the territory occupied by the troops in actual combat. Nobody can afford to go to that extent. No community can afford to pay such losses.

It is utterly impossible for the losses of war to be made up. They must fall where the chances of war cause them to fall. And I have felt for a great many years that these questions of war damage ought to have been regarded by the parties who have suffered as absolutely at rest, that they ought to rest where they fell, that we ought to have an end of them, and that we ought not to permit ourselves, by allowing precedents to be established, to commit the country to the payment of obligations which no other nation has ever allowed itself to assume.

This claim presents itself under an alluring guise. This is an appropriation for the payment of $20,000 to a theological seminary which certainly could not have continued its operations on the theater of war while war was flagrant. The corporation therefore has lost absolutely nothing. The Government has preserved its buildings, and when the war ceased the Government turned over those buildings to the corporation. So that the proposition nakedly before us is really to present $20,000 to this corporation on account of its being deprived of the use of its buildings by the operations of war and on account of the occupancy by the Army of those buildings at a time when the corporation could have made no other use of them.

It is said that there is a decision of the Court of Claims on this subject, but if anybody will examine it he will see that one element of a decision is absolutely lacking. A decision of a court is the discovery of the facts and the application of the law of the case to them. Now, the court in this case have found certain facts, but they have made no statement as to the law appertaining to them.

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman allow me a question just there?

Mr. REED. If the House will give me time I will.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have the right to take the floor now, but if the time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has expired I will yield him whatever additional time he requires, and will then resume the floor.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says there is no finding as to the law. Is that required under the Bowman act?

Mr. REED. I suppose that if the court is to find at all it is to find the law as well as the fact.

Mr. COBB. Is it not true that under the provisions of the Bowman act the court has nothing to do with the application of the law to the facts, but has only to ascertain certain facts? Such is my impression.

Mr. REED. Well, if that is the case, then we are to apply the law to the facts.

Mr. COBB. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Somebody has got to do it. A decision is the result of the marriage of law and fact.

Mr. COBB. Of course, in finding the facts the court is governed by the ordinary rules of evidence as they are applied in practice; but under the Bowman act it has no power to so apply the law to the facts ascertained as to have a resultant judgment or anything in the nature of it. That is what I mean.

Mr. REED. Then if this is not a judgment in any way binding on us except in so far as the facts may coerce us when applied to our views of the law, it comes to the same thing.

Mr. COBB. That is true; but the law is not in dispute in this case. After the facts are ascertained the law to be applied to them is well recognized. If the gentleman has time enough, I would like to have his views on the questions I have presented. The gentleman from Ohio raises a question as to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims under the third section of the Bowman act. Now, that third section describes what cases shall not be brought within the provisions of the act, and consequently determines what cases shall not be heard by the Court of Claims under the act. The question I wish to submit to the gentleman is this: Where an act of this character prescribes the jurisdiction of the court, and the question of jurisdiction is to be determined by the court upon the ascertainment of facts (the case not being one where jurisdiction, or the want of it, appears upon the face of the record), where, in other words, certain facts are to be ascertained by the court from evidence adduced before jurisdiction attaches, and the Court of Claims, after the ascertainment of these facts, determines that it has jurisdiction, is not that decision final, unless the question goes to an appellate court?

Mr. REED. I suppose it is as final as any decision of any court would be upon a member of Congress. I am not answering for the purpose of evading the gentleman's question in any way, but I do not know any other answer I can give.

Mr. COBB. I submit if the gentleman's answer is not an evasion in fact?

Mr. REED. No; I do not think it is.

Mr. COBB. Of course Congress in the exercise of its power of appropriation is all-powerful to obey or not obey the mandate of any court. It may appropriate or not appropriate money to pay the judgment of a court. This is not a question of power, but of propriety merely.

Mr. REED. The gentleman will allow me to suggest it is absolutely immaterial whether I answer his question one way or another, because this judgment of the court if binding upon us at all is binding only for what it purports to be, and that is upon the facts so far as they are found.

Mr. COBB. Certainly; that is the point. I do not contend that the judgment, or rather the finding of facts, has any binding legal force. Now allow me a moment, for I want to hear from the gentleman upon these questions.

This Bowman act, as I understand, was passed for a certain purpose—to relieve Congress and the committees of Congress from inquiry into and ascertainment of certain facts which arise in many cases, to transfer that duty to the Court of Claims. The presumption, it seems to me, naturally arises that when a proper case has been presented to the Court of Claims and it has found the facts, that finding has some binding force upon this House; not binding as a judgment, to be sure, because we can go behind the findings if we see proper to make an original investigation into the facts. That I admit.

But the finding is at least persuasive to us as to the correctness of the facts as found by the court, and should be followed unless there are reasons why an original investigation should be undertaken by this House. Is not that true?

Mr. REED. I should be inclined to agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. Very well. Then here are certain facts which have been submitted to the Court of Claims. The first question which met the court upon the submission of this case was, "Has this court jurisdiction to find these facts?" because in certain cases specified in the act there is no jurisdiction in the Court of Claims even to go into an inquiry of fact. The gentleman understands that to be true. Now, this court did go into the inquiry of fact. Before it went into that inquiry it had necessarily to determine that it had jurisdiction to make the inquiry. Therefore the point made by the gentleman from Ohio has no application here, the court itself having determined it had jurisdiction and had the power to so determine under the act and under the general principle of law to which I have called attention.

Now, the point is not whether this Congress has power to set aside this finding, but whether we, as a House of Representatives of the United States, ought to disregard this finding without the evidence to induce us to set it aside. That is the whole question. Here is the case. The question of jurisdiction having been determined, the court went on to decide all the questions, upon the decision of which the duty and the obligation of the Government of the United States rest to pay this claim. Now, why shall we go behind the finding of the court? Are there any reasons which call upon us to disregard the finding of the Court of Claims and go behind it to institute an original investigation, and thus set aside this whole process which has been gone over under the operation of the Bowman act? That is the question.

This further, to avoid misapprehension. It was expected, I hold, that when the Court of Claims acted in a case presented in accordance with the provisions of the Bowman act its findings would be received by Congress and made the basis of legislation, unless reasons appeared sufficient to authorize these findings to be disregarded. At the same time it must be admitted that in strictness the proceedings of the court under the provisions of the act are advisory merely.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman from Maine will yield——

Mr. REED. Oh, yes. I seem merely to have been a figure on which to hang the speeches of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB]. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the gentleman from Virginia desires three or four minutes. I sought the floor to move the previous question, but am willing the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] shall occupy the floor for the remainder of the hour, if he desires to do so.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I do not propose to accept any time from any one. I reported this bill from the committee, and I think I am entitled to the floor in my own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] will yield me a portion of his time.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I take the floor for the purpose of making one statement in reply to a question which has been asked, and then moving the previous question. The question was asked—and the confusion in the House at the time deprived me of the opportunity to answer it—whether a report has been made on this case by the Committee on War Claims at this session. The Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress referred this bill to the Court of Claims. A report was made in the Forty-ninth Congress to the House of Representatives by the Court of Claims, and it was referred to the Committee on War Claims. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] in that Congress was instructed to report the bill favorably back to the House, and it went on the Calendar. The matter remained in that condition, and it went on what is known as the Court of Claims Calendar. A bill was introduced for the purpose of paying this very claim and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the Committee on War Claims of the Fiftieth Congress instructed me to report that bill back to the House with the expression of opinion it ought to pass. Before that report could be made, however, the discussion took place last Friday in the Committee of the Whole, when it was offered as an amendment to the omnibus bill, which we had already reported. Then I thought it was unnecessary to make that report to the House as directed by the Committee on War Claims. That is the condition the claim stands in. It was recommended by the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress on a report of the Court of Claims; it was recommended by the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-ninth Congress, and again by the Fiftieth Congress. That is exactly the situation of the case now. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LEE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia for five minutes.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire five minutes to reply to gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. One said this institution was abandoned when taken possession of by the United States troops. I am confident that is not so. It is possible there may have been a vacation there in the month of August, but if so the buildings and grounds were in charge of the regular officers and ready at the regular time to resume operation.

I do not desire, as I have said on this floor, to go over the same argument, but the United States Government has paid claims, and certainly no more just than this, within the same territory. I called the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to those claims last Saturday—claims in the city of Alexandria, claims in Kentucky, claims in Tennessee, claims in the city of Washington, within the same territory, bound by the same lines of steel which held this territory across the Potomac.

The chairman of the Committee on War Claims has already satisfied the House as to the status of this claim before that committee. It was reported, as I understand, in the Forty-ninth Congress to this House favorably if not by a unanimous report, and as the gentleman from Kentucky has just said, he was instructed in this Congress to report it back favorably.

The gentlemen on the other side also made the point it was impossible to carry this institution on because of its propinquity to the seat of war. I answer the gentlemen and ask them whether, if it were possible for these buildings to be occupied as a hospital for the protection of the wounded and sick, why could not lectures be held there under the same protection and by the same authority? As to the question of loyalty, I do not propose to go into it. They were loyal not to an earthly but to a celestial power. They did not go forth to fight the battles of their Great Chieftain with the red banners of terrestrial war, but carried the white flag of peace uplifted by their Great Captain now almost two thousand years ago.

It was said by one of the greatest soldiers of modern times in the very zenith of his power that a million men would spring to arms at his command and rush joyfully to death at his bidding, and yet, sir, hardly more than half a century has passed and to-day his followers would hardly dare unfurl his banners in the capital of his country. The Great Founder of the school of which this institution is a part has been dead nearly twenty centuries, and you now number his followers by millions, and to-day, as their forefathers did, they would go fearlessly amidst the storm and shell of battle or to the stake for the principles which they maintain.

Even, sir, in the barbarous days of early history we have found the church to be the refuge for the humblest citizen and for the culprit; and I had hoped to-day, in this, the nineteenth century, almost at the boasted zenith of our civilization, that this subject would have received at the hands of this intelligent House a more graceful consideration on the floor than it has had.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I now demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A separate vote is demanded on the amendment appropriating $20,000 for the theological seminary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments of the committee on which a separate vote is not demanded.

The several amendments were read and agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 to the trustees of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School in Virginia, said amount having been found due them by the Court of Claims for rent due them for the use of their buildings for hospital purposes from May, 1861, to August, 1865."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I demand the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 96, not voting 98; as follows:

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. GUENTHER, on this vote.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. WHITTHORNE, on this bill.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The affirmative vote being counted, there were—ayes 26; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. PAYSON and Mr. SOWDEN. Count the other side.

The negative vote was counted; and there were—noes 81.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 105, nays 101, not voting 118; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to vote. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in his seat when his name was called?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I make the point that I was within the Hall when the roll was being called. I was in my seat before the call of the roll was completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair directs the rule to be read.

The Clerk read Rule XV, clause 1, as follows:

Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not rigidly enforced the rule. If he should rigidly enforce it very few members would be allowed to vote after the completion of the roll-call.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If I had heard my name called, I should have voted "ay."

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Objection was made.

The following additional pairs on all political questions for the rest of this day were announced:

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. RYAN.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. STRUBLE.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

GEORGE M. OCHILTREE.

Mr. HATCH. Before the motion of the gentleman from Texas is acted upon I ask the courtesy of the House to give unanimous consent that a private bill which I send to the Clerk's desk may be considered at this time.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4659) for the relief of George M. Ochiltree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be amended the military record of George M. Ochiltree, of Clarke County, Missouri, and to place him on the muster-rolls of the War Department as a major of cavalry and provost-marshal for the counties of Scotland, Clarke, Knox, and Lewis, in the State of Missouri, to date from January 1, 1862, until November 1, 1862; and he is further authorized and directed to cause to be made out and forwarded to the proper officers of the Treasury Department a statement of the pay and emoluments due to a major of cavalry under then existing law for the period of ten months, namely, from January 1, 1862, to November 1, 1862, deducting therefrom whatever sum may have been paid said George M. Ochiltree as a private soldier during said period.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to said George M. Ochiltree the amount found to be due him as a major of cavalry for the period of ten months, as provided for in section 1 of this act, deducting therefrom such sum as may have been paid to him as a private soldier for services during said period.

Mr. HATCH. The report is very short. It states the facts briefly. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. BROWER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4659) for the relief of George M. Ochiltree, report as follows:

The claimant, George M. Ochiltree, was, on the 1st day of January, 1862, a private citizen of Clarke County, Missouri. At that date he was appointed provost-marshal for the special district of the Department of the Missouri, embracing the counties of Clarke, Lewis, Knox, and Scotland, but was ordered on duty as a private in Company B, Second Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and under the Army regulations received only a private's pay. That when a regiment was first raised in Clarke County Mr. Ochiltree could have got the position of either major or lieutenant-colonel, but that he was deemed by all the best equipped man in the country for the position of provost-marshal, which was then regarded as a post of great importance to that section; and that believing that office to carry with it the rank and pay of a major, and was not aware that he had been assigned to service as a private until some time afterward, one order having been issued to him for the pay of provost-marshal. That he acted as provost-marshal from the 1st day of January, 1862, to the 1st day of November next following. These facts are sustained by adequate proofs.

Your committee therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. C. SCANLAND.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3496) for the relief of W. C. Scanland, and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Post-Office Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the accounts of W. C. Scanland, postmaster at Normal, Ill., to credit him with the sum of $125, postal funds stolen from the safe in his office on the night of August 22, A. D. 1887.

Mr. ROWELL. The bill explains itself. The Department have paid all that they could pay under the law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker, and I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

HENRY BAZSINSKY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8088, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, that bill is embraced in the omnibus bill which has just passed the House. I ask unanimous consent, if it be in order, that we pass over all of the bills yet remaining on the Calendar of Court of Claims cases and proceed to the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar on page 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to pass over informally bills on the Calendar brought forward from the Court of Claims, and to proceed with the bills upon the Private Calendar, beginning on page 21. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. As far as I am individually concerned, I have no objection; but there are only three or four bills left upon what is known as the Court of Claims Calendar, and I believe that bills have been introduced and reported back from the Committee on War Claims in every one of those cases.

Mr. LANHAM. Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of that statement, I withdraw my request; and if the gentleman can indicate the bills that have not been embraced in the "omnibus bill," we will proceed first to the consideration of those.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that it would be better to call these bills in their regular order, and then, where a bill already disposed of is reached, let a motion be made that that bill lie on the table.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I suggest to the Chair that it was by unanimous consent that the "omnibus bill" which we have passed here was substituted for these individual bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Still, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] that three individual bills are still before the House and must be disposed of in a regular way.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that all of these bills that were embraced in the "omnibus bill" which has just been passed be laid on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The only difficulty about that is that without comparing the bills as they are reached with the "omnibus bill" the Clerk can not tell which ones have been disposed of. It will take but a minute as each bill is called to move that it be laid on the table. The Clerk will proceed to call the bills in their order.

HENRY BAZSINSKY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8088, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

ELIZABETH GRIGGS, ADMINISTRATRIX.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8089, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Elizabeth Griggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

JOHN B. REID.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 8090, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of John B. Reid.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

HORACE B. HOBSON, ADMINISTRATOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 8091, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

MARY A. BLACKWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 8092, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Mary A. Blackwell.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

ELIZABETH P. DYER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 8093, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Elizabeth P. Dyer.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

URIAS BUSKIRK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 5484, Forty-ninth Congress) to pay to Urias Buskirk the amount found due him by the Court of Claims.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

ELIZABETH MULVEHILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 8339, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Elizabeth Mulvehill.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, that case is not included in the "omnibus bill."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth Mulvehill the sum of $4,345.17, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full satisfaction for her claim for tobacco taken by the Army of the United States in Alleghany County, State of Virginia, in 1863, for army use, as shown by the facts found in the Court of Claims in Congressional case No. 100.

The report (by Mr. Geddes) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Elizabeth Mulvehill, beg leave to report:

That the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being clearly and fully advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims to the committee with the following findings of fact, filed January 11, 1886, to wit:

"In the Court of Claims. December term, 1884. Elizabeth Mulvehill vs. The United States. Congressional case No. 100.

"FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED JANUARY 11, 1886.

"This case, referred to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives the 25th day of April, 1884, under the act of March 3, 1883 (22 Stat. at L., 485), having been heard by the court, the Attorney-General by his assistants appearing for the defense and protection of the United States, as required by said act, the court upon the evidence finds the facts to be as follows:

"1. That this claim was referred to the Court of Claims by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the first section of the act approved March 3, 1883, commonly called the Bowman act, April 25, 1884.

"2. That the Court of Claims, on preliminary inquiry, as required by the fourth section of said act, found that the claimant did not give aid and comfort to the rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States; and that the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States appeared for the defense and protection of the interest of the United States in this pending investigation.

"3. That the claimant was residing with her husband, since deceased, at Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs, in the State (now) of West Virginia; that her husband was a railroad contractor at that place, and was engaged in railroad work with one Thomas K. McCann, late assistant quartermaster United States Volunteers, brother of the claimant; that claimant and her husband went to Virginia in about 1857, and were natives of the State of Pennsylvania; that at the breaking out of the war claimant's brother left the State of Virginia for the North, and that some time in 1862 claimant's husband escaped in the night time and went North, leaving his wife, the claimant, what ready money he had, she at the time having a young child, and could not go with him.

"4. That claimant afterwards applied to the Confederate military authorities for a pass to enable her to follow her husband to the Union lines, but was refused such pass. That she went to reside in the family of one John Waldron, a contractor and Union man, on the next section of the railroad, all the property of herself and husband having been confiscated after his escape.

"5. That she was informed that no person would be allowed to carry money through the Confederate lines, all persons being carefully searched.

"That she had managed to keep the money secreted up to this time.

"That at John Waldron's house she discussed with him what they should do with their money; they could not invest it in real estate, and could not carry the money away with them. They concluded to buy tobacco and secrete it. She accordingly employed Mr. Waldron and furnished him the money to purchase the tobacco, which was purchased at Lynchburgh, Va., at different times in 1863, and stored, with other tobacco belonging to Waldron, at Sweet Chalybeate Springs, Alleghany County, Virginia, with one John Kelly, proprietor of said springs.

"That about 126 boxes and packages were stored at that place, of which the following belonged to claimant, namely:

6 boxes Julia Dean, 633 pounds, at 95 cents	$601.35
10 boxes Rough and Ready, 985 pounds, at $1	985.00
12 boxes J. W. North, 1,294 pounds, at 80 cents	1,035.20
2 boxes W. S. Dodd, 188 pounds, at 87½ cents	164.50
4 boxes Simpson, 395½ pounds, at 75 cents	296.62
5 boxes Horseshoe, 527 pounds, at $1.25	658.75
6 boxes Julia Dean, 629 pounds, at $1.15	723.35
Total	4,464.77
Deduct 1 box lost, 104 pounds, at $1.15	119.60
Balance	4,345.17

"6. That the bills of purchase were shown to her at the time, but claimant could not keep the bills or have the tobacco stored in her own name for fear of confiscation.

"7. That the tobacco was all in good condition when stored; none of the boxes or packages were broken; it was stored in a safe place, where it remained until on or about November 15, 1863, when the same was taken by the troops under the command of General Averell, of the United States Army, at that place, in the daytime, and carried away, together with the tobacco belonging to Waldron, in all amounting to about one hundred and twenty-six boxes and packages.

"8. That all of said tobacco was in good order when stored with said John Kelly for safe-keeping by said Waldron, and remained securely stored and locked, and was in good order at the time the same was taken by the command of General Averell, as shown in finding 7; that the prices charged were reasonable and just for the time and place, and that claimant has never received pay or compensation therefor from any source or for any part thereof, but that the same is still unpaid, and that reasonable value of the tobacco so taken from claimant was $4,345.17.

"9. That claimant's husband died in 1873; that his estate was settled and his debts all paid, and that the money used in the purchase of the tobacco which is the subject-matter of this claim was left with claimant by her husband, and was accumulated by him in the course of his business prior to the war.

"ORDER OF THE COURT.

"Ordered, That a copy of the foregoing findings of fact, duly certified, be reported to the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of this order.

"By the court.

"A true transcript of record.

"Test, this 13th day of March, 1886.

"[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,
"Assistant Clerk Court of Claims."

Your committee therefore report a bill herewith providing for the payment of the amount found by said Court of Claims, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I see that this Report is No. 2179. On the next page of the Calendar I see Report No. 35. I wish to inquire how Report No. 2179 takes precedence of Report No. 35. I make the point of order that this bill is not rightly ahead of the other.

Mr. O'FERRALL. What is the gentleman's point?

Mr. STEELE. My point is that Report No. 2179 is not entitled to priority over Report No. 35.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] that this is one of the Court of Claims cases placed upon the Calendar by order of the House; and the House is now proceeding in regular order to act upon such of these cases as have not been disposed of in the "omnibus bill."

Mr. WARNER. I do not wish to argue this question; but it has been my impression that the classes of articles for which we undertake to make compensation in these bills are quartermasters' and commissaries' stores taken by command of some military officer from loyal citizens for the use of the Army of the United States. I have supposed that the articles for which we pay are such as the Government supplied to its soldiers while in the field. In my limited experience in the Army I never heard of tobacco being issued as rations to the soldiers. I would like to know upon what ground the payment of this claim is sought.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I will state for the information of the House that this is one of the bills which came over from the Forty-ninth Congress and were placed on the Calendar by order of the Speaker. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] has introduced in this Congress a bill providing for payment of this claim, but that bill has not been reported back from the committee. I was under the impression that it had been, but I do not find it on the Calendar, although I have not made a close examination. This bill stands in the same position that the whole Calendar of these bills did at an earlier stage of the session.

The CHAIRMAN. When this bill was read, the Chair was under the impression that it had been reported by the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, but on examination it appears that it was reported in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Then I ask that the bill be passed over for the present, without losing its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over informally, without prejudice to its position on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BILLS LAID ASIDE TO BE REPORTED ADVERSELY.

The next bills in order upon the Calendar were the following; which were laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that they be laid on the table, the claims provided for in these bills having been embraced in the bill H. R. 2952 already passed:

A bill (H. R. 8340, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of John M. Campbell.

A bill (H. R. 8341, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Robert H. Walton.

A bill (H. R. 8342, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of James C. Jenkins, administrator of Thomas C. Jenkins.

A bill (H. R. 8343, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Sarah McFerrin, administratrix of Robert Waters.

A bill (H. R. 8344, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Sarah E. Mendenhall.

A bill (H. R. 8603, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of David H. Hildebrand.

A bill (H. R. 8604, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of James Tucker.

A bill (H. R. 8605, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Americus V. Warr, administrator of Nicholas H. Isbell.

A bill (H. R. 9379, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of John Heflebower.

WILLIAM LAVERY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9380, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of William Lavery.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. This claim has not been embraced in the "omnibus bill." I suggest that it be passed over, without losing its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

BILLS LAID ASIDE TO BE REPORTED ADVERSELY.

The next bills in order upon the Calendar were the following; which were laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that they be laid on the table, the claims provided for in these bills having been embraced in the bill (H. R. 2952) already passed:

A bill (H. R. 9381, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Robert Smith.

A bill (H. R. 9382, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief John R. Watkins, administrator of Matilda W. Anderson.

A bill (H. R. 9383, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Indiana E. Hughes.

A bill (H. R. 9384, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Newitt Harris.

ALEXANDER MOFFIT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9473, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Alexander Moffit.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I suggest that this bill be passed over informally.

Mr. COMPTON. I ask that the bill be considered. This claim was referred in the Forty-ninth Congress to the Court of Claims. The findings of that court have been returned to this Congress; and I hold in my hand a report made to this House by the present Committee on War Claims.

Mr. STEELE. If this bill was reported prior to Report No. 35, on the next page, I object to its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON], as the Chair understands, asks unanimous consent to substitute a bill reported by the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress for the bill of the Forty-ninth Congress the title of which has just been read.

Mr. STEELE. I object. I think these bills had better be considered in their regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COMPTON. Do I understand the Chair to rule that unanimous consent is necessary for the consideration of this bill now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] will not press his objection. It seems that a report on this case has been made in the present Congress. There are a few more claims of this character on the Calendar which we want to dispose of to-day.

Mr. STEELE. There are bills ahead of this, which have been on the Calendar since January 17.

Mr. COMPTON. This bill bears the same relation to the Calendar as other bills which have been passed. This claim was considered in the Forty-ninth Congress and referred by the committee to the Court of Claims. The findings of that court have been returned, the case has been considered by the committee of the present House and unanimously reported for passage. Surely the gentleman can not object to the consideration of such a bill. I hope he will withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. HOUK. I wish to call attention to the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The status of this bill has been decided by the House. The title of the bill just read was reported to the Forty-ninth Congress, and the bill reported by the committee at the present Congress is not yet on the Calendar.

Mr. HOUK. The Bowman act says these bills shall remain upon the Calendar, and it is not necessary a bill should be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has already settled that.

ANNA M. COGSWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9646, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Anna M. Cogswell.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is in the "omnibus bill," and I move that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELLEN P. MALLOY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9647, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This bill was introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and regularly reported by that committee. It was also referred at the present session of Congress to the Committee on War Claims, and again reported favorably by that committee, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the condition of this bill to be this: By the action of the House, at the present session, this bill was required to be reported at the present Congress and placed on the Calendar. It was required to be placed on the Calendar with this report to enable it to be acted on, unless by unanimous consent the bill reported should be substituted for the bill on the Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The condition of this case, Mr. Chairman, is this: It was reported by the Forty-ninth Congress and placed on the Calendar. The bill was again introduced at this Congress, and again reported from the Committee on War Claims. I have a copy of that bill in my hand. If that is so it can be considered, because the Bowman act places bills brought over from the Forty-ninth Congress at the head of the Calendar. That ruling was made by the Speaker of the House at least on two occasions, and it has never been departed from. The point of order does not apply to this case, because the bill has been introduced at this Congress and reported by the Committee on War Claims, and it seems to me it ought to now be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it on the Calendar?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, it is regularly on the Court of Claims Calendar, which is the Calendar of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the bill to which the gentleman refers, reported by the present Congress, is not on the Calendar which has been read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to call attention to this fact: Under the ruling of the permanent Speaker these claims stand at the head of the Calendar, and the result will be to relegate such as are not reported on and to relegate this one low down on the Calendar, and defeat the effect of the Bowman act under the ruling of Mr. Speaker CARLISLE made early in December last.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. STEELE. If that be the ruling, then we will have to sit here and consider these cases under the Bowman act until they are all disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds on examination the bill the title of which has been read and which is on the Court of Claims Calendar, has been reported by the Committee on War Claims at the present session of Congress, and is on the present Calendar of the House on page 39. The Chair was under the impression when he decided the point raised by the gentleman from Maryland the bill had not been reported to the House. The Chair thinks the bill acted on by the Committee on War Claims and reported to the House should take the place of the bill of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. STEELE. We will then be kept until the last day of the session considering these reports coming back here at the beginning of this Congress on the Court of Claims Calendar. By putting these claims at the head of the Calendar we will be virtually confined to the consideration of such cases under the Bowman act to the exclusion of everything else. These bills come over from the last day of one Congress to the first day of the following Congress, and when reported from the Committee on War Claims are put upon the Calendar to the exclusion of everything else. It seems they should be taken up in the order in which they come here.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Indiana misapprehends the situation and the effect of the decision of the Chair in this case. At the beginning of the session the Speaker ordered this very case to take precedence on the Calendar, and it has been there ever since the Calendar was printed until now.

We all understand this came here with the bills reported by the Forty-ninth Congress. Then the objection was raised that these bills were not in order for consideration; that this Congress could not consider them because they were bills of the Forty-ninth Congress. One of these cases only was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and then the House adjourned. After that we passed over, by unanimous consent, this Private Calendar for four weeks—four successive Fridays—without any action on them. Then a bill had been introduced, including nearly all of these cases, which was reported to the House from the Committee on War Claims and put upon the Calendar, its number being 2527, away down upon the Calendar.

Two weeks ago to-day we asked unanimous consent of the House that this bill, including as it does a large number of Court of Claims reports, should be substituted for these various reports upon the Calendar from the Court of Claims and considered. That was done to get rid of the perplexing question as to where these claims were on the Calendar and what right they had. We have gone ahead to consider them and made a precedent; and I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] misapprehends the question when he claims that a bill reported in the last days of the session would, under the ruling of the Chair, take its place on the Calendar in advance of all other bills upon it. The whole object of the precedent established by what we have done was to fix the status of these cases, so that when a claim of this character is reached, and for which a bill has been introduced in this session and referred to the Committee on War Claims, that bill may be substituted for the report already on the Calendar from the last Congress, and consent has been asked in this case that the report in the Fiftieth Congress may be substituted for the report of the Court of Claims now on the Calendar.

It simply gets rid, by one vote of the House, of two questions at once. It does not give one bill precedence over another, but gives it its proper place on the Court of Claims Calendar, by taking up a bill reported by a committee of the Fiftieth Congress and substituting it for the Court of Claims report, thereby ridding the House of all the trouble of referring them back to the committee, having the committee to consider and again report them back to the House for consideration on the Calendar.

I hope, therefore, the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection and let this bill be considered, and he will see, after the House proceeds to act upon it, if he has not seen the effect of its operation in the consideration of the bill which we discussed here to-day and for the past two weeks, exactly how it affects these bills.

Mr. STEELE. The precedent established was by unanimous consent. Unanimous consent is asked here, which is refused. The bill, therefore, if unanimous consent is refused, must take its place at the foot of the Calendar, where it belongs. I think these bills should be considered in their regular order on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation in stating the situation as the Chair understands it. When the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] asked unanimous consent to substitute a bill reported from the Committee on War Claims to the present Congress for the bill that was already upon the Calendar, the Chair was under the impression that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Maryland was not upon the Calendar. An examination, however, shows the Chair that it is upon the Calendar and has been regularly reported by the committee. The Chair thinks, therefore, that under the action of the House, as well as the ruling by the Speaker of the House, this bill should take its place upon the Calendar with the report from the Court of Claims; and the Chair so holds and overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me understand the effect of this decision. Do I understand the Chair to decide that a private bill which has been reported at a late day in the session, and which is the same as a claim reported from the Court of Claims under the Bowman act in the last Congress and now on the Calendar, is made transferable by being so reported from its proper position at the foot of the Calendar to take the place of the report from the Court of Claims at the head of the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just stated that the Chair thinks the proper place for the bill, when so reported, is the place indicated on the Calendar by the report from the Court of Claims. By order of the Speaker of the House these cases were placed at the head of the Calendar, and the Chair thinks they are there for the action of the House.

Mr. LANHAM. I have never acquiesced in the idea that a mere report from the Court of Claims entitles any bill to priority of consideration; but I do think, in view of the fact that we have considered a number of these bills, that it is well to consider all of them now. There are but few on the Calendar, and we will save time by going on with them.

Mr. STEELE. The Committee on War Claims, by reporting bills under the operation of the decision of the Chair, could take precedence over all other bills for consideration by simply having them reported to the House and having them put on the Calendar in place of the reports from the Court of Claims, without regard to the order of their consideration.

Mr. COMPTON. The gentleman ought to have made that point before the Chair made its ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already made a ruling upon the point of order, and there is nothing now before the committee unless an appeal is taken. The Clerk will report the bill called up by the gentleman from Maryland.

ALEXANDER MOFFITT.

The first business on the Calendar reported from the Court of Claims was the bill of the Forty-ninth Congress numbered 9473, for the relief of Alexander Moffitt.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill of the present Congress which is to be substituted for this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6347) for the relief of Alexander Moffitt.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Alexander Moffitt, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,442.98, being amount due the said Alexander Moffitt for the use and occupation of the premises known as the National Race-Course, in the District of Columbia, from the 12th day of July, 1864, to the 12th day of June, 1865, by the United States forces, as found by the Court of Claims.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) is as follows:

That this claim was presented to the Forty-ninth Congress, and a report was made in regard to it by the Committee on War Claims. As the examination by your committee has led them to the same results with those arrived at by the committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, they do not think it necessary to recapitulate the facts, but refer to that report, and herewith annex a copy for information.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and recommend that the bill referred to them do pass.

[House Report No. 2843, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom were referred the findings of fact by the Court of Claims in the case of Alexander Moffitt against the United States, beg leave to report:

That the Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being clearly and fully advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883. Said claim has been returned by the said Court of Claims with the following findings of fact, filed April 5, 1886, which findings have been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, to wit:

"I.

"On the 12th of July, 1864, the claimant was the owner and in possession of the National Race-Course, in the District of Columbia. The race-course consisted of about 52 acres of land, inclosed with a suitable fence, and had thereon stables, sheds, saloons, and grand-stand, and other buildings incident to a race-course.

"II.

"On the 12th of July, 1864, Lieutenant-Colonel Oberkuffer, commanding the Twelfth Pennsylvania Artillery, by order of Major-General Doubleday, then in command of the defenses of Washington, took possession of the race-course, and the military forces of the United States encamped upon and occupied the grounds and buildings for a period of eleven months.

"III.

"The Quartermaster Department in 1868 estimated the rental value of the premises during above occupancy to be $1,784.45. The claimant at first refused to accept this amount, but upon being assured by the officer making the payment that his acceptance would not preclude him from seeking the balance of his claim, he accepted it and signed a receipt in full. This receipt in full was given and received in the mutual understanding that it should not preclude the claimant from seeking in Congress the balance of the rent which he believed to be justly his due, and the payment was not a final settlement such as would stop the claimant from seeking the full value of the occupancy, and was in fact, though not in form, merely a payment upon account.

"IV.

"At the time when the United States forces entered upon and occupied the race-course and buildings as set forth in the second finding, the saloon or restaurant was leased by the claimant at an annual rental of $3,000, and the stables at an annual rental of $1,200, and the fair rental value of the course, stand, and remaining property was $3,500 per annum, giving as a total rental value of all the premises used and occupied by the United States the sum of $7,700 per annum, and for the eleven months of occupation the sum of $7,058.26; but from this should be deducted the sum of $1,784.45 received on account of rent from the Quartermaster Department, as set forth in the third finding, and likewise the sum of $500 received by the claimant from one of his tenants for rent of the saloon, amounting in all to $2,284.45, and leaving due to him, for the use and occupation of the United States during the foregoing term of eleven months, balance of $4,773.81.

"V.

"The United States, as lessees within the District of Columbia, were bound to leave the premises and buildings in as good order and condition as when entered upon, reasonable wear and tear excepted. But during the occupancy great injury was done to the premises, and the fences were taken down for military reasons and purposes, and some of the buildings were used for lumber and others greatly injured by the usage incident to the occupancy. The injuries were in the nature of voluntary waste, for which the Government under an implied occupancy would be liable out of the meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bostwick vs. The United States (94 U. S. Rep., 53). The reasonable cost of repairing the premises, buildings, and fences to as good condition as when the United States entered in possession there, ordinary wear and tear excepted, would be the sum of $7,669.17, making, with the balance of $4,773.81 rent set out in fourth finding, a sum of $12,442.98 due claimant for the use and occupation of the premises."

The committee therefore recommend the payment of the amount found by the court, and recommend that the accompanying bill do pass.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, if the United States can get a fee-simple to the property when it has paid for it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I do not desire to yield the floor, but will give the gentleman from Indiana time if he desires to be heard.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not know that I care to occupy any time except long enough to put an interrogatory or two to the chairman of the committee having charge of this claim.

It seems in this case that the United States paid the claimant something over $1,700. That was regarded at that time, at least by the Government, as a full measure of compensation for the use and occupancy of this property, and the claimant, in pursuance of that payment, executed to the Government a receipt in full, only having a kind of mental reservation that at some time, perhaps, he might try the magnanimity of the American Congress to get more.

He reserved his constitutional right to get as much as he could regardless of consequences. I would like to know whether or not the Committee on War Claims regard a receipt in full as a matter of any consequence at all.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. We regard a receipt in full as a matter of very decided consequence; but we also regard the findings of the Court of Claims as to any transaction as a judicial decision of the question above the filing of a receipt. In the third finding of the court they say:

This receipt in full was given and received in the mutual understanding that it should not preclude the claimant from seeking in Congress the balance of the rent which he believed to be justly his due, and the payment was not a final settlement such as would stop the claimant from seeking the full value of the occupancy, and was in fact, though not in form, merely a payment upon account.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I used to be or at least thought I was a lawyer, and if I recollect correctly the principles of the common law that reservation to be effective must have been put into the instrument itself. You can not contradict or qualify the written contract of the party by a mere setting up of the fact that at the time there was a mere oral understanding that the instrument was not to be effective.

I admit that if this receipt was executed under any kind of legal coercion, that might be set up as a defense, and the receipt under such circumstances would not be operative. But in that case the gentleman from Kentucky and the lawyers of the House know what it takes to establish that kind of coercion against the legal effect of an executed instrument.

The reason why I put it in this way is simply this: Here is a case, and there are others of the same character—for this is not the first time I have heard this statement in connection with these claims—in which the Government paid a measure of compensation, which at the time was received by the claimant, and obtained a receipt in full; and more than twenty long years after the transaction he comes into the Congress of the United States and asks twice as much, four times as much, and in this case perhaps six times as much as he accepted.

The only apology he makes for this, it seems to me, exorbitant demand is that at the time, in some kind of parley between him and the officer of the Government, it was understood the receipt was not to amount to anything. I undertake to say in a trial of this cause before any court which would undertake to administer the law as it is, this receipt would be held as conclusive against the claimant unless he could show it was executed under coercion.

I presume while a mistake of law would not be operative in the case a mistake of fact would be, in addition to the defenses I have already mentioned. But here is a claim for the use of a race-course in the District of Columbia in the war time, when I imagine a race-course would not have been very profitable even to the owner of it. From the little experience I have had, it is not profitable at any time to anybody else.

If the Government pays the amount of this claim, it ought at least to have a title in fee for it. However good it may be for a race-course, it would not probably raise anything else.

That is all I wish to say, and is a good deal more than I had intended to say when I rose.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, rose.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, and then he can answer all the questions together. I would like to know where those 52 acres of ground are situated?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. In the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The District of Columbia is 10 miles square. In what part of the District is this ground situated?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I can not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] to answer it.

Mr. COMPTON. I can not tell the exact location. It is known as the old race-course, and is within the limits of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand that, but I want to know where in the District it is. As I understand this bill, it proposes to give for rental of this piece of ground of 52 acres and the frame buildings upon it a sum in excess of $7,000 for eleven months' occupancy, in addition to $7,700 for injuries to the buildings by such occupancy. I want to know where any 52 acres of ground outside of the boundaries of the city of Washington lie in the District that can be rented for any such sum even now.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Have you any other question you wish to ask?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not now. I want to see how you get along with that question.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I think I can get along with it to your satisfaction.

In answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, about the receipt, I will say that everybody in this House knows, who has any knowledge of how things were done during the war in settlements with the Government, that there was a particular form of receipt to be signed. The protest of the claimant in this case was made clearly apparent to the court, for the court says it is understood that is not a final settlement. I certainly think we are not superior to the Supreme Court of the United States. They never attempt to go behind the findings of the court in cases that come to them from the Court of Claims.

Now with regard to the ground itself, I do not know where this ground is.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Court of Claims, or any other court, has found, as a legal proposition, that a contemporaneous verbal arrangement can be used to affect an executed legal instrument?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is highly technical.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Not at all. That is the very essence of the matter.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The Court of Claims undertook to find the facts, and the Court of Claims authorized the certification to us by their clerk of the facts which they found, and when they have certified those facts to us, I do not propose to question their finding or to go back and try to hunt up the evidence upon which they made that finding. I take it for granted that the court was satisfied that the facts existed, or else they never would have hazarded their official character by certifying as a fact that which was no fact. As to the ground itself, I repeat that I do not know where it is. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, since I asked the gentleman that question, I have been informed privately that this ground is what is known as the old race-course, beyond the Government Insane Asylum. If so, the rental, $7,000, is probably equivalent to the value of the fee-simple.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Well, as I have said, I do not know where the ground is, and it is immaterial to me where it is. The committee of the Forty-eighth Congress were not satisfied as to the facts of this case, and they referred it to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims, after making a thorough examination of the case, have reported the facts back to us, and as I have already said, I do not think there is any obligation upon us to go behind the findings of the Court of Claims. They made their finding and directed their clerk to certify that finding to us, and I believe that is all we have any right to deal with, and I do not think that we ought to go back and undertake to question the finding of the court. The court have found that this ground is in the District of Columbia, and that its occupancy was worth this amount of money. I, for one, am willing to accept what the court have said in their finding, and it was upon that basis that we made the report to this House.

Mr. COMPTON. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] will find his question answered in the report itself, which says:

> At the time when the United States forces entered upon and occupied the race-course and buildings, as set forth in the second finding, the saloon or restaurant was leased by the claimant at an annual rental of $3,000, and the stables at an annual rental of $1,200, and the fair rental value of the course, stand, and remaining property was $3,500 per annum, giving as a total rental value of all the premises used and occupied by the United States the sum of $7,700 per annum.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's question is answered by that part of the report. I have very little to say in connection with this matter, and I will not further detain the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman indorse the accuracy of those figures?

Mr. COMPTON. That is the finding of the court.

Mr. BUCHANAN. On the evidence submitted to them?

Mr. COMPTON. Well, they are the tribunal to whom you submitted the case for a finding of fact.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask the gentleman whether he believes that any such rentals were obtained for any such property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. COMPTON. In other words, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks me whether or not I believe that the Court of Claims would report to this Congress a statement which is a falsehood upon its face.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; but we know nothing of the correctness of the testimony submitted to that court.

Mr. COMPTON. That is not the question in this case. This bill has been through as fiery an ordeal as any bill that ever came before Congress. It passed through the Committee on War Claims in the last Congress, at the head of which, as is well known, stood a man of keen intellect and endowed with gifts which especially fitted him to have charge of such questions as came before that committee.

This bill passed through that ordeal and met with the approval of the committee; it passed through the ordeal of the Court of Claims, and comes to us with their indorsement; and now, forsooth, comes the gallant, gifted, chivalric, noble-hearted, generous gentleman from Indian [Mr. BROWNE] to demand the obligation of the bond, to demand the pound of flesh! [Laughter.] It is unlike him, sir. But my friend from Indiana did not read carefully that portion of the report to which he referred in stating his objections to this bill. He did not do full justice to himself or to this case. What is the language? This, bear in mind, is the finding of the Court of Claims, not the declaration of the claimant; not the statement of an advocate of his upon this floor, but a solemn finding rendered by a competent tribunal. And what is its language on the point to which my friend has referred?

> The Quartermaster Department in 1868 estimated the rental value of the premises during above occupancy to be $1,784.45. The claimant at first refused to accept this amount, but upon being assured by the officer making the payment that his acceptance would not preclude him from seeking the balance of his claim, he accepted it and signed a receipt in full.

I appeal again to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] and ask him if, with that finding before him, he is still determined to come in here and demand the pound of flesh. [Renewed laughter].

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] will pardon a question, my recollection from glancing at the report is that the balance of rent found due is in round numbers about $4,600. Am I correct?

Mr. COMPTON. Forty-five hundred dollars. I observe that the Court of Claims finds as a matter of fact that the troops occupying these fair-grounds committed voluntary waste; that the premises were damaged to the amount of $7,600.

Mr. COMPTON. That is right in round numbers.

Mr. WARNER. The sum of $7,600 is added to the rental, making $12,000.

Mr. COMPTON. That is right.

Mr. WARNER. Now, I wish to ask whether the allowance of this claim would be in accordance with the practice of the House. I know that in the case of a college, where I presented a claim for rent, and in the Nashville case in the last Congress, this House refused to pay for damages voluntarily done by troops while occupying premises.

One other suggestion I wish to make. It appears that when the receipt in this case was given there was an understanding that the party should have a right to appeal to Congress; but there is no pretense in the finding of fact by the Court of Claims that the claimant did not at the time he gave the receipt know every fact that he knows to-day; there is no pretense that he was misled by any misrepresentation of an officer of the Government as to the value of the premises or the amount of damage done. Now, it seems to me certain that in no court of the land would this claimant be permitted to set aside a receipt in full unless he could show that duress had been used or that in giving the receipt he had been deceived, not knowing all the facts. There is no pretense of that kind; it is simply claimed that he reserved the constitutional right of every citizen of this Government to present his petition to Congress. If there had been any attempt to deprive him of this right, it could not have been done.

Mr. COMPTON. I regret very much that the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], after the very appropriate, eloquent, and feeling address which he delivered in this House yesterday, an address so forcible that if I had had any constitutional scruples in reference to the then pending proposition he would have removed them, should to-day be converted into another Shylock. I do not mean anything offensive to the gentleman.

I will answer the gentleman's first question by referring again to the report of the Court of Claims, as I have already done in answer to gentlemen who preceded him. The gentleman has asked as to the figures which go to make up the whole sum claimed in this bill. After referring to the claim for rent he goes on to talk about "voluntary waste." Now, this is the finding of the court:

The injuries were in the nature of voluntary waste, for which the Government, under an implied occupancy, would be liable out of the meaning of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bostwick vs. The United States (94 United States Reports, 53).

Now, I am no better lawyer than the judges of the Court of Claims—certainly no better lawyer than the justices of the Supreme Court; in fact I am no lawyer at all; but I would not want any higher authority for a legal proposition than the Supreme Court of the United States, even though the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri stood in the way.

Mr. WARNER. In reply to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON], I wish to say I was not citing the authority of the Supreme Court, but was simply arraigning the Committee on War Claims by suggesting that this report conflicts with other reports of that committee disallowing claims for waste.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The Committee on War Claims is very willing to be "arraigned" on questions of this kind. In this case there was a contract, and there was an implied tenancy on the part of the Government; in the other cases to which the gentleman refers these circumstances did not exist. This difference between the two classes of cases the court plainly sets out.

Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I certainly desire to thank the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] for the very complimentary manner in which he was pleased to speak of myself. I do not question the correctness of the finding of the Court of Claims upon the matter of fact involved here. What I assume is that, taking the facts as granted, they create no legal obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to pay this claim. In other words, in an adjudication before the court between two citizens or between the United States and a citizen, the evidence of the circumstances as detailed here under which this receipt was executed would be held as incompetent testimony and ruled out.

Now, the question that remains is whether we who are guarding the doors of the Treasury—and I know of no gentleman who is more economical in his instincts than the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] and the distinguished gentleman who stands at the head of the War Claims Committee—the question is whether we shall stand upon the legal rights of the Government in this case; whether, when the Government has a good defense in law and in equity, according to every rule of law or equity, the Government should avail itself of such defense? I say in the presence of the lawyers of this House that this receipt, executed as a receipt in full for the subject-matter of this claim, with a mere verbal understanding between the claimant and the agent of the Government that it was not to bind him, is an instrument which the Government is entitled to stand upon as final.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will pardon me, I wish to challenge his proposition.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am glad to find one courageous gentleman who is willing to stand upon the law as urged in support of this claim.

Mr. COBB. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his permission.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I shall be very glad to hear the question.

Mr. COBB. Does the gentleman assert in the face of this House that any receipt which evidences the payment of money is not in a court of law subject to explanation?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Oh, I have not said what the gentleman understands me to have said.

Mr. COBB. I understood the gentleman to say that the receipt was final.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will state my proposition in my own way.

Mr. COBB. Let us hear it again.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. A receipt for a sum less than the whole of an ascertained debt is not a receipt in full; but a receipt in full for a debt in controversy, or a sum in controversy, or a claim in controversy, is a receipt in full; and the mere fact that the existing indebtedness or claim appears to be larger than the amount named in the receipt does not open it for explanation. When a receipt has been executed under a mistake of fact or under duress, such circumstances may be given in evidence in explanation of the receipt; but I undertake to say that when a party executes an instrument in writing which expresses plainly and distinctly a particular state of facts, it can not be contradicted by evidence that at the time of its execution it was understood or agreed between the parties that it was not to mean the facts stated in the receipt, but was to mean something else entirely different.

Mr. COBB. That is the very proposition I challenge.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then let your challenge and my assertion go to the country together. I am content.

Mr. COBB. Let me ask you a few questions on that point.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not want to turn myself into a law school to teach the gentleman law; I have not time, and the compensation is not sufficient. [Laughter.]

Mr. COBB. I think I have a right to challenge propositions of law which will not be found in any law-book recognized in any of the schools.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have heard the gentleman's statement and I am content.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I insist on my motion that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend by striking out "four" and inserting "three" before the word "thousand."

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the country on the progress we are making in taking up and disposing of these various classes of claims. The "soul" of the country is "marching on" in the direction of paying for the ravages of war. We have appropriated $20,000 to-day to that class of claims which we may class as "spiritualities." Now we come to one which I will class as "venality," and when we make an appropriation for rent of a race-course occupied by United States troops, that will be an appropriation in the direction of "rascality."

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I make a point of order on the gentleman's amendment. If I understood it aright, there is no such word in the bill as the gentleman proposes to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer, for the purpose of debate, such amendment as he thinks proper.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. But it must have some application to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment may be merely formal, as, for instance, to strike out the last word.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out an item of this bill; I suppose that is competent.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The gentleman should designate an item which is in the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen stand here and say that the judgment of the Court of Claims is a finality. Then why is this bill here? If Congress has nothing to do with the question, why is this appeal made now? Are we here simply to register our approval of a matter which is res judicata, or is there something left for us to do? If there is, what is the use of quoting as a finality a judgment of the Court of Claims? It is said we must give "full faith and credit" to the decisions of the courts; and I agree to that proposition.

But I understand the question now to be addressed to the discretion of Congress whether we will pay a particular claim. The amount involved is a question addressed to our discretion, because we certainly have a right to amend this bill by cutting down the amount; we have a right to insert conditions as to the payment of the claim; we have a right to direct to whom the money shall go. Therefore there is something left for Congress to speak about. What is it? We are authorized to determine in the first place whether we will recognize the propriety and justice of this class of claims; and, in the second place, whether we will pay the amount claimed.

What do the advocates of this bill say? They appeal to our discretion. They say, "The Court of Claims has found the amount due, but could not render judgment for it, and we come asking Congress to pay the amount." We have the right to pay the whole amount, to cut it down, or to pay nothing at all. When we appeal to gentlemen representing the claim they do not know where this land lies. They say they have reason to believe, they strongly suspect, they infer that it is in the District of Columbia, but whether in the city of Washington or out upon some of the red-clay soil surrounding the city, the rental of which at the time in question was not worth a dollar an acre for a hundred years, they do not say.

Whether that land out there the ground-squirrel who should undertake to pass over it would have to carry his rations, they do not say and do not know. What sort of a claim is that? What sort of an appeal to the discretion of Congress is that?

I only want to blaze the trees along the path that we are traveling. We started on a high plane to-day—we started to recognize the purity and propriety of the clergy. We came down to horse-races, and we will strike bottom when we come to gamblers, and when we do we will turn them up and come to a plane higher than we started on.

It shows, Mr. Chairman, we are traveling on dangerous ground when you permit pecuniary consideration, when you permit religious consideration to enter into our action here and set aside the great principles upon which this Government has been carried on for a century, a course against which Congress has ever protested. The system you tap at the mouth has its ramifications all over the American soil and embraces every possible interest. It pours the Treasury into the laps of the present owners of these claims, which were abandoned by their real owners years ago.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, through my course of service in this House—not a long one—I have never heard any gentleman get on the floor of the House of Representatives and in so short a time make the wholesale charges of corruption against any committee, or any set of gentlemen, as was done in the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio. I want to announce again, as I said before, when I came here and was put at the head of the Committee on War Claims, the work had been laid out for the committee before this Congress and before the Forty-ninth Congress. I found the laws existing as they are to-day. The people living all over the country had been invited to come forward and present their claims. They have been presenting them for twenty years, and they have been put off from Congress to Congress until now.

Now, the Committee on War Claims has not set up any particular religious predilections.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not said a word to the Committee on War Claims. I made my speech to the Committee of the Whole. I do not know what the Committee on War Claims has done. If the judgment of that committee is final then what are we here for?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Ah, it is well to say that no charges are made against the Committee on War Claims. It is the Committee on War Claims which has charge of this bill, and they have reported it on the evidence they had. It is not to be said the Committee on War Claims must be able to blaze the trees on any particular claim or any particular bill they may have under consideration. Because some gentlemen can look over the ground and tell where it is, I ask whether we are to go out and make survey of the landmarks indicating the location of the claim.

So far as I am concerned I have no interest in this claim. I have little interest in any war claim. I was sent here by my constituents, and I was sworn in front of that desk to perform my whole duty, and I intend to do so faithfully and consistently while I am on this floor, notwithstanding the insinuation that bills are being reported and passed that should not be. Such imputations are not correct, and they come generally from that class of men who have secured in the past the payment of claims they presented for their own districts, and are willing to see the balance of the people of the United States kept out of the pale.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be impossible to get through with this bill this evening.

Mr. COMPTON. I hope the gentleman will allow a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio send up the amendment he proposes?

Mr. GROSVENOR. My amendment is that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation to strike out all after the enacting clause.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. GROSVENOR; and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 26.

Mr. COMPTON. No quorum.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COMPTON. Certainly.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to make a motion that the committee now rise, as we take a recess anyhow at 5 o'clock, and it is very near that time.

Before that motion is submitted, I find by examination of the Calendar that there are only five bills remaining unconsidered of these Court of Claims bills.

I want to make a motion that all of the bills that were embraced in the "omnibus bill" be laid aside with the recommendation to the House that they be laid upon the table. I will send up a list.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the Clerk has marked the bills on the Calendar.

Mr. LANHAM. Very well. Then I submit that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with the recommendation that they do lie on the table.

BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

Bills of the Forty-ninth Congress of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that they be laid on the table, were severally considered, and the recommendation of the committee concurred in:

A bill (H. R. 8088) for the relief of Henry Bazsinsky, administrator of Abraham Bazsinsky;

A bill (H. R. 8089) for the relief of Elizabeth Griggs, administratrix of Charles Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 8090) for the relief of John B. Reid;

A bill (H. R. 8091) for the relief of Horace P. Hobson, administrator of John O. Graves;

A bill (H. R. 8092) for the relief of Mary A. Blackwell;

A bill (H. R. 8093) for the relief of Elizabeth P. Dyer;

A bill (H. R. 5484) to pay to Urias Buskirk the amount found due him by the Court of Claims;

A bill (H. R. 8340) for the relief of John M. Campbell;

A bill (H. R. 8341) for the relief of Robert H. Walton;

A bill (H. R. 8342) for the relief of James C. Jenkins, administrator of Thomas C. Jenkins;

A bill (H. R. 8343) for the relief of Sarah McFerrin, administratrix of Robert Waters;

A bill (H. R. 8344) for the relief of Sarah E. Mendenhall;

A bill (H. R. 8603) for the relief of David H. Hildebrand;

A bill (H. R. 8604) for the relief of James Tucker;

A bill (H. R. 8605) for the relief of Americus V. Warr, administrator of Nicholas H. Isbell;

A bill (H. R. 9379) for the relief of John Heflebower;

A bill (H. R. 9381) for the relief of Robert Smith;

A bill (H. R. 9382) for the relief of John R. Watkins, administrator of Matilda W. Anderson;

A bill (H. R. 9383) for the relief of Indiana E. Hughes;

A bill (H. R. 9384) for the relief of Newitt Harris;

A bill (H. R. 9646) for the relief of Anna M. Cogswell;

A bill (H. R. 9648) for the relief of John A. Bursler;

A bill (H. R. 9649) for the relief of Thomas F. Perkins, administrator of Eliza M. Dawson;

A bill (H. R. 9650) for the relief of the Corporation of Roman Catholic Clergymen of the State of Maryland;

A bill (H. R. 11030) for the relief of John R. McKinnie, administrator;

A bill (H. R. 11031) for the relief of Simon Witkouski;

A bill (H. R. 11032) for the relief of John R. McDowell, administrator of the estate of John McDowell, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 11033) for the relief of S. H. Brodnax, executor of George T. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 11034) for the relief of William H. Cook, sr.;

A bill (H. R. 11035) for the relief of Ann Moreau;

A bill (H. R. 11036) for the relief of John Loague, administrator;

A bill (H. R. 11117) for the relief of John Kelley;

A bill (H. R. 11118) for the relief of John Loague, administrator;

A bill (H. R. 11119) for the relief of T. J. Powell, administrator;

A bill (H. R. 11120) for the relief of John H. Mitchell;

A bill (H. R. 11083) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act;" and

A bill (H. R. 11203) for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School of Virginia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. One of the bills read by the Clerk—John A. Bursler—should be corrected to read John A. Oursler. It is misprinted in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

POLICE FORCE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6677) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 3, 1883; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MUNICIPAL LAWS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 4361, a bill (H. R. 8308) to provide for the examination, etc., of certain manuscript volumes of municipal laws of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 4361 was laid on the table.

COMPILATION OF LAWS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GROUT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, by unanimous consent, reported, as a substitute for House bill 6678, a bill (H. R. 8309) to secure for the District of Columbia a compilation of the laws of said District; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 6678 was ordered to be laid on the table.

TONNAGE TAX.

Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the House with information as to the amount of tonnage tax imposed on and paid by American vessels, and also by foreign vessels, to the United States from July 1, 1862, to July 1, 1865, and each fiscal year from July 1, 1865, to July 1, 1887, giving for the latter period the amount paid by American vessels in each collection district and the amount paid by sailing and steam vessels, respectively.

And then, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived,

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the House in recess until 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, March 9, 1888.

Hon. W. J. STONE, of Kentucky, is hereby designated to preside at the session of the House this evening.

S. S. COX, Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. The honored chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON] was called away to his home in Indiana, and is unable to be here this evening. He has requested that House bill No. 3191, granting a pension to Mary S. Logan, and Senate bill No. 574, to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair, be passed over for a vote in the full House. In accordance with his request, I ask that the previous question be considered as ordered, and that the vote on these two bills be taken two weeks from to-day, with thirty minutes debate allowed on each question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to making the order as requested by the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. The vote to be taken immediately after the reading of the Journal.

I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

Mr. CANNON. A moment, Mr. Speaker, if you please. Do I understand that the Committee of the Whole is discharged from the consideration of these bills, that the previous question is considered as ordered upon them, and that they are to come up for consideration two weeks from to-day, under the operation of the previous question, immediately after the reading of the Journal, with thirty minutes debate on each bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask if there is objection to making the order in the form now suggested?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the first bill under the special order for to-night.

The Clerk read the title of the first pension bill on the Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2806) to increase the pension of James Woody.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that each member present be permitted to call up for consideration a pension bill, instead of following the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL. I am compelled to object to that arrangement and insist on the regular order. Such is the wish of the committee.

JAMES WOODY.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 2806) to increase the pension of James Woody, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of James Woody, of Grant's Pass, Oregon, formerly of the Forty-third Regiment, regular Army, in the war of 1812, to $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SCULL) was read in part.

Mr. PAYSON. I move that the further reading be dispensed with. It is the unanimous opinion of gentlemen around me that what has thus far been read makes a good case.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the further reading of the report will be dispensed with, and it will be printed in full in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 2806, to increase the pension of James Woody, of Oregon, beg leave to report that we have had said bill under consideration and find that the same matter was favorably reported by the Committee on Pensions at the Forty-ninth Congress, and this report then made to the House we adopt as our report at this time, and report said bill with the following favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill:

[House Report No. 4095, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

This is one of the very few remaining survivors of the war of 1812. He was in actual service through said war and served in the Forty-third Regiment, regular Army. He is receiving a pension of $8 per month, as per certificate 16901. He asks for an increase. It is shown that he was born in the last century—December 24, 1794—and is now over ninety-three years of age. He served through the various Indian wars of Oregon. His two sons served as soldiers through the entire war with Mexico. He is now so feeble as to require the constant attention of a nurse.

In his affidavit he says:

"I can neither dress nor undress myself. My eyesight is rapidly failing; I can scarcely see to get about the house, and have trouble in recognizing my friends."

He now has a severe cough, which often prostrates him for days, and has the constant attention of a physician. He is now in poverty.

He says:

"I was a man of good property, but it has all gone toward my support during the past fifteen years. My wife and I live entirely on the $8 pension I receive from the Government and what little assistance we receive from a few friends."

His physician's services are gratuitous, as he has nothing with which to pay. His wife is seventy-two years of age and in very feeble health, and not able to attend on him and the household duties both. His physician corroborates this, and says, under oath, that he now suffers from Bright's disease of kidneys and pulmonary disease of long standing. His relative (one son) is too poor to render him aid.

He says in his own affidavit, signed in a trembling hand:

"If something is not done very soon to relieve me, my wife and I will both be thrown upon the charity of the county."

These facts are corroborated, and in addition the judge of the county makes affidavit that application is now made to him to receive these two old people into the county poor-house, that they are in great need of the common necessaries of life and objects of Christian charity. He knows them to be honorable, honest, upright old people.

With these facts before us, we think $30 per month a very small allowance for this old veteran the few months he may yet live; and in view of the necessity for an attendant, for a physician, medicines, clothing, food, house-rent, saying nothing of his aged companion, herself too helpless to nurse him and too poor to furnish the necessaries of life for herself.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: Strike out the seventh, eighth, and tenth lines, and insert "to $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HEIRS OF JACOB CRAMER.

The Clerk read the title of the following bill, reported by the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. This is evidently not a bill granting a pension. In the absence of objection it will be passed over.

CLARA M. FLANDERS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5228) granting a pension to Clara M. Flanders.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clara M. Flanders, widow of Francis C. Flanders, late of Company M, First Regiment Heavy Artillery, Massachusetts Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5228) granting a pension to Clara M. Flanders, have given the matter careful consideration, and make the following report:

Francis C. Flanders enlisted in Company D, Seventeenth Massachusetts Volunteers, July 12, 1861, and was discharged September 6, 1861, by reason of inflammatory rheumatism. He re-enlisted March 6, 1862, in Company M, First Massachusetts Heavy Artillery, and was discharged February 9, 1863, for chronic rheumatism and disease of heart. On June 7, 1864, he again enlisted in the Veteran Reserve Corps, from which he was discharged May 22, 1865.

Soldier applied for a pension, alleging rheumatism and disease of the heart, caused by taking cold while on guard. The claim was rejected on the ground that disability existed prior to enlistment, which opinion was given by the surgeon of the regiment from which soldier was discharged in 1863. How the surgeon of this regiment could have known that fact, considering the circumstance that soldier had performed military duty almost two years before this time, does not appear. An appeal was taken to the Secretary of the Interior, but the findings of the Pension Office were affirmed.

When soldier was discharged from the Veteran Reserve Corps the surgeon certified that he had chronic rheumatism, with little use of his arms and general impairment of his health, and that he contracted the disabilities after enlistment and in the line of duty.

In 1880 the Department secured an opinion from a medical examining board at Chillicothe, Ohio, that soldier was suffering from syphilis, and this evidently entered into the rejection. It is not shown, however, that syphilis, if it existed, was contracted prior to his final discharge from the Army, while it is conclusively shown that soldier had severe rheumatism and heart trouble while in the service. It is also a significant fact that no physician or medical board, other than the one named, either before or after the date of this examination, suggested anything about syphilis. In denying the fact that he was physically unsound when he entered the Army, unless there was some latent disease in the system, soldier says:

"I was to all appearances a well man, and passed the doctors as such. I counted one on the quota of the town. I counted one in the ranks. I was one man to do guard duty. I was one man to be shot at in battle. I was one to take my chances with the malignant diseases of the Southern clime, from which I have been a sufferer for nineteen years."

On May 17, 1882, two years after the board at Chillicothe found syphilis in the case, the soldier was examined by the full board in Manchester, N. H., composed of three distinguished medical men, and they make no suggestion that there is even a syphilitic taint in the case. They do say, however, that in their opinion the diseases for which the soldier asked a pension were contracted in the Army. They found his condition to be as follows:

"Has aortic and mitral regurgitation; right hand very much distorted and crippled by rheumatism; fingers of left hand deflected to ulnar side; rotation of right fore-arm impaired; joints generally stiffened; right foot affected, the toes very much distorted; left foot also affected; walks with difficulty, using a cane. Would rate for rheumatism at total second grade and would rate for heart disease at total second grade, either of these disabilities incapacitating him for manual labor."

Dr. W. S. Collins, who attended soldier at time of his death, deposes as follows:

"I have been acquainted with soldier for four years; have attended him professionally during that period of time; and I further state that he has been almost constantly under treatment and totally unable to perform any manual labor. His sufferings were often intense, resulting from attacks of neuralgia and acute rheumatic carditis."

While it can not be definitely proven that soldier's death was directly due to his Army service, there is certainly strong presumptive proof that such was the fact, the medical examining board giving that opinion; and as the pension, if granted, will go to the widow, who is struggling to support herself, your committee report the bill back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARTHA M. BAGLEY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3849) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha M. Bagley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Martha M. Bagley, widow of Charles M. Bagley, deceased, late of Company A, Fifteenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

The report was read in part.

Mr. NUTTING. I move that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

There being no objection, the further reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in full in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 3849, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

Charles M. Bagley, late of Company A, Fifteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, was pensioned for a gunshot wound in the left hip, and died June 7, 1884, from peritonitis. The widow made application for a pension, but the claim was rejected on the ground that death was not the result of the wound for which soldier was pensioned.

Two physicians (Drs. Judkins and Lovering) attended the soldier in his fatal illness, and two others (Drs. Marston and Harriman) were present at the autopsy. These medical men severally testify as follows:

Dr. Frank L. Judkins says:

"I was called to see Charles M. Bagley several times during the winter of 1884. At such times I found him suffering with severe pain in left inguinal region, which radiated over the bowels. I was present at his autopsy, which revealed a mass of old adhesions near the track of bullet wound received in the service. I believe this wound was the primary cause of his sickness and that he died from its effects."

Dr. F. S. Lovering testifies as follows:

"Was called to see soldier six months previous to his death. Found him suffering from intense neuralgic pains in vicinity of wound received while in the Army, radiating thence over the abdomen. He suffered in this manner almost daily until his death. He had also, as he told me, suffered with same, in a less degree of severity, ever since he was wounded. At the post mortem we found evidence of chronic peritonitis, with adhesions in vicinity of wound. I believe the wound to have been the remote cause of his illness and death."

Dr. Enoch Q. Marston, who did not attend soldier, but was present at the post mortem, gives this opinion:

"I was present at the autopsy of the said soldier, which autopsy showed that there had been extensive peritonitis, most marked in the left inguinal region; that there was an old cicatrix below Poupart's ligament, said to have been made by a bullet in the Army. Judging from the position of the scar and the severe peritonitis, I believe that they may have had a common origin, namely, the bullet wound."

Dr. A. H. Harriman, who was also present at the autopsy, is somewhat more explicit. He says under oath:

"I was present and took part in an autopsy upon the dead soldier, and the following is substantially the condition found, namely: The cicatrix of a wound, like that made by a bullet, in the thigh, immediately below Poupart's ligament, internal to the left of the femoral bone, and the results of a general chronic peritonitis. Entire peritoneum greatly thickened, with small amounts of serum in abdominal cavity. Evidences of the most intense inflammation were in proximity to the wound; here there were adhesive bands in abundance. Bladder agglutinated to intestines and intestines to parietes, with products of hemorrhages. In the most dependent portion of the abdominal region the color was nearly black and gradually shaded off to a lighter color as one proceeded in any direction from the old wound, so that outside of the left inguinal region agglutinations were rare and evidences of hemorrhages not discoverable, the peritoneum presenting a light gray color. I further declare that it is my professional opinion that the aforesaid bullet wound was the direct and exciting cause, either by septic absorption or by extension of inflammation of the at first local and final general peritonitis, resulting in the soldier's death. I will state that as one reason for giving this opinion its analogue is scarcely less than a daily occurrence in hospitals, especially in gynecology."

The widow testifies that she has four children, respectively aged thirteen, eleven, ten, and seven years; that her entire property does not exceed $75 in value, and that she is in delicate health, and has no other means of support than that supplied by doing washing for her neighbors. Judge David H. Hill makes affidavit to the correctness of the widow's statement.

In this case the equities seem to be strongly in favor of the claimant, and we therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY B. SHAW.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 150) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Shaw.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Henry B. Shaw, late a member of Company I, Third Iowa Infantry, to $50 per month, and pay him such increased pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported with the following amendment:

In line 6, strike out "$50" and insert "$45."

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read in part.

Mr. NUTTING. I move that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. A man who has been shot with a 3-inch canister ball or grape-shot is surely entitled to a pension of $45 a month.

There being no objection, the further reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 150) granting an increase of pension to Henry B. Shaw, respectfully report:

That a similar bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress, but at so late a date that same was not reached for action.

Your committee adopt that report, hereto annexed, as their own, and recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out, in the sixth line of the bill, the word "fifty" and inserting in place thereof the word "forty-five."

[House Report No. 4105, Forty-ninth Congress, second session.]

Henry B. Shaw was a private in Company I, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteers; was wounded at battle of Hatchie, October 5, 1862, "by a 3½-inch canister ball or grape-shot entering near the middle of left clavicle, passing through shoulder and left lung, and coming out through middle spine of scapula," inflicting a most terrible and distressing wound, which not only destroyed the arm, rendering it lifeless and useless, but so injured the lung and shoulder as to make his disability much greater than that of an amputation at the shoulder-joint.

He was granted a pension June 24, 1865, which has since been increased, until he is now receiving the highest rate, which, under the law, his unusual disability is entitled to, namely, $36, for total disability of left arm.

Had this man's wound been such as to cause amputation of arm at shoulder-joint he would under the law receive $45 per month, but it is very clearly established by abundant official, medical, and other testimony, which is attached hereto and made a part of this report, that his disability is far in excess of such an amputation, and that he suffers constant and severe pain therefrom.

The wound which has totally destroyed his arm, being above the shoulder-joint, such an amputation would not relieve him; but your committee believe him certainly entitled to the highest rate of pension allowed by law for the loss by amputation of an entire arm. There is no general law which can do this man justice; we therefore recommend the passage of this bill, after first being amended by striking out of the fifth line the word "fifty," and inserting the word "forty-five."

EXHIBIT A.—Affidavit of Henry B. Shaw.

STATE OF IOWA, Floyd County, ss:

Henry B. Shaw, after being duly sworn according to law, states as follows:

My name is Henry B. Shaw; I am forty-eight years old, and was a private in Company I, Third Iowa Infantry, during the late war for the Union, and while in the line of duty at the battle of Hatchie River, Mississippi, during a charge made upon one of the enemy's batteries by my regiment, I was struck in the breast by a cast-iron shot weighing six ounces, and the said shot was cut out of my back by the surgeon of my regiment, and is now in my possession; the effect of the said shot was to entirely paralyze my left arm, and to so injure the nerves of that part of the body as to make me suffer intense and continuous pain, and at times the pain is so severe as to be almost beyond endurance, and this state of things has existed continuously for twenty-four years, and seems to increase rather than diminish as I get older.

HENRY B. SHAW.

Subscribed and sworn to December 16, 1887.

EXHIBIT B.—Affidavit of S. G. Blythe, M. D., of Nora Springs, Iowa.

On examination I find a large cicatrix similar in appearance to those left after wounds by large bullets, or by grape-shot, situated just below the left clavicle and covering the first intercostal space, the second rib, and part of the second intercostal space. The center of cicatrix is equidistant from the median line and the acromion process. The continuity of the second rib has been broken by the missile, and cartilaginous union of the fragments has taken place. Over the left scapula and 4½ inches from spinal column, and 2½ inches above inferior angle of scapula, is a long cicatrix, appearing to have been the result of an incision through the muscles covering the scapula, parallel with spinal column. The line of direction from the anterior cicatrix to the posterior cicatrix is backward, slightly downward, and a trifle outward.

Shaw represents to me that the anterior cicatrix is the result of a wound made by a cast-iron grape-shot, and that "posterior cicatrix is the result of an incision made by Dr. Keebles, regimental surgeon, for the purpose of extracting said ball." As resulting from said wound, I find the following conditions present: The arm, fore-arm, and hand are, to a considerable degree, paralyzed; the muscles are atrophied; those of the hand and fore-arm greatly so; those of the arm to a less extent. The flexors of the fore-arm are moderately strong, the extensors very weak. The flexors of the wrist and hand operate slightly; the extensors not at all. The hand is withered and colorless; sensation on the palmar surface is nearly normal, on the dorsum of the fingers it is nearly wanting, on the dorsum of the hand it is very slight. The arm and fore-arm are useless for all purposes where the extensors are brought into play, extension being only accomplished by the aid of the other hand, or that of another person. Circulation is impeded, and the hand and fore-arm have a temperature much below normal.

The interference of the missile with the brachial plexus, besides having caused this partial paralysis of the member, is evidenced further by acute and constant pain, preventing the patient, often totally incapacitating him, from attending to any business. As to the amount of disability resulting from this wound, my judgment, from this examination and from personal knowledge of said Shaw during the period named, would be that the loss of the arm at the shoulder-joint could not have occasioned greater disability.

I further state that I am in no way related to said Shaw, and am in no way whatever, directly or indirectly, interested in the prosecution of any claim by him for pension relief.

S. G. BLYTHE, M. D.

Subscribed and sworn to December 16, 1886.

EXHIBIT C.—From certificate of medical examining board of Mason City, Iowa.

He has received a gunshot wound of left shoulder; the ball entered left breast just below the clavicle, passed backward and downward, and came out through scapula 1 inch from inner border. The clavicle was fractured by ball; it feels rough and irregular. The scar of entrance measures 3½ inches vertically, transversely 1½ inches; tender, adherent, and dragging some discolored purple. The scar of exit is the appearance of excised wound 1½ inch to ½ inch; tender, not adherent or dragging. The left arm measures around biceps 8½ inches; fore-arm 7½, right biceps 11½; fore-arm 11 inches. The muscles of left arm are soft, flabby, cold, and atrophied. He can not use the arm or hand at all; he can not grasp anything with hand. Can not use any of the joints of (——) of arm, and shoulder not stiffened, but loss of muscular power. The paralysis is of local origin; almost entire loss of sensation of hand and entire arms; hand is drawn around—around at right angle to (to) wrist at what is called droped wrist. He can not make any use of the hand; the joints can be moved by taking the other hand to move them. He can not use hand or arm for eating or any other purpose. There is total disability of hand and entire arm. He does not require regular aid and attendance, but requires help in dressing himself.

STATE OF IOWA, County of Floyd:

We, the undersigned citizens of Nora Springs, Floyd County, Iowa, after being duly sworn, do declare and say that we have had an intimate personal acquaintance with Henry B. Shaw for many years, and know from our own personal observation that he suffers great pain continuously from the effects of a gunshot wound through the body, received during the late war, and we have frequently seen him suffer so intensely that he was incapacitated for attending to any kind of business.

JUDITH PLUMMER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2456) for the relief of Judith Plummer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of Judith Plummer, of Washington, D. C., who, during the late war, was a nurse under Dorothy Dix, be, and hereby is, placed on the pension-roll of the United States at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, said pension to date from her discharge from the Army.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the following amendments:

In line 6, strike out "$20" and insert "$12."

In line 8, strike out the words "said pension to date from her discharge from the Army."

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2456) for the relief of Judith Plummer, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

A similar bill, introduced in the Forty-ninth Congress, was favorably considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the following report submitted to the House:

"Judith Plummer is one of the corps of nurses formed by Dorothy Dix, for service in the hospitals of the Army during the late war. In her sworn statement, accompanying her papers, she says:

"'I was enrolled under Dorothy Dix in March, 1862, and served until November, 1864.'"

Early in her term of service she contracted a disease from which she has ever since suffered. She filed an application in the Pension Department, No. 358960, alleging that in March, 1862, while in the Patent Office Hospital, Washington, D. C., she was compelled to sleep upon the stone floor, by which she contracted a severe cold, which resulted in an enlargement of the right gland of the throat and chronic difficulty, with which she still continues to suffer. This claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because "hospital nurses were not in the military service;" consequently there was no law by which her case could be allowed.

The following evidence is filed in substantiation of her claim:

"OFFICE SUPERINTENDENT OF WOMEN NURSES,
"Washington, D. C., November, 1863.

"Assigned to duty Gettysburgh General Hospital; relieved from Fairfax Hospital, Alexandria, Va., upon application of Dr. Chamberlin, surgeon in charge.

"DR. JACQUES,
"Medical Director.

"General hospital closed at Gettysburgh. In November Miss Judith Plummer reported at headquarters, Washington, D. C., and rendered voluntary service in the General Government hospitals. Resignation accepted, and she honorably discharged.

"DR. JACQUES,
"Medical Director.

"NOVEMBER 26, 1886.

"I certify that Miss Judith Plummer has served in Fairfax Seminary General Hospital, Virginia, under my charge, as female nurse. For ten months her services have been valuable to the sick, and her conduct entirely irreproachable. I take pleasure in recommending her.

"DAN'L P. SMITH,
"Surgeon, United States Volunteers.

"1344 G STREET, Washington, D. C., December 4, 1879.

"The bearer of this, Miss Judith Plummer, was employed as nurse at Fairfax Seminary General Hospital in the year 1862 while I was on duty there, and had the care of several very severe cases to my knowledge. She was a conscientious, faithful, and efficient nurse, always performing her duties to my entire satisfaction, and she is certainly entitled to much consideration for her earnest devotion to her duties in the care of those so unfortunate as to need her services.

"J. O. STAUNTON, M. D.

"'OFFICE OF WOMEN NURSES,
"'Washington, D. C., November 28, 1863.

"'This paper certifies that Miss Judith Plummer, for some time resident in Lawrence, Mass., but originally from the State of Maine, has been in the United States service as hospital nurse for more than eighteen months. She now asks relief from duty, and has been honorably discharged, faithful devotion to her labors being attested by the surgeons under whom she has served and by the superintendent of women nurses.

"'D. L. DIX, S. W. N.'

"William J. Frost, Abingdon, Washington County, Va., late hospital steward, United States Army, says:

"'Miss J. Plummer and her sister, Miss Susan (now deceased), did all in their power to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded and sick soldiers.

"'The sisters were from the battle-field of Gettysburgh, to report for duty at Slough United States General Hospital at Alexandria, Va. I was on duty there, and can testify how faithfully both sisters labored night and day in ministering to the sick and solacing the dying.'

"Dr. J. W. Bulkley, Washington, D. C., testifies:

"'JULY 1, 1886.

"'I first met Miss Judith Plummer in the spring of 1862 at the Patent Office Hospital, where I was surgeon in charge. Miss Plummer was engaged in nursing the sick and wounded, and rendered most efficient service. Her sleeping accommodations were very poor, she being obliged to sleep on the stone floor of one of the alcoves, with only a blanket for protection. The result of this exposure was a severe cold and inflammatory or acute sore throat, which nearly cost her her life. I performed a surgical operation at that time and once since. In the first operation (in the Patent Office Hospital) I was obliged to lance her throat in order to reduce the swelling. In the second operation I removed tumors from both sides of her throat, the tumors being the result of the previous diseased condition of her throat. I believe the disease of claimant's throat, which disease has incapacitated her from earning a livelihood, to have originated from exposure during her service as nurse in the hospital.'

"It would seem from all the evidence that this claimant rendered faithful and efficient service until November, 1863, when she was compelled to ask relief from duty on account of her disability, which had become chronic, which disease she contracted in line of her duty and while under orders of United States surgeons; that after her discharge she returned to duty, and rendered voluntary duty until November, 1864. During her service she was treated for the disability in the Patent Office Hospital, and also in Slough Hospital, at Alexandria, Va. Her disability has been continuous; her throat is disfigured with ugly scars, which in themselves bear mute testimony of her sufferings. She is a maiden lady sixty years of age, poor, with no one to look to for support. Your committee, in view of her services and sufferings, are of opinion that the Government should give her some assistance in her age and poverty, and respectfully report back the accompanying bill as amended and recommend its passage."

Your committee fully concur in the conclusions reached by said committee, and therefore likewise report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "twenty," in line 6, and inserting therein instead the word "twelve;" and also by striking out all after the word "laws," in line 7.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELVIRA COOPER.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Elvira Cooper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elvira Cooper, foster-mother of Eugene H. Cooper, deceased, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-second New York Volunteers, and of Company B, One hundred and sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill No. 459, have duly considered the same, and report:

That Eugene H. Cooper was born August 5, 1846. His father died in June, 1851; his mother died August, 1855; one month thereafter he was adopted by his uncle, George W. Cooper and Elvira Cooper, the wife of the said George W. Cooper.

Eugene H. enlisted in Company G, One hundred and forty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, in April, 1864, with said foster-father's consent. Said soldier was wounded at Petersburgh, Va., July 26, 1864, receiving a gunshot wound in the left thigh; was sent to Hampton Hospital; thence to White Hall Hospital, Pennsylvania; was in hospital three weeks, and after a furlough, returned to White Hall hospital.

Joined his regiment December 31, 1864, two days before it started for the second attack on Fort Fisher. He was wounded in the head at Fort Fisher, January 15, 1865, and was sent to Hampton Hospital. He was promoted to corporal for volunteering to cut the palisading at Fort Fisher. Said One hundred and forty-second Regiment was mustered out in June, 1865, and the soldier was transferred to the One hundred and sixty-ninth New York. He died of typhoid fever July 16, 1865, while in service, and while in the hospital at Raleigh, N. C., and was buried in the national cemetery there.

The foster-father, George W. Cooper, died in 1872 (leaving no property and one feeble daughter), since which time the foster-mother, Elvira Cooper, has been dependent upon friends (who are not relatives), and has lived upon charity except the very meager earnings of said daughter.

In the opinion of your committee the valuable service of this soldier, the wounds he received, the fact of his dying while in the line of his duty, and the dependent condition of the foster-mother entitle her to the same pension that she would have received had the said soldier been her son.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY M. STRONG.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2662) for the relief of Mary M. Strong.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Strong, widow of Thomas J. Strong, late lieutenant-colonel of the Sixteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and to pay her such pension as is provided by law to the widow of a lieutenant-colonel in the late war, and the additional pension for each child of Thomas J. Strong and Mary M. Strong until he or she die or arrive at the age of sixteen years; said child's pension to be at such rates as is allowed by law in similar cases.

The bill was reported with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the words "provided by law," in line 8.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read in part.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

There being no objection, the further reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

The evidence in this case shows that Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Strong died September 4, 1885, leaving Mary M. Strong as his widow, and Thomas J. Strong and Katie M. Strong his only children, both being under sixteen years of age.

That the said soldier was formerly a captain of the Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, and was promoted to the lieutenant-colonelcy of said regiment, and as such officer was discharged at the expiration of the term of service of said regiment. That afterwards he re-enlisted and held the position of lieutenant-colonel of the Sixteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery; that while holding said position at Dutch Gap he was shot in the left limb, and in consequence thereof said limb was amputated; that "in recognition of his faithful and distinguished services" he was, in the summer of 1866, made brigadier-general of volunteers by brevet.

The immediate cause of death of said Thomas J. Strong was paralysis, producing exhaustion and resulting in death. The widow applied for a pension, and the application was rejected on the ground as stated by the medical referee—

"That gunshot wound and resulting amputation of left leg just above ankle can not be accepted as the direct or remote cause of paralysis of throat, cause of soldier's death."

The evidence shows that before entering the military service he was a strong, able-bodied man; that from the time of his final discharge therefrom he appeared to be slowly declining in health, complaining of severe pains in his head. In the later years of his life he was troubled with cataracts on his eyes, rendering him nearly blind; that he suffered from neuralgia in the face and head, for which he was treated by his family physician, and subsequently dying from its consequent effects.

George W. Little, M. D., testifies that he knew General Strong before his enlistment and after his return from the Army, and for the last ten years of his life has been his family physician, except during his last illness; that General Strong had been a great sufferer from neuralgia of the face, throat, and jaws, so that he could swallow only with great difficulty, not having full control of the muscles, claiming always that he had had these spells since his limb was amputated, and had not had them before.

The physician states that the disease finally terminated in paralysis of the muscles of the throat and he died from exhaustion, "and in my opinion the said disease was caused by exposure while in the service, and the shock and irritation to the nerves from the amputation of the foot."

Dr. James Ferguson, who had known the said Thomas J. Strong since 1852, and knew him since his discharge, and had advised with him at various times as to his physical condition, and who attended him at his last sickness, states he died from exhaustion, resulting from paralysis of the throat.

"I think that his gradual loss of vigor from the time of his discharge from the service, his trouble with his eyes, and the paralysis which caused his death might have been results from his exposure in the field, and from the shock to his system caused by the amputation of his leg."

The evidence shows that General Strong died leaving scarcely any property for the support of his wife and children.

In view of the diversity of opinion among the physicians as to whether the disease from which he died was the result of his military service, the committee think that his widow and orphan children are entitled to the benefit of the doubt, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended by striking out all after the word "law," in the eighth line thereof.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALONZO ALDEN.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2663) for the relief of Alonzo Alden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Alonzo Alden, late colonel of the One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers and brevet brigadier-general, from $50 to $100 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out "$100" and insert "$72."

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read in part.

Mr. NUTTING. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and the report was ordered to be printed in full in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2663) for the relief of Alonzo Alden, submit the following report:

That Alonzo Alden, the soldier, enlisted in the United States service April 18, 1861, as a private in the Thirtieth Regiment New York Volunteers; May 14, 1861, was made second lieutenant, and June 10, 1862, was made first lieutenant and regimental adjutant; September 27, 1862, transferred to the One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers and commissioned as major; made lieutenant-colonel March 2, 1864, and colonel June 1, 1864.

That while major he was wounded at Edenton road by a fragment of shell, which entirely disabled him for a short period.

It appears from the petition and evidence on file in the Pension Office that at the battle of Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864, Alden was shot by a rebel sharpshooter, the bullet striking the right side of his neck at the base of his head, passing into his neck diagonally, cutting off the lower portion of his right ear, reaching the neighborhood of the spine at the base of the brain, where it still remains. That at the taking of Fort Fisher and the explosion of the enemy's magazine which there occurred, Alden was thrown about 30 feet against a traverse, and a mass of timber and sand fell upon him, fracturing his right thigh and otherwise injuring him and bruising his body, which rendered him unconscious for nearly five weeks. That Alden was mustered out of the service August 6, 1865, holding the rank of colonel and brigadier-general by brevet.

That July 19, 1865, he was granted a pension at the rate of $30 per month and afterwards increased to $50 per month, commencing June 22, 1887.

Alden can not receive $72 per month for the reason that the act of June 16, 1880, granting the same is confined by its express terms to persons then receiving $50 per month. So that the highest rate which the soldier could receive when his pension was raised to $50 per month, as aforesaid, was the sum of $50 per month allowed him. All the evidence on the application was very clear, convincing and consistent, conclusively showing that he would have been entitled to the sum of $72 per month if the Pension Bureau could have allowed it under the law.

We quote but from one affidavit, that of R. B. Bontecon, M. D., a resident of the city of Troy, of forty years' standing in his profession, serving as surgeon in the field from 1861 until the close of the war, brevetted colonel by President Lincoln for distinguished services as a surgeon, for twenty years past assistant surgeon at the Watervliet Arsenal, and now in the practice of his profession in the city of Troy aforesaid, and now and for years past a member of the board of examining surgeons appointed by the Government to examine applicants for pension, who states, in his affidavit of December 14, 1887, that he—

"Knew Alonzo Alden before enlistment and has lived in the same city with him and met him daily, and would have known if he was unsound before enlistment, which he was not; have known and seen him almost daily, when he was at home, for the last twenty-two years, and knows from seeing him daily and from examining him professionally that he has been crippled since his return from the war, partially in his leg, and more especially in his head and spine, the result of a gunshot wound, the ball entering just in front of the right mastoid process and lodging deeply near the base of the brain, where it is still concealed, and giving rise to cerebro-spinal meningitis, so that he can not use his arms or his legs for any manual labor, nor can he transact business on account of the pain and constant irritation caused thereby.

"That I have seen him in several of these paroxysms of acute mania resulting from said gunshot wound, and he is obliged to be under restraint to prevent him from dashing his brains out and inflicting bodily harm on himself, so great is his agony at times. That I have been in constant daily attendance upon him from May 7, 1887, to June 20, 1887, and during that time prescribed powerful medicines, and blistered his back repeatedly, and at last introduced a seton into his neck, which he still wears. He is unable to dress or undress, or to turn over in bed without assistance, and therefore requires the constant attendance of one or more persons. When he has paroxysms of acute mania, as he frequently does, he requires the constant attendance of several persons to restrain him from doing himself bodily harm. He is wholly disabled for any labor or employment, and this deponent further says that the location of the ball above mentioned is such that to attempt to remove it would greatly endanger General Alden's life, and would probably produce his death; that in the opinion of this deponent no prudent surgeon would dare to undertake the operation, and that in the opinion of this deponent no essential improvement in the patient's condition will ever occur."

The examining board of surgeons in their report to the Pension Bureau, dated June 22, 1887, state as follows:

"One of the members of this board has been in attendance on him for several months past, has seen him daily, and knows that he suffers constantly with pain in his head and spine; that he has frequent violent paroxysms of delirium and acute mania, requiring force to control him, apparently due to cerebro-spinal irritation. We believe that this condition of his nervous system is due to the gunshot wound of head, and that he is totally unfit for any occupation, and requires the constant attendance of some person to assist him in dressing, and at table to prepare his food, as he is unable to cut it or dress himself."

The committee, after considering all the evidence in the case, are of the opinion that it is a very just and meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill as amended, and that the bill be amended by striking out the words "one-hundred," in the seventh line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-two."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JULIA A. DARRELL.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 122) for the relief of Julia A. Darrell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia A. Darrell, the dependent mother of William Burr Darrell, late of the United States ship Albany, which sailed from New York in June, 1855, and was never heard from afterwards.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 122) granting a pension to Julia A. Darrell, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant filed an application, as dependent mother of William B. Darrell, in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, May 31, 1878.

The record shows that the son of claimant, William B. Darrell, enlisted as a musician in the Navy of the United States March 26, 1847, was rated fifer October 26, 1847, and was discharged August 27, 1852, at Pensacola, Fla.

It is alleged and shown that William B. Darrell was a musician on the ship Albany, which was lost at sea April 18, 1855. It is but proper to state that the name of claimant's son was not found upon the rolls of said ship Albany, but that your committee believe from the letters filed by claimant and written by her son, and from other evidence in the case, that said William B. Darrell was a musician on said ship, and that he perished when the same was lost at sea, as alleged.

The evidence in the case satisfactorily shows that Julia A. Darrell was the mother of William B. Darrell; that since 1845 she has been dependent upon her own resources for her support; that her husband, John M. Darrell, died about September 29, 1867, and that subsequently to the year 1845 he did not contribute to her support; that while her said son was a musician in the Navy he contributed to her support from his pay as such musician; that since the death of her husband, John M. Darrell, she has not remarried, and that she has no property except some household goods of but little value.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JULIA STOKES.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 893) granting a pension to Julia Stokes.

The bill was read, as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Julia Stokes, mother of Thomas J. Stokes, deceased, late of the United States ship Mohawk.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The applicant filed a declaration in the Bureau of Pensions January 26, 1883, for pension as the mother of Thomas J. Stokes. The claim was rejected February, 1883, upon the ground that there is no law authorizing the payment of a pension to the mother of a sailor who died prior to March 4, 1861.

The record shows that Thomas J. Stokes enlisted as landsman July 28, 1859, served on the North Carolina to September 15, 1859, and on the Mohawk from September 16, 1859, to January 30, 1860, when he died.

In an affidavit filed December 18, 1883, Dr. Hugh Sloan, of Utica, N. Y., states that he has known Patrick Stokes, husband of applicant, since 1872; that he has treated him since that year for sore eyes, and that he has been blind to the extent of disabling him for manual labor, for which he has been incapacitated since he first knew him.

In an affidavit filed December 18, 1883, Henry Kein and Michael Mulligan state that they have known Julia Stokes and her husband for more than thirty years; that their family during a portion of that time has consisted of themselves and three children; that their son, Thomas J. Stokes, from the time that he was able to aid them until his death did aid his parents with his labor and with contributions from his pay as landsman; that two daughters have aided in the common support of the family by contributions from their weekly earnings; that for about thirty years they have been possessed of personal property consisting of only the necessary household goods, and of a house and lot, No. 16 Hamilton street, Utica, N. Y., where they have resided since 1860, and a vacant lot in Utica, from which no income is derived.

The applicant states in an affidavit that during the last eleven years (now fifteen years) her husband has been totally blind and unable to earn a support for himself or family.

Your committee would recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RUFUS SQUIRE.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 421) granting a pension to Rufus Squire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rufus Squire, late a private in the United States Marine Corps.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

Rufus Squire enlisted as a private in the United States Marine Corps July 26, 1847, and was discharged August 29, 1847. He served during period indicated upon United States steamship Michigan.

On June 12, 1880, he filed in the Bureau of Pensions a declaration for pension, in which declaration he alleged that during a severe storm on Lake Michigan, while descending from the main to the berth deck, he slipped and fell, receiving an injury which resulted in hernia of the right side.

The claim was rejected by the Pension Office August 1, 1887, upon the ground that the records of the Navy Department fail to show incurrence of said hernia in line of duty, and claimant's declared inability to furnish testimony showing origin in service and line of duty.

In an affidavit filed March 22, 1887, the claimant states that during a passage from Chicago to Cheboygan the Michigan experienced very rough weather, and that it was necessary to keep the deck around the smoke-stack wet; that he told the officer of the deck to get permission for him and he would go up there and keep the deck wet; that permission was got for him, and he kept the deck wet until the ship got into Cheboygan, where, when the deck was cooled, he went down to the main-deck, and going from there to the berth-deck he fell by his feet slipping and injured himself in the right side, which proved to be the rupture on which he claims pension.

The applicant furnishes no proof other than his own statement showing the origin of alleged rupture. The affidavits of Dr. Carlos Glazin, Samuel James, and Mary Howland, a sister of applicant, show satisfactorily that prior to enlistment the applicant was physically a sound man and that he was free from hernia, and also that upon his return to his former home, following his discharge from the Marine Corps, he was suffering from hernia of the right side.

The quarter reports of steam-ship Michigan for third quarter, 1847, show that one case of inguinal hernia was treated, but do not give the name of patient. The applicant alleges that he received alleged rupture about August 1, 1847. Dr. Carlos Glazin states that he treated the applicant for scrotal hernia of right side in the year 1847.

The board of pension examining surgeons of Detroit, Mich., made an examination of applicant June 15, 1887, and found an indirect inguinal hernia of right side, and recommended a specific rating for hernia.

The only question is, for the purposes of this bill, can origin of hernia in service and line of duty be accepted upon the evidence in the case, in the absence of direct proof of same? Your committee is of the opinion that, in view of all the facts shown in the case, it may be so accepted, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. ABBOTT. I object.

Mr. FINLEY. I trust the gentleman will not object. This is a bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, who is absent this evening, and the case, it seems to me, is sufficiently made out.

Mr. ABBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I listened very attentively to the reading of the report made by the committee, and I was impressed with the idea that the bill ought not to pass. Therefore I have made the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on the motion to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 38, noes 2.

Mr. ABBOTT. No quorum.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar until the chairman of the Committee on Pensions can be present.

Mr. ABBOTT. I make objection.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman will not insist on his objection when he understands that this bill has been reported personally by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, Mr. BLISS, of New York, who has thoroughly investigated the case and finds that the claimant himself swears clearly and specifically that he was ruptured while in the line of duty and in the service, and finds also circumstances supporting and corroborating that statement. I trust that, under the circumstances, the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will restate the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], thinking that perhaps the gentleman from Texas misapprehended it. The request was not that the bill should be reported favorably to the House, but that it should be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. ABBOTT. I did not understand the request in that way. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ABBOTT subsequently withdrew his first objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CATHARINE MAXWELL.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 499) granting a pension to Catharine Maxwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Maxwell, mother of Charles Maxwell, late of Company B, Ninety-seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

The claimant, Catharine Maxwell, mother of Charles Maxwell, late of Company B, Ninety-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who died in the service at Nashville, Tenn., in the month of February, 1863, is now seventy-five years of age, and her husband is eighty-one years of age. The evidence shows that this was the only son of the claimant; that he was a strong, healthy, industrious young man, and worked with and for his parents up to the time when he entered the service at twenty years of age; that he never married, and hence left no wife or children; that while in the service he sent his money home to his parents, and that he died from a disease contracted in the service.

The evidence shows the high character of the parents and the soldier, and the only reason why the mother was not pensioned is the fact that Mr. Maxwell owned at the time of the soldier's death 80 acres of poor land, variously valued from $765 to $1,520, and personal property valued from $263 to $342; and that the aggregate amount of the property of the family in 1863, at the time of the son's death, was $1,107, and the year before it was $1,028. There is abundant proof that this land is very poor, and that with the son's aid and the work which his father and mother could do they eked out a very scanty living, even by hard work and the most rigid economy. The evidence shows that the old people are no longer able to do much work, and that this piece of land will not furnish them any kind of comfortable support.

In view of the great age of the parents and their indigent circumstances, and in view of the fact that they gave their only son to their country, and have no other means of support than the property named, we recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY K. TAYLOR.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5236) granting an increase of pension to Mary K. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Mary K. Taylor, widow of George W. Taylor, late a brigadier-general in the United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the amount now received by her under the law.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

Mrs. Taylor is the widow of Brig. Gen. George W. Taylor, who died September 1, 1862, from the effects of wounds received at the battle of Manassas, Va., August 27, 1862, while undergoing amputation of the wounded leg. She is now a pensioner at $30 per month, under the provisions of the general law, and asks that her pension be increased to $50 per month. Her age is shown to be seventy-four years.

As Congress has in similar cases increased the pension of the widows of general officers to the amount asked for in this bill, your committee are of the opinion that Mrs. Taylor's pension should likewise be increased, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM CLARK.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5844) granting an increase of pension to William Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to increase the pension of William Clark, a veteran of the war of 1812, from $16 per month, the amount now allowed him, to $30 per month.

The report (by Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina) was read, as follows:

The bill proposes to increase the pension of William Clark, a veteran of the war of 1812, from $16 to $30 per month. The pensioner is ninety-four years of age, and has no means of support except the sum of $16 per month. He is a worthy citizen and bears an irreproachable character. In this case the increase of pension asked for seems to be altogether just and proper.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS JORDAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Thomas Jordan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas Jordan, of the State of New York, is hereby relieved of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The report (by Mr. CULBERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had House bill 5876 under consideration, find that the bill is based upon a petition of the applicant asking that the disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment may be removed.

The committee report a substitute for the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA F. WOODRUM.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2805) granting a pension to Martha F. Woodrum, widow of James Woodrum, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $30 per month, the name of Martha F. Woodrum, surviving widow of James Woodrum, deceased, late private of Company C, Ninth Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of California) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are set forth in a report submitted to the House by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the last Congress, as follows:

"The claimant is the widow of James Woodrum, who was killed while serving as a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment Kansas Cavalry. Her claim for pension has been rejected on the ground that soldier was not in line of duty at the time of his death.

"The facts in the case are as follows: James Woodrum, in January, 1864, was stationed, with his company, at Kansas City, Mo. He was ordered to Lawrence, Kans., for the purpose of recruiting for the company, and got permission to stop on the way at his home near Shawneetown, Kans., about 10 miles from Kansas City. It appears that he reached the house about noon. Shortly thereafter five men came along looking for a lost horse. The soldier went to the gate and entered into conversation. After stopping a few moments four of the men passed on, the other one, McConnell, remaining. The claimant and two other women, relatives, the only inmates of the house, heard some words pass between soldier and McConnell, when the latter fired two shots from a revolver, killing Woodrum instantly. The body was on that afternoon taken back to Kansas City.

"The records of the War Department furnish no information except that soldier was killed by a citizen at the date alleged.

"The authority for recruiting, as well as the permission of Captain Stewart, of the company, to visit his home, was shown by the soldier to his wife and the other inmates of the house, as appears from their testimony in the case. Captain Stewart is said to be insane, while the whereabouts of the other officers are unknown.

"The cause for the killing of the soldier must, under the circumstances, remain unknown. McConnell was evidently a stranger to claimant and her companions. Soldier's company was then in charge of contraband stock. The party of which McConnell was one was in search of a horse. Was that horse among the stock guarded by the company 10 miles away? Did this fact furnish a motive for the fatal shooting?

"The poverty of the claimant and her dependence upon relatives are clearly shown. She has become totally blind, and now, far away from the locality where she so suddenly was deprived of her support, is unable to furnish additional information touching the circumstances of the shooting."

A bill passed one House of Congress some years ago, and a similar bill passed the Senate during the last Congress and was favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the House, but was not reached for final action.

For reasons set forth in the above-quoted report your committee are of opinion that this unfortunate claimant should have the relief asked for, and therefore report favorably on accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "fifty," in line 6, and insert therein instead the word "twelve."

The amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY J. FRANCIS.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. 4655) granting a pension to Mary J. Francis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Francis, widow of Eli C. Francis, late captain Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The history of this case, as near as it can be gathered from the papers on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, shows that Eli C. Francis, the deceased husband of Mary J. Francis, was captain of Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; that he enlisted on the 7th day of November, 1861, and was honorably discharged at Camp Chase, Ohio, on the 30th day of November, 1862, having been in the service a few days more than a year. In his original application for pension, filed March 18, 1875, he makes affidavit as follows:

"While in the service aforesaid, and in the line of his duty at a place called Shiloh, in the State of Tennessee, on the 10th day of April, 1862, when at Camp Shiloh, was attacked with diarrhea, which continued about six weeks. In about ten days after, was attacked with typhoid fever, which continued for twelve weeks, leaving him much reduced, producing ulceration of left limb. In a few days, was attacked with intermittent fever, which continued four or five weeks; present condition, very feeble, with complete paralysis of left side.

"Alf. Ferguson, second lieutenant Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, certifies as follows:

"And I further certify that Eli C. Francis, while in the line and discharge of his duty at Camp Shiloh, Tennessee, about the 10th of April, 1862, by reason of exposure to rain, snow, mud, and unwholesome food and water, he contracted the camp diarrhea, which disease continued about six weeks, when he was attacked with typhoid fever, which almost caused his death, and lasted about three months, leaving him greatly reduced, with ulceration of his left leg. In a few days after the typhoid fever left him he was attacked with intermittent fever, which lasted four or five weeks, which wholly prostrated him, and, as a result of said diseases, they left him with complete paralysis of the whole left side. And that the said Eli C. Francis was to all appearance a sound man when he entered the service; he passed examination of the examining surgeons with myself and company."

A copy of the report of the board of surgeons convened at Camp Chase, Ohio, July 3, 1861, is among the papers on file. There is evidently a mistake in the date. It should be "July 3, 1862." The report says:

"E. C. Francis presented himself for examination. Is captain of Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; aged forty-six; confectioner; residence, Urbana, Ohio. Enlisted on the 7th of November, 1861, and had good health until the 10th day of April, when he was seized with typhoid fever at Pittsburgh Landing. He lay in his quarters three weeks, and was then sent to Cincinnati, from which point he came home. For the last two weeks he has been improving slowly. Appetite good. Bowels have been quiet until he came to this post, since which time they have been somewhat loose. He still complains of a pain in the right side of the chest below the nipple, which we think is only muscular. He is somewhat lame in the left leg from general varicose condition of the veins, but particularly of the deep-seated ones. He has also a slight varicose condition of the veins of the left leg. Opinion, that the captain is permanently disabled.

"GUSTAV C. E. WEBER, M. D.
"S. M. SMITH, M. D.
"JOHN A. MURPHY, M. D.

"W. R. LOOKER, Secretary."

Dr. George W. Daily, in his affidavit, states:

"I was intimately acquainted with Capt. Eli C. Francis and was his attending physician for a little over two years, and at the time of his death he was a constant sufferer with camp or chronic diarrhea and varicose veins of the left leg, with paralysis of the left side. His death occurred on the 30th of October, 1879, and the immediate cause of his death was camp or chronic diarrhea, contracted, as I believe, while in the service of the United States Government."

Dr. Bogart says:

"Known soldier since October 23, 1876, and treated him from said date to September 18, 1877, for paralysis of left side and varix left leg."

This soldier was paralyzed in his left arm in January, 1874, and subsequently in his whole left side. He was pensioned for varicose veins of left leg. It was claimed that the paralysis was caused by the varix, and he claimed increase on that ground, and again on account of chronic diarrhea. Both increase claims were rejected on the ground that the medical evidence was insufficient to establish the claim, or that the soldier died from the effects of diarrhea, the result of exposure while in the line of duty as a soldier.

A bill increasing his pension from $15 to $30 per month was introduced (H. R. 6535) March 3, 1879. The report of the committee says:

"The committee find from the evidence that the claimant is totally disabled, requiring the continual aid of an assistant, he being paralyzed in all of his left side. The committee are of opinion that the case is one justly entitled to an increase of pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill increasing the pension to $30 per month."

Before the bill reached final action the soldier died. The committee believe this to be a meritorious case; that the soldier died from the effects of disease contracted while in the Army, and that the bill ought to pass.

Your committee therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS H. AULLS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 416) granting a pension to Thomas H. Aulls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas H. Aulls, late private in Company C, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 416) granting a pension to Thomas H. Aulls, beg leave to report:

The said Thomas H. Aulls enlisted in the One hundred and eighty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry on the 23d day of August, 1864, and was duly mustered the same day; that while in front of Petersburgh, and on the march and crossing a ditch upon the Jerusalem plank road, he alleges that he was injured upon the knee by the butt of a gun in the hands of a comrade, or in some other way which he is unable to state, whereby the knee-joint was bruised and lacerated in such a manner that he bled profusely; that said wound grew worse, and he was compelled about March 1, 1865, to enter the hospital for treatment, where he had to remain for a large portion of the time until he was discharged and mustered out of the service, May 25, 1865. His statement is confirmed by the Army record, showing his treatment for inflammation of the knee. The fact that Mr. Aulls was injured as stated, and that he has been and still is suffering from such injury, we think the proof fully sustains.

This case was examined by the Commissioner of Pensions and disallowed in 1881, for the reason that it appeared from the statement of claimant, as well as by the physician who treated him, that claimant was some time about the year 1856-'57 afflicted with inflammation in this same knee-joint, and hence that the disability of which he complains was not obtained while in the military service, but arises from a disability which existed at the time of enlistment.

After a careful examination of the case we are of the opinion that the ruling of the honorable Commissioner is not sustained by the proof in the case. When an enlisted man was examined by a board of surgeons to determine as to his physical fitness to become a soldier, the presumption should exist, and must exist, that he was a sound and able-bodied man at the time of muster.

All the proof there is in the case to show that Mr. Aulls had been troubled with inflammation in his knee before enlistment is the statement of himself and the physician who treated him.

Claimant swears that in 1856-'57 he was troubled with inflammation of the left knee; that he was then eight years old; that this inflammation was caused by going in swimming too much; that for several years before enlistment he had entirely recovered from such trouble and was a perfectly able-bodied man; that he was treated by Dr. Ensign, who for many years had been the family physician of claimant's parents; that Dr. Ensign at this time visited him three times; that claimant felt no weakness or pain in his knee after 1857, and never had any trouble from his knee after that until he was injured in January, 1865, although previous to his said injury he had made many hard marches.

This testimony is corroborated by Dr. Samuel Ensign, above named, who says in his affidavit that he treated claimant in 1856 or 1857 for bilious colic and for inflammation in one of his knees; that claimant fully recovered from these, and was in perfect health up to the time of his enlistment in 1864; that when claimant returned from the Army in 1865 he was very lame from chronic inflammation of all the structures of the knee-joint. The Pension Bureau, after the filing of the affidavit of Dr. Ensign in 1879, wrote him a private letter for a more full statement of the matter, and here again the doctor explained his treatment of the knee of claimant in 1856-'57, and that he considered him entirely cured long before enlistment. We think the testimony of Dr. Ensign corroborating the affidavit of the claimant is quite sufficient to show that the disability complained of did not exist when claimant enlisted, and that claimant was injured at the time and in the way stated by him. Second Lieut. M. W. Read testifies that claimant was injured in January, 1865, when on a "double-quick" and in crossing a ditch, and, as stated before, this is confirmed by the hospital record. The disability of which claimant complains still exists, as claimed by him, but as to what extent he was disabled as well as to what extent such disability exists at the present time can be determined by a board of surgeons under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Believing that the claimant was disabled as alleged, we report the bill back to the House and recommend that the same do pass.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

G. W. BURKHART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 407) granting a pension to G. W. Burkhart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Burkhart, late a sergeant in Company G, Tenth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, said pension to commence from and after the date of his discharge.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 407) granting a pension to G. W. Burkhart, submit the following report:

That the said G. W. Burkhart's case is fully stated in the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, hereto annexed.

That he was severely injured by the railroad collision at Dayton, Ohio, referred to in said letter, to wit, badly bruised, left arm broken, and right leg broken, from which he suffers to the present day, his use of both limbs being greatly impaired. The reason why he was one day late returning to duty was that the trains did not connect, he being on his way in full time to catch them if they had been on time.

He was undoubtedly doing his best to perform his duty, and the committee recommend that the bill pass.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., July 19, 1887.

SIR: In response to your communication relative to your claim for invalid pension No. 81720, as sergeant, Company G, Tenth Ohio Cavalry, which was rejected in 1865, on the ground that you were not in line of duty at the time your injuries, for which pension is claimed, were incurred, I have to state that a careful consideration of all the papers in the case reveals the fact that on December 30, 1863, you were granted "leave of absence" for six days, ending January 4, 1864, at which time you were to report to the regimental headquarters at Cincinnati, Ohio, or be considered a deserter. Having availed yourself of the leave of absence thus granted, you were strictly bound by the conditions named therein, and as it is clearly shown that the railroad collision at Dayton, Ohio, in which you were so severely injured, occurred on the 5th day of January, 1864, one day after your leave of absence had expired and before you had reported back to your regiment, then stationed at Cincinnati, it follows that you were at that time considered as a deserter, and therefore not in line of duty under the law as applied to such cases.

"It may be proper to add, that had your injuries been received within the time prescribed by the furlough above referred to, you could not then have been considered in the line of duty, as it was granted you for the purpose of visiting your family in Northern Ohio, and had no connection whatever with the performance of your military duty.

"The former action of this office, rejecting the claim, is adhered to.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN C. BLACK,
"Commissioner.

"GEORGE W. BURKHART, Detroit, Mich."

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out all after the word "cavalry," in the seventh line.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN BISBEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2491) granting a pension to John Bisbey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of John Bisbey, late a sergeant of Company B, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, and that he be granted a pension at the rate of $36 a month.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

This soldier received a gunshot wound through the left fore-arm at the battle of Petersburgh, April 2, 1865, from which he alleges, in declaration filed, "his arm was completely disabled for manual labor."

He is receiving a pension of only $4 a month, granted from July 25, 1865, although the testimony of several neighbors and employers is to the effect that his arm was practically useless, and he could only do such work as could be done with one hand, earning from one-third to one-half usual wages.

Samuel F. Dickey a comrade, makes affidavit as follows:

"Claimant was wounded in his left fore-arm in the battle of Petersburgh. His arm was completely disabled for manual labor."

Martin Simmons testifies:

"Have personally known claimant for eighteen years. He was wounded, as alleged, through left fore-arm. He will never be able to make a living by manual labor on account of said wound."

Isaac Drake testifies:

"Claimant worked for me in spring of 1866 and did work that he could do with one arm. The injury to left arm about amounted to its loss."

Two other witnesses testify "he could do nothing only what he could do with one hand; his left hand and arm were of no use to him." These are a few of many affidavits of neighbors and comrades on file in this claim, from which it would seem that the rate of one-half total (which had been granted) did not cover the disability existing from the wound prior to the loss of the wounded arm, which occurred by accident in March, 1866, while employed by Isaac Drake (whose testimony we have quoted above), in getting out wood for the M. S. and L. S. R. R., doing what they termed "tail sawing" (as he could do that with one arm).

While thus employed his arm was taken off at the elbow by a buzz saw. Those who witnessed the accident testify it to be their belief it would not have happened had not his arm been so weakened and almost helpless from result of wound. The head sawyer testifies as follows:

"His arm was cut off near noon on the 30th of March, 1866. We had moved the machine to a different place, put the belt on, and started the saw to see if it would run all right so that we could go immediately to work after dinner, and Bisbey (the claimant) happened to go along by the side of the saw; his coat-sleeve on his wounded arm caught in the saw, and before we could help him his arm was cut off through the elbow joint.

"In my opinion, as the saw was running slowly (merely to see if the belt would run even and right), if it had caught the sleeve of the right arm he would have saved his arm, as his coat was old and easily torn. But he had no use nor control of his left arm. There was no strength in that hand and arm to do much of anything. The above I make is a truthful statement. I have no interest, direct or indirect, in his claim."

The committee are satisfied from all the evidence in the case that the loss of his arm in manner aforesaid was attributable entirely to its enfeebled condition as the result of the wound for which he was pensioned, and that if the arm had been sound he would have had no difficulty in rescuing it from the saw.

The committee are further satisfied, from all the facts in the case, that if it had not been for the accident aforesaid an application for an increase would have long since been favorably considered by the Pension Office.

The claimant made application for increase after the loss of his arm, but as the arm was gone no examination could be had, and the claim for increase was rejected.

It further appears in the case that the claimant is very poor, having a wife and four children dependent upon him for support, and that he has no property except a small house and lot upon which he has paid the sum of $80.

The committee therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that he be allowed a pension of $36 a month, and that the bill for his relief be amended by inserting, after the word "month," in the eighth line, "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving," and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PERKINS. The provisions of the bill seem to be inconsistent. This applicant is put on the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and then the rate is fixed at $36 per month.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment of the committee is "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving." That is right.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN HANCOCK.

Mr. GLASS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 1071) granting a pension to John Hancock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Hancock, late a private in Capt. Jesse J. Finley's company and Col. William Trousdale's regiment of Tennessee Volunteers, in the Seminole war.

The report (by Mr. FINLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1071) granting a pension to John Hancock, would beg leave to report as follows:

The records show that the claimant enlisted June 13, 1836, as a private in Capt. Jesse J. Finley's company, Col. William Trousdale's regiment, Tennessee Mounted Volunteers, of the Cherokee war, and was discharged January 14, 1837, at New Orleans, La.

The claimant is now seventy-two years of age, and in an affidavit filed with your committee states that he is possessed of 73 acres of land in Lauderdale County, Tennessee, a few head of stock, some farm implements, and a small amount of household furniture, and that—

"His property is incumbered with debt that he sees no way to relieve."

That—

"On account of his age, his physical infirmities, and feebleness he is unable, with the use of such property as he has, to make a livelihood, even in a poor way, for himself, his aged wife, and daughter, who compose his family. He is subject to fits of vertigo or some indisposition in which he loses his consciousness, brought on by violent exercise, and is sometimes caused by suddenly rising from a chair."

Dr. A. H. Young makes a statement under oath that he has known the claimant for twenty years or more, and that for the last five years he has been disabled, "his disability following a fall from a horse," since which time he has been almost a constant sufferer from his head; that claimant suffers also from "chronic dyspepsia and a most distressing vertigo. His hands are almost useless from contraction of the tendons. These infirmities render him utterly unable to make a support by manual labor, his only way of doing the same."

The claimant is unwilling himself to say that his disabilities were contracted in the service or at all grew out of it; but, in view of the claimant's services, his advanced age, his peculiarly unfortunate and helpless condition, and as justly and equitably due him and his aged wife, your committee would recommend the passage of the bill.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM S. SIMS.

Mr. PAYSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2077) to place on the pension-roll the name of William S. Sims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William S. Sims, late captain of Company F, Eighty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at a rating of $50 per month from the date of the approval of this act.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The record in this case shows that Capt. William S. Sims was pensioned October 29, 1880, to take effect from August 24, 1864, at $20 per month, for disease of lungs, and that the same was increased January 6, 1886, to $30 per month, and it is now asked to increase the same to $50 per month.

Dr. John B. Baker, the physician of the soldier, testifies that the soldier is totally incapacitated from performing manual, professional, or skilled labor.

W. J. Miller testifies to same facts.

L. M. Witt testifies to same facts, and also that the soldier requires assistance to dress himself and to cut and prepare his food at the table, and requires an attendant nearly all the time.

John S. Wilson testifies to the same facts as the last witness.

The surgeon's certificate in this case shows that the soldier is not able to do any labor at all, and requires help in dressing and going about. Has to have his food cut for him at the table, and that there is a marked emaciation, and that the soldier will never be any better and that his disability will increase.

The record as a whole, we think, shows total disability, and the committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass, as amended by striking out the word "fifty" in line 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM P. WITT.

Mr. WALKER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6908) granting a pension to William P. Witt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William P. Witt, late of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6908) granting a pension to William P. Witt, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted July 13, 1864, as sergeant of Company B, Seventeenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteers, for the term of one hundred days. Claim for pension rejected in the Pension Office because of claimant's inability to prove origin and connect present disability with service.

Claimant states that he was taken sick at Camp Curtis, near Leavenworth, Kans., with camp diarrhea. Two of his comrades testify to his sickness at Camp Curtis, and the physician who was called to treat him immediately on his return from the service states that he (claimant) was seized with liver complaint and yellow jaundice, with finally rheumatism supervening, and had quite a protracted and serious confinement for six weeks or more.

The board of examining surgeons at St. Joseph, Mo., under date of July 9, 1884, report claimant entitled to one-half rate of pension.

Your committee are of the opinion that soldier contracted the disease from which he now suffers while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. He is clearly entitled to a pension, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JANE THOMAS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 159) granting a pension to Jane Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Jane Thomas, of Dubuque, Iowa, an Army nurse, widow of Lewis A. Thomas, late quartermaster-sergeant of the Forty-sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and that her pension be at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill (H. R. 159) granting a pension to Jane Thomas, respectfully report:

Mrs. Jane Thomas is the widow of Lewis A. Thomas, late quartermaster-sergeant of the Forty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteers. She served as an Army nurse in the late war, rendering earnest, faithful, and efficient service, and in that service lost her health, which she has never recovered.

Her husband died in 1882, leaving her without any means of support or any known relatives to whom she might apply for assistance. She is now seventy-three years of age, wholly incapacitated from earning her own living, and is maintained in the Iowa Home for the Friendless, at Dubuque, Iowa, of which institution she is an inmate.

Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, who is widely known as the agent of the Christian Commission, says of Mrs. Thomas in an affidavit of recent date:

"She was active in securing hospital supplies throughout the war, and entered the service June 5, 1864, as nurse, and, in addition to other duties, superintended the special-diet kitchen of Adams United States Hospital at Memphis, Tenn. She continued in the service in Adams Hospital from June 5 till the following November. She was under my direct supervision in the special-diet kitchen work, under "special orders" of the War Department, to which attention is called. Mrs. Thomas rendered most faithful and acceptable service through the heat and hardships of the summer and until her health failed and she was obliged to return home in November, 1864."

The directors of said Home for the Friendless say:

"She was an earnest and untiring worker for the soldiers in camp and hospital, at home and in the field."

The facts above stated are also corroborated by the testimony and written statements of Drs. Staples and Boomer, late Army surgeons, and of a large number of most reputable citizens of Dubuque, Iowa.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with an amendment striking out in lines 7 and 8 the words "that her pension be," and insert in place thereof the words "pay her a pension."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IDA B. LINTHICUM.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 97) granting a pension to Ida B. Linthicum.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ida B. Linthicum, of Quincy, Ill., daughter of John D. Linthicum, deceased, late a private in the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The soldier, John D. Linthicum, enlisted in One hundred and eighteenth Illinois Volunteers, November, 1862, fought in seven battles, and came home sick in September, 1863, and was discharged for disability June 6, 1864, having become disabled from doing duty as a soldier from July, 1863, while in the service of the United States and in line of duty as a soldier, and he died May, 1865. His widow drew a pension until she married again, then the said Ida B. Linthicum drew a pension until she was sixteen years of age, when, under the law, the pension stopped. She now applies for a pension of $10 per month, what she had been drawing prior to the time she arrived at sixteen years of age; she was twelve years of age when her mother married the second time, and she is now twenty-four years of age.

It appears from the testimony of Dr. Byrd, her attending physician, that she is suffering from incurable posterior curvature of the spine, and that she has been so afflicted from her birth and will be a cripple for life, and is wholly unable to make a living and has no means of livelihood, and if she does not receive a pension will be an object of private charity.

The committee therefore recommend that this bill pass.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARBLE H. BAIRD.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 782) granting a pension to Marble H. Baird.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marble H. Baird, late of Company A, Eighth Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 782) granting a pension to Marble H. Baird, submit the following report:

This soldier enlisted August 30, 1861, in Company A, Eighth Illinois Cavalry, and was discharged March 5, 1862, for an injury to the wrist, which was admitted to have existed at the time of enlistment. In 1875 he filed an application for pension, alleging that in January, 1862, he received a rupture in the service. This application was rejected principally on the ground that the certificate of disability for which the soldier was discharged makes no mention of the hernia, and there is also some contradiction in the statement of the soldier as to the manner and time of incurrence of the disability. In one affidavit he testifies that he first received it in carrying logs of wood in camp near Alexandria. In a subsequent affidavit he alleges that he received it by being thrown from his horse in Washington.

The special examiner who investigated this case, in speaking of the conflicting testimony, says:

"His explanation of it is not altogether satisfactory, and yet it may be true. It will be noticed that the claimant avers that subsequent to the incurrence of the alleged rupture he rehurt himself, after which the alleged rupture gave him more trouble than formerly. Now, the conflicting testimony as to the time and place of the occurrence of said rupture can only be recognized upon the theory that those who testified to its incurrence at Alexandria could have had no knowledge of the injury at Washington, and that they confounded the aggravation and increase of the said rupture with its original incurrence. Upon the whole, I am inclined to the opinion that the claim is meritorious."

Dr. H. M. Crawford, James C. Baird, Adam S. Vanvast, I. D. Garton, J. B. Howells, John F. Farnsworth, Maj. William G. Conkling, P. G. Jennings, William R. Monroe all testify in the most positive terms to the soundness of claimant at the time he enlisted.

Col. John F. Farnsworth, Maj. William G. Conkling, both of the same regiment, Capt. P. G. Jennings and comrade William R. Monroe, of the same company, testify unqualifiedly as to his being injured by a fall from his horse. Some of them testify that they saw the bunch which they believed to be a rupture. The testimony as to his condition at time of discharge is also clear.

The examining surgeon at Independence, Kans., in 1875, describes the disability, which coincides with the evidence of the other witnesses in the case.

The examining board of surgeons in 1883 certified that he was entitled to a total rating.

After a careful and thorough examination of the mass of evidence submitted in the case your committee are forced to the conclusion that the soldier received the disability in the service, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELIZA B. ANDERSON.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 754) to increase the pension of Mrs. Eliza B. Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Eliza B. Anderson, widow of the late Robert Anderson, a brigadier-general in the United States Army, shall be paid, from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, a pension of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid to her.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out in lines 5 and 6 the words "during her natural life," and in line 6 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

Mr. HOLMAN. The report is quite brief, and I hope it will be read.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I move that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have not been able to bring my mind to consent to the reduction recommended in this bill by the Committee on Pensions.

The bill was reported to the House by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and I am sure he will not object to the sum named in the bill.

The original bill proposed to increase the present pension of Mrs. Anderson to $100 per month, but as reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions it is fixed at only $75. I desire to be heard for a few moments in support of the original bill, unless there seems to be a unity of opinion on the part of the committee that the bill should be laid aside with the recommendation that it do pass at the rate of $100 a month.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Let the bill be laid aside.

Mr. PERKINS. I think we ought to have the reading of the report, or an explanation of its provisions.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there is general consent that the pension shall be fixed at $100 a month, I shall not ask to occupy the attention of the committee; or if gentlemen prefer that the report should be read, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the gentleman will state briefly to the House what this bill is, so as to avoid the reading of a lengthy report.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no fact, Mr. Chairman, of which I am possessed affecting this bill that is not a part of the history of this country. It would not be proper for me to say that the Government has not been in some degree mindful of the services rendered by General Robert Anderson to the country at the opening hours of the late war, or that it had not recognized in some degree the importance of his services.

Indeed, the country has done so. I ask that an act which was passed on the 10th day of June, 1872, which is very brief, may be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Eliza B. Anderson, widow of the late Maj. Gen. Robert Anderson, the sum of $10,000 in grateful recognition of that singular fidelity to public duty which inspired said Robert Anderson when a major in the United States Army, on the 26th day of December, 1860, without authority from the President, and in defiance of the wishes of the Secretary of War, to assume the grave responsibility of transferring his small command from Fort Moultrie to Fort Sumter, in Charleston Harbor, thereby incurring the double reproach from the Government of his country that he had acted without orders, and from the enemy of his country that he had "achieved the unenviable distinction of opening civil war," and at the same time placing himself under those hardships which wrecked his constitution and destroyed his life.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, perhaps no better evidence could be furnished than this declaration of Congress of the fact that General Robert Anderson lost his life in the service and defense of his country.

General Anderson died soon after the close of the war, leaving a widow and three children—two daughters and one son. To the great grief of the mother, the son died at an early age.

Mrs. Anderson has lived in comparatively destitute circumstances, as I am informed, for a number of years past with her daughters. She is receiving now, it is proper for me to say, a pension of $50 a month. She received, of course, in the first instance a pension of $30, which was ultimately increased to $50 by special act of Congress; and so she is receiving now, and has received for several years past, $50 a month. The money granted to her by Congress under the act of 1872, to which I have referred, was entirely lost by an unfortunate investment made by a friend. I state that upon rumor and not as coming from Mrs. Anderson herself. However that may be, I am assured that she is dependent on the pension heretofore granted by Congress for the support of herself and daughters.

There was in this House a number of years ago one of the greatest characters that ever represented a constituency—General Clinch, of South Carolina. To illustrate his character: A very considerable claim in his favor, growing out of the Florida war, had been audited in his favor. It had been pending in Congress prior to his becoming a member. After becoming a member of the House, some special friend of his, supposing it would gratify General Clinch to do so, brought forward the bill in his behalf. The history of the times says that General Clinch resented this act of his friend with indignation. He thought it not becoming a representative of the people that while he held a seat in Congress any measure specially beneficial to him should be brought into that body for consideration. The measure was withdrawn and acted upon many years later, and a portion of that audited claim went to Mrs. Anderson, the only loyal member of his family, years later by an act of Congress. Mrs. Anderson was a daughter of this distinguished South Carolinian.

The family of General Clinch was at the commencement of the late war one of the most influential in South Carolina, and all involved in the Confederacy but Mrs. Anderson, who adhered like a loyal wife to her gallant husband and to her country.

Mr. Chairman, the circumstances under which General Anderson was placed in 1860 to my mind present one of the most interesting incidents of the history of the country, and present him in a character more striking and prominent than any of the great characters which the war for the Union brought on the stage of action and made illustrious. The declaration made in that act of Congress just read, as you all know, gentlemen, is in a certain sense somewhat partisan. The truth is that both parties, the Republican party which came in and the Democratic party which was going out, and the two great characters representing each party, Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Lincoln, shrank from being responsible for what all men feared would be and proved to be the opening of a terrible fratricidal war.

It is due to history, I think, to say that both of those great statesmen alike shrank from the responsibility of an act which might lead to war. I need not dwell upon the circumstances under which General Anderson, in October, 1860, with large social connections at the South and especially in South Carolina, was sent to Charleston Harbor. The fact, however, is he was sent there. It was charged upon him by the South, and the North for the time hardly had the manhood to deny it, that the act by which he removed his troops from their defenseless position at Fort Moultrie to the comparatively strong post of Fort Sumter was, in itself, an act of war, yet as a loyal soldier he could do nothing else; but it is certain that General Anderson's act on that occasion—denounced on the one side, with no voice for a time in its defense raised on the other either here at the capital or throughout the country—on the whole is one of the most satisfactory events of the fearful struggle, and is now a source of satisfaction to the South as well as to the North, for the loyal prudence of his conduct left no ground for charging aggression on the part of the Government.

If he had shrunk from the post of duty and evacuated that fort, or remained in a position that was indefensible, instead of doing the best he could to defend the flag and honor of his country, the South and the North would alike feel to-day that the nation was in the beginning humiliated. It would have been a fearful blot on our history. Harassed on the one side, unsupported on the other, the representatives of the South demanding the surrender, he gave utterance to the declaration that he never would surrender that fort till it could be done with honor to his country. Till it could be so done, he declared that rather than abandon it he would be buried beneath its shapeless ruins. Those words rang through the land and inspired that heroism which was later displayed and saved the Union.

Those great generals of great and prolonged command, of whom the whole nation is proud, were placed under different circumstances. However much we may admire their heroism and devotion to country, we know that they were buoyed up on all sides; the sympathies, encouragement, and admiration of the whole people of the North gathered around their great commanding officers, and the eyes of the people, not only in the North but in the South and of the civilized world, were upon them. There was everything to uphold and sustain them. But here was a general, standing solitary and alone, apparently without the support of his Government on the one side, and denounced by the other; with the fear in his heart that he might be the cause of precipitating his country into a bloody fraternal war. This was the awful position in which he was placed. I submit there is nothing in the whole line of our history which furnishes an instance of greater devotion to country in more embarrassing circumstances than was displayed by General Anderson. The prudence, patriotism, and fortitude displayed have no parallel in our history, all facts considered.

A moment ago I went into the Library. I looked for a notice of the life of Robert Anderson, and happily I found this, the first utterance that fell upon his ears to show him that the people of the United States had not entirely forgotton the fearful perils by which he was surrounded. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That we fully approve the bold and patriotic act of Major Anderson in withdrawing from Fort Moultrie to Fort Sumter, and of the determination of the President to maintain that fearless officer in his present position; and that we will support the President in all constitutional measures to enforce the laws and preserve the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. That resolution was submitted to the House of Representatives on the 7th January, 1861, by Mr. Adrian, of New Jersey. It was adopted by a yea-and-nay vote. And I may perhaps be pardoned for saying, after this lapse of twenty-seven years, I felt the glow of pride in seeing my name recorded in the affirmative. The resolution was adopted by a vote of yeas 125, nays 56. According to my information of the history of that period that resolution when it reached General Anderson's ear, before the fall of Fort Sumter, was the first information he had that the masses of the American people were standing by him. We can understand the difficulty of the position which he then occupied before the country.

There must have been pressing fearfully upon his mind the responsibility which rested upon him when he was to be the instrument unwillingly of plunging the nation into war. The very step from which both the great men representing their respective parties—the one going out of power and the other coming in—shrunk, General Anderson was compelled to take; and yet he neither compromised the honor of his Government nor furnished an excuse for war.

I have, sir, but a few additional words to say, and I have always favored equality in pensions of those who defended the Union. We have been, however, in the custom, during the war and since the war, up to this time, of enlarging pensions beyond the amount established by the regular statute, whenever by distinguished services such an increase of the amount seemed to be a proper recognition by the nation of those services. Here is something more than that. Here is a case of a general whose services were certainly as valuable to this nation as those of any other, who displayed a patriotism under embarrassing conditions unsurpassed; and also forbearance and prudence in conduct which prevented this great Government of ours from being responsible for that war, while at the same time in circumstances calling loudly upon the National Government for help.

Under these circumstances is not this in truth an exceptional case? Should there be a moment's hesitation? The very fact that General Anderson, broken in health, mind, and body by the perils of that period, could make no greater record in later years is an argument in behalf of his family. General Anderson's was not a prolonged record, but a great one, and without a parallel. It will not arrest the attention of the historian as will the imposing records which were made later in the great struggle by great generals who will occupy a commanding place in all future history, but an instance of exalted patriotic devotion occupying only a short period, yet sufficient to use up the great energies of a great life, as declared by Congress in the act of 1872, which has been read.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the widow of General Robert Anderson, and in behalf of his daughter, I ask the committee to grant a pension in this case of $100 per month.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that this bill ought to pass, and I hope, sir, that it will be made a precedent here, and I speak that with all the significance that can attach to it. I say I hope this bill will be passed, and that it will be made a precedent for other bills that are to follow. General Robert Anderson deserved well of his country, and those who represent him to-day should have the kind consideration of the Congress and the people of the United States.

General Anderson's service was rendered at a time when it was hard to tell who was loyal and who was not. At that critical time Robert Anderson, understanding his duty as a soldier, stood fast, held the fort, kept the oath he had taken, was true to the Union, and the stand that he took in that crisis had a very important influence upon the course of the subsequent conflict between the States. I do not regard—I say this in no disparagement of him—I do not regard Robert Anderson as one of the great fighting soldiers of the Union, but I do recognize him as a true Union man, who at a critical period in the history of his country was true to his flag, and who, in that hot-bed of secession, Charleston, S. C., asserted and maintained the principles for which we afterwards fought. I favor this bill, Mr. Chairman, and hope it will pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Without the amendment?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. What is the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment is to reduce the amount to $75 a month.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. What was the original amount?

Mr. HOLMAN. One hundred dollars per month.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I should not oppose the bill as it stood originally. I am in favor of it. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that distinguished services should receive special recognition here. I understand very well that there were many poor soldiers who did all they could and who are to-day suffering, and that the widows and children of others who died on the battle-field are suffering. They, too, should have recognition here, but without putting aside their claims at all I say that I am willing to recognize distinguished service rendered at a critical time. Men like Robert Anderson should have proper recognition here, and men like John A. Logan should have proper recognition at the hands of Congress and the people. We ought to mark by our public recognition the value of the examples set by such men in order that they may be handed down for the guidance of future generations. I trust that this bill will pass.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I would inquire whether we are not proceeding under the five-minute rule?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The Committee of the Whole has just recommended the passage of a bill allowing a pension of $10 a month to a little deformed child, the orphan of a soldier who fought in seven battles and was killed in battle. His daughter is left alone, without any support except the paltry pension that we have voted her here. Why does the gentleman make a distinction between the widow of that private soldier and the widow of a general?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I agree with you in all you say, but I do not understand why you interrupt me. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I want to know on what platform or on what foundation you place the distinction between the widow of General Anderson and the deformed orphan child of a man who fought as nobly and who died in the service of his country?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I will vote for a pension in such a case every time [laughter]; but I say that General Robert Anderson rendered distinguished service at a critical period in the history of his country, and that that distinguished service should have proper recognition without reference to the services of men who came after him in the war. He was true at a time when it was important to his country that men should be true.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon the first amendment reported by the committee, to strike out the words "during her natural life."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is upon the amendment to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY O. GRAY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6586) granting a pension to Nancy O. Gray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy O. Gray, widow of Wilson Gray, late of Company C, Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

Wilson Gray, late of Company C, Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteers, was pensioned for shell-wound of back, chronic diarrhea, rheumatism, and dislocation of right elbow, and died of so-called typhoid pneumonia, June 29, 1884. Soldier's widow, the claimant under this bill, applied for pension, which was rejected on the ground that soldier's death was not due to any of the disabilities, nor all of them combined, for which soldier was pensioned.

It is certainly fair to presume that disabilities such as this soldier was pensioned for, existing for twenty years or more, gradually undermining the constitution, necessarily and inevitably predisposed the system to attacks of acute disease, especially of an inflammatory nature. On this point Dr. C. W. Hanson, of Northwood Ridge, N. H., who treated soldier in his fatal sickness, testifies as follows:

"I knew Wilson Gray for about twenty years prior to his death, and did not consider him a strong or healthy man. I was called to treat him June 15, 1884, and found him suffering from typhoid pneumonia, raising very dark or prune-colored sputa, with pain in right lung, fever and tympanitic condition of bowels. These symptoms were soon followed by delirium and diarrhea, from which he died June 20. I have been accustomed to treat pneumonia in this locality for twenty-five years, but have met with this type of the disease only in the aged or those whose systems were broken down by previous disease or some debilitating cause, and I am of opinion that the chronic diarrhea which said soldier contracted while in the Army contributed largely in causing his death."

The claimant, as it appears from testimony filed with the committee, is in destitute circumstances and impaired health, with several children dependent upon her for support.

Your committee being of opinion that there is a strong probability that soldier's pensionable disabilities had much to do with inducing the fatal attack—which fatal disease rarely attacks any but those whose systems are debilitated by other ailments—report the bill back, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. BRIMMER.

Mr. GREENMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5247) granting a pension to William H. Brimmer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Brimmer, of Stephentown, N. Y., late a private in Company K, Twenty-first Regiment of New York Cavalry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month, commencing at the date of his discharge, on the 30th day of May, 1865.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

That the soldier, William H. Brimmer, enlisted in Company K, Twenty-first New York Cavalry, September 5, 1864, and was discharged May 30, 1865, by general order.

In his affidavit he states that at the time of his enlistment he was a sound, robust, and healthy man, and able to perform any kind of manual labor. On his enlistment he was examined and received after said examination. That while in the service, and while at Cumberland Gap, he was detailed with others to carry sacks of corn delivered at regimental headquarters to his company; that this carrying caused a weakness in his bowels, accompanied with much pain, which has since continued, progressing until it has developed into hernia.

That he was not treated while in the service, although the difficulty and pain continued.

That he was not aware of the hernia until afterwards.

That he was treated for this difficulty by Dr. Dickinson, who died in January, 1878; that afterwards he was treated by Dr. Charles N. Reynolds, who pronounced it a case of hernia, not then fully developed.

That his application for a pension has been rejected at the Pension Office for the reason that he has been unable to furnish the evidence as to the origin of disability, as required by the rules of that office.

Dr. Charles N. Reynolds testifies that he is a physician, and has known the soldier for about ten years. He further says:

"Some time in the year 1880 or 1881 William H. Brimmer consulted me about a trouble with his side and groin, complaining of great pains and tenderness in the right groin, spreading from thence over more or less of the right side; shooting pains into the back, followed by weakness, trembling, and faintness, and occasionally nausea, the attacks coming on very suddenly and at any time, necessitating his sitting or lying down wherever he might be at the time. On examination I came to the conclusion that Mr. Brimmer was suffering from an incomplete oblique inguinal hernia. Mr. Brimmer seemed somewhat to doubt the conclusion, saying the symptoms he now presented were the same he had experienced while in the Army and at intervals ever since, the only difference, if any, being in point of severity and frequency. But the correctness of the diagnosis was fully demonstrated in two or three months by a protrusion of the sac through the external ring. Mr. Brimmer is obliged to wear a truss all of the time, and has been since it first came down. For the seven or eight years past it has entirely prevented his following his work of turning or standing at the saw."

Lawrence Luvey states in his affidavit that he was a private in Company E, in the same regiment to which Brimmer belonged; that he was well acquainted with him before his enlistment. That he was then "a strong, healthy man, and free from any rupture." That they were often required to carry large sacks of corn from the regimental headquarters to the company headquarters. That since his (affiant's) discharge in 1865 he has lived near Brimmer and seen him about every day; that when he first came home in 1865 Brimmer was complaining of a weakness in his right groin, and at times when he (affiant) was at work for firm to which Brimmer belonged, he (Brimmer) would be obliged to stop work and lie down and rest until the pain would somewhat cease, and that Brimmer at that time said he had had this same difficulty about him since they were compelled to carry corn at Cumberland Gap.

Ezra B. Chase testifies that he has been a partner in business with Brimmer since April 1, 1866, and worked with him most of the time, and describes the existence of this difficulty from that time ever since, its growing worse, and resulting in the wearing of a truss.

The wife of Brimmer, who was married to him before his enlistment, testifies that before his enlistment he was a sound, healthy man, free from any rupture; that on his return from the Army he complained of soreness and weakness in his right groin, rendering him at times unable to do anything; that this continued growing worse until it developed into an open rupture and rendered a truss necessary.

The high character of Brimmer is certified by the member of Congress introducing the bill.

The evidence satisfies the committee that the hernia which the soldier now has had its origin in the line of duty while in the Army, and although he may be unable to furnish the evidence required by the rules and practice of the Pension Office he is entitled to relief, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers" in the eighth line thereof.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out at the end of the bill the words "at the rate of $12 per month, commencing at the date of his discharge on the 30th day of May, 1865," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee now rise. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The motion was not agreed to.

MAHALA ROBBINS.

Mr. GEAR. I ask for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 2177) granting a pension to Mahala Robbins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, instructed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mahala Robbins, of Keokuk, Iowa, dependent mother of Caleb Harmon, deceased, late a private in Company H, Fifty-sixth Regiment of United States Colored Troops, and pay her a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER) was read, as follows:

Mahala Robbins is the mother of Caleb Hamone, otherwise known as Caleb Hammond, who was a private in Company H, Fifty-sixth Regiment of United States Colored Troops. Both mother and son were slaves. The son enlisted in said company and regiment June 18, 1863, he then being about nineteen years of age. He died in the service, at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., of cholera, August 17, 1866, unmarried, and leaving no children.

The application of the mother for pension was rejected on the ground "that the evidence is insufficient to show that the soldier contributed to or recognized his obligations to aid in the support of the claimant;" and the question therefore in the case is as to the dependence of the mother.

It appears from the evidence that prior to the soldier's enlistment both the mother and the son lived with and labored for their "master," who received the results of their labor and earnings; that after the son's enlistment his mother apparently continued to maintain substantially the same relations with her master as previously; that she actually received no contributions towards her support from her said son, though he wrote her from the Army three letters, one of which is on file in the case, the others (as testified by claimant) having been destroyed—one, she thinks, by her master, and the other by herself, so that her "master would not get to see it."

In the letter on file, dated in June, 1864, the soldier addresses claimant as "dear mother," and subscribes himself "your dutiful son;" writes of his desire for a furlough "to come home," and of the pay of colored soldiers being raised to the same as the pay of the white soldiers.

The claim was referred to a special examiner of the Pension Office in 1887, by whom the depositions of claimaint and other witnesses were taken and an examination of facts made.

He reported the claimant to be "quite feeble in both mind and body, and is of good repute for truth, as far as her memory serves her," and expressed his belief that the claim was meritorious.

In her testimony before the special examiner she says: "Caleb said in one letter to me that he would send me money, but he was afraid that I would not get it. He was afraid that our master would get the money;" also that "my boy always said that he would come home and help to take care of me after the war, and I believe he would do so, too, for he was such a good boy to me." Arge Washington, a policeman in the city of Keokuk, Iowa, whose good reputation is certified to by said examiner, who was acquainted with the soldier in the service, testified that at Helena, Ark., in 1864, the soldier told him "that he had sent his mother some money."

The claimant is upwards of ninety years of age, very poor and feeble, and utterly dependent upon others for her support. The soldier was her only son, to whom she may well have looked, as she did, for support in her old age. Your committee think the fact of dependence sufficiently established to justify the granting of pension, and recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out "Harmon," in line 5 of the bill, and inserting in place thereof "Hamone, otherwise known as Caleb Hammond."

The amendment of the committee to strike out after "Caleb," in line 5, the word "Harmon" and insert "Hamone, otherwise known as Caleb Hammond," was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY DULL.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3488) granting a pension to Mary Dull.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read as follows:

The petition in this case shows that Mary Dull was a nurse in the Army from October 15, 1862, for about two years, and was with the Ninety-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, from Covington, Ky., on their march through Kentucky and Tennessee, and that she rendered valuable services to the Government by attending to the sick of said regiment and washing for the soldiers, and was a nurse in the convalescent camp at Fort Pickering, at Memphis, Tenn., from January, 1863, to January, 1864, and that she received no compensation from the Government for such services; that she is now sixty-one years of age and in very poor health. She has rheumatism from exposure while in the service, so that she is unable to work, and she has no means of support; that her husband is seventy years of age, and is paralyzed and unable to do any work, and that he was also a soldier in the civil war, and that she has no other family, and that she is now in very needy circumstances, and she asks a pension of $16 per month.

The facts above stated are fully proven by the affidavits of at least eleven witnesses, which affidavits are now on file with the committee. The parties who make these affidavits, most of them, were soldiers whom this woman nursed in the Army, and some of them claim that she was the means of saving their lives. In view of the peculiar facts of this case, the committee recommend that said Mary Dull receive a pension of $16 per month, and that the bill be so amended, and as so amended that the same do pass.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, insert after the word "late" the word "nurse."
In the same line strike out the word "company."
At the end of the bill add "and pay her a pension of $16 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

KELSEY CURTIS.

Mr. LIND. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3183) for the relief of Kelsey Curtis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Kelsey Curtis, formerly of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry State Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The claimant in this case was private in Company H, Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry, enlisting March 17, 1865, and was discharged on the 31st of July, 1865. In his application for a pension he alleges that he incurred rupture of the left side caused by heavy lifting in loading rations. The claim was rejected on the ground that the evidence now on file does not establish title to pension on account of cause alleged. There seems to be no hospital record in this case, and claimant declares inability to furnish medical testimony on account of the death of his family physician.

Peter Brant and Andrew Samuelson both testify positively that claimant was sound at time of enlistment. The latter says that he went into the Army with claimant, was with him in the room when they were examined, and that claimant was pronounced sound by the examining surgeon, and that no rupture of the left side existed at that time.

Charles W. Munn, orderly sergeant of the company, testifies that about July 10, 1865, he made a detail to go to Pulaski to help load rations; that Kelsey Curtis was one of the men detailed, and that while loading rations he hurt himself and returned to camp very sick.

"Told me that he had hurt himself very badly and was suffering very much from pain in the lower part of the bowels; he requested me to go to the surgeon and get him something to relieve him. I went and saw Dr. Wilkins; he gave me medicine which I delivered to Curtis. After that Curtis was not able to do duty until the time he was mustered out, which was the 30th of July; this was the last time I saw him, and know nothing from that time."

Darling Welsh and Henry C. Chase testify to an intimate acquaintance with Curtis before and after his enlistment, and that at the time of his return from the Army he was suffering with rupture.

Dr. R. O. Craig testifies that he became acquainted with claimant in 1869, and found him then totally unfitted for manual labor.

The examing surgeon of Waseca, Minn., in 1881, describes the disability particularly, and rates him at one-half total.

The witnesses in this case seem to be reliable, and nothing appears in the papers to cast any doubt upon any of the evidence.

Your committee feel that there can be little doubt that the disability was incurred in the service and in the line of duty, and that the soldier ought to be placed upon the pension-roll.

They therefore report favorably and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES A. HALEY.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 509) granting a pension to James A. Haley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James A. Haley, late of Thomas Caldwell's Company of West Virginia Scouts, in the war of 1861.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

That said James A. Haley, on the 1st day of August, 1862, enlisted in Capt. Thomas Caldwell's Company of West Virginia Scouts, a State organization loyal to the Union; that on the 15th day of August, 1862, while engaged with his said company in scouting in Wayne County, West Virginia, they were fired upon by the rebels, and he received a gunshot wound through his right arm; that afterwards, on the 8th day of June, 1863, he was enrolled in Company B, Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers, in the service of the United States, and was mustered out of said service with his company on the 24th day of December, 1864; that after his enlistment in said last-named organization he was admitted to the regimental hospital and there treated for his said wound; that on the 17th day of May, 1880, he applied for a pension because of physical disability resulting from said wound, and that on the 14th day of December, 1882, his application was rejected on the ground that the organization to which he belonged at the time of the incurrence of the wound was not in the service of the United States.

It was clearly shown to the Pension Bureau that claimant was permanently disabled by said wound in a very considerable degree; and in view of the fact that the wound was received in battle, and that the soldier afterwards enlisted in the service of the United States, your committee are of the opinion that he should be pensioned, notwithstanding the fact that he was not in the service of the United States at the time of the incurrence of the wound, and do therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH J. HASCALL.

Mr. MOFFITT. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5911) granting a pension to Elizabeth J. Hascall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Elizabeth J. Hascall, widow of Bailey Hascall, late acting assistant paymaster of the United States Navy during the late war of the rebellion.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

Elizabeth J. Hascall is the widow of Bailey Hascall, late acting assistant paymaster, United States Navy, who died March 10, 1887, of disease of lungs. He was pensioned under the provisions of a special act, approved June 24, 1886, for rheumatism, fistula in ano, and disease of lungs, at the rate of $30 per month. The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Forty-ninth Congress so fully sets forth all the facts that your committee deem it proper to make it part of this report. It is as follows:

"The evidence on file in the Pension Department shows that the claimant was appointed acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy June 30, 1862, and was discharged September 9, 1865. The following is a summary of the services, exposures, and sufferings of claimant while in the service:

"August 7, 1862, reported to Rear-Admiral Du Pont for duty on board the United States gunboat Madgie and did duty on her from that date to October 11, 1863; she was acting as a blockader and picket-boat in the marshes and inland channels and rivers of Georgia and South Carolina; before that she had been condemned as unseaworthy by a board of survey, and was twice so condemned while he was on duty on her, her boilers and flues continuously bursting; her hull was water-soaked and leaky, requiring constant pumping; the rain came through her deck in the officers' quarters and wet their berths and the living-rooms occupied by twelve of the officers, including the claimant, the room being 8 feet by 14 feet in size, and located directly over the furnaces and in the rear of the engine. While in her the claimant was constantly exposed to dampness and the malaria of the marshes. This boat foundered October 11, 1863, the officers and men escaping in small boats and being taken to Hampton Roads. This exposure to dampness and malaria brought on rheumatism.

"In January, 1864, he reported for duty on board the steamer Chenango. In April, 1864, in New York Harbor, the boilers of the steamer exploded. The chief engineer and three other officers were scalded to death. The exertions of the claimant in caring for his dying friends and the shock of the explosion brought on nervous debility, which resulted in sciatic rheumatism, abhorrence of food, inability to sleep, and general prostration. After being cared for awhile on shipboard, he was carried to the house of a friend in Brooklyn. While on the Chenango Asst. Surg. D. P. Goodhue, of New Hampshire, attended him.

"In August, 1864, and before he was fully recovered, he was ordered to take charge of stores on board of the chartered steamer Aphrodite, bound to the Gulf of Mexico. On the second voyage of that vessel she was wrecked at Cape Lookout, North Carolina; and was a total wreck. Twenty men were drowned and missing. The claimant and others saved from the wreck were landed on a barren, sandy island, exposed to the weather, which was then stormy and cold, with very little food and no fuel for six days. They were then taken off in lighters, each containing from seventy to eighty men, through the channel to the fleet then at Beaufort, a trip lasting twenty-four hours, in the midst of a heavy rain, with no covering over them, and so crowded that there was not even room to sit down.

"He was then transferred to the United States steam-ship Mercedita, and was ordered to begin transferring men to Admiral Farragut's squadron. This continued about thirty days, when, by proper orders, he reported for duty at the Brooklyn navy-yard, where he was directed to take charge of the payment of bounty to the enlisted seamen, paying large sums of money—sometimes as much as $150,000 in a day—until at last, in consequence of his sickness and debility, occasioned by his exposure, he was compelled to and did resign.

"The fact that the claimant was in good health at the time of his appointment to his position in the Navy is very clearly shown, especially by the affidavit of William A. Wheeler, late Vice-President of the United States, who states in his affidavit that he had known the claimant from his birth; that at the time of his appointment to the Navy he was to every appearance in perfect health; that in the spring or summer of 1864 he, accompanied by his clerk, returned to Malone, the home of said claimant and said Wheeler, and remained there several weeks. He was then very feeble and almost helpless, having lost flesh, appetite, and strength; that there has been a steady decline in his health and strength, and that the claimant has never been a well man since said explosion; that for several years he has had frequent hemorrhages of the lungs, and is now poor, and is supported by the labor of his wife.

"Dr. James R. Bird, a physician of Brooklyn, testified in October last that he had known claimant for eighteen years; that prior to 1868 he prescribed for him for rheumatism; that in 1870 he began treating him for rheumatism; in 1878 he performed a severe operation for fistula, and that he has been suffering from rheumatism, piles, and malaria continuously—rheumatism and piles off and on, and malaria all the time. The affiant then speaks of the claimant having a disease of the lungs, and when asked by the examiner about the present condition of the claimant arising from his service in the war, states that he has no doubt but that it is the result of exposure, etc., arising from his services in the war.

"Dr. Goodhue, who was acting assistant surgeon on the Chenango at the time of the explosion of the boiler, states that the claimant was immediately afterwards prostrated by the shock to his nervous system and what appeared to be sciatica, so that he was confined to his bed, and that after treating him five or six days he took him to the house of a friend in Brooklyn; that since that time he has known nothing of claimant.

"George W. Paschal, the special examiner, who took nearly sixty pages of testimony in this case, in his report says:

"'That the claimant is simply existing at the present time (October, 1885). He is entirely unable to make the least exertion. The claimant is a gentleman of education and of the best family connection in Northern New York. His life-long reputation for integrity and scrupulous probity is exceptionally good. All the parties testifying and connected with the case are of excellent repute and standing. The claim is scrupulously free from any suspicion of being a made-up case. The sole question is one of medical decision.

"'That the history of his case as given by the claimant himself is true, I have no doubt. Nor have I any doubt about the claim being meritorious and worthy of admission.'

"The claim was rejected at the Pension Office solely on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence tracing the present disability of the claimant as a result of service.

"The committee, after carefully examining the voluminous evidence in the case, think that while there may not be sufficient evidence to comply with the rules of the Department, the claim is a just and meritorious one, and they therefore recommend that the bill pass.

"We do this more confidently from the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions, in a letter of the date of April 1, 1886, to the chairman of this committee, recommends that this be done."

The claim of the widow was likewise rejected on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to connect death-cause with the service.

The merits of the claim of the officer having been fully determined by the last Congress after a careful consideration of the evidence presented and the recommendations made by the Commissioner of Pensions, your committee, in view of the further fact that said officer died of one of the disabilities thus recognized as chargeable to his service in the Navy of the United States, unhesitatingly report favorably on the accompanying bill for the relief of his widow, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH DRISKILL.

Mr. YODER. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 5829) for the relief of Joseph Driskill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Joseph Driskill, on or about October 12, 1861, enlisted in Company C, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and performed his duty as a faithful soldier until July 22, 1864, when he was captured near Atlanta, Ga., and sent a prisoner to Andersonville, where he suffered great privations; and being, as he believed, in danger of losing his life there, he availed himself of what he supposed was an opportunity to make his escape by pretending to enlist in the Confederate service, which took him out of prison for the time being; that he never actually bore arms, and that soon afterward he made his escape and endeavored to get back to his own company again in the Union Army, but was recaptured and sent to Macon, Ga., where he was at the time Macon was captured by the Union troops, when he was assigned to duty in Company C, Fifth Ohio Cavalry, where he again served faithfully until he was sent to Hilton Head and thence to New York, where he was honorably discharged; that during his hard service his sight was very much affected, and having applied for a pension it was rejected because of this apparent connection of his with the Confederate enlisting officer, notwithstanding his faithful services before and after his imprisonment and the fact that he had received an honorable discharge: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That Joseph Driskill, late a soldier in Company C, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, be, and he is hereby, relieved from all charges of desertion or of giving aid and comfort to the enemy during the late war of the rebellion, and that the Commissioner of Pension be, and he is hereby, authorized to reopen said application of said Joseph Driskill for pension, and that he ignore the aforesaid charges of misconduct against said Driskill, so that they be not used against him.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

Joseph Driskill, now of Clinton County, Ohio, was a soldier during the late war, having enlisted on the 12th day of October, 1861, in Company C, Fifty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three years or during the war. He discharged his duties faithfully under many vicissitudes, having suffered much from sickness, but performed his duty whenever it was possible for him to do so. He was with his regiment in Sherman's campaign, which finally resulted in the capture of Atlanta, Ga.

In the battle of July 22, 1864, in front of Atlanta, he was captured by the enemy and sent a prisoner to Andersonville, and he was kept a prisoner until April 22, 1865. The sufferings of the prisoners at that place have become a matter of history. Driskill was exposed to all the hardships the prisoners had to submit to, and besides being nearly starved he contracted a disease of the eyes. He believed that he would die there. He became desperate, and was willing to resort to anything which might promise him a chance to get back to his regiment and save his life.

According to his own statement, which is no doubt truthful, he thought he saw an opportunity to get away when a Confederate recruiting officer came to the prison there to get recruits for the Confederate service. He says that he told them they might use his name, but he denies that he took any oath to support the Confederacy, or that he ever bore arms in the Confederate service. On the contrary, he says when they informed him that he must either do that or go back to prison he attempted to make his escape, and actually jumped off a railroad car while in motion, but that in a few days afterwards he was recaptured by the Confederates and sent a prisoner to Macon, Ga., where he was held in custody until released by General Wilson, who captured the place and assigned him to duty with the Fifth Ohio Cavalry, where he continued until the close of the war, which was only a short time after, and was sent by way of Savannah and Hilton Head to New York, where he was mustered out of the service. This is the story substantially told by him, and there is nothing in the evidence or in the papers on file to contradict it.

The records show that he was captured by the Confederates July 22, 1864. The reports on the muster-rolls, as given by the Adjutant-General in his letters to the Pension Office of August 15, 1876; January 19, 1878, and March 2, 1878, evidently contain errors. The first one, that of August 15, 1876, gives the company muster-rolls for July and August, which report Driskill "absent, taken prisoner before Atlanta;" while that for March and April, 1865, report "present on detached service."

Adjutant-General's letter of January 19, 1878, reports Driskill on detached service in March and April, 1865; that July was the last report of the company, and reports him "absent on detached service."

The Adjutant-General's letter of March 2, 1878, reports Driskill present March and April, 1865, with a remark "on detached service." August 7, 1879, the Adjutant-General makes substantially the same statement, and also that Driskill was mustered out of the service in New York City September 8, 1865, with the remark, "prisoner of war from July 22, 1864, to April 22, 1865."

The Confederate records of Andersonville report J. B. Driscall, Company I, Fifty-fourth Ohio, "transferred to Colonel O'Niell January 23, 1865."

Now, it will be seen that there is great confusion in these reports. Driskill is reported captured July 22, 1864, and present with his company in March and April, 1865, but on detached service, while in truth and in fact he was a prisoner at Andersonville.

There is nothing whatever to show that Driskill committed any disloyal act. He performed his duty as a soldier faithfully, and never deserted. There is no charge of desertion against him. There is no charge that he ever failed to do his duty while with his company and regiment, or any assigned duty with another company and another regiment. He was taken prisoner in one of the desperate battles at Atlanta, and he was found a prisoner when General Wilson captured Macon. During this time there is nothing whatever to show that he was anything else but a prisoner or regarded in any other light, except what he tells himself about his scheme to escape.

Now, who can blame him? Who, with starvation, disease, and death staring him in the face would not have made an effort to get away from it? The effort he made was entirely justifiable, and the fact that he was willing at once to go to duty corroborates his statement that his purpose when he agreed to go with Colonel O'Niell was that he might make his escape and get back to his own command.

The Confederate records report that he was transferred to Colonel O'Niell, but for what purpose is not stated, nor would it have been known perhaps had not the soldier honestly told all about the affair.

He has, in consequence of the loss of his eye-sight, asked for a pension, but the Pension Office has refused it because of the fact of his effort to escape from a Confederate prison. There is no other charge against him, and there will be no other, and it would seem that this is rather straining the law to reject his application. He did not desert; he did not bear arms against his country; he did not in fact give aid and comfort to the enemy; but he did, for the purpose of getting back to his own people, pretend that he would go into the enemy's service, and then at the first opportunity deserted from them. Can any one imagine a stronger case of devotion? He had good reason to believe that if he remained at Andersonville he would lose his life. He devised a scheme by which he hoped to escape.

This scheme was as justifiable as was that of the prisoners who burrowed out of the walls of Libby Prison in Richmond, or those who went out through a sewer from the prison at Columbus, Ohio. Such acts are always justifiable on the part of prisoners. The enemy who hold them as prisoners might punish them for their efforts to escape if caught, but certainly it is not for their own people to call them to account because they made the effort to get back to them.

Driskill now asks Congress to remove this difficulty from the path of the Pension Office so that he may get a pension that may solace him in his old age. The hardships he endured while in the service caused him to lose the sight of one eye entirely and the other is very near gone, so much so that he requires some one to lead him about constantly. The rule of the Pension Office as applied in his case has been a very harsh one. He was a faithful soldier, and his only misfortune was that he made an effort to get back to his own army. Had he remained there perhaps he might have died, but had he not died there would have been no question raised against him by the Pension Office; but the very fact that he endeavored to get away and get back is construed into a crime.

He earnestly and respectfully requests Congress to give him the necessary relief.

After a careful consideration of the evidence in this case, your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the title of the bill and including the word "therefor" preceding the enacting clause.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out the preamble was read and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RICHARDSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the special order, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 3488) granting a pension to Mary Dull; and
A bill (H. R. 5829) for the relief of Joseph Driskill.

THOMAS JORDAN.

The bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Thomas Jordan, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrosseds it was accordingly read the third time, and passed (two-third, voting in favor thereof).

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRILL (at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 10, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Mr. FARRAR, of West Troy, N. Y.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MILITARY PRISON, FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation for the support of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STEAM-PRESSES, BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, a report from the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in reference to the use and action of hand and steam presses in that Bureau; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the House, relative to claims under the pending bill for the adjustment of accounts under the eight-hour law; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

FINDINGS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of findings of fact in the case of Franklin Low and Charles F. Dunbar vs. The United States, which was referred to the Committee on Claims; and also letters transmitting copies of findings of fact in the following cases vs. The United States, namely: R. T. Coles, administrator; Emmett F. Parham; James Bowens, administrator; Charlotte L. Drain and Frances P. Drain, administratrices; C. L. Thomas, administrator; James H. Stafford, and Aaron L. H. Crenshaw; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a bill (S. 181) granting pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated from the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. YARDLEY for three days, and to Mr. NEWTON for three days, both on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. RICHARDSON to print in the RECORD certain remarks on House bill No. 2952, for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, etc., in addition to remarks by him on said bill on the 2d of March and 24th of February. [See Appendix.]

WILLIAM P. GORSUCH.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3727) for the relief of William P. Gorsuch, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay William P. Gorsuch, of Carroll County, Maryland, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300, the amount paid by him for commutation, he having been drafted into the military service of the United States after he had arrived at the age of forty-five years.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM BLISS.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5382) to grant relief to William Bliss, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to William Bliss the sum of $3,400, damages for the destruction of his farm buildings and personal property in and about the same, situate at Gettysburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, in the month of July, 1863, by the lawful order of the military officers of the United States in command of the armies of the United States at the battle of Gettysburgh, in order to facilitate military operations in said battle.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Let the report in that case be read.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me a word. I wish to call attention to the fact that this involves a most important question, and I trust I may be allowed a few words before action is taken upon it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the gentleman from Indiana proposes to object to the consideration of the measure or not. If it is to be considered, however, I hope the House will consider it, and I desire to be heard upon it myself.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to the leading precedents, and, in fact, the only precedents on this subject. This bill proposes to appropriate money——

Mr. RYAN. Is it before the House for consideration?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not before the House, but I wish to call attention of the House to the two leading cases on this subject. One the case of Dr.—I can not recall at the moment his name—from Paducah, Ky.

Mr. WARNER. Dr. Best.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; and the other the case of Mr. Wallace, of Lexington, Mo. In the former case the bill, I believe, was vetoed by the President, and in the latter case this House, I think, spent at least thirty-six hours considering the subject, but the bill did not pass. In both instances there was no question whatever as to the loyalty of the claimants.

Mr. Wallace, at the time his property was destroyed for military purposes, was acting as marshal for the State of Missouri under the appointment of President Lincoln. Those two cases received unusual attention, and the reason why neither claim was allowed was that Congress did not think it safe to enter upon the appropriation of money to pay for property destroyed in actual military operations.

Mr. PEEL. I see that this is likely to cause considerable debate, and I will have to insist upon the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that this matter may come up on next Friday morning.

Mr. BLAND. If it shall come up next Friday I shall ask to be heard on it. There are a number of cases pending of a similar character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PEEL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

TONNAGE TAX.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The resolution referred March 9 to the committee on motion of Mr. DINGLEY was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the House with information as to the amount of tonnage tax imposed on and paid by American vessels, and also by foreign vessels, to the United States from July 1, 1862, to July 1, 1865, and each fiscal year from July 1, 1865, to July 1, 1887, giving for the latter period the amount paid by American vessels in each collection district and the amount paid by sailing and steam vessels, respectively.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred a resolution requesting the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the House with information as to the tonnage taxes paid by vessels, having had the same under consideration, report it back with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] demands the regular order, which is the call of committees for reports.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN MEXICO AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 112) requesting the President of the United States to negotiate with the Government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine according to the rules of the Washington commission of November 12, 1884, all questions touching the boundary line between the United States and Mexico where it follows the bed of the Rio Grande and Colorado Rivers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does this require an appropriation?

Mr. HITT. No, sir.

The joint resolution was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT WALLACE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 7445 a bill (H. R. 8310) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 7445 was laid on the table.

CONTRACTS WITH INDIANS.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 6184 a bill (H. R. 8311) authorizing the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Indians to enter into contracts with citizens of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 6184 was laid on the table.

JAMES F. HOGAN.

Mr. MANSUR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2448) for the relief of James F. Hogan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO NATHANIEL GREENE.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on the Library, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1704) to provide for the erection of a monument to Maj. Gen. Nathaniel Greene on the battle field of the battle of Guilford Court-House, North Carolina, fought March 15, 1781; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO DANIEL MORGAN.

Mr. DAVIDSON also, from the Committee on the Library, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1889) to preserve the grave of General Daniel Morgan and erect a monument over the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SUBPORTS OF ENTRY.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6097) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to designate subports of entry in customs districts; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VESSELS IN COASTWISE SERVICE.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8312) to amend section 4444 of the Revised Statutes relative to vessels engaged wholly or in part in the coastwise service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for the consideration of bills for one hour. The hour commences at twenty minutes to 1.

TEMPORARY AID FOR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief petition for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned citizens of Spiceland, county of Henry and State of Indiana, believing that the prosperity and perpetuity of all free institutions depend upon the intelligence and virtue of the people; that ignorance exists to an alarming degree, and endangers the general welfare of the Republic: We therefore earnestly pray for the enactment of a law which shall authorize the appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States for temporary aid in the establishment and maintenance of free public schools, and for such other remedial legislation as is necessary, to the end that the number of illiterates in the country, now exceeding six million persons, ten years of age and over, shall be reduced to a minimum.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering Senate bill 418, and pending that I move that general debate be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard upon the question of limiting debate.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the bill?

Mr. JACKSON. It is the bill giving to California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands there. I wish to be heard upon the question of limiting debate.

Mr. MCKENNA. It is not debatable.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MCKENNA, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 21.

Mr. JACKSON. No quorum.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a measure to have debate limited as proposed by the gentleman from California.

Mr. MCKENNA. Well, we must limit the debate or we can not pass the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 15.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the yeas and nays will be taken upon the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I do not think we should restrict debate so closely upon such a bill as this.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to give the gentlemen on the other side all of the half hour but five minutes, although they have already had more time than the friends of the bill.

Mr. JACKSON. This bill can never pass unless it is passed without constraint.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 113, noes 33.

So (more than one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] to limit general debate upon this bill to thirty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the title of the bill be read.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Speaker, if that is objectionable, I object.

Mr. JACKSON. Regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I certainly have a right to call for the reading of the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 418) granting to the State of California 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands in said State.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MCKENNA; and there were—yeas 130, nays 80, not voting 114; as follows:

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. JOHN R. BROWN.
Mr. FORAN with Mr. PHELPS.
Mr. HOWARD with Mr. DE LANO.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. BARRY with Mr. YARDLEY.
Mr. CLARDY with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE.
Mr. NEWTON with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. FORD with Mr. CUTCHEON.
Mr. HATCH with Mr. HIRES.
Mr. MOORE with Mr. DARLINGTON.
Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. CUMMINGS was announced as paired with Mr. FITCH until March 13.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. SHERMAN, on this vote.

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. STEPHENSON on this vote.

Mr. BUTLER. As announced by the Clerk, I am paired on political questions; but this not being a political question, I have voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is——

Mr. MCKENNA. One moment. It has been said that possibly debate ought to be had for a longer time than that named in my motion. As I only made that motion in order that this hour might be made available for the consideration of this bill, not that it might operate as a deceit, I will say now, if the only desire of the gentlemen opposing the bill is to have ample debate, I propose that the bill be made a special order for Wednesday, April 4, immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. JACKSON. Regular order.

Mr. MCKENNA. Does not the gentleman consent to my proposition?

Mr. JACKSON. I will not consent. I only asked the gentleman this morning to give me the time I had left—thirty-two minutes.

Mr. MCKENNA. I offered to give the gentleman the whole of the thirty minutes.

Mr. JACKSON. Why then did you not go on with the bill in the regular way?

Mr. MCKENNA. I withdraw my proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from California that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the pending bill.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 79, noes 16.

Mr. LANDES. No quorum.

Mr. MCKENNA. Very well; let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LANDES and Mr. MCKENNA were appointed.

Before the count by tellers was concluded,

Mr. MCKENNA said: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Wednesday, April 4, immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills; and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. LANDES. I make the point that the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to postpone to a day certain is in order.

Mr. JACKSON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MCKENNA. I add to my motion the provision that this business shall not interfere with appropriation bills, etc., the usual reservation, whatever it is.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, is the motion to postpone, as made by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] in order during this hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order to move to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion be agreed to, would the bill be in order on the day named during the morning hour for the consideration of bills, or when would it be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would not undertake to decide in advance——

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to know what would be the effect of this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill would be in order to be called up on the day fixed, at the proper time on that day. The gentleman from California demands the previous question on his motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I dislike to raise any question after the Chair has ruled upon the point; but it seems to me that business during this hour is limited to the consideration of bills called up by committees; that a bill so called up may be considered until the time allowed to the particular committee is exhausted, when, under the rules, the bill, if undisposed of, goes to the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that Mr. Speaker CARLISLE, on a bill called up this session during the consideration hour by the Committee on Banking and Currency, entertained the motion to postpone to a day certain. The present occupant of the Chair is now only following the precedent of the permanent Speaker.

Mr. LANDES. Pending the motion of the gentleman from California, I move to lay this bill on the table.

Mr. JACKSON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have a division.

Mr. JACKSON. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LANDES. I call for a division on this question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand has been withdrawn.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 143, not voting 115; as follows:

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

The following additional pairs were announced for this day:

Mr. NEWTON with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. LYNCH with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, on this vote.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MCRAE said: My colleague, Mr. ROGERS, is detained at home on account of sickness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOGG. On motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] the debate on the bill was limited to thirty minutes; and I desire now, under the rule, to enter the motion to reconsider that vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can enter his motion.

Mr. HOGG. I do enter the motion to reconsider the vote by which the debate was limited to thirty minutes.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour has expired, and the regular order being demanded, the House now proceeds to the consideration of the special order, which is the consideration of the business called up by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MARY S. LOGAN.

Mr. TARSNEY. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote ordering the previous question on the bill (H. R. 3191) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

MRS. APOLLINE A. BLAIR.

Mr. TARSNEY. I also desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered on the bill (S. 574) to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. PEEL. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the consideration of business from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 4988) to extend time of payment to purchasers of land on Omaha Indian reservation, State of Nebraska.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to extend the time of the payments of the purchase money due for land sold on Omaha Indian reservation under the sales made by virtue of an act to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, approved August 7, 1882, as follows: The time of each payment shall be extended for the period of two years beyond the time now fixed: Provided, That the interest on said payments shall be paid annually at the time said payments are due: And provided further, That the act above mentioned, except as changed and modified by this act, shall remain in full force.

The report (by Mr. MCSHANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4988) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time of payment of the purchase money on the sale of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians, in the State of Nebraska, after having carefully considered the provisions of the bill, and the necessity for the proposed legislation, recommend the passage of the bill.

The reservation was sold to actual settlers during the years 1884 and 1885 in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to any individual, and was made payable in three installments, one-third being paid within one year from date of settlement. The law provides that when the money is paid into the United States Treasury the Indians are to receive 5 per cent. interest on the same, which amount is to be expended annually for the use of the Indians. The land was appraised and brought its full value, and by reason of improvements is an absolutely safe security for the money. It was two years before the settlers could realize from the cultivation of the land, and the very low price now paid for agricultural products, and there being no power to mortgage the land because of the title being in the Government, settlers would be required to sacrifice the land unless given an opportunity to save the same by an extension of time to make payments.

The passage of this bill would be an act of justice to the settlers and save the Government from paying the interest which would be paid by the settlers during the extension, while the Indians would lose nothing. There can be no reasonable objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. PEEL. I move the bill be put upon its passage.

There was no objection; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UINTAH VALLEY INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7936) to restore to the public domain a part of the Uintah Valley Indian reservation, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the Uintah Valley Indian reservation, in the Territory of Utah, established by proclamation of the President, of date October 3, 1861, as lies within thefollowing boundary, namely: Beginning at mile-post numbered 19, Du Bois's survey, from the initial point established in township 8 south, range 20 east, Salt Lake meridian; thence southerly to the northeast corner of township 2 south, range 1 east, Uintah special meridian; thence south along the east boundary of township 2 south, range 1 east, Uintah special meridian, to the southeast corner of township 2 south, range 1 east, Uintah special meridian; thence east along the north boundary of township 3 south, range 2 east, Uintah special meridian, to its intersection with the east boundary of the Uintah Indian reservation, thence in a northwest direction with the eastern boundary line of said reservation to the beginning, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be public lands of the United States and restored to the public domain.

SEC. 2. That said lands shall be disposed of as other public lands of like kind in accordance with existing laws (except the homestead law shall not apply), and for not less than $1.25 per acre, and not otherwise than for cash entries: Provided, That any location, entry, or entries, mineral or non-mineral, heretofore made or attempted to be made on said lands, or any part thereof, by any qualified person, shall bear date and be allowed the same as if said lands had been public lands at the time of said attempted location or institution of said proceedings, but said mineral entries shall not be completed except upon the payment of $20 an acre, or at that rate for the amount taken up by the claim: And provided further, That all moneys arising from the sales of this land shall belong to said Indians and be paid into the Treasury of the United States and held or added to any trust funds of said tribes now there.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit this act to the adult male Indians on said reservation, and the restoration shall take effect on a ratification by three-fourths thereof.

The report (by Mr. COBB) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred "a bill to restore to the public domain a part of the Uintah Valley Indian reservation, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes" (H. R. 1984), report as follows:

There was established, by proclamation of President Lincoln, in Utah Territory on the 3d day of October, 1861, an Indian reservation known as the Uintah Valley (see Executive orders relating to Indian reservations, extract Commissioner's report 1866, pages 358 and 359), described in the general terms as the Valley of the Uintah River, in said Territory.

By act of Congress approved May 5, 1864 (13 Stats. at Large, page 63), other Indian reservations in said Territory were discontinued, directed to be sold in 80-acre tracts to the highest bidder, and by section 2 the Uintah Valley was set apart for the use of the Indians, and an appropriation made for the purpose of making agricultural improvements on the same for the benefit of the Indians.

Another act was passed June 18, 1878 (20 Stats. at Large, page 165), repealing the clause of the act of May 5, directing the discontinued reservations to be sold to the highest bidder, and directing the Secretary of the Interior to restore them to the public domain to be disposed of under the public-land laws.

The Interior Department had the Uintah Valley reservation surveyed; the eastern boundary line was run by one Dubois, and is known as the Dubois line.

In 1885 this line, as well as the township lines bordering on the reservation, were, through lapse of time and other natural causes, completely lost, so that the citizens living in the neighborhood, the military officers at Fort Duchesne, and the surveyor-general of the Territory, by his deputies, were unable to know or find its exact location. No marks, corners, or stations were left to indicate where they were.

About this time certain citizens of the Territory, in prospecting for mines, found veins of "gelsonite," which is the mineral from which "asphaltum" is deduced or manufactured, and the total supply for which in this country is brought from abroad in the vicinity of the Dead Sea, and in good faith, believing their discovery upon the public domain, applied to the proper officers of the Government to locate the same, as provided for in the mining laws of the United States and said Territory.

The surveyor-general sent his deputy upon the ground, and, ignorant of the fact that the veins were on the reservation, he surveyed the same, and the parties proceeded with their steps to get title and to open their mines. They were in about 3 miles of Fort Duchesne, and were not molested by the military in charge, whose duty it was to put them off the reservation; nor by the Indian agents in charge, because every one believed, as they did, that they were upon the public domain.

They opened up their property, and spent between $25,000 and $30,000 upon it and in opening a road across the reservation to the railroad to carry their product to market.

In 1887 Congress authorized the Utah and Midland Railroad to cross the reservation, and making the survey for the same some of the corners of the Dubois and neighboring township lines had to be found, and a rumor was put afloat that these deposits were probably inside the Indian reservation, which rumors reached the locators, and they immediately employed the most skillful surveyor to rerun and mark the necessary lines, which was done with the utmost difficulty and expense and after months of hard labor, but, when completed, revealed the fact that the veins were about 1,000 feet inside the reservation.

Inasmuch as these deposits are the only known deposits of this mineral in the United States, and a new industry was developed by their discovery, it is deemed advisable to restore to the public domain a small portion of the reservation on which the veins are located. This action has been recommended by the present governor of the Territory, in the interest of the general public as promoting the general welfare. His views are concurred in by other prominent citizens of the Territory.

From a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior, we find that the whole number of Indians on said reservation is about 900, and of this number the male adults are, of Uintah Utes, 123; White River Utes, 110, or 233 in all; that the number of acres of said reservation is 2,039,040, which would give 8,708 acres to each male adult over eighteen years of age; that the amount asked to be restored to the public domain, and which is situated in a corner of the reservation adjoining the public domain, is 7,040, a very small and insignificant part of this great reservation; that the part asked to be restored is a sandstone desert, uninhabited, unfit for agricultural or grazing purposes, and unused by the Indians for any purpose. The affidavits of the five military officers at Fort Duchesne show also that it is utterly worthless for any purpose to the tribes.

In speaking of the propriety of restoring it, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

"As to the propriety of passing such a bill, I would say that if the Indians do not make any use of the lands and are not likely to for any purpose, and are perfectly willing for it to be cut off and opened to the use, occupancy, and benefit otherwise of the whites, I do not know there would be any serious objection to the segregation of the tract in question."

While the Commissioner does not recommend it, he sees no objection if the conditions he states exist, and in his views the Secretary concurs. We find they do exist, and see no reason why it should not be restored, as it is of no value to and is not used by the Indians, and will add greatly to the wealth and prosperity of the Territory and of the country.

The location is peculiarly favorable to restoration, as the Indians live upon the rich and fertile valleys of the Uintah River and its tributaries, and seldom, if ever, cross this small corner. Fort Duchesne lies between them and the deposits, and we believe, as the Commissioner says, that the liability to controversy with the whites will not be increased by its restoration.

The policy of the Government from its earliest days has been to restore Indian reservations or portions thereof to the public domain as the exigencies of advancing population required it. In doing so it has equitably cared for the Indians, who held a quasi title to the land, and for such settlers who in good faith had improved and were occupying any portion thereof, believing it to be the public domain. We append the letter of Hon. S. M. Stockslager, Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, and refer to it for further information on this subject.

The roads built by these parties across the reservation and the furnishing of mineral as return freight to the railroad will enable the Government to get its Army and Indian supplies upon the reservation at greatly reduced cost.

Believing, therefore, that it is to the best interests of the Government, the Territory, and the Indians that this small tract of land, valuable alone for the mineral deposit, should be restored, we report a bill for that purpose. Believing that the parties who discovered these deposits and attempted to locate acted in good faith, they should be given, as is customary in the restoration of all reserved lands, priority for their claims. We have so provided in the bill. We also have provided that whatever is realized from the disposition of the lands shall be paid into the trust fund established for the Indians, so they will be more than equitably compensated for their loss. As there were some errors in the bill submitted, we report the accompanying bill upon the subject, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains unusual provisions in regard to the disposal of this 7,000 acres of land. The copies of the bill have been exhausted, I understand, and I am not able to speak with certainty as to the exact number of acres and have to rely upon memory for that; but I understood that the total reservation embraces some two and a quarter million of acres.

Mr. PEEL. But this only relates to 7,040 acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that; but I am speaking of the whole of this reservation. Of that resevation this strip embracing 7,040 acres is affected by the present bill.

Now, this bill is for the benefit of the miners who, in violation of law, have taken possession of that strip of land for mining purposes; and the statement is made that the land is not valuable for agriculture—the Indians occupying the valleys and streams within the remainder of the reservation. I think in such a case as this, notwithstanding the rapidity with which we are exhausting the reservations, for already during this session we have withdrawn from reservations lands to the extent of 29,000,000 of acres in the two reservations which have been before the House; but in this case, where the lands are really valueless except for mining purposes, it seems to me there is some justice in the line of policy adopted. But surely in such case the people who have trespassed upon the lands and found them to be valuable ought to pay for their value.

Mr. PEEL. They are required to pay $20 an acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. When it comes to the matter of agricultural lands the case seems to be different, for there the high public policy of securing homes for the people must be considered in connection with the established rights of the Indians, and where it can be done without injustice it seems to me that these lands ought to be brought within the reach of that rapidly increasing body of our people who are without homes. Here, however, we are not embarrassed by anything of that kind, for this is merely a question of securing to certain parties the benefits of mines discovered by them within the limits of an Indian reservation. I understand that these mines are located at a distance of about a thousand feet inside of the line.

But, sir, I wish to call attention to the second section of the bill. The last clause of the first section declares—

That the land—

Describing it—is hereby declared to be public lands of the United States and restored to the public domain,

That raises the point to which I wish to call the attention of my friend from Arkansas, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. That has not been our policy heretofore when we have taken any portion of these Indian reservations and directed their sale and the proceeds to be invested for the benefit of the tribes. In such cases we have not heretofore made the lands a part of the public domain, I will suggest to my friend, for the reason that the lands belonging to the public domain are lands belonging to the United States—not lands held in trust for the benefit of the Indians, but belonging actually to the United States, to be appropriated and disposed of under the public-land laws.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana, in this connection, if he will allow me, to the fact that in the Montana bill which we passed—the first bill passed the other day—the effect of the legislation there was to throw all that mass of lands open to the public under the general land laws of the United States precisely as this does, only that here is a limitation upon that. In the former case there was no limitation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, but my friend misapprehends my point. In that case we bought the lands outright. We did not hold that land in trust for the benefit of the Indians, but as a part of the public property, having bought the lands from the Indians and paid for them, in which case the public-land laws of course would apply just exactly as when we acquire lands from Russia or from any other government. They become part of the public domain. If we buy them from the Indians, paying them a fair valuation for them, of course the general land laws would apply. But here we are selling the lands belonging to the Indians for the benefit of the tribe—these Utes—and we are not proposing to divest them of the title, but our proposition is to sell them as their trustee for their benefit, and pay the money into the Treasury, to be invested for their benefit. So it does not become in any sense a part of the public domain.

But further—and my friend will see from the reading of the next section that that position is strengthened by the language used:

That said lands shall be disposed of as other public lands of like kind in accordance with existing laws (except the homestead law shall not apply)—

Now, I do not well see how the general laws can apply there—there is the pre-emption law and other laws——

Mr. PEEL. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I think I can explain. In this case the evidence is clear that it is sandy, desert land and wholly unfit for agricultural purposes, and clearly the homestead laws would be of no use to anybody. Nobody would want the lands under that law, and therefore it was inserted as a limitation and the price fixed at $1.25 per acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is entirely proper. I am agreeing to that, but that the homestead law can not apply to the desert land. We are holding these lands in trust for them. However, I will continue to read from the bill:

and for not less than $1.25 per acre, and not otherwise than for cash entries: Provided——

Mr. PEEL. Permit me to interrupt to say further that that is exactly the reason why we put $1.25 an acre upon the lands, because we held the land in trust for the Indians and desired to realize that much for them, at least.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course that is the effect of the provision; but this proviso is as follows:

Provided, That any location, entry, or entries, mineral or non-mineral, heretofore made or attempted to be made on said lands, or any part thereof, by any qualified person, shall bear date and be allowed the same as if said lands had been public lands at the time of said attempted location or institution of said proceedings—

That seems to be a fair provision—

but said mineral entries shall not be completed except upon the payment of $20 an acre, or at that rate for the amount taken up by the claim: And provided further, That all moneys arising from the sales of this land shall belong to said Indians and be paid into the Treasury of the United States and held or added to any trust funds of said tribes now there.

That seems to be proper enough. Now why should not the gentleman having charge of this bill consent to make this simply a sale of lands by the United States with the consent of the Indians for their benefit, instead of making it a portion of the public domain?

Mr. NELSON. I will explain this to the gentleman, if he will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to this fact in the first place, that the locus in quo here is not agricultural lands, but timber lands. These are either desert or mineral or coal lands. Now, in the public-land laws of the United States we find section 2319 reads as follows:

All valuable mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and purchase, and the lands in which they are found to occupation and purchase, by citizens of the United States and those who have declared their intention to become such, under regulations prescribed by law, and according to the local customs or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States.

I read from section 2325 in regard to the price, as follows:

At the expiration of the sixty days of publication the claimant shall file his affidavit showing that the plat and notice have been posted in a conspicuous place on the claim during such period of publication. If no adverse claim shall have been filed with the register and the receiver of the proper land office at the expiration of the sixty days of publication, it shall be assumed that the applicant is entitled to a patent upon the payment to the proper officer of $5 per acre, and that no adverse claim exists; and thereafter no objection from third parties to the issuance of a patent shall be heard, except it be shown that the applicant has failed to comply with the terms of this chapter.

I desire to call the gentleman's attention to that provision of the statute.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know it quite well.

Mr. NELSON. The payment is $5 an acre for gold and silver and $20 an acre for coal lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Twenty dollars is the maximum.

Mr. NELSON. Section 2347 is as follows:

SEC. 2347. Every person above the age of twenty-one years, who is a citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, or any association of persons severally qualified as above, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter, by legal subdivisions, any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated or reserved by competent authority, not exceeding 160 acres to such individual person, or 320 acres to such association, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands, where the same shall be situated more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such road.

There is there a new mineral substance which has been discovered in this country for the first time. The asphaltum which has been used here has been brought from the Dead Sea hitherto. This is the only quarry in the country, and it may be a question whether the land containing this new product comes under the head of mineral or coal land. We make them pay under this bill the highest price the Government asks under the general law for coal lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. That seems to me very fair, and yet my friend must perceive that this bill is subject to the criticism that these lands are not intended to be restored to the public domain. I think the bill should have simply directed the lands to be sold in a specific manner; that is, that lands not mineral could be sold for $1.25, and mineral lands up to $20, in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe. I shall, however, waive that point.

But I call the attention of my friend to another matter here. This is not a movement based upon the controlling public policy to reach lands for homes for our people. It is simply a proposition to sell lands especially valuable for minerals to persons who have entered on the lands without authority of law. I call attention to the proposition contained in the third section:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit this act to the adult male Indians on said reservation, and the restoration shall take effect on a ratification by three-fourths thereof.

Do we not reach a case there which is a mere matter of profit and speculation, where no question of homes to our people is involved? Does not the question present itself there as to whether these Indians should act entirely voluntarily or not? Why in a case of pure speculation exercise the great power we possess over this matter and say the action of three-fourths of the adult male Indians shall govern? In this way we put it on the grounds of tribal relations, to which we are not inclined to attach much importance. Why should not the Indians themselves be the sellers? Why should it not be provided that the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain whether or no the Indians wish to sell these lands?—not the majority of them, for we are abandoning the policy of observing tribal relations. If the individual Indians consent to this speculative movement in their lands, why is it not proper to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in unmistakable terms, to prescribe the rules necessary to ascertain the wishes of the Indians?

Mr. PERKINS. Has he not that authority under this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. The language is not very definite:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit this act to the adult male Indians of said reservation, and the restoration shall take effect on a ratification by three-fourths thereof.

I suppose under that power he might prescribe any rules he thought proper.

Mr. PERKINS. That was the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know I have consumed some time in asking what are the purposes of this bill; but there is one other question which I still desire to submit to the chairman and the members of the committee. I suggest that the Indians themselves should determine each for himself whether he will sell for speculative purposes or not.

Mr. PERKINS. What amendment would you suggest?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would say let all the rest remain except the third section. My friend asked me the question why we should require all to consent? I think we should do so for two reasons. First, there is here no question of high public policy. Then we have been adopting a policy which disintegrates the tribal relations and recognizes the individual Indians; and inasmuch as that appears to be our settled policy, the unwisdom of which I think will appear finally, we should be governed by the logic of our own policy.

Mr. PERKINS. But is there not this difficulty, that the tribal relation does exist here? There has been no individual allotment, and for that reason, as you are treating with them for their tribal lands, you must treat with them as a tribe.

Mr. HOLMAN. But our policy is contemplating the other plan all the time. Every legislative act that we have passed for the last two or three years looks in that direction.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly, after allotments are made.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, one reason why I think it is unnecessary to ask the consent of all these Indians individually is that if that were required then there would be no need for Congressional interference at all. Another is that they do not own the lands. They have a right only to possession and occupancy.

Mr. PERKINS. And it is a tribal occupation.

Mr. PEEL. And it is a tribal occupation, as my friend from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] suggests. The evidence conclusively shows that these miners discovered, located, and developed this mining interest in good faith, honestly believing that it was upon the public domain. This, therefore, is designed as a mere matter of equity to protect them in a discovery that has certainly been encouraged by the public policy of this Government. Let me say further to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the Indian Bureau and the Secretary of the Interior have approved the provisions of this bill by a special letter which is in the possession of my colleague on the committee [Mr. COBB], who reported the bill, and to whom I now yield the floor in support of it.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I fail to understand exactly what he wants. If I can have his attention for a few moments I will try to ascertain what he wants, which I have not been able to do from his speech. Has the gentleman any objection to the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the objections I have mentioned. But the bill, of course, can not be amended from my point of view without being entirely redrawn. I do not think these lands ought to be restored to the public domain, but as a matter of fact they are not to be restored, and I waive that point because the bill itself shows upon its face that these lands are to be sold in trust for the benefit of these Indians and not restored to the public domain. They are not made subject to any of the general laws applicable to the public domain. It is simply provided that they shall be sold, the parts of them that are not mineral lands, at $1.25 an acre, and the parts that are mineral lands at $20 an acre, for the benefit of the Indians. My friend [Mr. COBB] will see, therefore, that that portion of the bill which contemplates the restoration of the lands to the public domain is hardly in harmony with the general principles of the bill, but I waive that, because the general purpose will be accomplished.

Mr. COBB. Why dwell upon it, then, if the gentleman waives it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, I waive it.

Mr. COBB. Well, there has been a good deal of talk over it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, I know there has been a good deal of talk, and I think there ought to be a little more talk about these bills. A proposition of this kind, opening up these Indian lands for speculation, is one that I think ought to arrest considerable attention. You gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs are of course much more familiar with these matters than members of the House generally, upon whom they are sprung at the spur of the moment. Therefore you can not complain if some of us occupy a little time in trying to ascertain what we are doing. I think there ought to be added to the third section of the bill a provision that "the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules for ascertaining the wishes of the said Indians, so as to have a fair expression of their wishes touching the disposition of said lands."

Mr. PERKINS. I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. COBB. I suppose not. So far as that is concerned, however, it is already in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Let that amendment be offered, and then we can proceed with the bill.

Mr. COBB. If that is all the change proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, I suppose we need consume no further time in this matter.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I wish to propose to the second section. I move to strike out all after the word "as" in the first line of section 2, down to the word "for" in the third line, and to insert other language, so as to make that provision of the bill read:

That said lands shall be disposed of at public or private sale, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for not less than $1.25 per acre.

Under the provision of the bill, and as it stands now, we make these lands subject to entry under existing laws except the homestead law, and then declare that there must be a cash entry. The phraseology I have adopted simply declares what appears to be the purpose of the bill, namely, that the land shall not be sold at less than $1.25 an acre.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1, 2, and 3 of section 2, strike out the words "as other public lands of like kind, in accordance with existing laws except the homestead law shall not apply and," and insert the following: "At public or private sale in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior." So that if amended as proposed the first part of section will read:

"That said lands shall be disposed of at public or private sale, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for not less than $1.25 per acre," etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may be that, in spite of the information we possess, a portion of this land is adapted to agriculture; and I wish to suggest a provision that these lands which are to be sold at not less than $1.25 an acre shall be sold in quantities not exceeding a quarter-section to any one purchaser. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] object to that?

Mr. COBB. I do not know that I have any objection, but I would like to hear the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment last adopted, insert the following: "In quantities not exceeding one quarter of a section to any one purchaser."

Mr. COBB. Does the gentleman from Indiana limit the amendment to agricultural lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is limited necessarily to the lands which are to be sold at $1.25 an acre. The residue of the land would be governed by the mineral-land law.

Mr. COBB. I do not know that I understand exactly the object of the gentleman. Will he please explain the amendment more fully? We may accept it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The purpose of the amendment is that the non-mineral lands—those which are to be sold at $1.25 an acre—shall be sold in quantities not exceeding a quarter-section to a single purchaser. The other lands—the mineral lands—would of course be governed by the mineral-land law. The mineral lands we do not expect to sell at $1.25 an acre, but at $20 an acre.

Mr. COBB. May not the gentleman's amendment have the effect of withdrawing all this land from the operation of the mineral-land law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is prevented by the express terms of the amendment. This amendment applies to lands which are to be sold at $1.25 an acre. The provision with reference to mineral lands comes afterward. You do not intend to have mineral lands sold at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. COBB. I have very grave doubts whether the gentleman, by these amendments, is not interfering with the interests of the Indians whom we are trying to protect. This bill has received mature consideration at the hands of the Committee on Indian Affairs. We have endeavored to protect the interests of these Indians. The gentleman from Indiana, without having seen the bill before, comes in and proposes to cut into it here and there, seemingly without regard to the effect his amendments may have upon the interests of the Indians concerned.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the section be read with my proposed amendment.

The section as proposed to be amended was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. To render the meaning absolutely certain, an additional clause is perhaps necessary. I move to amend so that the third line will read, "and the non-mineral land for not less than $1.25 per acre."

Mr. COBB. We accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). The present occupant of the chair is informed there is already an amendment pending.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Secretary of the Interior" in the amendment last adopted, insert "in quantities not exceeding one-quarter of a section to any one purchaser."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment last offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to add to the third section the language which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules for ascertaining the wishes of said Indians and to secure their free action touching the proposed disposal of said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PEEL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8006) to amend section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to timber depredations.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"Every person who unlawfully cuts, or aids or is employed in unlawfully cutting, or wantonly destroys or procures to be wantonly destroyed, any timber standing upon the lands of the United States which, in pursuance of law, may be reserved or purchased for military or other purposes, or upon any Indian reservation, or lands belonging to or occupied by any tribe of Indians under authority of the United States, shall pay a fine of not more than $500 or be imprisoned not more than twelve months, or both, in the discretion of the court."

The report (by Mr. COBB) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, with accompanying papers, and draught of a bill to amend section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to timber depredations on public lands, have considered the same, and report the bill herewith returned favorably, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIES.

Mr. PEEL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies, in Indian Territory.

Mr. PERKINS. I move, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with, and that the Clerk proceed to read it by sections for amendment.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The first section of the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribes of Indians, and the Western Miami tribe of Indians, now located in the northeastern portion of the Indian Territory, and who united with each other under a contract, dated January 15, 1872, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, and known as the United Peorias and Miamies of the said Indian Territory, shall have the lands belonging to them and occupied by them, the United Peorias and Miamies, amounting to 50,301 acres, under the said contract, allotted to each member of the United Peorias and Miamies in severalty as hereinafter provided: Provided, That the consent of a majority of the male adult members of said tribes, assembled in open council, to the provisions of this act shall first be obtained.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have consented to dispensing with the first reading of the bill for information, on the condition there should be no limitation of the debate.

Mr. GEAR. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) was read, as follows:

(To accompany bill H. R. 8074.)

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1402) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, report back the accompanying substitute, and recommend that the said bill do lie on the table, and that the substitute do pass.

The United Peorias and Miamies own 50,301 acres of land in Indian Territory, where they reside, and the Miamies own land in the State of Kansas, where they resided prior to their removal to Indian Territory in 1873. All these Indians are civilized and self-sustaining, and are sufficiently educated to become citizens of the United States, and to hold their lands and other property in severalty, and they desire to so hold it.

The substitute provides for the allotment of their lands to them in severalty in Indian Territory, but to be held by the United States in trust for them, inalienable, and not subject to sale for taxes, or under decree of any court or otherwise for a period of twenty-five years, and for the sale of their lands in Kansas. The rights of all parties are properly guarded, and the bill is recommended by the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs and is desired by the Indians, and it is at their instance and request that this legislation is proposed.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to amend the first section of the bill in lines 18, 19, and 20, by striking out "majority" and inserting "three-fourths;" so the proviso will then read:

Provided, That the consent of three-fourths of the male adult members of said tribes assembled in open council, to the provisions of this act shall first be approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The second section was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be allotted to the said United Peoria and Miami Indians the above and foregoing described tract of land, embracing 50,301 acres, and now owned and occupied by them, in manner and form as hereinafter provided; the said Peorias being entitled to receive as their proportion of said tract, for allotment among their people, an amount that shall equal in the aggregate 33,218 acres, and the said Miami Indians to receive as their proportionate share for a like distribution, and to their people, such an amount as shall equal 17,083 acres; the same to be so subdivided and allotted as to give to each and every person who is a member of either of said tribes of Indians, and entitled by birth or adoption, their equal or proportionate share of said land, each share or allotment not to exceed 220 acres: Provided, That before individual selections are made, the Miami chiefs shall select, from the land allotted to their tribe, 3 acres of land for cemetery purposes and 4 acres for school purposes; that for school purposes to be selected in two lots of 2 acres each. Rolls containing the names of all such persons so entitled to a distributive share in said land shall be made out and certified by the chiefs of said tribes, which rolls shall be subject to revision and correction by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask the gentleman having charge of the bill what is the evidence which has been offered to the Committee on Indian Affairs that these tribes desire this legislation?

Mr. PERKINS. They have a delegation here for that purpose and they have been urging it for years. They were excepted out of the general allotment bill because they wished this special legislation.

Mr. HOOKER. Are they authorized to represent their tribes in this matter; and are these Indians capable of taking care of their own——

Mr. PERKINS. I have the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1886, and will read a paragraph from the report of the agent of the Quapaw agency:

The Miami, Peoria, Ottawa, and Wynndotte Indians have for many years closely associated themselves with, and intermarried amongst their white neighbors, and in consequence the Indian in his accepted sense has almost entirely disappeared from these tribes, leaving in his stead a race in which the white blood predominates, a people having nothing in common with the Indians and everything in common with the whites. The majority are intelligent and educated and thoroughly understand and pursue agricultural and other civilized pursuits. They are retarded in their progress, however, by the manner of holding their lands and their non-citizenship under judicious land laws.

I may say in addition that the Indian Department recommends the passage of this bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I am aware it has been the policy of the Indian Department ever since Mr. Schurz was Secretary of the Interior to allot these lands to the Indians in severalty, but always with a restriction on the power of alienation for a certain period, and I believe twenty-five years has been the usual time fixed for that purpose.

Now, I have been at a loss to understand why, if it be the policy to allot lands in severalty amongst the various Indian tribes, it has not been extended to the five civilized Indian tribes, the Cherokees, the Choctaws, Creeks, Seminoles, and Chickasaws. It may be said they hold their lands by patent or under treaty stipulation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend until order is restored on the floor.

Mr. HOOKER. I was saying, sir, that this principle has never been applied to the five semi-civilized tribes of the Indian Nation, because of the manner of holding their lands, presumably. I have always thought that there was another reason why in proposing this policy on the part of the Department they had never attempted to apply the allotment principle to these five semi-civilized tribes, and in my judgment it is because they have amongst them some of the best educated men in this country of whatever color. They thoroughly understand the interests of their nation, and have always opposed the idea of dividing their land in severalty. They unquestionably belong to the intelligent portion of the Indians, and have always resisted the effort to allot their lands.

Now, if the principle be a good one to apply to the Indians named in this bill, then I ask why it is not also a good one to apply to the Indians of the five semi-civilized tribes? I doubt very much whether it is the interest of any of these Indian tribes to hold their lands in severalty, and certainly if the five semi-civilized tribes of the Indian Territory have not reached a condition which would authorize them to ask a division of their lands in severalty, a fortiori, it can not be said that the other tribes have reached anything like a condition which would admit of the application of that principle to them.

If I know the Indian and the Indian character, I repeat that I doubt very much the propriety of allowing any of these tribes under present circumstances to hold their lands in severalty; and I question the wisdom of changing the condition of these five semi-civilized tribes, holding their lands under the treaties with Government of the United States. There will probably arise, when a proposition shall come up here for the purpose of erecting a portion of this great Indian Territory into a Territory of the United States, this question in some positive form; but in that event, were I an Indian of one of those tribes, I should, I repeat, doubt exceedingly the wisdom of the policy of allotting the lands in severalty, accompanied with the power of alienation.

If that principle were embodied it is altogether likely that it would be but a very little while before a vast portion of that rich territory which was ceded to the Indians west of the Mississippi River in return for the lands of the Choctaws, Creeks, Cherokees, and others in the States east of the Mississippi would be in the possession of that aggressive white population which is so closely surrounding them now on all sides. The time has gone by when there is a western border and western territory where wild game abounds, and it is not now possible to say to these Indians that they shall be forced on to other reservations further west, because the footsteps of civilization and progress are advancing upon them from both sides. As long as the great West was an unknown region there was some reason why the Government might see proper to remove them out of the advance of civilization from the East upon other reservations. But, sir, the tides of civilization come alike now from the Atlantic and Pacific, and thus the Indian is hedged in between the two advancing columns, within the narrow border of that territory; and if he would maintain his existence he must be placed in a position where his rights are secured beyond the reach of shrewd speculators. These five tribes understand this condition of affairs as well as we do.

It is simply for this reason that the intelligent and educated men amongst the Cherokee and Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians have always held that it was to their best interest to hold their lands as a community in order to preserve them from the improvident and indiscreet and unwise members of their tribes, who would otherwise get rid of them, and I think, sir, that this same principle should apply to all Indians, at least for the present; and that the true policy is to hold their lands in common until they themselves desire a change.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the time of the gentleman will be extended without objection.

Mr. PERKINS. If I can obtain the floor I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was in hopes that the time would be extended indefinitely, as probably the gentleman from Mississippi will want longer time.

Mr. HOOKER. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

This is not the first time that this proposition has been presented for the consideration of Congress. I doubt very much whether a single instance can be pointed out in the Indian history or in the history of any of the Indian tribes where the principle of the allotment of lands in severalty has been practically of benefit to them. In a former Congress of the United States this proposition was made at a time when Mr. Scales, of North Carolina, was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The recommendation to allot these lands in severalty was then just as urgent as it is now; and we think that the report which was made by the minority of the committee at that time embodied the proper principle upon the subject in relation to the allotments of land in severalty. In a minority report made in that Congress this language was used:

We are free to admit that the two civilizations, so different throughout, can not well coexist or flourish together. One must in time give way to the other, and the weak must in the end be supplanted by the strong. But it can not be violently wrenched out of place and cast aside. Nations can not be made to change their habits and methods and modes of thought in a day. To bring the Indian to look at things from our standpoint is a work requiring time, patience, and the skill as well as the benign spirit of Christian statesmanship. Let us first demonstrate on a small scale the practicability of the plans we propose; and when we have done that, if we can do it, a persevering patience will be needed to make the policy general.

Again I quote from the same report:

Whatever civilization has been reached by the Indian tribes has been attained under the tribal system and not under the system proposed by this bill. The Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, all five of them barbarous tribes within the short limit of our own history as a people, have all been brought to a creditable state of advancement under the tribal system. The same may be said of the Sioux and Chippewas and many smaller tribes. Gradually, under that system, they are working out their own deliverance, which will come in their own good time if we will but leave them alone and perform our part of the many contracts we have made with them. But that we have never yet done, and it seems from this bill we will never yet do. We want their lands, and we are bound to have them. Let those take a part in despoiling them who will; for ourselves, we believe the entire policy of this bill to be wrong, ill-timed, and unstatesmanlike; and we put ourselves on record against it as about all that is now left us to do, except to vote against the bill on its final passage.

Now, sir, the policy of making the Indian a citizen of the United States and destroying entirely his tribal relations, in my judgment, if submitted to and acquiesced in by the Indians, will eventually cause them to lose the vast territory they now hold in exchange for lands ceded to the Government of the United States east of the Mississippi, the lands in the States of Georgia, Alabama, my own State of Mississippi, and other States. And when these lands were ceded to the Indians in the Indian Territory, which are environed now by a white population, looking greedily across to reach the virtual possession of the lands, which are probably the richest and most valuable in the United States, there is reason to assume that it would not be very long, if the Indians had the right to dispose, themselves, of them, before they would soon pass beyond their control. The only safety, in my judgment, for the preservation of their title is that which General Jackson laid down to them when the cession was made east of the Mississippi by the Indians and these lands were given to them in exchange for them. He used their own figurative language when he said that it should be theirs "while water flows and grass grows."

It was a perpetual gift intended to be a security to them and to their children in return for the important concessions which were made east of the Mississippi River, and I doubt the policy by whatever administration it may be recommended—it is perhaps good policy on the part of the white people of the United States who desire to occupy these lands—but I doubt whether it is good policy for the Indians themselves. The five semi-civilized tribes, who are more capable of judging what is for their own interests than the others, have not acceded to the proposition, and I prophesy they will not for years accede to the proposition that their lands shall be divided in severalty; and why should the principle be applied to the more ignorant tribes?

The effect of it will be when these Indian lands shall be divided in severalty with power of alienation the improvident and thriftless portions of the Indian tribes will soon strip themselves of their entire landed estate and will have nothing. The Indian looks upon land very much as he looks upon water and air, as the common inheritance of the occupiers of the country. He has not the ideas about land and settlement and ownership that the Anglo Saxon has. They look upon the occupation of these lands as a common right. They hold their lands in common. And while they do so the intelligent portion of the tribe will be able to guard the interests of those who are improvident, thriftless, and unwise. If I were an Indian I would oppose any proposition on the part of the United States to divide the lands in severalty.

Mr. PERKINS. I shall not enter into a general discussion of the policy of allotting lands in severalty to Indians, except to say that I believe in it. I believe in the doctrine of allotting lands in severalty to the Indians with suitable restrictions when in the judgment of some competent officer they are in a condition to have the lands allotted to them.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. Is it not a fact that the community system of holding land in the Indian Territory results in throwing most of the land into the hands of a few strong, wealthy men to the exclusion of the poorer classes?

Mr. PERKINS. There is no doubt of that. The members of the five semi-civilized tribes whom the gentleman from Mississippi had in his mind when speaking of their qualifications are interested in keeping up their tribal organization, because they thrive thereby on account of the positions of honor, emolument, and profit which are given them; and they bring such influence and pressure to bear that thus far they have retarded the breaking up of the tribal organization.

But I am not here to discuss the general policy of the allotment system. I do not care to detain the House or to take the time of the committee in discussing that policy except to suggest that those who have given the best thought to this policy, and who have given most attention to the advancement, the education, and the civilization of the Indians, have committed themselves uncompromisingly and irrevocably to the system of allotments. The Indian Rights Commission, our Quaker friends, and all organizations that have given thought and attention to the question of how best the advancement of the Indian can be secured have indorsed and approved the principle of allotments and of the breaking up tribal organizations. They believe in cultivating and encouraging the individuality of the Indians, and in throwing off the restraints and superstitions of the tribal organizations.

But here are 58 Miami Indians and 144 Peoria Indians in the Indian Territory. That is all there are of these people; and in the language of the agent who makes this report from which I read an extract, the Indian has almost entirely disappeared from among them and the white man predominates. And he says they are as capable of managing their own affairs as a like number of men in any community in any of the surrounding States. And these Indians come here and ask from Congress the right to own their lands in severalty and care for them as educated, civilized men. And shall it be said by Congress that we shall stand here as a barrier to this policy and say, "Your tribal organizations shall be kept up, notwithstanding your civilization, your progress, your qualifications for citizenship; we shall deny you this privilege you are asking?"

There is not a like number of men in any community which the gentleman from Mississippi represents, or which I represent, or any other gentleman here represents, who are more qualified to care for their own advancement and their own property than are these Indians for whom I am now speaking. And they ask that this bill shall be passed in their interest. They want the tribal organization broken up because, in the language of the agent, it retards them and is a barrier to their thrift, prosperity, and good.

Mr. HOOKER. I suppose the gentleman is speaking now of the semi-civilized tribes. I ask him do they not have their governor, also their house of delegates and senate elected by Indians?

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly; but not the Miamies and Peorias.

Mr. HOOKER. They elect a governor and also a house and senate. They have good schools.

Mr. PERKINS. Very good schools.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not see why you should not say that the same principle should apply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say a few words in behalf of the principle of giving these Indians their lands in severalty. For many years I had the honor of presenting in this House the memorial of the Indian Rights Association of Pennsylvania favoring that idea, and I am only too glad to have an opportunity of recording my vote for it in reference to the Indians embraced in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in regard to that Pennsylvania Indian Rights Association that it is composed of gentlemen who voluntarily devote their time to the consideration of the best interests of the Indian, gentlemen who have the means and the opportunity of visiting the tribes and who are associated together in this matter simply with the object of benefiting the Indian by every means in their power, and, as I said when I rose, I am only too glad of an opportunity to cast my vote here in favor of this proposition, which is in accordance with the views of that association. It is a very pleasant thing, Mr. Speaker, to have an instructive word from intelligent volunteers on the Indian question or upon any other question. These gentlemen are not officials, they are not office-seekers, they are simply engaged in doing what they think is right in the cause of humanity and in the cause of the progress of the Indian in civilization, and I take what they have stated in their memorial to be the sound judgment of sound men. I subscribe to it all; I believe they are right; and I rejoice that I now have the opportunity of recording my vote in favor of the principle which they think and which I think to be right as set forth in their contributions to the literature of the Indian question.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that these are the first Indians I have ever heard of who felt that they were fit and competent to be citizens of the United States, and who asked Congress to give them the privilege of becoming such. We are spending millions of dollars annually for employés by the score to educate the Indians and prepare them to become citizens so as to be able to hold their lands like other people and take care of themselves, and if we are never to find any of them ready for the change we must continue to follow that trail as long as we live. But in this case we have found some who are ready, or who at least believe and express the belief through their chief and their second chief (who have been in the city for some time) that they have reached such a stage of civilization and intelligence and of general appreciation and understanding of the value of their lands that they are fully capable of taking care of themselves. That seems to be the opinion, too, of the agent who has been attending to their business for years, and who is located near them. The question then is, will Congress allow them to do this or not? That is the whole question in a nutshell. If they are ready to be citizens, I say in God's name let them become citizens, and I would be glad if there were more Indians similarly situated, prepared to assume the duties and take upon them the responsibility and the sovereignty of citizens of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PEEL. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I see that the bill provides for allotments of so much land; but how about the houses and other improvements?

Mr. PEEL. I think they are to take the lands with their improvements.

Mr. BLOUNT. It seems to me that that is a very important question.

Mr. PERKINS. With the permission of the Chair I will answer that question. The bill provides that where allotments are made to these Indians they shall be so made as to give to them their respective or individual improvements wherever that can be done.

Mr. BLOUNT. But some of them perhaps have no improvements.

Mr. PERKINS. The improvements, I suppose, are to be given to those who own them. Of course they should not be given to others who have not made them or acquired them in any way.

Mr. BLOUNT. But how do you provide for the cases where there are no improvements? Do you just give the Indians their lots of land and then withdraw the usual provision that is now made for their care and maintenance?

Mr. PERKINS. No; there is nothing of that kind in this bill, and there is no provision made for these Indians by the Government of the United States except to carry out the stipulations of treaties heretofore made. They do not receive any gratuities from the Government and have not received any for years.

Mr. PEEL. I desire further to say, Mr. Speaker, that the delegates who are here representing these people insist upon this bill being amended so as not only to give them their lands in severalty, but to give them the patents straight out, direct. The reason they assign for that is that an act of Congress could change this policy, and they are unwilling to take that risk. They say if the usual allotments are made and the allotment certificates issued, and the Government retains the patent for twenty-five years, they will feel that the matter stands in an executory stage, liable to be changed by act of Congress ten or fifteen years hence, and they will not feel secure. Therefore they say, "We want our patents. We are able to take care of our lands and our horses and our cattle. All we ask is that the Government shall give us what is ours, divide it up among us, and then we will take care of ourselves." And I say, Mr. Speaker, if they are capable of assuming that responsibility, in God's name give it to them.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reply to what has fallen from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL]. It is a very singular fact, sir, that under the tribal system the Indians who have most improved are the five semi-civilized tribes. Now, it has been suggested here that it is interested and wealthy parties who want to continue this system for their own benefit. Why, sir, within the memory of men now on this floor these five semi-civilized tribes were savages. They have been gradually removed by the Government from the country east of the Mississippi to territory west of the river, given them by the Government in exchange for the lands they have relinquished. Under the tribal system these Indians have become five of the most prosperous communities in the United States. I venture to say that no class of people in the country are in a better position, from a pecuniary point of view, than these five semi-civilized tribes. They have simply asked the Government of the United States to pay them what it owed them.

The Choctaws came here many years ago asking their honest dues. Old Peter Pitchlynn, their ex-chief, was here pressing their claim. He came to Washington in the first place supposing that six weeks would be sufficient to procure the payment of the claim. But while waiting for its settlement he bought property here, raised a family, lived here thirty years, and finally died; and justice was not done to the Indians he represented until a year or two ago, when the Supreme Court of the United States rendered judgment to pay these Indians what had been owing to them for fifty years.

While these five semi-civilized tribes are in good condition, I do not know anything in regard to the particular tribes named here. I am speaking of the general policy of allotting lands to the Indians. If it be true that the Indians are in favor of this, nothing can be lost by providing for the expression of their assent in a proper manner.

It is highly probable that in particular localities in certain States small bands of these Indians, surrounded by white people, are intelligent enough to take care of their own affairs. But as to the five semi-civilized tribes, conceded to be the most intelligent of the Indian population, the best advised as to their own interests, the most civilized and most Christianized, we know it to be undoubtedly true that they are unalterably opposed to the allotment system. This being the case, I can not but ask myself, why should the Government want to apply this system, as is proposed in some instances, to the barbarous tribes—what are called the "plains Indians?" If the system is to be undertaken with reference to this class of Indians, I see no reason why there should not be required a full assent on the part of the Indians before they are subjected to this system. Hence I offered the amendment, which was accepted by the gentlemen on the other side, providing that at least three-fourths of the Indians should assent. I am not at all certain it would not be well to require the assent of every individual Indian in these tribes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, my object in taking the floor is not to oppose this bill at all, but to obtain some information. I find in section 3 this provision:

That where the improvements of two or more members of said tribes shall have been made upon the same legal subdivision, and said parties can not agree, the said special agent and agent shall have the power to decide, and their decision shall be final: Provided further, That allotments of land made under the provisions of this act shall be made as near equal in value, exclusive of improvements, as practicable.

Now, a number of the Indians upon whom this bill will operate will not have houses upon their lands. I presume that fact is contemplated.

Mr. PERKINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLOUNT. There are likewise minors who will come under the operation of this allotment system. Are these people to be turned loose without any fund for the construction of buildings? And if so, do we not practically force an abandonment of the land, or a sale at unfair prices? In section 9 I find this declaration:

That all money received and now in the custody of the United States, or that may be received up to the date of the passage of this act, arising from the sale of the unallotted lands in Kansas, including the school sections referred to in section 6 of this act, shall immediately be available after the passage of this act.

This money, it appears, is to be distributed among the Indians. Now, I wish to know what amount the Government now has or is likely to have that may be utilized for the purpose of constructing homes for the Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. I can not give the exact amount which the Miamies have to their credit in the Treasury of the United States. The Peorias have about $77,300 as a trust fund and $20,000 as a school fund. There are 144 of the Peorias and only 58 of the Miamies. The fund belonging to the Miamies, though not quite so large as that of the Peorias, is a very considerable amount. I can not give the exact figures.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care about the exact amount. What I want to know is whether the gentleman thinks there will be sufficient money for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, I think so.

Since this debate commenced one of these Peorias has sent to me a note, which I know is in his own handwriting, and it would do credit to almost any member of Congress. I send it to the desk to be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. PERKINS: For eight years we have worked for the allotment of our land. We have spent, as the records of the Indian Office show, several thousand dollars in maintaining delegations here for that purpose.

W. C. LYKINS.

Mr. HOOKER. The first section of this bill provides—

That the Confederated Wea, Peoria, Kaskaskia, and Piankeshaw tribes of Indians, and the Western Miami tribe of Indians, now located in the northeastern portion of the Indian Territory, etc.

Now, I wish to ask how many of these Indians there are, all told.

Mr. PERKINS. I have already given the number, 144 of the Peorias and 58 of the Miamies. The Weas and Piankeshaws are members of the Peoria tribe.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. After the allotments have been made how much surplus will there be?

Mr. PERKINS. The bill proposes the allotment of all the land. It does not propose to open any portion of this reservation to settlement, but to divide the land among the Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next section of the bill will be read.

The third section was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That as soon as practicable after the execution of such surveys and resurveys as may be necessary, a special agent shall be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be, in conjunction with the United States Indian agent for the Quapaw agency, to allot the said lands in severalty to the said United Peorias and Miamies. The salary of the said special agent shall be paid from the appropriation for pay of special agents to make allotments of lands in severalty to Indians. The Secretary of the Interior shall furnish to the said special agent any and all plats, reports, and papers showing the legal subdivisions by the surveys made of said lands. All allotments of said lands under the provisions of this act shall be made, if by an adult, by individual selection, heads of families selecting for their minor children and guardians for their orphan wards, in lots or parcels, contiguous or not, as may be fixed or agreed upon by the council of the said United Peorias and Miamies, and in such manner, as nearly as practicable, to embrace the improvements of the Indians making selections: Provided, That where the improvements of two or more members of said tribes shall have been made upon the same legal subdivision, and said parties can not agree, the said special agent and agent shall have the power to decide, and their decision shall be final: Provided further, That allotments of land made under the provisions of this act shall be made as near equal in value, exclusive of improvements, as practicable. That the special agent and agent shall, on completion of their duties as herein set forth, forward to the Secretary of the Interior a complete list of all the individual allotments made under this act, with apt description of the same, in order that patents, as hereinafter provided, may issue therefor, and shall also submit a statement showing the description and amount of any surplus land, if any there be, after said allotments have been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word, and I do it for the purpose of ascertaining from my friend from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] the particular reason which exists for dividing up these lands in severalty amongst the members of these two bands of Indians. The Peorias and the Miamies are comparatively civilized bands of Indians. They migrated in 1836 from the northern section of the State of Indiana. They are doing well, and I would like to know of my friend from Arkansas whether they desire to have their lands divided and allotted to the members of these two bands of United Peorias and Miamies in severalty?

Mr. PEEL. I will reply to the gentleman at the proper time, and try to furnish him with the information he seeks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the gentleman has in his possession a letter from one of the most accomplished of these Indians, named Richardville, which I hope he will have read for the information of the House. The grandfather of this Richardville was the chief of his tribe more than forty years ago, and he is the same Richardville of whom General Cass speaks as the most acute and skillful diplomat he ever met with in the whole course of his life; and General Cass, we know, had considerable experience in diplomacy.

I understand the letter to which I refer was written by the direct descendant of that illustrious chief, and I will yield out of my own time to have it read.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is a tribe of Indians in this Indian Territory or anywhere else which, when left to itself, desires to hold its lands in severalty. My friend from Arkansas is aware that down in the Indian country when you distributed lands to the Shawnees, of whom Tecumseh was an illustrious character, they were given to those Indians south of the Canadian River. They were given to them on condition they should take those lands in severalty, and they were set off in severalty on the south bank of that river. Piles of earth were thrown up to mark the corners, and stones were taken from the Canadian River as landmarks for those lands. In less than a year, however, those Indians had fled to the north of the Canadian River, and we were told by the Kickapoos that none of them had ever had the courage since then to go back to their reservation which they had left, feeling that they had displeased the Great Spirit, and that they had sent their dog soldiers to level down the landmarks, and the stones were taken and thrown into the river.

My friend and myself saw the great progress and advancement which had taken place amongst these Shawnees. They were settled upon the Kickapoo lands without the slightest objection on the part of the Kickapoos to their occupation of those lands.

And in regard to the five civilized tribes of Indians, we had the pleasure of meeting them in council. We were told, on the part of the intelligent portion of these Indians, they were opposed to the allotment of their lands in severalty. They alleged there was not a pauper amongst them, not an Indian child unprovided for, not an Indian without a home.

These Indians do not hold their lands common in a general sense, but the lands occupied by these Indians are occupied against all comers, and so long as they remain upon them no other Indian can come and take possession of them. Their possession of them is absolute; the right of possession is perfect so long as the Indians remain on them; their right to cultivate them and to occupy them is unquestioned. It is only when they leave the lands, when a family becomes extinct, that other Indians can go upon them and occupy them. Now will my friend tell me how that differs from Stuart Mill? Does he not and do not other men of that class of economical thinkers take the same view, and as the gentleman from Mississippi remarked pertinently a moment ago, in view of the advancement and progress of these Indians, is it not better to preserve the favorable condition of things which now exists?

In the tribe each Indian is the common care of the whole tribe; and I apprehend this, gentleman—for on this subject I, in common with other members on this floor, feel a deep interest—I apprehend that the result of this legislation will be to create a body of lazzaroni wherever an Indian tribe is found to exist throughout the country which comes under the provisions of such legislation.

Our own race, springing from the forests of Germany and other portions of continental Europe, as well as the islands of the sea, has built up its civilization to its present elevated condition by a slow and painful progress under rules adopted by themselves, and through different forms of progress and development.

That growth has been slow and laborious. But you propose by such legislation as this to apply to these people, but one degree removed from barbarism, the same rules which apply to a race which has twelve hundred or fifteen hundred years of progress back of it, and which has taken that length of time for mental development. We have an idea of property, the Indians have not; and you can not fix in the mind of the average Indian to-day the idea of a condition of separate property. He can not entertain it—can not understand it. When the Shawnee comes into the lands set apart by treaty stipulation for the Kiowa or Kickapoo, the Kickapoo never dreams that he has a right to object. It did not strike his mind in that way. It was, in his simple judgment, common property, and hospitality is unlimited as between themselves.

I hope, inasmuch as this policy has been determined on as a most convenient and proper method of reaching these lands, that it will be successful; but I fear the ultimate result upon these unfortunate savages.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I have been much edified, and I trust the House has also, by the commentary of the gentleman from Indiana upon the legislation which is now in force, and that proposed with regard to the Indian tribes. My friend forgets that he is dealing with Indians very different in point of civilization and attainments from the ordinary Indians as we understand them. While the theory he advances may apply and does apply undoubtedly to many Indians, it is not applicable in this instance by any means. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to reflect upon the fact that under the treaties with these five civilized tribes we agreed to divide these lands in severalty whenever they chose to ask for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. But they have never asked.

Mr. PEEL. We have agreed to do it when they do ask.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I repeat, they do not ask.

Mr. PEEL. These people do not belong to the five civilized tribes. They come and ask legislation to partition out their common property. I want to say to the gentleman that this is simply an act to partition their lands, an act that is recognized throughout the States of the Union, I presume in every one of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt for a question? Do not some of the Peorias and Miamies occupy a portion of the lands that we ceded to the Cherokees; and ought we not, in view of the treaty with the Cherokees and other civilized tribes, to apply the same principle to the lands they occupy as we would apply if they were inhabited by the persons with whom the original treaties were made?

Mr. PEEL. I think they ought to be allowed to get them themselves independent of the Cherokees. If the Cherokees are in a condition to hold their lands in common let them do so; but if these people have reached a stage of civilization to become owners themselves, individually, and are able to understand the rights of property and their own interests sufficient to entitle them to hold their lands in severalty, and come and ask Congress to give them the right to divide their own property, I do not understand that there is any objection to do that, or that there would be any more reason to refuse to grant them lands in severalty than there would be on the part of a court to do so when asked to divide a common property amongst the different persons to whom it belonged, when the question came before it. It is done in all of the States in the partition of property, and I apprehend that no man will say that there is anything wrong in a court appointing a commissioner to make such a division.

I am aware of the various theories of lands in this country. We have heard some of the theories of a gentleman from New York who ran for President, who had some peculiar opinions of lands. But I apprehend that there are few persons upon the floor who would subscribe to his ideas. I think, indeed, it was the policy of the Government towards these people to take them and educate them as fast as possible in the rights, duties, and privileges of the ownership of property. When, therefore, we find a number of these Indians, one hundred and forty-eight in one case and fifty-eight in another, who have the best of lands held in common, but who have reached such a stage of civilization and have acquired such knowledge of the rights of property as justify the committee in recommending that they be permitted to assume the care of their own property and the rights of citizens, where is the ground for assuming that such a policy is wrong?

I say it is in keeping with our policy, for we already have a general allotment provision of law, coupled with power of alienation after a certain period. When that period shall arrive in the case of any of the Indians who so hold their lands, the Government will relinquish its trust, having fulfilled all its conditions. They will then be in a condition to understand their own interests in the care of their property, and will assume that responsibility for themselves. That is my view, and it is also their own.

Now, if the House desires to have this letter read, I will be glad to have it presented for that purpose. The delegation that signed this letter stood before me to-day a few minutes before the House convened, and said that if Mr. PERKINS would offer the two amendments he promised, they were satisfied with the bill; and if the House agreed to them—one being to give them patents to the land at once, and the Government to hold it in trust for a number of years (the other I do not understand the merits of)—but with the two amendments they were satisfied with the bill. Otherwise, they wanted it rejected.

Mr. PETERS. Whatever civilization there is in any Indian tribe is due to the contact of individual Indians, or of the tribe itself with the white race. There is no exception to that rule. I challenge any man to point me to a single instance among any of the Indian tribes in which can be found anything that has the look of civilization where that civilization has not come from contact with the white race, either by the tribe or a portion of it, or individuals of it.

The gentleman from Mississippi dwells eloquently upon the wonderful civilization of the five tribes. That is easily explained. It is because the five tribes have in almost all their history been surrounded by the white race and been brought in contact with the civilization of the white race. Those who have been sent away from those five tribes to be educated in schools of white men when they have gone back have taken with them the civilization they obtained in the white schools. These tribes, especially since they went west of the Mississippi River, have always been brought in contact with white civilization. It is so with the tribes in question here.

On the other hand, take the Cheyennes, one of the most vicious and treacherous tribes in the West. Their only contact with the white race has been when they went out on a war expedition to fight the white race; and that is the reason why they are the most desperate, cruel, and despicable tribe of Indians that roams the plains. They have not a particle of civilization because they have had no contact with the United States except under circumstances to bring forth antagonism and the shedding of blood. But wherever you have an Indian tribe which as a tribe, or by individual members of it, has been brought into contact with white civilization they have got a share of that civilization; and like leaven it has grown and grown until, as in the five tribes and among the Cherokees here mentioned, it has leavened the whole lump.

I do not believe, with the gentleman from Indiana, that if there was a fair expression, an actual individual expression, of the members of either of the five tribes, or of these tribes, or of any other tribe that is in any way civilized, these tribes would not be in favor of doing away with the tribal relation. The tribal relation is the curse of the Indians. It is the curse of the Government as well as of the Indians. Never will the Indian question be satisfactorily settled until the tribal relations have been abandoned, either by the Indians themselves or in consequence of a decree of the Government. The great progress that has been made in all these cases has been in the direction of a disintegration of the tribal relations. I speak of this because I have had some personal experience, not only with these tribes which have had no civilization, but also with those which have had some civilization among them. And I give you the result of my deliberate judgment, that just so far as civilization permeates the tribal relation just so far the tribal relation will be abandoned as soon as you can have a fair expression of the sentiment of each individual belonging to the tribe. I say if there could be a fair expression of the individuals belonging to the five tribes the expression would be in favor of abandoning the tribal relation.

Mr. PERKINS. After this general debate on the Indian policy I think we may now proceed with the consideration of the bill. This bill does not open to settlement a foot of land. It does not take from the Indians an acre they possess. It merely proposes to divide among them in severalty 55,000 acres which they now own. I hope, considering the time we have occupied in general debate, we will now proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] a question. Does not this bill provide for the sale of land in one of the later sections?

Mr. PERKINS. It does as to some lands these Indians own up in Kansas.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And these lands it is proposed to sell?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir. These Indians own some lands in Kansas which they desire to sell, and this bill makes provision for that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment to section 3, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2 of section 3 strike out the word "a."
In line 3 change "agent" to "agents."
Also strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "United States Indian agent for the Quapaw agency," and insert "one to be selected by the said United Peorias and Miamies."
Also strike out, in line 7, the word "agent" and insert "agents."
So that if amended as proposed that part of the section will read:
"That as soon as practicable after the execution of such surveys and resurveys as may be necessary, special agents shall be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be, in conjunction with one to be selected by the said United Peorias and Miamies, to allot the said lands in severalty to the said United Peorias and Miamies. The salary of the said special agents shall be paid from the appropriation for pay of special agents to make allotments of lands in severalty to Indians."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The purpose of this amendment will be readily discernible. Under the section as it now stands the appraisal to be made of these lands is to be made by the Indian agent who is now there at the Quapaw agency, in conjunction with another to be appointed by the President. It seems to me that if these Indians are so advanced in civilization as we are told they are, they should be entirely capable of making a selection of an agent to participate in the appraisal of their lands, and I think the privilege of making such a selection ought to be accorded to them. It seems to me also that there should be three appraisers instead of two, one of whom is already known and who may have some preconceived notions about the value of the lands. However, I know nothing about that; but I know no reason why these appraisers should be selected or named in advance. I believe they should be selected in the way in which such persons are usually selected, and that the parties interested, namely, these Indians, should have the selection of at least one of the appraisers. With this view I offer the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that as the bill was originally introduced it provided that these agents should be appointed by the respective tribes; but upon the recommendation of the Indian Office the provision to which the gentleman makes objection was incorporated into the bill. The Indian Office thought it was better that the Secretary of the Interior should designate one agent, and that the agent serving there with these Indians should act as the other, and it was upon the recommendation of the Indian Office that that part of the bill was drawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet, Mr. Speaker, it would seem very manifest that inasmuch as we are proposing to treat these Indians as holding property in severalty they should have something to do with the disposal of their own lands. I trust there will be no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUNN. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said the Indians did not know anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. That was my view; but this legislation is proceeding upon a different theory.

The amendment of Mr. LA FOLLETTE was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State of Kansas, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever; and if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer a substitute for that section which has been prepared by the Indians, at whose request I offer it.

The substitute was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior he shall cause patents in fee-simple to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, their heirs and assigns forever. Said patents shall contain and recite the following exemption clause: "That the lands so patented shall remain free from execution, levy, taxation, compulsory sale, or forfeiture so long as the title shall remain in the original patentee or become the property of any other Indians by inheritance, purchase, or otherwise;" also, the following restricting clause: "That 160 acres of said lands so allotted shall remain inalienable for a period of twenty years from the date of patents;" and if any conveyance shall be made of lands here made inalienable by this act, or any contract made touching the same before the expiration of the time mentioned and provided by this act, it shall be absolutely null and void. And any adult members of the United Peoria and Miami tribes of Indians shall have authority, under the provisions of this act, to sell or dispose of to any Indian any part or parcel of land of the amount over and above the 160 acres of the allotments as hereinbefore made by this act, but the sale of any part or parcel of said allotments of lands shall not be made for a less sum than $1.25 per acre: Provided, That all sales of lands under this act made by the adult members of the said Peoria and Miami tribes of Indians while the Indian Territory remains under its present form of government shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior under and by the same rules and regulations governing the sales of Miami Indian allotted lands in Kansas, and the deed shall be recorded in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the deed after approval and recording shall be returned to the grantor named in the deed.

Mr. COBB. I am not sure that I understand what sort of a title these Indians are to acquire under that amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. A fee-simple, except as to 160 acres, which will be inalienable for twenty years.

Mr. WEAVER. Inalienable except to Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. One hundred and sixty acres are to be inalienable even to Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment just read by striking out the words "compulsory sale."

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we are making a conglomerated mess of this bill by the insertion of very inconsistent provisions. For instance, we start out in this amendment by saying that these Indians shall have a fee-simple title to this land, and then we turn round immediately and say that they shall not have a fee-simple title. In one place it is provided that the title is to be vested in fee-simple in each individual; but a little further on in the amendment we find the effect of it is that the title to the land is to be held in trust by the Government of the United States. Now, we find it provided in section 10 of the bill that these Indians shall be full citizens of the United States. I had intended to reserve what I desired to say on this question until we should reach that section, but as the question is presented in connection with the pending proposition I will say now what I propose to say.

If an adult Indian is qualified to be a citizen of the United States, he is qualified to hold property in the same manner as any other citizen holds it. We are lowering the dignity of citizenship when we undertake to say in one breath that a man shall be a citizen, and in the next that he shall be under the guardianship of the Government of the United States. This amendment is in the same direction as the section to which I am now referring; and thus the whole bill is becoming, as I have suggested, a sort of conglomerated mess, without any consistent, leading idea running through it. Why, sir, if we are to make these Indians citizens of the United States——

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman will permit me to suggest that the amendment I now offer is more liberal in the particular referred to by the gentleman than the bill itself. The amendment is in the very direction that the gentleman is arguing. I offer it at the request of the Indians themselves, because they want the bill liberalized in this respect. I repeat that the amendment is more liberal than the section for which I offer it as a substitute.

Mr. COBB. Certainly it is. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. PERKINS. Then let us adopt it.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman speaks about the recommendation of these Indians who are here upon the ground. I do not know anything about them; but when they come to me I always view them with some suspicion. I am not willing to accept as final the statements made by a few Indians who are here in Washington, who may be actuated by motives of which I know nothing, and of whose connections in reference to this whole matter I am ignorant. It seems to me that in dealing with this question we should have just regard for what we believe to be the true interests of the Indians.

This bill proposes, in the first place, to make these Indians citizens of the United States; and I am told now, as I was told the other day, that we have a general law making all Indians who receive lands in severalty citizens of the United States, which, I believe, is the fact. Now, the point I make is this: If, under the provision of the general law, or under the operation of the tenth section of this bill, these Indians are to become citizens of the United States, why make all these careful provisions for keeping them under guardianship? Is it to be said here that an adult who is to be recognized as a citizen of the United States is at the same time to have a guardian for the management of his affairs?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, if we are to do what this bill purposes, why not, by a very simple provision, turn the whole of this land over to these Indians and let them divide it in severalty themselves? They now have the right of occupancy; the fee is in the United States. We can accomplish the whole purpose of the bill (if the Indians are fit to be made citizens) by simply turning over the fee to them and letting them manage the whole property according to their will. That is the way we do with other adult citizens. Why not do the same with these? I am opposed to the amendment and to the whole bill.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, the amendment just offered by the gentleman who has this bill in charge seems to me to do away with the argument which he has been making to the House that these Indians are in a condition to be made possessors of their own land with the power of alienation. He has said that they are an intelligent body of people, qualified to become citizens of the United States and to dispose of their own property. Now, the amendment which the gentleman has offered proposes, instead of the fourth section of the bill as it stands, a provision that—

> Upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents in fee-simple to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, their heirs and assigns forever. Said patents shall contain and recite the following exemption clause, that the lands so patented—

I call the attention of the committee to this language——

Mr. PERKINS. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] will permit the suggestion, I wish to say that if in his judgment these lands ought to be given to these Indians absolutely, without any conditions, any amendment of that kind which he may offer, if should be satisfactory to the House, will be satisfactory to me. I will make no objection.

Mr. HOOKER. No, sir; I do not intend to offer any such amendment, for I do not believe in any such policy. But I ask, if these people are qualified to assume the duties of citizens, and are capable of taking care of their own property, why should a limitation be put upon their power in this respect? When the gentleman proposes such a limitation, he refutes the whole argument by which he has sought to show to the House that these people are capable of taking care of their own affairs.

But there is in the amendment which the gentleman has just offered a still more startling proposition:

> That the lands so patented shall remain free from execution, levy, taxation, compulsory sale, or forfeiture, so long as the title to the same shall remain in the original patentee or become the property of any other Indians by inheritance, purchase, or otherwise; also the following restricting clause: That 160 acres of said land so allotted shall remain inalienable for the period of twenty years from the date of patent.

Now, if the position of the gentleman, that these Indians are capable of managing their own affairs, be correct in fact, why, when these lands are allotted to them, should they be invested with the extraordinary privilege of being free from taxation, free from execution, free from all the processes to which the property of every other citizen is subject under the law?

It shows at once. The honorable gentleman himself states these people want guardians; that they still want care; that they still need protection; that they want somebody to look after them to protect their interests; that they are not capable of standing up as citizens claim to; that they have not the capacity to protect their own property against encroachments of anybody else; that unless they have such protection their property will be liable to be taken from them by others. Why, sir, this shows the whole scope and policy of this bill, and that it is not founded in justice either to the people of the United States or to these Indians themselves. Now, there is another provision in this bill that 160 acres shall remain inalienable. Why should this land remain inalienable if these Indians are fit to attend to their own affairs? If they are able to take care of their own lands why should the Government exempt their property from taxation whether in their own hands or in the hands of others?

It is a giving away, so to speak, Mr. Speaker, of the whole argument insisted upon by gentlemen. If it were true and correct, why should they not take their lands in severalty like others; why, if they do take them, must they take them under the extraordinary conditions which we see here provided for in this bill?

Mr. PEEL. I understand from the delegates who represent these Indians that it is the desire of these two bands their land should be allotted to them in severalty. They understand, however, a sentiment prevails in this House, not only on the part of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], but on the part of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and others, there should be a restriction upon their lands, and I suppose in view of that sentiment they modified this bill, not in compliance with their own wishes, but to meet the views of others who had a different opinion about it. I can only account for the provision in the bill to which reference has been made because it was modified in that way to meet the views of others, for, as I have already said, these Indians themselves prefer to have their lands allotted to them in severalty, and they are perfectly capable of taking care of and protecting their own property.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one portion of this amendment to which I wish to direct the attention of members of the House especially before they are called upon to vote upon it. In that connection I think it is due to the House, and I presume I have the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to have read a paper which I have in my possession. But, in the first place, I desire to direct the attention of the House to the proposition contained in this amendment.

It is provided that at any time after the patent has been issued to any adult member of the United Peoria and Miami tribes of Indians he shall have authority under the provisions of this act to sell or dispose of any part of such land for himself to others. Now, there is the mouse in this meal, it strikes me, in reference to these gentlemen who come here pretending to be delegates for these Indians and to represent their best interests. This amendment which dropped down into this House from the hands of these delegates comes, I apprehend, from some of the shrewder portion of the tribe. Under that amendment, if it becomes a part of the bill, and the bill becomes a law, the shrewder members of these Indians would soon own the land of every incompetent person belonging to the tribes. There is a vast portion of the Territory belonging to these Indians which in consequence would pass into the hands of these shrewder men, to be leased to the cattle companies who now surround all these lands.

In connection with this amendment I think the House should have before it a communication which is addressed to this House, and I suppose I have the permission of the chairman of the committee to have it read as it was not received in time to be presented to the committee before this bill was reported to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before it is read I ask the gentleman what information the Committee on Indian Affairs has in reference to the right of this delegation to represent these combined tribes? And they reside on these lands, or, as we are told, one of them lives in the State of Kansas.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am unable to answer except in this way: When this bill was under consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs, at no time as a member of that committee did I listen to any statements on the part of any delegation from these tribes, which appeared there as representing the interests of these Indians. Indeed, I must say I have not heard until this day there was any delegation here looking after the interests of these Indians so far as this particular bill is concerned.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin permit me to ask him whether he was in attendance at the sessions of the committee when this bill was considered and ordered to be printed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I was.

Mr. PEEL. I can explain that. I had several letters from this delegation before they reached this city, asking that any legislation under way in regard to them should be stayed until their arrival. They have been here for two weeks, and they have visited me at my residence as well as in the committee-room on several occasions. They have explained to me personally what they wanted, and I approved of it; and they went on to prepare a bill covering the points they desired, but which they have not been able to present until this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They did not appear before the committee. I have a document here which comes from the same source as this amendment, and I send it up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the reading of the paper which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, chiefs and delegates of the Miami tribe of Indians of Indian Territory, respectfully represent to your honorable body:

That the undersigned have been instructed to present to your honorable body the feelings and wishes of our people in regard to the allotment of our lands in severalty. That we have carefully examined the House bill 8074, recently reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs as a substitute for House bill 1402, and find that its provisions are in several respects inconsistent with the desires and interests of our people, so much so that we fear it would fail of obtaining the consent of our people should it be presented to them in its present form for their assent.

The undersigned have prepared a bill which they believe to be in accordance with the wishes of our people. It was their desire and intention to present the bill to which reference has just been made to the Committee on Indian Affairs previous to their report of bill 8074, and to submit to the committee the grounds and reasons for their asking the passage of an act in the form indicated by them, but by a premature report of the committee, doubtless through misapprehension of the wishes and purposes of the undersigned, that opportunity was lost. The undersigned desire an opportunity to correct the erroneous impression formed by the committee that the bill in its present form is desired by the Indians.

Regarding it as inappropriate to submit at the present time the various considerations that we desire to have weighed in this matter, we are constrained to ask that an opportunity for such purpose may be afforded to us before a proper committee of the House, and therefore that the whole matter may be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs for a full hearing in the matter.

We further ask that action on bill 8074 may be delayed until such action on the part of the committee shall have taken place.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

DAVID GEBOE,
THOMAS F. RICHARDVILLE,
Chiefs and Delegates Western Miami Tribe.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I have another moment I desire to say that this amendment offered by the gentlemen from Kansas, if adopted by the committee, is of such a character that it seems to me the bill ought to be recommitted, for this amendment contains all the objectionable features to which reference is made in the paper which has just been read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BLOUNT. Who signed that paper?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not observe the signatures. It is addressed to the chairman of the committee.

But if this amendment is all that they desire to have incorporated upon the bill, it is, it seems to me, a question that is too important to be considered and decided in this way by this committee; and if it is not, the bill should surely go back to the Committee on Indian Affairs for further consideration there before action is taken upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the pending amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the motion to recommit the bill pending? I understood the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is proper to do so, I will submit that motion.

Mr. PERKINS. I suppose that is not in order now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is it not in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because two amendments are pending which will have to be disposed of.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, it was adopted.

Mr. PERKINS. Before the vote is taken on my amendment I desire to have read, in answer to the communication of the gentleman from Wisconsin, what these parties now say about this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10, 1888.

We, the representatives of the Miami and Peoria tribe, respectfully ask the passage of the Peoria and Miami bill with amendment made by yourself. We feel competent to care for our interests and our people.

DAVID GEBOE,
T. F. RICHARDVILLE,
W. C. LYKINS.

Hon. B. W. PERKINS.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me say further to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there are only 55,000 acres of land covered by the bill, and the gentleman knows that there is not a cattle syndicate in the country, or anybody else, who could under the provisions of this bill get possession of an acre.

I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PERKINS, the House divided, and there were—ayes 54, noes 32.

Mr. HOOKER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOOKER and Mr. PERKINS were appointed tellers.

Mr. PERKINS. I am quite well satisfied that there is no quorum present, and as this is Saturday evening, I have no disposition to secure a call of the House if one could be secured. All I ask is a fair consideration of this bill in the interests of men who are competent and qualified to care for their own; and if it is the disposition of any man in the House to filibuster against the bill, I suppose at this time of the day and week we must submit. If, then, it is the intention to insist upon a quorum, I shall consent to an adjournment if the chairman of the committee so desires.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman, while he is in a good humor, will also agree to refer this bill back to the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all.

Mr. HOOKER. Then we will take a vote upon that proposition. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope that will be voted down.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 39, noes 53.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the House take a recess until Monday morning at 9 o'clock.

The motion was rejected.

And then, on motion of Mr. PERKINS (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 12, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Supervising Architect, stating that an amendment of the act of March 3, 1887, appropriating $190,000 for heating apparatus complete, to be furnished before June 30, 1888, for certain buildings, is necessary; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of the cost of alterations and repairs to Government buildings; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of cost of fence for Government buildings at Tyler, Tex., and requesting an appropriation of $1,000 therefor; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the information of the Committee on Commerce, a communication from the Chief of Engineers, with a copy of the report of the Board of Engineers upon Senate bill 275, authorizing the construction of various bridges across the Missouri, Mississippi, and Illinois Rivers; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 1, 1888, information as to the cause of delay in the construction of the bridge over the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, authorized by act of Congress approved February 25, 1887; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution in response to which this communication is sent to the Senate was offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON], and the communication will lie on the table until he comes in.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Per Diem Rated Service-Pension Association of New York, eight petitions of citizens of Kansas, a petition of citizens of Soldier, Jackson County, Kansas, and a petition of citizens of Illinois and Ohio, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 49 citizens of Rosedale, Kans., and a petition of 17 citizens of Lawrence, Kans., praying for better legal protection for women and girls in places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Montana, remonstrating against the threatened acquisition of title by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company of the mineral lands of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the New Jersey State board of agriculture, praying for a reduction of postage on agricultural and horticultural reports, also on seeds, plants, bulbs, scions, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Letter-Carriers' Association, praying that they may receive the benefit of the eight-hour law; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Montana, praying for speedy action on the subject of protection to the wool-growing and woolen-manufacturing industries of the country, and for the repeal of the act of March 3, 1883, reducing protection to those industries; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers, the National Association of Wool-Growers, and the Philadelphia Wool Merchants' Association, praying for such legislation as will protect wool and woolens and connected industries. I am desired and I wish to say that these petitioners represent in this petition that they have united in presenting in it to the Congress of the United States the causes they have for anxiety awakened by legislation proposed elsewhere which in their opinion will work not only disaster to these three great and leading interests of this country, but to very many others like them interdependent as well upon them as upon each other for their prosperity.

They say that it may be that no such legislation will ever reach this body, but if it does they hope that the reasons set forth here, and a schedule which they have annexed to their petition, showing how such legislation may be amended and altered so as to produce the greatest prosperity for these industries and for all of them connected, will have due consideration before the Committee on Finance, to which I move that the petition be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of E. A. Skillman, agent, of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of a law to cancel certain lien certificates and relieve certain property of the burden thereof, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2307) to correct the records of the District of Columbia relative to certain real estate therein; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, direct me to report the same with amendments. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that this bill take the place on the Calendar of a precisely similar bill which I reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia on the 6th of February last, which is Order of Business 245, and I shall ask that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the bill just reported may take the place on the Calendar of Order of Business 245, being the bill (S. 1060) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, and that said bill be indefinitely postponed. That order will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 682) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton a major of cavalry in the Army of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 76) for the relief of L. A. Morris, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2093) for the relief of John K. Le Baron, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I introduced a few days ago, for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, a joint resolution (S. R. 59) authorizing Brig. Gen. Absalom Baird, United States Army, to accept from the President of the French Republic a diploma conferring the decoration of Commander of the National Order of the Legion of Honor. By mistake the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I report it back from that committee and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1158) for the relief of Louis Jacobson, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the bill (S. 1024) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, and accompanying papers, have carefully considered the same, and, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of February 7, 1884, report as follows:

That they have referred the same to the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2308) to provide for the sale of lands patented by ertain members of the Flathead band of Indians in Montana Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 2309) to regulate the use of the grounds of the Washington National Monument, known as public reservation No. 3, in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2310) granting a pension to Rozalia Junk; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2311) for the relief of Heman D. Walbridge and Reginald Fendall, trustees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HAWLEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2312) to incorporate the West Washington Electric Ligthing, Heating, Motor, and Power Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 2313) granting a pension to Ellen J. Snedaker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2314) granting a pension to John B. Covert; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2315) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri Valley Railway Company through the Yankton Indian reservation, in Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2316) restoring the right of pre-emption to Jesse A. Corn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TURPIE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2317) for the relief of John Schierling, administrator of the estate of Gallus Kerchner, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2318) to constitute Sault St. Marie, Mich., a port of delivery, with privileges of inland transportation in bond; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT. I introduce a bill for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn., with the accompanying petition of business men of Waterbury, and a statement of the mayor and a committee of citizens of Waterbury, which I ask may be referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 2319) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn., was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2320) granting a pension to Sarah A. Hanger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2321) granting a pension to John V. Hennessey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2322) granting a pension to Ralph Waldo Nason; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2323) to provide for settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to the United States growing out of issues of bonds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2324) to increase the pension of the survivors of the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2325) granting a pension to James Hinkle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2326) for the removal of the navy-yard at Warrington, near Pensacola, Fla., to a new site on the bay above the city of Pensacola; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 2327) granting a pension to Mrs. Nannie Cushman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 2328) for the relief of John P. D. Commerdinger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 63) making an appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government and the Bureau of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Ohio centennial, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL-INDUSTRY BILL.

Mr. PALMER. I offer the following resolution, and ask its reference to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 extra copies of Senate bill 2083, known as the bill for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and for other purposes, be printed for the use of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator from Michigan asked that it should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was advised that in consequence of the number required, it did not necessitate a reference. The Chair will order the resolution to be referred to the Committee on Printing, if it is thought best to refer it. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing, if there be no objection.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, which was unanimously reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COLQUITT. I gave notice that to-day, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I should move to take up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], with a view of submitting some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] appeals to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say to the Senator from Georgia that this is a House bill, unanimously reported by the Committee on Finance. I do not think it will take up any time, and it is rather important that it should be passed at once.

Mr. BECK. I have only a word to say about that. There is an amendment to that bill, which I offered, to repeal all laws maintaining a sinking fund, which I think is not only no longer necessary, but an absurdity. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont will not consent to that amendment. If he does not, it will take some time.

Mr. MORRILL. I could not consent to it, and I should regret to have the Senator from Kentucky present it. We all know what his views are, but I think neither House agrees with him on that subject.

Mr. BECK. I think that both Houses will agree with me when the matter is understood; but that is an opinion, merely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont insist upon his motion?

Mr. MORRILL. I will not do so if the Senator from Georgia is ready to proceed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 97) granting a pension to Ida B. Linthicum;
A bill (H. R. 122) for the relief of Julia A. Darrell;

A bill (H. R. 7936) to restore to the public domain a part of the Uintah Valley Indian reservation, in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the resolution is before the Senate, and the Senator from Georgia will proceed.

TAX REFORM.

The taxation of luxuries presents no features of hardship; but the necessaries of life used and consumed by all the people, the duty upon which adds to the cost of living in every home, should be greatly cheapened—President Cleveland.

Mr. COLQUITT Mr. President, Mr. Cleveland in his message has powerfully condensed the issue before the country into two self-evident truisms:

First. That taxation should be limited in amount to the sum necessary for the economical administration of government:

Second. That in effecting the reduction, the taxes should be taken from the necessaries of life rather than from luxuries and superfluities.

These two plain propositions commend themselves, upon the mere statement of them, to the common sense of mankind. It is wonderful that any party, or any person of any party, should dispute them. It is only possible to controvert them by translating them into other less intelligible forms, and darkening counsel by words.

It would seem that any representative of the people would say to the tax-payers, with unusual satisfaction, "It is my agreeable duty to inform you that the Government can do better with less money;" and again, as a further easement, "that the reduction can be made on needful articles of daily use, such as salt, iron, clothing, etc., leaving taxes only on such articles as you can spare consistently with both your own and the public interest, say, chiefly on whisky and tobacco."

RECEPTION OF THE MESSAGE.

The message has made a profound impression at home and abroad, and has been received with a hearty and outspoken indorsement by the wise friends of the country. Perhaps no such document ever attracted wider attention in time of peace, or awakened more patriotic interest and enthusiasm. It is frank and bold, just and honest. It is, moreover, replete with clear insight and practical wisdom. Its positions need no demonstration; they appeal at once to the head and to the heart of the country. They involve no niceties, and require no education to understand them, but are as plain as the axioms of Euclid.

It is fortunate that these issues are so plain, in view of their great importance. Mr. Cleveland has unified and clarified them, and has condensed them all into two big, plain issues. I may say, really, into one—tax reform. To this one matter of tax reform the President confined his entire message. He would not distract attention from this supreme point by introducing any other matters trivial in comparison with this.

Was not this the best possible emphasis to the one duty of the hour? For this judicious exclusiveness, however, fault is found with the message; but in so confining it the President has rendered a splendid service to the country.

The Constitution provides that the President "shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

The President gives us such information—that is, of the existence of a large annual surplus, and its continued existence after repeated efforts to correct the evil. He then goes on to give the measures necessary and expedient, in his judgment, for its correction, namely, to limit taxation to the necessities of government economically administered, including all obligations already incurred; and to do this by reducing the taxes on the articles most necessary to the comfort and welfare of the people. Thus is tax reform made the one order of the day, and the question is fairly before Congress and the country.

The President recommends that no surplus be raised by taxation. Some of our public men differ with the President on this subject. To the tax-payers they say: "If you will just continue to raise the money we will contrive to spend it." It must be admitted that the surplus is larger by virtue of the economy of the Administration; they argue that proper extravagance would have reduced it.

This is the Republican form of opposition to the wise policy of the Administration. Possibly they think a spirited foreign policy might consume the surplus, and even render higher taxes necessary. The opposition of a small minority of the Democratic party is of like character. Wonderful enough is it that the Republican party should take this ground of opposition, but it passes wonder that any man calling himself a Democrat should oppose this most Democratic policy; oppose it even at the risk of dividing the party on so plain an issue. They go with the Republicans in preferring, if taxes must be reduced, to take them off from the unnecessaries of life, rather than the necessaries.

Plain as are these issues on the slightest inspection, yet far plainer do they become upon study and reflection. Like all truths, they grow upon the student. The supposed arguments on the opposite side need only to be considered to intensify conviction of the correctness of the President's views and of their vital and unspeakable importance. The country has heard the best of those arguments from the Achilleses and the Goliaths of the opposition, and the policy of the Administration has been unquestionably strengthened by the very efforts to discountenance and overthrow it. As I proceed it will be easy to see how admirably the issues have been selected, and how they stand unscathed and all the better for the assault made upon them and the unsparing tests to which they are subjected.

To true Democrats, both the objectors and the objections are arguments in their favor. The wise policy of Mr. Cleveland admits of demonstration as strong as is possible in moral reasoning; and the immense benefit to the country to be derived from it is a just subject for national rejoicing and congratulation.

I shall proceed to discuss—

First. The surplus, what it is, and the evils it brings on the country;

Second. The tariff, the worst tax of all, in its present form;

Third. The internal revenue, the least objectionable of all; and Fourth. The duty of the Democratic party towards the Administration and the country.

Each discussion will strengthen the obvious view that the surplus should be removed, and that this should be done by reducing the most burdensome taxes, retaining the least oppressive. Never did I advocate a cause which more fully commanded my profound convictions of right and duty.

THE SURPLUS.

In discussing the surplus, I shall consider first its amount, which is so great that illustrations are needed to enable us to grasp it; and then its effects, direct and indirect, on Government and society, operating as a corruption fund—a great carcass for the ravening vultures which prey on society. I shall compare Federal extravagance in taxation—a legacy left to this Administration—with State economy; and finally under this head I will show the enormous actual expenditure on which this surplus is accumulated, and its cost to the people; the part that does and the part that does not appear on the face of official reports.

FACTS AS TO THE SURPLUS.

The President's message shows that on the close of the fiscal year, June 30, for the years mentioned, the surplus was as follows:

1885	$17,859,735.84
1886	49,405,545.20
1887	55,567,849.54
1888 (estimated)	66,182,214.72

Such is the surplus for separate years, such its enormous annual growth—Pelion upon Ossa, Ossa upon Pelion—so that, despite of a strain upon the powers of Government to apply it, purchasing bonds at enormous premiums, some at 24 per cent., the estimated aggregate at the close of the present fiscal year was $140,000,000. Later information places it at $155,000,000.

It is wrong in policy and unjust in principle to collect from the people this enormous excess, because it is unnecessary, even to extravagant government. This one plain point is all that is essential to my argument. Who rises to say that unnecessary taxation is not unjust taxation? Not only unnecessary and unjust, but it is also dangerous. In its direct and immediate consequences it has already almost sufficed to cause a panic, and the Government has been constrained to exercise doubtful powers to avert great financial distress. But that is but a small incident, a mere symptom of the evil consequences.

The estimated surplus at the close of the present fiscal year being more than $150,000,000, it is difficult to grasp the full force and meaning of these figures. This mere surplus above what is needed would build three State capitols in every State in the Union as magnificent as that now being constructed in my own State and leave untouched a large surplus still. It would support all the State and Territorial governments for two years, and still leave a surplus. It is much more than twice the entire cost of the Federal Government for any year before the war. I may give further illustrations hereafter, for the mind is slow to conceive such enormous sums.

To show how present receipts compare with the past, I quote from a pamphlet, entitled "Federal Taxation," by Samuel Barnett, esq., of Washington, Ga. He is a gentleman of high character, of unquestioned ability, of wide information and thorough accuracy. I may, as occasion may demand, quote from the same source without further acknowledgment—not always in exact words but giving the sense.

The average annual receipts of the United States Government for successive decades were as follows:

Decade closing	Average year's receipts.
1800	$5,000,000
1810	12,000,000
1820 (war period)	17,200,000
1830	19,100,000
1840	21,300,000
1850 (Mexican war period)	21,700,000
1860	53,100,000
1870 (war period; greenbacks, $237,900,000	178,300,000
1880 (greenbacks, $291,600,000)	286,300,000
1888 (eight years)	365,000,000

The above figures do not include postal revenue, which is included in the statistics of all the great powers.

Including this the mere increase from $280,000,000 in 1878 to $445,000,000 in 1882 was $165,000,000—a fearful leap—an average of $41,000,000 increase a year for four years, in a time of profound peace.

It is surprising to observe in this comparison that in the decade ending in 1880 the revenues greatly exceeded those of the war decade.

The mere excess of the taxes of 1882 over those of 1878, an interval of four years, is fully two and a half times greater than the entire taxes of any year before the war, although the taxes of 1878 were immense. The receipts of the two years 1882 and 1883 exceeded the total receipts of the Government for the first half century of its existence—two years compared with fifty.

One administration of four years with taxes like those of 1882 would receive more than the whole ante-bellum Government of the Union lasting for a period of seventy years.

These are not conjectural estimates; they are the official figures of actual receipts, with which the officers of the Government have charged themselves, year after year, and which have been reported to Congress and published in the documents printed and circulated for the information of the people. There are other matters of importance on which we are left to conjecture, but this is the result of accurate and official calculation.

In view of these startling facts is it not time that we should pause in this career of mad extravagance? Is it not strange that even the heat and competition of party strife should tempt us to think more of party supremacy than of the real interest of the people and the legitimate objects of Government?

We are now in condition to see the enormity of the surplus, a sum added to and piled upon expenses already most extraordinary when seen in the clear light of all past experience. Observe the comparative rate of taxation at different periods, and we have an average for the decade before the war, ending in 1860, of $53,000,000. During the next decade, flagrante bello, the average rises to $178,000,000 gold value. Surely, the war being over, the next decade will show a huge decline; but not so; it rises to $286,000,000, the mere increase being $108,000,000, double the ante-bellum tax. Well, at least we shall see a decline the following decade. Instead of a decline, however, we reach $365,000,000 as the average annual tax for eight years of the present decade, the annual average exceeding the preceding by $79,000,000, despite reduced interest by previous reductions of the debt.

Take the old rate of expenses; add the new war rate; add the new waste rate (waste exceeding war); add interest and sinking fund and payments outside of that, and premiums on these payments; add pensions and new pensions; add river and harbor bills; and high and dry above all these expenditures we find one hundred and fifty millions of surplus. And still monopoly is insatiate, and like the daughters of the horse-leech cries, "Give, give!"

Is not this a curious time for raising a surplus? Is there any parallel for it in history? One would think that it would strain the people enough to meet the interest, the sinking fund, and the pensions. Would it not seem that to meet the absolutely necessary expenses would be a great strain—would satisfy everybody? It would seem to be enough to satisfy an ostrich, a cormorant, a monopolist, a protected industry.

Meanwhile the States are poor and stinted, so that the generous taxing power proposes to come to the rescue with Federal donations. My own State half starves her governor, kills her judges with overwork and poor pay, and spreads the cost of her State capitol over six years, an expense which would be met by one day's income of the Federal Government. This necessity for stint and parsimony to relieve the people of the burdens of taxation applies to other States as well as my own.

I quote again from the same author another illustration:

But have we really, as citizens, such a deep interest in Federal taxes? Are they really so important and considerable?

Yes. They are wasteful and oppressive beyond your highest thought. The facts of Federal taxation almost transcend belief.

The most sober and measured statement of them is startling. If Missouri pays an average tax, her Federal quota exceeds all the State and Territorial taxes combined of the twelve States and eight Territories which lie beyond the Mississippi River.

By the census of 1880 the population of the United States was, in round numbers, 50,000,000, composed of about 10,000,000 families.

The aggregate cost of all the State and Territorial governments was $52,000,000. So the State governments cost about $1 per head ($1.04), or $5.20 per family.

The county governments cost not quite $70,000,000—being about $1.40 per head, or $7 per family.

Observe, now, the comparative cost of the Federal Government. Its receipts are not numbered in tens of millions but in hundreds, being about $400,000,000 per annum—that is, about $8 per head or $40 per family.

Thus the Federal Government costs over three times as much as all the State and county and Territorial governments put together. It costs nearly eight times as much as the aggregate of all the State and Territorial governments combined.

To make good our assertion as to comparative taxes in Missouri:

The population of Missouri is 2,168,380, and its Federal taxes, averaging nearly $8 per head, about $17,000,000.

The following table exhibits the State and Territorial taxes of the continental region beyond the Mississippi River:

TABLE OF STATE TAXES.

Minnesota	$726,000
Iowa	827,000
Missouri	2,125,000
Arkansas	715,000
Louisiana	1,771,000
Texas	2,198,000
Nebraska	355,000
Kansas	883,000
Colorado	372,000
Nevada	161,000
Oregon	464,000
California	3,215,000
Twelve States	13,803,000
Eight Territories	620,000
Twenty States and Territories	14,423,000
Federal tax of Missouri	17,000,000

Excess of the Federal tax of Missouri over the State and Territorial taxes of the whole trans-Mississippi, $2,577,000.

How is it on this side of the Mississippi River? There are twenty-six States and the District of Columbia. The Federal tax of New York exceeds the combined State taxes of them all. The Federal tax of New York, with $5,000,000 people, is about $40,000,000. The aggregate State taxes (including the District of Columbia) on this side of the river are about $37,600,000. This would leave New York a margin of profit of $2,400,000.

Therefore the two States of New York and Missouri could make a profitable trade with the United States on these terms: Remit our Federal taxes and we will run all the State and Territorial governments of the Union. They would realize nearly five millions of annual profits by the bargain.

Yet we all, East and West, North and South, waste our time over petty details of home expenditures, and neglect the weighter matters of giant Federal taxes. We are catching mice when bigger game should engage us—wolves and tigers.

The above estimates were based on the receipts of 1882, which, including postal receipts, exceeded $440,000,000—nearly $9 per capita.

And yet, in the face of all these facts, there are those who would transcend these enormous drains of government and continue to raise a surplus. I know not how to express my astonishment at such fatuity.

I have thus far dwelt only on the first proposition of President Cleveland, that unnecessary taxation, under any circumstances, is unjust, inexpedient, and iniquitous. But when already burdened by the expenses of war, with its manifold incidents, the injustice of such taxation becomes more flagrant, and its imposition monstrous and indefensible.

THE TARIFF.

The next proposition is that taxes should be removed off the necessaries of life rather than from its superfluities. This proposition would seem to be too plain, direct, and honest to admit of successful contradiction. It is indeed a truism which does not need argument.

The two terms, "tariff," "internal revenue," sound at first equally harmless. Each is but a particular form of tax; but the operation of the two taxes is widely different. Of the various broad distinctions between them, one of the most important is emphasized by the fact that the tariff is a tax on necessaries—the internal revenue a tax on superfluities. Both taxes are indirect; so that by shaping expenditures they may to some extent be avoided. But of all taxes the tariff is the most unavoidable—the internal revenue most easily avoided.

I shall attempt to show the effect of a high tariff in the interruption of exchange, exchange being the leading object of all production, and the chief instrument of civilization; its effect on production which it diminishes in amount and makes more costly; on distribution, which it renders false and unjust, diverting the fruits of labor from the true owner; and its effect on wages, prices, and expenses, and especially on monopolies under the specious name of protection. This important and practical question is worth all the attention we can bestow upon it, not for this hour only but for the session. If we settle it correctly, our work will be worth that of the last twenty years of legislation. It will save to the people added years of waste and loss and hardship. If we fail to settle it, we will have accomplished no results of permanent value, and will have missed a great opportunity which we are pledged to improve.

The tariff is a list of taxes upon articles imported into this country in exchange for articles exported by us to other countries. It is a tax on trade between people. My neighbor and I trade as suits us. This is to our mutual benefit. But my country obstructs trade with my friendly neighbor country by heavy taxes on imports, to our mutual hurt.

The imports of this country for the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1887, were	$692,000,000
Of which were free of duty	232,000,000
Leaving dutiable	460,000,000
Duties collected	218,000,000

This shows an average tax of more than 47 per cent. The tariff is levied on thirteen leading schedules, embracing more than four thousand articles.

Of course a great system is necessary for the collection of these duties, involving custom-houses and custom-house officers, revenue-cutters, inspectors, searches and seizures, forfeitures, and the like. The process of collection involves the right of search of men and women, who are presumed guilty, and required to prove their innocence, not by oath, but by exposure of their trunks, boxes, and their very persons. The system is highly complex and unintelligible, hard to understand, and difficult to escape by shaping expenditure to avoid it. The higher the rates of duty the more contrary is it to sound principles of taxation and political economy. It deviates more and more from the true ends of taxation till it becomes antagonistic to the chief objects of government—the maintenance of justice and equity.

There is a dim but false idea afloat in some minds that somehow the importer, the middle man, or the foreign manufacturer pays the tax. By tracing the transaction the mistake is revealed. The duty is, in the first place, paid to the custom-house officer by the importer. The importer adds the duty to the price with his profits on both. He sells at the increased price, including the profit on prime cost and duty to the retailer, and he sells to the consumer at a price including his profit on the entire cost. Out of the pockets of the consumers comes, at last, the uttermost farthing.

In the State tax the tax-collector pays into the State treasury, but the citizen pays him first. The money does not come out of the collector's pocket. In Federal taxation the importer pays into the Treasury and collects afterwards. All the taxes, at last, are paid by the citizen, not by the agents of Government. All these instrumentalities are mere conduits between the tax-payer and the Government. The tax-payers do not understand the operation. In State taxes they understand it all—they see and pay the tax-gatherer and take a receipt. In Federal taxation they do not know who collects, how much he collects, when, how, or for what purpose. They are as ignorant as if they had no interest in the results, so little do the people know of the direct operation of the tariff.

As to free trade, whether desirable or undesirable, whether a boon or a curse, there is no one—either friend or foe—who is likely to live to see it. A moderate revenue tariff is the utmost in the direction of free trade that any living Senator or Representative will ever see. There is no reason whatever for real or affected alarm. We shall be fortunate if we live to see the tariff reduced to a strict revenue basis. Besides, in the reduction pains will be taken to avoid sudden or harsh changes, working even temporary hardships. Our dangers for years to come lie entirely on the other side—from Scylla, not from Charybdis. We shall take off too little, not too much.

OF THE NATURAL COURSE OF INDUSTRY.

The differences of soil, climate, and production are endless, and the diversity of human faculties is without limit. Our wants are also full of variety. Each man out of all this variety chooses his own vocation—the range of choice being widest here in America. At an early stage of civilization the division of labor began, and instead of working directly for the supply of his own wants, each man in a civilized country pursues his own bent, makes what he can make to the best advantage and exchanges the fruits of his labor with others. Exchanges increase as men become skilled, and people and nations also soon learn to exchange. Commerce springs up, and the field of supply and demand becomes as broad as the world. Under this natural course all things work best and yield maximum results when exchange is free. Production is greatest and distribution is most equal when unhindered by artificial restriction. There is more employment and at better wages; prices are lower, while the scale of expense is diminished; monopoly does not hinder competition; combination is scarcely possible; waste reaches its minimum, production its maximum, distribution its fairest form; government is limited to its legitimate functions, and protection is of rights, not of monopoly. Natural selection takes the place of government selection, and this is better; for each man knows his own wants and interests better than the government.

Early in human development the change takes place by which no man works for the exact want which he wishes to satisfy. He devotes himself to one or a few articles of supply, and exchanges with other men for the articles they produce. The same principle applies in trade between nations. Each man, each people, produces almost solely with reference to exchange, and the race is the measure of wants and the world the means of supply.

The old adage "One man's gain is another's loss" is a vile and pernicious falsehood. In every perfectly fair, free exchange both parties to it are benefited. A gets what suits him best, and B what suits him best. If no one hinders they will swap, simply because it is the true interest of both to swap. The same is true with respect to nations. Each can make some things better than other nations can, and it is to the interest of both to exchange.

Our range of choice is enormous, and 3,000 miles of sea protect us. Reaching from the tropics to the region of furs—from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with the great Mississippi Valley—with lumber, coal, iron, water-power, steam, we have the most ample resources of any people on earth. Our people are vigorous, and inventive—full of variety and enterprise, versatile, intelligent, and watchful. The first discovery of a new enterprise or mine in Oregon or California is read the next morning in Maine and Georgia, in Texas and Iowa. With such a country, peopled by such a race, the building up of unnatural industries here by artificial means is an impeachment of Providence. The main object of an honest Government is impartiality between sections, classes, and interests, and to secure to each citizen the fruit of his labor. The object of the bad citizen, the bad neighbor, the bad government, is to transfer the product of one to another without an honest equivalent. Their practice, if not their language, says: Yours the labor, mine the fruit; you work, I enjoy; you produce, I consume.

The desirable thing for humanity is not to increase labor (for labor in itself is not desirable), but to increase the rewards of labor and keep them in the right hands. In the order of Providence it so happens that certain necessary evils give employment to certain classes in averting or ameliorating them. For instance, a pestilence gives employment to doctors and nurses. It would be a monstrous crime in individuals to encourage such evils instead of working to ameliorate them. The crime would be yet more monstrous if done by the Government, the common agent of all.

Suppose a marsh near a city threatens a pestilence. Suppose a petition to allow the pestilence to go on, signed by all the doctors, nurses, undertakers, grave-diggers, and others, alleging that sickness gives employment to them and praying for "protection;" also a petition by others alleging that the sickness of many relieves those who are not sick of competition, and praying for "protection"—in a word, claiming that sickness is a public and private blessing, a private blessing to petitioners and a public blessing because petitioners are members of the public. Let, now, the builders pray for a conflagration, and show how it will give them employment and benefit the community. Let the lawyers pray for a panic and a carnival of crime to increase their civil and criminal practice—ending, as usual, with the form, "and your petitioners will ever pray." Let the wreckers on the coast pray for a storm, and, if the Almighty does not grant it, pray Government to set out false lights and beacons. Let a family picture be drawn of the wrecker's wife and children begging for bread if no storm shall come. In these illustrations we have a picture of the petitions and arguments of the protectionists. They beg to be helped in their particular industries, in which their supposed interests are opposed to the general interests of society and the duty of government.

Government is asked to perpetuate the evils it was intended to avert because these evils give somebody employment. In the course of time they would all die off and not need employment, as dead men have no wants to be supplied. Between pestilence, conflagration, crime, and want, in the enjoyment of which they have been "protected," society will have perished, or else men have come to their senses.

A paternal government is the necessary and logical sequence of their pleas, if their pleas be granted. Concerning the view that the duties of government are paternal, I commend the language of Macaulay:

> It is a doctrine I shall never favor till its advocates can show us some government which loves its subjects as a father loves his children, and which is as superior in intelligence to its subjects as a father to a child.

Mr. Beecher, in his sententious way, says:

> A paternal government is an infernal government. Put a crown on its head and it becomes a czar.

There is but one pater patriæ who is also pater mundi, and he gives us Nature as the breast from which to draw richly and not impoverish him.

Paternal government proceeds to mismatch industries. Wiser than the laws of nature, it sets the carpenter to doing the blacksmith's work, the shoemaker to masonry, the doctor to practicing law, sends the lawyer to the plow and the preacher to type-setting. Government comes in to induce Massachusetts to raise oranges and Florida cranberries, Illinois to plant cotton and Georgia hemp. Its first lesson is to convert all the grown men into babies, dependent on government and never to be weaned.

Nearly all human labor, as I have said, is in order to exchange. Except for this purpose we can not work to advantage by proper division of labor. The right to exchange is fully as important as the right to produce.

The law of national prosperity in trade is not independence, but interdependence. Independence of the conditions of exchange is the state of the savage only, while dependence is characteristic of the highest state of civilization and prosperity.

The idea that it is necessary to our independence as a nation that we make no exchanges with other nations is chimerical. Positive independence in nations is not more attainable than in individuals. The system of relation and dependence is the universal law of nature. It is seen throughout all social and domestic life, and it pervades all callings and conditions. To say that the United States, to be independent, should make everything and consume nothing made by others, is as foolish as to say that a man is not independent because he does not make his own boots or butcher his own meats. We think a man is independent when he has money to buy what he wishes. The same principle applies to nations. We make cotton in the South for export, and I do not feel any sense of humiliation or dependence because other countries want our cotton for clothing and send us gold or goods for it. Wheat is made in the West for export, and I do not think the people of the West are dependent because other people beyond the sea wish to indulge their appetite for bread and send them money to pay for it. In the ordinations of Providence there must exist a mutual relative dependence between nations as well as between individuals. "This mutual dependence is the true source of a great portion of the improvements which exalt the human character and contribute to human refinements and enjoyments. In the history of nations it will be seen that almost every nation is in a savage state which excludes itself from commercial intercourse with other nations."

Production is hindered by mismatching industries among men and nations. The natural course yields maximum results. Misguided by tariff and bounties, we waste the rich bounty of nature. It takes no great penetration to see and appreciate this obvious truth. False distribution is aided by this interference of Government. Already bad enough under the natural law that "to him that hath shall be given and he shall have more abundance," government steps in and helps "him that hath." If government does not help him fast enough, he has the power to push it forward in the work. It is the strong who get the advantage in the rush and scramble for government favors. With conditions artificially made worse, then come strikes and riots, insomuch that new strikes meet our eyes daily in the morning papers, mainly the results of markets restricted both as to supply and demand.

EFFECT ON WAGES.

The effect of these three great and grave errors on wages is disastrous in many ways. There is a great waste of labor, less is made, and that goes into wrong hands. The more the monopolists get the stronger are they and the more eager to get still more. Of this the times give abundant proof.

Government gets the tax; who gets the tribute? Not the many, but the favored few. The tribute goes to the employer, not the employés. The latter are not partners. The tribute goes into profits—not into wages. It is absorbed by the partners—not by the laborers, and this suggestion answers the whole question of wages. The employer does not consult with his employés about markets—about where to sell and where to buy. He does not enter into any partnership contract with them. When he engages them he buys labor just as he buys material—for so much—with no reference to the price of anything but labor, regulated by supply and demand. It is said employers are able to pay more by reason of protection. This is no doubt true, but the main reason why they are able to do so is found in the fact that they do not do it. They usually pay less for the same article, whether of labor or goods. They are strong enough to exact special favors and privileges from railroads even, much more from tradesmen and private citizens, and they have never yet been too considerate to assert their uttermost advantage.

Sharp and shrewd, they are always ready with their sponge to absorb every advantage. If domestic competition reduces prices, wages share the reduction. The monopolists have the law varied and conform to it till another change is made. They are shifty and managing; and in the scramble they are the tall and the powerful who get it all. By concentrating wealth more and more into fewer hands, protection inspires combinations among employers and so lowers wages. In the competition between profits and wages, combination is possible and is practiced to lower wages, to restrict production, and to throw laborers out of employment. Now and then co-operative societies interest labor in profits, but this is the exception. The general tendency is just the reverse—isolating the employers from the employed, so that they do not meet face to face and are entirely ignorant of any common bond of sympathy. Under the influence of protection the relation becomes one of slavery, with all the hardships of that relation and none of its ameliorations. The reduced number of employers learn to combine, and the stronger of these have various ways of dealing with each other, to which such terms as "freezing out" are applied. The big fish swallow the little ones. Instead of common interests, they are rival interests. Yet the employés are made to believe they are common, and that they receive the largest share of every special privilege.

It is enough to make one despair of his race when he sees the hypocrisy and hollow pretense of the lordly monopolist who has been made rich by the toils and sweat and tribute of others. He would pose before the country as a philanthropist; he subsidizes the press; he employs stump orators, he lobbies Congress and Legislatures; he addresses conventions with loud professions that he does it all for the sake of the laboring man. Demagogues take up the cry and make the welkin ring with iteration and reiteration that it is only for "wages," "wages," "wages" for the poor that special privileges are asked. Is it not singular that with all this effort and sympathy and Government aid the laboring classes are still poor, weary, and distressed?

The work they have done is here, but the abundant fruits of their labor have passed into the golden tankards of the capitalist, whose mouth has been filled with loud futilities about their protection. No wonder there are strikes and bitter contentions. The point has been reached when reaction is sure to come. Driven to desperation by disappointed hopes, the toiling masses demand redress and make their "proclamation:" "Here we are, lords and masters! We have supported you in all luxury; we have submitted to your guidance; we have voted your ballots; we have sustained your high tariff; we have borne your burdens; we have stood between you and danger; but what have ye done for us in return? We were told it was all for our good, but we find it was for your pleasure. Our toil and sweat have been given to add to the riches and to feed the vanity and luxury of the few."

An unknown but true and simple-hearted poet of the people expresses the same sentiment in verse:

Down in the vale where the mavis sings,
And the brook is turning an old-time wheel,
From morning till night the anvil rings,
Where John o' the Smithy is forging steel.

My lord rides out at the castle gate,
My lady is grand in bower and hall,
With men and maidens to cringe and wait,
But John o' the Smithy must pay for all.

I would evoke no hatred or jealousy of the rich. It is every man's right and duty to amass wealth by honest means. He is not to be reproached if he has the skill and energy to acquire money, nor is he the worse because he relishes and enjoys the comforts and embellishments of life. But the pretender deserves to be scorned who pleads for special privileges under pretense of benefiting the poor while he alone pockets the money as the beneficiary.

PRICES.

If protection fails to raise prices it fails of its direct object and aim, which is to raise prices by protecting the employer against competition, the natural agent in cheapening goods. The claims of protection are violently inconsistent. It claims both to raise wages and to lower prices. It tells the operative that it raises wages and tells the public that it lowers prices. It explains to the operative that by increasing prices (competition being removed) it is able to pay higher wages. Its effect in lowering prices it makes a poor case of, at last appealing to domestic competition, and so it claims the votes of both. Pools, trusts, and associations choke down domestic competition, while Government chokes off foreign competition.

It is true that prices in this age of progress are low, and will constantly grow lower by reason of numerous labor-saving inventions, and increased use of the power of nature—steam, electricity, etc. This reduction in prices is falsely attributed by the monopolists (those dear friends of low prices) to the very tariff which clogs and hinders reduction, as if the brakes increased the speed of a train. The true comparison is not between then and now, but between here and there—between prices in the United States and prices abroad; and between prices with low tariff and high. Quinine illustrates the latter difference conspicuously. Everybody knows about that. Steel rails have fallen even in America by virtue of the Bessemer process and numerous improvements. The credit of this fall is given to the tariff. As well attribute the fall in the price of cotton since the invention of the cotton-gin to the policy of protection. Compare the prices of steel rails in the United States with those of England. Last year the average price here was $37.13 per ton. English rails could have been laid down here at an average of $23.60 per ton. Yet the monopolists say we ought to be content, that prices are low, and that the trifle of $13.50 extra a ton is insignificant. And so is it with a thousand other articles.

In discussing the effect of the tariff on prices we observe that a tariff may be nugatory, prohibitory, or operative. It is nugatory when the duties are laid on articles in the production of which we surpass all other countries, such as wheat and cotton. Such duties would yield neither revenue nor protection. Nobody cares to have a nugatory tariff.

It is prohibitory when the duties are so high as to prevent importations and to compel all such commodities to be made at home, no matter at what disadvantage. When the tariff is prohibitory Government gets nothing, and all excess above fair profits goes into tribute. This is the form the monopolists prefer.

It is operative in full when the duties are laid on such articles as are neither grown nor manufactured in this country; and it is operative in part when we compete with other countries, as on sugar and rice. These yield much revenue, with comparatively little tribute.

The effect of the tariff in causing waste is readily shown by illustration. Suppose Great Britain can sell an article in the United States for $1, while our manufacturers can not sell it for less than $1.40. Now, let Government put on a duty of 50 per cent. Then the British manufacturer can not sell here for less than $1.50. The American may sell at $1.49 and control the whole market. The American manufacturer then makes 9 cents, while the American consumer loses 49 cents. In this transaction 9 cents of the increase goes to the manufacturer and 40 to waste.

Again, the natural industry which the American manufacturer quit in order to enter the artificial one will have been left unattended to, and the price of those products will rise. Thus protection raises the whole range of prices. There is, so to speak, a long conduit through which protection carries payments. Part goes by the way of taxes, part as tribute, part into higher prices in the neglected natural industries, and part to mere waste.

EMPLOYMENT.

It seems to be taken for granted by "protection" that one man must needs find employment for another man, else the second man will go unemployed. But why should A have to look after B rather than B after A? The protection doctrine is that A must not only find employment for himself but for B also, while B has not even to find it for himself. All this works only evil. It is the interest of society that every tub stand on its own bottom. There is more and better employment in this way than in any other. When society undertakes this business it displaces more employment and better employment than it replaces.

To illustrate, take the case of railroad iron, which is illustrated in a careful article in the Forum by Mr. SPRINGER:

Three of the largest steel-rail mills in the United States on the 1st of January, 1887, reduced the wages of their employés 10 per cent., and three other steel mills reduced wages in November; while several other large steel-rail companies have suspended operations and closed their works for an indefinite period. This is doubtless for the purpose of influencing the action of Congress, by citing these acts as evidence of the desperate condition of the steel-rail business, and of the necessity for increasing instead of reducing the duties on steel rails. In 1880, the census year, the whole number of Bessemer and open-hearth steel works was 36; the capital invested was $20,975,999; the hands employed were 10,834; the wages paid were $4,930,349; the total product of all kinds was 983,039 tons; and the total value of all products was $55,505,210. About two-thirds of the product of these establishments was steel rails. This would indicate that 7,224 hands were engaged during that year in the manufacture of steels rails, and that $3,286,900 was paid in wages, or $455 to each employé. Excluding Sundays, and assuming that each person was employed every working day in the year, his wages would amount to $1.45 a day. This was in 1880. The output of steel rails in 1887 was about two and one-half times greater than in 1880. This would require about 18,060 employés, and at the same rate of wages paid in 1880 would increase the sum paid for wages in 1887 to $8,217,250. The increased price paid by the consumers of steel rails in 1887, by reason of the tariff of $17 a ton on imported rails, was, as before stated, $27,731,602, or nearly three and one-half times more than all the wages paid to those employed in their manufacture. I concede that the cost of production of steel rails in this country exceeds that in Europe. Hence I do not claim that that sum has been realized in net profits. The people have paid that excess, however. But the manufacturers of steel rails in this country have, during the past year, realized at least $10,000,000 over and above a fair profit upon the capital invested. Still the owners of our steel works are not happy. They are reducing the wages of their employés, and, in some instances, shutting down their mills, thus depriving their men, in the midst of winter, of all means of support. The Iron and Steel Association and the tariff leagues will, however, generously furnish the discharged employés with protective-tariff tracts to read during their idle hours, and the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia will urge upon Congress to grant them the further boon of free whisky and free tobacco.

I have before me a copy of a recent publication of the American Iron and Steel Association, which states that one of the objects of that association is the free distribution of protective-tariff literature. This publication asserts that "millions of well-printed tracts have, since 1857, been sent into almost every corner of the Union, the most going where they were the most needed." In 1866, a year in which Congressional elections took place, nearly four hundred thousand of such tracts were distributed freely over the country. It is further stated that arrangements are now making to distribute a million tracts of this kind in the near future. Such publications cost large sums of money, which are freely contributed by the association. Nor is it their purpose simply to promote the interests of the iron and steel trade, but "to educate our whole people to believe in protection as a principle which is forever to be defended." It taxes human credulity to the utmost limit to believe that those engaged in manufacturing iron and steel would exhibit such zeal in the distribution of tracts and spend such large sums of money to educate the public mind in favor of that "principle of protection" which, when carried into effect, will reduce the prices of their manufactures below the prices paid in the world's market for similar products of "the pauper labor of Europe." One example may illustrate the absurdity of this position. The tariff on steel rails is now $17 a ton, or 84.33 per cent. ad valorem. At the beginning of last year, that is during the months of February and March, 1887, the price of steel rails in Pennsylvania was $39.50 a ton. The last quotation of steel rails in Liverpool was £4 4*s.* 5*d.* per ton, or $21.10, estimating the pound at $5. The duty was $17 a ton, and the charge for freight between Liverpool and New York, and for insurance, would be $2.50 per ton, making the price of English rails in New York, duty and freight and insurance paid, $40.60 per ton. Had it not been for the tariff on steel rails, the English rails could have been sold in New York during the past year at $23.60 a ton. With the tariff the price was $39.50 last spring, but has been somewhat lower since that time, with an average of $37.13 a ton during the year—an increase in price of $13.53 a ton on all rails produced in this country. The total production for the year 1886 was 1,749,888 tons. The official statistics of 1887, now published, show that the production of steel rails in this country for the year 1887 was 2,049,638 tons. The consumers, therefore, of steel rails for the year 1887 have paid $27,731,602 more for them than they would have paid had it not been for the protective tariff. Notwithstanding this immense bounty exacted by the manufacturers of steel rails in this country in one year, it is announced that $27,000,000 would pay for about 1,000 miles of road, perhaps 1,350 miles. This, with what enterprise can almost do, would probably add 5,000 miles of road. Given $27,000,000 as a start, probably 5,000 miles would be built. Consider the employment, native and substituted, hurting nobody, that this would give in building, track-laying, bridge building, and equipping 1,200 miles of railroad. It would give employment to miners, track-raisers, train hands, conductors, and engineers. It would open up new sections and develop them, giving them cheapened transportation. This is but an item out of many, all rightly and honestly distributed, too.

Meanwhile what duty does Government get? It costs the consumers $27,000,000 increase, but Government gets less than one-tenth of that sum, namely, 85 per cent., or less than $3,000,000 of imported rails. Here is the distribution of it:

Citizens pay	$27,000,000
Manufacturers get	10,000,000
Government gets	2,600,000
Waste	11,000,000

I say "waste," for the laborers get only the average wages of like workmen. Labor would be better paid and more steadily occupied by natural industries, with world-wide markets of supply and demand.

With the limitations imposed by high tariff, it is estimated that existing cotton factories can produce—working on full time for six months of the year—enough for a year's supply of the domestic market. Artificial industries are ruinously confined to that market.

Another illustration of the effect of restricting markets is found in the employment furnished in English cotton, woolen, and jute mills as compared with those of the United States.

England with 36,000,000 people employs over twice as many operatives in these industries as the United States with 62,000,000 inhabitants. In cotton manufacturing England employs over twice as many operatives as we do, though we sell her 80 per cent. of the cotton and 50 per cent. of the food consumed by the operatives. This shows the effect on the agricultural interest so falsely vaunted by the protectionists. The consequence is that the farmer, being deprived of a large part of the home-artisan consumption, to which he is entitled by the laws of nature and of the gracious God who has blessed him above all other men of that class in the world—being deprived of this, I repeat, he is driven to the expense of shipping the bulk of his surplus product to foreign artisans, and of course he has to pay the cost of its transportation, 3,000 to 10,000 miles, and the trade charges of a dozen middle-men and insurance companies, besides the railroad and steamships.

England and China illustrate the free and the restrictive methods in their effects. In parts of China men will work for 6¼ cents a day and find themselves. Their government has been working for centuries to give them a home market.

The thing needed is not more work, but more pay. The man who chooses to work for nothing and find himself will always have plenty to do. The world will not run out of employment. Wants grow faster than supply, and as civilization advances the trouble will be in keeping up with the growing wants of humanity.

Thus far I have spoken chiefly of the direct consequences of a high tariff. Its indirect or incidental effects are worse than those which are direct. Ours is what is called a protective tariff—tremendously so—beyond all previous history. The cost to the people takes two forms quite unequal, both in principle and amount. It levies both a tax and a tribute. A tax, if just, is a sum paid by a citizen to government for and in consideration of government's service in the administration of justice and the maintenance of law and order.

A tribute is a sum paid by some citizens to other citizens, but not in consideration of services rendered in return.

The tax and tribute are alike in this, that they are both enforced by the authority of government. Of the tribute so paid there is no return n any form to the pockets it left. Says Andrew Jackson:

Who will receive it? It will certainly not be returned to those who paid and who have most need of it and are honestly entitled to it.

Of the extent of this tribute I shall speak hereafter. Of the principle of it need I to speak to a people to whom the sentiments "Millions for defense, not a cent for tribute," has become sacred? Now, the millions are for tribute.

Before discussing its cost, however, I wish to say something concerning the general operation of protection. It will be well to patiently consider a subject which has been intentionally befogged. The whole system of protective tariff is based upon fundamentally false assumption. It is mediæval, not modern. It carries us back to the Middle Ages and destroys all lights of experience.

[From the San Francisco Examiner.]

A long course of soaking in high protectionist doctrines produces a curious state of mind in the victim. He comes finally to regard taxation as a boon in itself, apart altogether from any use that may be made of it as a means to other ends. It takes some time to reduce a normal human intelligence to this condition. First comes the idea of taxation for revenue, limited to the actual necessities of the Government, economically administered. Next creeps in the Hamiltonian idea of taxation for revenue, with incidental and temporary protection to infant industries. Then follow the Clay theory of taxation jointly for revenue and protection, the Greeley principle of taxation for protection, with incidental revenue, the William D. Kelley scheme of taxation, solely for protection, and finally the San Francisco Chronicle's dizzy climax of taxation for its own sake, with no benefit, direct or indirect, present or prospective, to any human being.

Even Roscher, the most able exponent of the protective system of Germany, where it is held in common with despotic views generally—even Roscher assigns as the conditions on which alone protection can be defended that there shall be no surplus taxation, that the government should not be a democracy, but that it should have a nobility as the paternal element, that it should be moderate in amount and dispensed only to infant industries, and that there should be want of knowledge, or variety, and of the power of adaptation on the part of the people. And he especially excepts America as a country to which protection is not applicable:

In Russia it may be necessary to strengthen the still weak bourgeoise, and to awake numberless slumbering forces of opportunities by encouragement of their use by State measures. There the absolute ruler is called upon and accustomed to educate his people. In the United States, on the other hand, there is no nobility; the whole nation belongs to the class of burghers, and are the cultivators of the land, are raisers of corn, cattle traders, land speculators, etc. Considering the universal activity and laborious energy of the people, it is to be expected that every really profitable opportunity will be turned to account in such a country without any suggestion or assistance from the State. Since a democracy can not, properly speaking, educate the people, the protective duties of the United States are, for the most part, only attempts by one part of the people, who claim to be the whole, to prey upon the other part.

Again:

In the case of all highly civilized nations the presumption is in favor of freedom of trade, both at home and abroad, and in such nations the demand for a protective system must be looked upon as a symptom of disease.

All rational education keeps in view the subsequent independence of the people. Protection is only justified on the assumption that it may be gradually dispensed with. Only such interests are to be favored as will soon be independent. This, he says, is self-evident; yet it is persistently ignored in practice. Protection helps not the skilled managers, but the acceptable suppliants, now doubly dangerous as competitors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Georgia will suspend until the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is now in order, 2 o'clock having arrived, being the bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. GRAY. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business be informally laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Georgia will proceed on the resolution to refer the President's message.

FACTS OF PROTECTION.

Mr. COLQUITT. And now I pass from the discussion of principles established by human experience to the discussion of the facts of protection, which in practice almost surpass belief. On the cost of protection I can not do better than use a statement from the Million:

In default of information by Government efforts have been made by experts to make approximate calculations of the cost of protection. The average of such estimates is about $750,000,000 per annum. Some estimates exceed a billion; few are so low as half a billion dollars a year. Perhaps the most elaborate and one of the most careful and detailed estimates places the annual cost at $556,000,000. We shall assume this as approximately correct, though far below the average calculation.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, the dutiable imports were $433,000,000 and the duties about $194,500,000, or nearly 45 per cent. of such imports.

The domestic production of dutiable goods exceeds the imports five or six times. We know that the manufacturers of dutiable goods, like all other men, get as high prices for their goods as they can. If the duty be added to the price, as some contend, then the figures would stand thus:

Domestic product of dutiable goods	$2,440,000,000
Enhanced price at 45 per cent., nearly	1,100,000,000

Suppose the enhanced price, however, to be half the duty. This would give the aggregate of $550,000,000.

In this calculation, however, as in most of the calculations, an important element has been omitted, namely: waste—the waste produced by misdirecting industry from natural channels into artificial. Few calculations lay proper stress on this very important element of price. In the cost of "protection" must be counted not only the enhanced cost of the artificial products forced, but also of the natural products neglected, the price of which is thereby enhanced. In a word, protection is a two-edged sword, working disastrously on the whole range of prices.

Can any one doubt that a half billion a year thrown in to derange the natural channels of industry will affect that industry? Can any one doubt that a duty of about 45 per cent.—equal to three or four profits—will draw people into artificial industries, to the detriment of the natural?

Suppose the effect on dutiable goods to be half the duty, say $550,000,000, and the enhanced price on the neglected goods to be half as great as the above, say $275,000,000, we should have as the cost of protection an aggregate of $825,000,000.

But for our present purposes we shall omit the element of waste and take for comparison one of the lowest estimates of the enhanced price of dutiable goods only.

On this view compare the cost of "incidental protection" with other big things:

Cost of all the State and Territorial governments combined	$52,000,000
Ten times their combined cost	520,000,000
Cost of protection	550,000,000

Excess of cost of protection over ten times the combined cost of all the State and Territorial governments $30,000,000 per annum. Take another view:

Cost of the Federal Government	$400,000,000
Cost of all the State governments	52,000,000
Cost of all the county governments	70,000,000
Total	522,000,000
Cost of protection	550,000,000
Leaving	28,000,000

as the excess of the cost of protection over the cost of all the governments of the Union, the States, the Territories, and the counties.

One other view only. The tariff yielded—

To Government	$194,500,000
To protection	550,000,000
Excess	355,500,000

Protection gets $355,000,000 more than Government gets. Double what the tariff yields, and we have $389,000,000. And so protection gets $161,000,000 more than twice as much as Government.

Such are the facts of protection on a scale almost beyond conception. Taxes are based on estimates and tested by experience; protection is based on ignorance and never tested at all. If there be knowledge we should confess what the cost is. We present the remarkable spectacle of a people overburdened with tax and tribute—the former estimated, the latter limitless and uncomputed, yet believed by the best judges to exceed all other taxes put together.

We should have a table showing in tabulated form all the details and items, the relative consumption of dutiable goods, imported and domestic, the prices abroad and at home, and the difference of cost. The biggest Department of the Government might well be devoted to information on the subject of the costliest work of government—the protection of monopoly. What if it should cost more than the census, more than the collection of taxes? But it would cost little. The tribute is vastly more important than the taxes. It is levied year by year. An estimate will be worth its cost a hundred-fold, as it may save in one year the cost of a hundred.

Such an estimate, in considerable detail, for the year 1882, was made by Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER and published in the North American Review of June, 1883. Fulfilling the neglected duty of government, with intelligent and patriotic interest, he employed an expert for some months in compiling the information embodied in the table hereto appended, which he derived from the reports of the census, the statistical bureau, etc., and from the best financial sources, with correspondence and personal interviews. The table shows the tribute paid by class to class. It is a work of great labor and value. The total tribute, according to his estimate, was $556,000,000; the increased price was about 22 per cent., which is about half the average rate of duty. This does not include waste, enhanced price of neglected natural industries, or other losses occasioned by an unnatural system. Higher estimates are strongly indorsed by Mr. Tilden, the Democratic platform, Mr. Herring, Mr. Medill, and various political economists. I have taken the lowest estimate as a basis.

We ought either to estimate the cost or stop the policy of protection. First efforts may be but approximations, but we should start to learn facts; and unless we can ascertain them we should quit a policy not based on a knowledge of facts. We should stop the stream which does not empty into the Treasury. A revenue tariff does, and so does the whole internal revenue.

I have but hinted at the cost. I have heretofore spoken of large figures, large burdens, but here is the chief, the mountain, the world on the shoulders of Atlas. It is more than all taxes, Federal, State, and county put together, including tariff taxes that reach the Government, internal revenue and all.

The elements of increased cost are such as these: increased cost of the articles actually produced; increased cost of those articles from which the natural course of industry has been diverted; mere waste; huge lobby influence in favor of extravagance in taxation, and in the cost of government itself; corruption in all its forms, well-fed and hearty. The action is going on as if verified by experience, and growing worse after twenty years of peace. It is a masterpiece of imposition. How is it distributed among the objects of government, legitimate and illegitimate? "It is," in the language of Sidney Smith, "a lucubration of monopolists at the expense of our arms, legs, and backs."

It is claimed by the protectionists that some compensation is made—indeed, adequate and more than adequate compensation, especially to the poor, by their theory that protection increases wages. A more false and pernicious plea was never urged to cover injustice. The real effect is very well explained by a lumber dealer, Mr. Blanchard, of Chicago:

"I am high tariff on lumber, but low tariff on copper, iron, wool, cotton, leather, glass, etc. I will tell you why. I own timber lands and sell stumpage; besides, I operate largely myself, and this tariff puts money in my pocket. I get $2 per 1,000 more for my stumpage, and $2 per 1,000 more for my boards. I have just sold 5,000,000 feet of lumber. Now, $2 a thousand on 5,000,000 is just $10,000. That is the difference to me between high tariff and free lumber. I am high tariff on lumber, I am. This blessed tariff, they tell us, is all for the benefit of the American laborer. What do you suppose I did with the $10,000? Divide it among my workmen? Not a bit of it. I put it right in this calf-skin wallet, I did. Of all my workmen, I am the only protected American laborer! Wages depend on supply and demand, my friends, and not on taxes. When you see two men after one boss, wages are low; but when you see two bosses after one man, wages are high; and that is the whole of it—the theory, principle, and practice."

The estimates of the cost of government in the United States do not embrace the postal service, as they do in all other countries. The postal receipts for 1887 were $48,837,609. This is one of the best models of taxation in every respect. We know what we pay, we know what we get, and we get full value. There is nothing outside.

To understand the operation of the present tariff it is necessary to compare it with former tariffs and the tariff of other countries. Comparison is the great means of knowledge and improvement. The average rate of duties on all imports in the first twenty-one years of the Republic was less than 20 per cent. During the war of 1812 existing rates were doubled as a war measure. "The tariff of abominations," which shook the Republic to its foundations, somewhat exceeded our present tariff. The Walker tariff of 1846, the beginning of a great period of prosperity, averaged 23.20 per cent. duty on all imports and 26.22 on dutiable imports. The tariff of 1857 made the average duty 15.56 per cent. on all goods, on dutiable goods 20.12 per cent. There it will be seen that the tariff of Alexander Hamilton was only about one-third of our present tariff. In 1795 it was 11.21 per cent. on all goods imported.

In the comparison of our tariff with those of other nations the result is surprising. I append a valuable table, compiled from official estimates by Col. W. F. Switzler, of the Bureau of Statistics:

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, March 7, 1888.

From this table it will be seen that the tariff of the United States, 31.54, is more than double that of Russia, which is 15.45; it exceeds the combined tariff of Russia and Italy, the sum of these being less than 30 per cent.; it exceeds the combined tariffs of England, France, Germany, and Austria-Hungary, which together amount to 30.42 per cent.

Says Mr. Spofford, in the American Almanac, referring to German statistics: "In 1879 heavy additions were made to the tariff on imported goods, and Germany has returned to an extreme protective system." The extreme protection afforded by Germany is found in a tariff rate of 9.02 per cent. Three times the German tariff, 27.06 per cent., lacks 4.48 of the present tariff of the United States, is less than the tariff proposed in the Mills bill, and would be denounced as "free trade" by the monopolists! What would they think of a return to the extreme protection rate of Germany, 9.02 per cent.?

And yet the United States is the most favored nation on earth in the abundance and variety of its natural resources. It stands least in need of protection, and its tariff is more than double the highest tariff of any great power.

Even this table, startling as it is, falls far short of conveying a just idea of the enormity of our tariff; for the objections increase not in a simple but in a geometrical ratio; like gravity as the square of the distance.

Besides, ours is a protective tariff aiming at tribute, while the tariff of most countries aims at revenue. The two aims are antagonistic. In Great Britain tariff taxes are laid on the articles not made at home; and if any tariff is laid on those made at home an excise is laid on the latter. Thus all industries and occupations stand equal before the law.

THE RESULTS OF HIGH-TARIFF TAXATION.

The results accord with principle. I have had compiled statistics which show the progress of the country for the decade ending in 1860, a period of comparatively low tariff, and the progress for the decade ending in 1880. This comparison is thorough and exhaustive, embracing wealth in the aggregate—agriculture, commerce, manufactures, shipping, railroads, etc.

HIGHEST PROSPERITY UNDER LOW TARIFF.

The friends of a high protective tariff make frequent boast of the marvelous growth of this great Republic. They dwell with patriotic fervor upon the decided advancement which has been made in the last quarter of a century. They ask us to note the increase in our population, the development of our manufacturing industries, the expansion of our foreign commerce, the rise in the wages of our working men and women, the extension of our railroad mileage, the enlarged acreage devoted to agriculture, the additional value of farms, products, implements, machinery, and live-stock, and the general improvement induced by the present valuation of the entire property of the country, all of which they assume is chargeable primarily and directly to the present 47 per cent. tariff.

They do not admit that the wonderful success of our people is due in the least to our cosmopolitan population, made up of the most energetic, intelligent, and capable representatives of every civilized race, or to our republican form of Government, which permits every man to make the best use of his time and opportunities, or to the absence of a standing army, which in so many lands forces the young men most capable of improving their own condition to become idlers and consumers and a burden upon all the other workers in the community, or to the good fortune of living in a sparsely settled country, where, in spite of the misappropriation of millions and millions of acres, there are yet lands for the landless, and the honest settler may still stake out a farm for himself. It is the tariff and tariff alone which is to be credited, if we believe these boasters, with everything and charged with nothing.

That our improvement has been great I admit; that it is as extensive as it ought to be, or would have been under a low revenue tariff, I deny; and I base my denial not only on sound theories, but upon the results of a comparison between our condition and progress from 1850 to 1860, a low-tariff period, and from 1860 to 1880, a high-tariff period. The rate of duty on dutiable articles in 1850 (when I speak of the year I mean always the fiscal or census year ending June 30) was 27.14 per cent. It was less especially after the lower tariff of 1857 until 1860, when the rate was 19.67 per cent. In 1861 the tax was 18.84 per cent., but it jumped the next year under the new tariff to 36.20 per cent., rose to 48.63 per cent. in 1868, and was 43.48 per cent. in 1880.

POPULATION.

Our population in 1850 was 23,191,876. In 1860 it was 31,443,321—an increase of 35.57 per cent. in the decade. From 1860 to 1870 the population grew to 38,558,371, a gain of 22.62 per cent., and from 1870 to 1880 to 50,155,783, an addition of 30.07 per cent. It may be asserted that the war is responsible for the slight gain from 1860 to 1870; but even admitting it, there is no reason why the increase from 1870 to 1880 should not have been as great, proportionately, as from 1850 to 1860. Had it been—had the gain from 1870 to 1880 been 35.57 per cent. as it was between 1850 and 1860—the population in 1880 would have been 52,273,583, or over 2,000,000 more than it actually was.

The general belief that the population according to the census of 1870 was too small makes the discrepancy still greater. Is our protective tariff responsible for this?

RAILROADS.

There were 9,021 miles of railroad in the United States in 1850. The mileage in 1860 was 30,635, an increase of 239.6 per cent. during the low-tariff period. In 1870 there was a mileage of 52,914, a gain of 72.72 per cent. These figures had increased to 93,349 in 1880, a gain of 76.41 per cent. In the twenty years of high tariff, from 1860 to 1880, there was a gain in mileage of 204.7 per cent. as against a gain of 239.6 per cent. in the ten years of low tariff from 1850 to 1860. How much the duty on iron and steel rails checked railroad building during two decades of high tariff may not be correctly estimated, but it is easy of conjecture.

REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.

The valuation of real and personal property in the United States in 1850 was $7,066,562,966. In 1860, after ten years of low tariff, it had risen to $12,055,053,118, a gain of 70.59 per cent. The total valuation in 1870 was $14,343,343,475 in greenback currency.

There is some dispute as to the precise amount to be taken off this valuation to make it available for purposes of comparison with 1880. A leading high-tariff paper in New York puts it at one-fifth, but as the premium on gold that year was only about 20 per cent. I prefer to take off one-sixth only, which makes the showing much better for protectionists. By this reduction the valuation in 1870 should have been $11,945,286,229 on the present specie basis. It increased in 1880 to $16,902,993,543, a gain of 41.5 per cent. As slave property is not included in the returns for 1850 and 1860 and does not appear, of course, in 1870 or 1880, the higher percentage of gain in the low-tariff decade is a legitimate fact to be commented on. In so doing it is difficult to see how the high tariff from 1870 to 1880 was in any way a beneficent factor.

MANUFACTURERS.

The capital employed in manufacturing establishments in 1850 was $533,245,351. During ten years of low tariff, up to 1860, it had increased to $1,009,855,715, a gain of 89.37 per cent. In 1880 this capital was $2,790,272,606, an increase of 176.34 per cent. in twenty years of high tariff, manufacturing, especially for army supplies, having been stimulated during and on account of the war. Here the high tariff would seem to hold its own; but appearances are often, as in this case, deceptive. In 1870, five years after the close of the war, the capital in manufactures was $2,118,208,769 in greenbacks, or $1,765,173,974 in specie. The ratio of increase on this specie capital in the ten high-tariff years from 1870 to 1880 was 58 per cent., against 89.37 per cent. in the ten low-tariff years from 1850 to 1860. Had the percentage of increase from 1870 to 1880 been as large as from 1850 to 1860, the capital invested in manufacturing in 1880 would have been $550,000,000 more than it was, or $3,342,692,837.

PRODUCTS OF MANUFACTURES.

In the matter of products the same phenomena appear. In 1850 the total value was $1,019,106,616. In 1860 it was $1,885,861,676, a gain of 85 per cent. In 1880, after twenty years of high tariff, the product was valued at $5,369,579,191, a gain of 184.7 per cent. since 1860. The same causes which enlarged manufacturing capital in 1861–'65 increased manufactured products; but compare 1870 with 1880. The product of 1870 was valued at $4,232,325,442 in greenbacks, or $2,526,937,868 in specie. If the gain from 1870 to 1880 had been 85 per cent., as it was from 1850 to 1860, the product of 1880 would have been worth $6,524,835,056, or $1,155,255,865 in excess of the actual value. Where do the benefits of the high tariff appear?

LABOR.

But the wage-earner has not fared even so well as the manufacturer. The average yearly wage per hand of employés in manufacturing establishments in 1850 was $247. In 1860 it had gone to $288, a gain of 16.6 per cent. In 1880 the average wage was $346, an increase of only 20 per cent. in twenty years. Had there been a gain of 16.6 per cent. from 1860 to 1870 and from 1870 to 1880 under a high tariff, as there was from 1850 to 1860 under a low tariff, the average wage in 1880 would have been $392 instead of $346. Wages continue to increase, taking one decade with another, under a low tariff or under a high tariff. The improvements in machinery, constantly, going on enable the wage-earner to get more money, while the employer pays out less money for the same product. In 1850 the average individual product was worth $1,064 and the employé received $247, or 23.2 per cent. In 1860 the product was valued at $1,438, and the worker received 20 per cent. of it, or $288. In 1870, on a greenback valuation, which, however, does not interfere with the comparison, the product was worth $2,060 and the employé was paid $328, or 18.4 per cent. In 1880 labor was even cheaper, the average individual yearly product being valued at $1,962 and the workingman receiving the average yearly wage of $346, or only 17.7 per cent. of the product, as against 18.4 per cent. in 1870, 20 per cent. in 1860, and 23.2 per cent. in 1850. Wages were higher in money in 1880 than in 1850, but they were not so high in the former year as they ought to have been or would have been were it not for the high tariff.

The increased cost of raw materials may be mentioned in passing. In 1850 and 1860, low-tariff years, only 54.5 and 54.8 per cent. respectively of the value of manufactured products went to pay for material. In the high-tariff year of 1870, and in the other high-tariff year of 1880, 58.8 and 63.2 per cent. respectively of the manufacturer's products were expended for raw materials, thus cutting into the wages of labor on the one hand and the profits of capital on the other. Of all the ill winds that blow nobody any good, the present high tariff is worthy of special commendation.

COMMERCE.

Much has been said as to the increase in our foreign commerce, and very little as to the commodities which have gone to make up that increase. We exported in 1860 manufactured goods worth $45,658,873, which was 14.43 per cent. of the total export. In 1870 we exported $47,921,154 worth (in greenbacks) of manufactured goods, but they were only 10.53 per cent. of the total export. In 1880 the value of manufactured goods exported had risen to $79,510,447; but they were only 9.65 per cent. of the total export. In 1870, after ten years of high tariff we exported less manufactured goods, reducing values to specie, than in 1860. After ten more years of high tariff we exported less proportionately than in 1860.

On the other hand, our exports of agricultural products were 81.14 per cent. of our total export in 1860, fell to 79.34 per cent. in 1870, while in 1880 we sent abroad merchandise of this character worth the enormous sum of $685,961,091, which was 83.25 per cent. of our total export. After twenty years of high tariff, we exported, in 1880, over 2 per cent. more of agricultural products than in 1860, chiefly breadstuffs and cotton.

MERCHANDISE.

The total imports and exports of merchandise in 1850 were valued at $317,885,252, and in 1860 at $687,192,176, a gain of 116.17 per cent. In the twenty years of high tariff succeeding, the total value increased to $1,503,593,404, a gain of 118.8 per cent. during two decades of high tariff as against a gain of 116.17 per cent. in one decade of low tariff.

Great Britain took 52.50 per cent. of our exports in 1860 and 51.65 per cent. last year, over half being products of agriculture, which she carried from our ports to Liverpool in her own ships and bought in open market where all the world competes. Instead of paying us directly, she loads her vessels with her manufactured goods and pays sundry little bills which we owe here and there, such as $45,000,000 balance due Brazil for coffee, and $39,000,000 on account of our indebtedness to Cuba for sugar. She thus earns freights, profits, and commissions which we ought to and would make with our own ships and on our own goods were our people relieved from the shackles of the present burdensome tariff.

NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICA.

Our high-tariff friends believe and are on the right side in insisting that we should do as much business as possible with the countries of North America and South America; but our advance, instead of being forward, may be said to have been decidedly backward. In 1860 our exports to North American countries were 14.26 per cent. of our total export; in 1887 they were only 9.83 per cent. In 1860 our exports to South America were 4.64 per cent. of our total export; in 1887 they were 4.29 per cent., a slight loss proportionately, while in the Spanish West Indies the percentage dropped from 4.13 in 1860 to 1.60 in 1887. Surely there is nothing here creditable to the workings of a high tariff. The question is not how such a policy has benefited our trade on this continent, but how long under its operation it will be before we cease having any trade at all with our immediate neighbors.

WHO OWN THE VESSELS.

Let us see who own the vessels which have transported the enormous quantities of merchandise in the last thirty-seven years exported from and imported into this country. From 1850 to 1860, the tonnage of vessels entered at seaports of the United States from foreign countries was as follows: American, 29,404,994 tons, or 67 per cent.; foreign, 14,392,560 tons, or 33 per cent. From 1860 to 1870, American, 22,647,333 tons, or 46 per cent.; foreign, 26,451,441 tons, or 54 per cent. From 1870 to 1880, American, 28,518,537 tons, or 28 per cent.; foreign, 74,465,573 tons, or 72 per cent., and from 1880 to and including 1887 (seven years), American, 19,884,855 tons, or 21 per cent.; foreign, 73,897,204 tons, or 79 per cent. In 1860, under a low tariff, 67 per cent. of our foreign trade was carried on in American bottoms, and but 33 per cent. in foreign bottoms. In 1887, after twenty-six years of high tariff, foreign bottoms did on an average 79 per cent. of our carrying trade abroad, while only 21 per cent. engaged the attention of American bottoms.

TONNAGE.

The tonnage of sail and steam vessels built in the United States from 1850 to 1860 amounted to 3,666,026 tons; from 1860 to 1870, 300,881 tons; from 1870 to 1880, 2,538,004 tons; and from 1880 to 1887, 1,458,629 tons.

The tonnage of sail and steam vessels of the United States engaged in foreign trade was 1,439,694 tons in 1850. After ten years of low tariff it rose in 1860 to 2,379,396 tons. In 1870 it declined to 1,448,846 tons; in 1880 to 1,314,402 tons, and in 1887 to 989,412 tons—the smallest amount of American tonnage in foreign trade since 1846, when it was 943,307 tons. After twenty-six years of high tariff the tonnage of American vessels in foreign trade was only 46,105 tons more than it had been forty-one years before.

In 1860, out of a total import and export, coin and bullion included, valued at $762,288,550, American vessels carried enough to amount in value to $507,247,757; in 1887, with a total export and import, coin and bullion included, valued at $1,504,671,462, American vessels carried only $222,476,047, worth about 44 per cent. of the value carried in 1860, when the total value of exports and imports was about half that of 1887. Less than thirty years of high protection has almost cleared the seas of American vessels in foreign trade. Before they are entirely swept away the American people are likely to see to it that all obstacles in the shape of tariff and navigation laws are done away with.

THE FARMER.

But, after all, the farmer, who sells his surplus crop in the cheapest and buys what he can not do without in the dearest market has the best right to complain. In 1850 there were 293,560,614 acres of improved and unimproved land in farms; in 1860 there were 407,212,538 acres, an increase of 113,651,924, or 38.71 per cent.; in 1870 there were a very few more acres than in 1860; in 1880 there were 536,081,835 acres, an increase of 128,869,279 acres since 1860, or 31.64 per cent. The actual increase in acreage in twenty years of high tariff was only 15,000,000 acres in excess of the actual increase during ten years of low tariff, and the proportionate increase was 7 per cent. less during the twenty years than the ten years.

In 1850 the value of farms was $3,271,575,426; in 1860 it was $6,645,045,007, a gain of $3,373,469,581, or 103.11 per cent. in ten years of low tariff. From 1860 to 1880, during twenty years of high tariff, the value rose to $10,197,096,776, an increase of $3,552,051,769, a very little more actually in twenty years than in the preceding ten years, and only about half as much proportionately, the gain being 53.45 per cent. in the twenty years of high tariff as against 103.11 per cent. in the ten years of low tariff.

In 1850 the value of live-stock on farms was $544,180,516. In 1860 it was $1,089,329,915, an increase of $545,149,399, or 100 per cent. In 1880, after twenty years of high tariff, it had risen to $1,500,464,609, a gain of $411,134,694, which was $134,000,000 less increase in twenty years of high tariff than ten years of low tariff, and only 37.74 per cent. of increase in the twenty years, after a gain of 100 per cent. in the preceding ten years.

The value of farming implements and machinery in 1850 was $151,587,638, and in 1860, at the end of the low-tariff period, $246,118,141, an increase of $94,530,503, or 62.36 per cent. From 1860 to 1880 the increase was $160,401,914, or 65.17 per cent., the total value being $406,520,055. In 1870 the specie value of implements and machinery was $280,732,034. If the gain from 1870 to 1880 had been 62.36 per cent., as it was from 1850 to 1860, the value in 1880 would have been nearly $50,000,000 greater, or, to be exact, $455,796,514.

In the ten years of low tariff ending with 1860 the acreage in farms had increased 113,651,924 acres, and farm values $3,373,469,581. Most of the farmers had a clear title to their land, a mortgage being a rare exception. In the twenty years of high tariff ending with 1880 farm acreage had increased 128,869,297 acres, and farm values $3,552,051,796. A much greater number of farmers on a much larger acreage made a very little more gain in wealth in twenty years than did a smaller number of farmers on a less acreage in ten years, and even this comparatively small increase is only apparent and not real. A correspondent of the New York Times, basing his calculations upon Michigan records, estimates that farms in that State, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri are mortgaged to the enormous extent of $3,422,000,000. A very recent issue of the Farmers' Review, of Chicago, prints statements of correspondents from which it appeared that of counties reporting in Ohio, 23 per cent. of the farms are under mortgage; in Indiana, 26 per cent.; in Illinois, 27 per cent.; in Iowa, 44 per cent.; in Nebraska, 51 per cent.; in Wisconsin, 32 per cent.; in Michigan, 50 per cent.; in Kentucky, 23 per cent., and in Dakota, 59 per cent.

The depressing influence of farm mortgages is now felt in my own State as it never was before and I hope will never be again. Complete records are not at hand, but when ten States are reported to be mortgaged in an amount almost as large as the entire increase in farms values from 1860 to 1880, it is very safe to declare that while the farmers' gains in the ten low tariff years, from 1850 to 1860, went into their own pockets, the increase in farm values during the twenty years of high tariff, from 1860 to 1880, did not begin to be sufficient to satisfy the mortgages placed on farms during the latter period. In other words, the farmer worked for himself during the ten years of low tariff, and for the money-lender during twenty years of high tariff.

The present high tariff is a blight upon the country and all its interests—upon agriculture, upon commerce, upon manufactures, upon population, upon wealth, upon railroads which unite distant sections.

and upon the ships which ought to carry our products of agriculture and manufactures to the uttermost parts of the globe.

The comparisons which I have made are instructive, but the idea is not a new one. Mr. Calhoun, in a speech in the Senate on March 16, 1842, contrasted with much more force and clearness the years of high tariff, from 1824 to 1832, inclusive, with the succeeding years under the lower and compromise tariff, from 1832 to 1840, inclusive. Said the South Carolina Senator:

The aggregate amount of the value of the exports in the first series of years, from 1824 to 1833, the period when the protective policy was in its greatest vigor, was $469,198,564, making an average of $57,399,945 per annum thoughout the period; while the aggregate amount of value in the last, the period of reduction under the compromise, was $768,352,365, giving an average of $96,442,795, and making an aggregate gain in the period of reduction over that of protection of $299,174,791, and an average annual gain of $38,646,855, being rather more than 65 per cent. on the average of the former period; an increase without example in any former period of the history of our commerce. The vast increase has had a corresponding effect on our tonnage in the foreign and coasting trade. The aggregate amount of the foreign tonnage at the close of the first period was, in the foreign, 686,989, and in the coasting trade, 752,456 tons, making the aggregate 1,439,450 tons, against the last, in the foreign trade of 896,664, and the coasting, 1,280,999; making in the aggregate 2,180,763, and an increase during the period of reduction of duties over that of protection of 743,303 tons; while during the first there was an actual falling off in the tonnage.

In answer to an assumed objection that the gain from tariff reduction was confined to agriculture and was at the expense of manufacturing industries.

Mr. Calhoun went on to say of the latter:

The very opposite is the fact. So far from falling off, it is the very branch of our exports that has received the greatest impulse. The whole value of the exports of domestic manufactures during the period of high protective duties was about $43,180,755. So far from increasing, there was an actual falling off, comparing the last with the first year of the series, of $505,633. Now turn to the period of a reduction of duties and mark the contrast. Instead of falling off the exports increased to $65,917,018 during the period; and comparing the last year of the series with the last of that of high protective duties, the increase will be found to be $7,798,207, greater than the former year by nearly $3,000,000.

In Mr. Calhoun's time a low tariff succeeded a high tariff and the change was beneficial to all our interests. In our day low tariff was followed by a high tariff and in many instances there was a decline in industries and in no case was the increase so large proportionately under the high tariff as under the low tariff.

In drawing conclusions from the comparisons made by Mr. Calhoun nearly half a century ago, as well as from those which I have brought forward here to-day, appeal is made to no man's feelings, sympathies, or prejudice. No one is asked to indorse them because of any material advantage to State or section, and, on the other hand, it is not to be taken for granted that opposition will manifest itself from selfish motives alone. We ask nothing from protectionists, by way of admission or assumption, our reliance being upon the official figures printed by governmental authority and easily accessible to every citizen.

Tried by the only test known in the determination of such matters—the actual results of an experience with a high tariff and a low tariff as when Mr. Calhoun spoke, and then with a low tariff and a high tariff, as is the case now—the official figures show that a low-tariff policy is most favorable to the comfort and happiness of the people and the growth and prosperity of the country.

Under a low tariff our population has increased faster and our wealth has multiplied with much greater rapidity, the development of our manufacturing industries has been healthier and quicker, our foreign commerce has expanded in a considerably larger proportion, the gain in the wages of labor has been much more decided, and the percentage of increase in railroad mileage has never been approached since.

Last, but not least, of all, our farmers added to their acreage, their farm values, their products, their implements, their machinery, and their live-stock with a low tariff to an extent never reached with high tariff, while their farms, practically unincumbered under the former dispensation, are now shingled all over with mortgages under the latter.

Looking at the question candidly and impartially and from every standpoint, whether it be that of the wage-earner, farmer, and manufacturer, or of the merchant, ship-owner, and railroad builder, intelligent men of all opinions and occupations must be forced to admit the beneficent influences of a low tariff and the evil effects of a high tariff on all interests and sections of a common country. It will be seen that in all other particulars the rate of progress in the low-tariff period exceeded that in the high, except in the one particular of mortgages. The mortgages on farm lands show a vast increase during the second period. It must be admitted that a high tariff exerts a favorable influence upon mortgages. I suppose the recording clerks in the various States may consider themselves protected and their business increased by a high tariff.

The rate of progress in the second great period ought vastly to have exceeded that in the first, for the second period had the advantage of remarkable and unprecedented discoveries and inventions—laying hold of the powers of nature, and enabling one man to do the work of several. Of course it retained all the improvements of the preceding period.

The comparison thus far has been in the United States as a whole. It is equally favorable as to sections and individual States.

Comparison between valuation of real and personal property per capita by States, for the decades 1850–'60 and 1870–'80.

This table shows that in all the originally free States the ratio of increase was greater in the first period of low tariff than in the second of high tariff.

But we are told by the protectionists that, costly as the system is, the cost all comes back to us; but when, oh, when? I should like to trace it from the pockets it left to those which it reaches. I agree with Andrew Jackson, that it never returns to the right pockets. It certainly does not return to the farmers. In August, 1887, an interstate convention of the farmers of the ten cotton States was called in Atlanta. I have already given the general effect on agricultural prosperity in the preceding statistics. The effect upon the ten cotton States was equally, perhaps more, disastrous. Is this my mere opinion? Not so. It was the opinion of Governor Stephens. It was the opinion of the present Governor Gordon, who presided over a preliminary convention on the condition of agriculture in the cotton States, at which a committee of ten was appointed, one from each State, by the respective governors. The following is extracted from their report:

The agricultural land of Georgia was returned for taxation as follows: in 1860, $157,000,000; in 1886, $105,000,000; decrease, $52,000,000. That is to say, it would require an increase of 50 per cent. upon the present value of land to raise it to its value twenty-six years ago, after twenty-one years of peace.

But this only begins to show the deterioration in value. The number of acres of improved land was, in 1860, 26,500,000; in 1886, 30,500,000; increase, 4,000,000. That is, 30,000,000 acres of land in 1886 were worth 50 per cent. less than 26,000,000 in 1860.

Meanwhile the population has increased from 1,057,000 in 1860 to 1,700,000 in 1886; increase, 643,000. That is to say, 60 per cent. more people want land, yet it would require 50 per cent. increase to raise it to its old value. Consider the 50 per cent. in value, the 60 per cent. in population, and the 4,000,000 acres, and we see over 60 per cent. of depreciation.

To present the facts in another form, the value per acre of improved land in Georgia was, in 1860, $6; in 1886, below $3.50; decrease $2.50. Were the agricultural land divided out among the people, the value per head would have been, in 1860, $150; in 1883, $63; decrease, $87. The decrease would be one-third more than the present value. One hundred dollars' worth then would be but $42 now—a falling off of 58 per cent.

In the ten cotton States the value of agricultural land was, in 1860, $1,478,000,000; in 1880, $1,019,000,000; decrease, $459,000,000. It would require an addition of 45 per cent. to its value in 1880 to raise it to its value in 1860. Meanwhile the population of 1880 is 11,473,000; 1860, 7,515,000; increase, 3,958,000, or 53 per cent. The agricultural land divided out in 1880 would be but $90 per capita; in 1860, $183, or more than double. And this despite the giant strides of Texas, with large immigration and the territory of an empire.

Moreover, the agriculture is more heavily mortgaged than in former times. In one county in Georgia, of more than average prosperity, the records of deeds and mortgages filled per annum, in 1860, about 60 pages; 1880 to 1886, 183 pages. In Greene County: 1860, 30 pages; during the war, 50 pages; 1879 to 1882, 211 pages; 1882 to 1886, 270 pages. Yet before the war mortgages of slaves were included. The records, moreover, are mainly of mortgages, not of deeds of sale. In the Million, of February 19, 1887, there is an instructive statement of mortgages of Mississippi bottom lands.

The rate of increase in wealth would furnish additional light. In agricultural land: 1857 to 1860, three years, at $8,250,000 one year before the war exceeded ten years increase after it a year, $25,000,000; 1871 to 1886, fifteen years, at $666,666 a year, $10,000,000—gold value, counterbalanced partly by improved returns and by the principle of estimating value.

The political economists, Mill especially, taught and confirmed by history, concur in the view that recuperation after war may and should be rapid. We have not reached in twenty years the state we should have attained in five or seven years.

Your committee therefore conclude that the agriculture of the cotton States is in a depressed condition, and that such condition is so widespread, long-continued, and distressing as to demand the most serious consideration, and fully to justify this assemblage of the representatives of our agriculture. The suggestion and discovery of the causes of this depression and the proper remedies for the same are well worthy the profoundest effort of our wisest men.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The agricultural population in the United States is nearly half of the entire people; in Georgia it is about two-thirds. Protection scarcely even pretends to help this largest of all classes. Indeed, farming is not an industry in its dictionary. It professes to help the farmer, however, indirectly, by a home market for his produce. It takes away the foreign market.

The promised prosperity does not come. The children born just after the war are voters, yet where is the prosperity after a generation of high tariff? The time has come, but the prosperity has not.

It will be observed that this is not guess-work, but founded on the same statistics on which taxation is based. So much for the effect on agriculture.

Its principal advantages are claimed to accrue to the operatives engaged in manufactures. What becomes of the tribute? We might be content, perhaps, if it went to the poor and needy, though ourselves equally poor and needy. But not so. It is an enforced charity without the blessedness of charity—free and unconstrained. It is without grace in the giver or gratitude in the receiver. It is an enforced charity from the poor to the rich.

Now, we may understand what a protective tariff really is—a tariff for the direct promotion of monopoly to the amount of over half a billion per annum, with an incidental revenue of two hundred millions and a waste beyond human calculation. To call all this tribute and waste an incident of revenue is like calling a gun the incident of the ramrod, or a shoe an incident of its string! To use a still humbler but appropriate simile, protection is the tail that wags the dog of taxation.

MONOPOLY AND SOCIALISM.

These are our two great dangers. If Government will cease to protect monopoly it will already have guarded largely against the danger of socialism. Lord Bacon cautions us against the dangers of monopoly and says:

See that the treasure and moneys of a state be not gathered into a few hands, for otherwise a state may have a great stock and yet starve; and money is like muck, not good unless it be spread.

The effect of high tariff on the distribution of wealth is even more pernicious than upon its production. There are no official statistics, but the superior distribution in the low-tariff period, as compared with the present, is patent to every observing man. This is the age of millionaires and tramps.

I am in favor of real, honest, bona fide protection—protection against all wrong and injustice—even against the injustice, wrong and gross partiality now practiced in the sacred name of "protection." I would protect all honest industry against being plundered in the interest of a few wire-workers. I would protect the great hard-working mass of toiling people against the deceptions and traps of the bosses and managers. I would give the people an honest platform of honest principles. I would take the devil's hymn and make it serve God—the false protection of monopoly and make it the true protection of the citizen.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Since the conclusive showing by the President of the necessity for getting rid of the immense and growing surplus, it has been discovered that the internal-revenue taxes are intolerable burdens. It has also been discovered by some unknown species of political clairvoyance that Mr. Jefferson is exceedingly angry at their existence, and that all the other fathers of the Republic turn uneasily and unhappily in their graves.

It is announced with solemn and dramatic affectation of sincerity that they are undemocratic, and that they are odious. Some thick and thin partisans of another and far worse system of taxation have denounced them. They are charged with being barbarous methods which, in Russia, lead out to Siberia and to death in its frozen wilds.

But what is there in all this? Nothing but a subtle and inexcusable purpose to retard, if not altogether to prevent a reduction of the tariff taxes on the necessaries of life. This is the purpose and the end, with few exceptions, of all the wild assertion and cunning pretense with which the taxes on whisky and tobacco are arraigned before the bar of public opinion.

Aroused by the dangers to which a reduction of the surplus may expose monopolies and trusts, the partisans of high-tariff spoliation have suddenly waked up to the fact that the internal-revenue taxes are war taxes, in a sense which does not apply to contemporaneous tariff taxes on the necessaries of life.

At the bare mention of taxes on whisky and tobacco the cry of "war taxes" is raised, and night and day are made hideous with visions and howls of war, of bloodshed, of barbarism, of vandalism. But when you speak to them of other war taxes—of taxes on salt, on sugar, on rice, on coal, on iron, on clothing, on wool, on blankets, on farm tools—they are as gentle as sucking doves.

No respectable statesman of the country, of any party whatsoever, denies the advisability of excise taxes for meeting the emergencies which spring out of war. Does any such emergency now exist? The expenditures for the fiscal year on account of war pensions and interest on the war debt are estimated at $120,000,000. This would seem to constitute a full-grown emergency. The expenditures on account of pensions and interest on the war debt are obligations growing out of the war, and it would be manifestly inappropriate to meet them by tariff taxes on the necessaries of life, which we are taught to believe are peace taxes, pure and simple.

The internal tax upon spirits in 1865 was $2 per gallon. It has been reduced to 90 cents. When the war taxes upon the necessaries of life have been reduced a proportionate amount it will be time enough to commence the further reduction or repeal of the whisky tax.

NOT UNDEMOCRATIC.

It is further alleged that the internal-revenue taxes are undemocratic. A persistent and irrational effort is being made to array the people of the South against them on that ground. How is the claim sustained? By assertion, naked, bold, reckless—that, and nothing more. There are no facts to sustain it. There are no fair inferences to justify it. These taxes have been in force ever since the war. If it be true that they are in violation of Democratic principle, it is surely possible to find some authoritative utterance against their continuance by some convention of the party met to formulate its principles and to nominate its candidates. No such utterance can be found. No such declaration was made in either of the conventions of '68, or '72, or '76, or '80. No such declaration was embodied in the platform of 1884, on which the present Chief Magistrate was elected.

On the contrary, these taxes and the purposes for which they are collected were distinctly recognized, and the pledge was given to the country that the proceeds from them would be "sacredly devoted" to the relief of the people from the remaining burdens of the war, and to be made a fund for the payment of such pensions as Congress may from time to time grant. If these taxes be undemocratic, it is a little remarkable that not one of the five national Democratic conventions that have assembled since the war has put upon record any such declaration.

If they are undemocratic, our chosen and elected standard-bearer, Grover Cleveland, is not a fit representative of the Democracy. He says:

Our scheme of taxation, by means of which this needless surplus is taken from the people and put into the public Treasury, consists of a tariff or duty levied upon importations from abroad, and internal-revenue taxes levied upon the consumption of tobacco and spirituous and malt liquors. It must be conceded that none of the things subjected to internal-revenue taxation are, strictly speaking, necessaries; there appears to be no just complaint of this taxation by the consumers of these articles, and there seems to be nothing so well able to bear the burden without hardship to any portion of the people.

If they are undemocratic, the Secretary of the Treasury is a disloyal Democrat when he utters the following sentiments:

The chief cause for the prejudice against this tax seems to be that, as there was no such tax before the war for the Union, it is looked upon as a remainder of the measures adopted to raise money to carry on the war, and which ought not to be continued in time of peace, and as interfering in some way with the natural rights of mankind to grow grain and tobacco and manufacture therefrom spirits, cigars, snuff, and the various forms of merchantable tobacco. Of course, taxation of whisky and tobacco trespasses no more upon the natural rights of man than does the taxation of his clothing, of his bedding, of every implement which he uses in the cultivation of his grain and tobacco, and in the distillation or manufacture of the same. The burden of the one tax is direct, known, fixed; the whole of it goes into the Government's Treasury; the burden of the other is indirect and unknown, and only a portion of it comes into the Treasury. It reaches the farmer or distiller increased by the profit upon itself, which every merchant must take as the clothing or tools pass through his hands on their journey to them from the foreign or domestic manufacturer. Taxation there must be. The choice is between kinds of taxation. Each man can decide for himself, if he will examine the subject free from prejudice, which is the least burdensome for him, for his family, and for his neighbors, and which is in the end better for his whole country. That internal taxation of spirits and tobacco began during the war is not a reason why it should be done away with now, if it be in itself wise. So the fact that the rates of customs taxation were raised during the same war far higher than ever before in our history, and have been continued until now, ought not to determine the manner of their treatment; this should rather depend upon what is just and expedient at the present time. Neither passion, prejudice, nor sentimentality should have place in the consideration of questions of taxation.

But it is not well either to abolish or reduce internal-revenue taxation; it is a tax upon whisky, beer, and tobacco, things which are in very small measure necessary to the health or happiness of mankind; if they are necessary to any unfortunate man, they are far less necessary even to him than are a thousand other articles which the Government taxes. This tax is the least burdensome, the least unjust of all the taxes which Government lays or can lay upon the people; it should not be abolished, nor should it be reduced if, with due regard to the existing conditions of labor and capital, sufficient reduction can be made in the taxation of necessary articles which are in the daily use of all the people.

And now there is left only the revenue from customs taxation to be considered. Here is where the reduction should be made, and while reducing advantage should be taken of the opportunity to reform the abuses and inequalities of the tariff laws. Add to the free-list as many articles as possible. Reduce duties upon every dutiable article to the lowest point possible; but in ascertaining these possibilities the present situation of labor and business must always be kept in mind.

The motive of these attacks on the internal-revenue laws and the pretense that they are undemocratic is ably exposed by a leading journal of my State:

The Pennsylvania doctrine calls for the abolition of the tax on whisky and tobacco in order that the tariff levied for the benefit of the monopolies may be perpetuated. This sort of thing will do for Pennsylvania, but it won't do for the Democratic party.—Atlanta Constitution, October, 1883.

When you hear leading Democrats advocating the Pennsylvania protection platform of free whisky and tobacco, you may know the party is still in the woods.—Atlanta Constitution, October, 1883.

It is a great stretch of courtesy to call whisky and tobacco luxuries. They are evils, pure and simple, and the abolition of the tax now levied upon them would help nobody. And even if it did, the public sentiment of the country is not inclined to look with sympathy on a platform which includes free whisky. Free whisky is not a good thing for the Democratic party. People who can afford to buy whisky and tobacco at all can afford to pay a tax, and a very high one, for the privilege.—Atlanta Constitution, October, 1883.

MR. JEFFERSON'S LETTER.

Mr. Jefferson, it has been said, was opposed from principle to an excise tax on whisky. Whatever at one time or another may have been his views on that subject, at the ripe age of eighty years, in a letter to General Samuel Smith, he declared himself in favor of an increase in the whisky tax. Said he:

I shall be glad, too, if an additional tax of one-fourth of a dollar a gallon on whisky shall enable us to meet all our engagements with punctuality. Viewing that tax as an article in a system of excise, I was once glad to see it fall with the rest of the system, which I considered as prematurely and unnecessarily introduced. It was evident that our existing taxes were then equal to our existing debts. It was clearly foreseen also that the surplus from excise would only become aliment for useless officers, and would be swallowed in idleness by those whom it would withdraw from useful industry. Considering it only as a fiscal measure, this was right. But the prostration of body and mind which the cheapness of this liquor is spreading through the mass of our citizens now calls the attention of the legislator on a very different principle.

One of his important duties as a guardian of those who, from causes susceptible of precise definition, can not take care of themselves. Such are infants, maniacs, gamblers, drunkards. The last, as much as the maniac, requires restrictive measures to save him from the fatal infatuation under which he is destroying his health, his morals, his family, and his usefulness to society. One powerful obstacle to his ruinous self-indulgence would be a price beyond his competence. As a sanatory measure, therefore, it becomes one of duty in the public guardians.

These are Mr. Jefferson's views. He did not think they were undemocratic. He would not advocate a policy that would abolish the tax on whisky, dot the country all over with distilleries, reduce the price to a mere trifle, and fill the land with drunkenness, crime, and vagabondage.

MR. MADISON'S POSITION.

Mr. Madison, who may be considered not only the father of the Constitution, but of the fundamental principles upon which the Democratic party is founded, was in the First Congress, and voted for the whisky tax. Though he and Hamilton differed widely in regard to the principles of government, they concurred in using the taxing power to check the excessive consumption of ardent spirits. When Mr. Madison voted for the whisky tax, the average rate per cent. of tariff duties did not exceed 12 per cent. Rather than increase this rate on articles of necessity coming from abroad, he preferred to lay an excise tax on whisky and raise the required revenue from that source. What would he say now with a tariff rate of 47 per cent.?

Now, under the false cry that it is undemocratic, we are called upon to destroy a fiscal system which yields a vast revenue to the Government, which injures no interest, and which at the same time promotes public health and public morals.

THE BLIGHT OF FREE WHISKY.

In the light of the wise and sober utterances of the sage of Monticello, I declare that no greater wrong could be perpetrated on my section than to abolish the whisky tax. It would flood our States with cheap whisky, demoralize and brutalize our laboring class, and render worse than nugatory the labors of a quarter of a century in the interest of their advancement. It would be an outrage on all our people, but against the negro race it would rise to the proportions of a hideous and appalling crime.

A distillery upon every spring branch, a peck of corn bartered for a quart of whisky, a jug of the devil's swill in every cabin will convert every neighborhood into a pandemonium, and expose to danger the purity of every Christian household. Families would fly into the towns and cities and abandon the country to the orgies of sensual, drunken, debauched wretches.

It is a universally recognized principle in all civilized governments that luxuries and articles promotive of vice are especially fitting subjects of taxation. This principle is of wise and just application in all governments, but peculiarly so in those which depend for their glory, their greatness, and their perpetuity on the virtue and intelligence of their people.

It is impossible to deny honestly and logically the justness of the principle, or the fairness and propriety of its application to the taxes in question. Burdens upon vice are incentives to virtue. It is right to make vice and vicious tendencies pay dear for the privilege of existence. I am not for giving to whisky, so far as the permit of Government can give it, the unrestrained freedom of the country. Untaxed whisky will be cheap whisky. Cheap whisky will necessarily result in increased consumption. Increased consumption will be followed by increase in lawlessness and crime and degradation.

CHARGES OF CRUELTY AND OPPRESSION.

It is further charged that there is harshness, cruelty, and oppression in the execution of these laws. We are told of "Siberian exile" and "Russian despotism." Frightful and pathetic pictures are drawn of martyred men and citizens, who have been taken from the bosoms of their families, hurried through the forms of trial, and mercilessly condemned to exile and imprisonment a thousand miles from their homes. I was shocked and horrified at the thought that numbers of my own fellow-citizens of Georgia were pining away in the dungeons at Albany, N. Y., without the solace and sympathy of friends to alleviate their calamity. I sought for information. The record is before me. The imprisonments in Northern prisons for the past five years from the northern district of Georgia (there are none from the southern) have been as follows:

One for fraudulent accounts.
One for pensions frauds.
Two for perjury.
One for breaking into Government warehouse.
Nine for counterfeiting.
Ten for conspiracy.
Thirteen for violation of postal laws.
Three for violation of internal-revenue laws.

Mark it! Three victims of "Russian methods" from both the revenue districts of Georgia for the past five years! One would have thought from the passionate denunciations of the internal-revenue system that its officers had put out drag-nets and depopulated the mountain region of my State with a view to colonizing with suffering martyrs the alleged Siberia of the North.

Let us look to the record again. Three for violation of internal-revenue laws! Thirteen for violation of postal laws! Why do we not hear of "Siberian exile" and "Russian despotism" in connection with the postal laws? Why are they not denounced as odious, and the cry raised, "They must go; they must go." The answer is obvious. The retention of the postal laws is no barrier to the schemes of the monopolist—the repeal of the internal-revenue laws removes the chief obstacles to the preservation of a high tariff.

If objection is made to the internal-revenue laws because they are searching and inquisitorial, the same objection applies with equal force for the abolition of the custom and postal laws, all of which are enforced by similar methods and under similar pains and penalties.

If the laws are too rigid in themselves; if the processes under them are too harsh, let them be amended and modified. This can be done, if necessary, without affecting their objects or efficiency. During the present Congress numerous bills have been introduced which will remedy all the abuses which have been charged against the internal-revenue laws. But no modification, no change, however beneficent, will suit the high-tariff beneficiaries.

They demand the destruction at one blow of the entire taxes derived from the internal-revenue system. It is not hard to understand why they denounce the system as burdensome and undemocratic. It is easy to see why the system is decked out by them in barbarous trappings. The affectation of sympathy for the poor because of the tax on that which would degrade them would be touching if it were not transparent.

When Mary broke the alabaster box of precious ointment and poured its contents on the head of the Saviour, Judas was greatly outraged in his feelings at what he called the waste. He said that the ointment could have been sold for 300 pence and given to the poor. What cared he for the poor? Nothing. He carried the bag and wanted to finger the profits. People who carry high-tariff bags are seemingly as indignant as Judas was at disregard of the poor, which, they say, is manifested in the support of the internal-revenue taxes.

They are more concerned, as Judas was, about increasing the weight of the bags which they carry—bags which are to be filled with tribute money wrung from these same poor.

As to the inquisitorial character of these laws, I can not do better than quote the views of Judge William Reese, who, in a remarkable degree, deserves and possesses the confidence of the people of Georgia. Judge Reese says:

It is objected that the internal-revenue tax is inquisitorial, offensive, and tyrranical, to which we reply that it is not more so than the revenue law as to imports, which compels every person coming to the United States from foreign countries to surrender to custom-house officers his trunks, satchels, boxes, bundles, and his person itself, for search and examination, of which laws, strange to say, nothing is said, the whole sympathy of the country being reserved for moonshiners. Our own State laws furnish many instances of official invasion into the private affairs of the citizen (fully as obnoxious as the search of revenue officers into the houses of the illicit whisky-makers) of which we never hear a complaint. Such are the tax laws of our State which require the tax-receiver to compel every tax-payer to answer more than fifty questions about his most private affairs. Such is the law as to the inspection of fertilizers and oils, which force the importers of them to submit to the most rigid official examination. The law as to the inspection of oils allows the inspectors to enter houses where oils are stored, without the knowledge or consent of the owner. The law of Georgia, as to inspection of liquors, gives authority to the inspectors to enter the shops and stores where they are sold, and without the consent of the owner, and test the same to ascertain whether they are adulterated or pure.

Back of all this irrational pretense of rational opposition to the taxing of evils there lies a purpose to protect the monstrous tariff system against the reform which both of the great parties, and notably that to which I belong, are pledged to effect at the first opportunity.

All parties profess to admit that the Government must cease to collect an immense surplus to be hoarded in the Treasury in defiance of the property rights of the people and at the risk of financial wreck and ruin; but there are men in both parties who seek to accomplish that end in such a way as to give the people no deliverance from the dominion of monopoly, no relief from the cumulative tyranny of trusts. They will remove the surplus willingly, even cheerfully, by drying up the fountains of the excise system; but they will not consent to remove a feather's weight of the burdens of taxation on the comforts and the necessaries of life.

They are willing to relieve the distresses of the suffering, monopoly-ridden miners of Pennsylvania by furnishing them abundance of cheap whisky, but deny them cheap food and clothing. To the demand for cheap coal, lumber, nails, and blankets for the shivering men and women, who dwell in the land of the blizzard, they graciously offer the comfort and protection that may be found in untaxed whisky. To the Western farmer, who finds all the proceeds of his toil eaten up by outrageous taxes on all he buys, with no compensating benefits by reason of protection in anything which he sells, they offer a deluge of cheap whisky. To the entreaty of the Southern farmer for cheap iron, cheap farm tools, cheap bagging and ties, cheap salt, in mockery of the hardships under which he struggles, comes the ready offer, in bland benevolence, of untaxed whisky for whites, untaxed whisky for blacks. To the struggling needle-women, who demand cheap thread, cheap needles, cheap buttons, cheap scissors, cheap thimbles; to the toiling workingman who asks a cheapening of the few articles that are necessary to the comfort of his humble home; to the freedmen who ask cheap food, cheap clothing, cheap books, cheap agencies in their progress and elevation; to the manufacturer, who demands cheap raw materials as the sole condition to his successful competition with the whole world; to the shipping interests, which plead for free ships as a means of restoring the commerce of the country to its pristine glory and greatness—to each of all these worthy representatives of outraged and failing interests comes the cruel, the impious, the shameless offer of free whisky. It is the sum of all good. It is the cure of every ill. It is the inspiration of despairing hope. "Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more."

I need not repeat that whatever is taken off the internal taxes on whisky means so much unnecessary tax laid upon the necessaries of life. The following tables are taken from the New York Herald. They show what taxes are laid upon some articles of common use, and will enable us by comparison to determine whether these taxes shall be continued that whisky may be free.

THE WORK-BASKET.

Let the workingman lose a button from his coat or tear his trousers, and how does the tariff work then? Does it pity him and overlook such a little matter? By no means. The following will show the rate of customs taxation on the little articles that are necessary to sew on a button:

	Per cent.
Sewing-needles	25
Thread	55
Beeswax	20
Scissors	35
Buttons	25
Thimbles	25

And to complete the contents of the work-basket of the "laboring man's wife" there should be named:

	Per cent.
Pins	30
Knitting, darning, and crochet needles	25

These few articles of every-day use in a family show how oppressive and searching our tariff is, and yet, rather than lessen the taxes upon such articles as these by the amount of the surplus, it is proposed to take the tax off whisky.

DUTIES ON CLOTHING.

In order to live a man must be clothed. In this climate clothing is a necessity, and if its cost is made greater than is necessary it practically involves a tax upon life.

Take some of the important articles of clothing and see how the tariff affects them:

	Per cent.
Clothing wools	26 to 73
Flannels	62 to 68
Hats	30
Gloves and mittens, cotton	50
Cottons	50
Linens	35

These are articles used by every man, woman, and child in the country, and are necessary to their comfort. See how tenderly they are cared for by the tariff. The wonder is that such a system of taxation on the poor is allowed to remain one day.

FURNISHING THE HOME.

Suppose the working man and woman get married and want to furnish a home. They would like to have their money go as far as possible and want low-priced goods. See how the tariff meets their wishes, and to what extent it applies.

	Per cent.
Stove (iron)	45
Carpets	50
Oil-cloths	40
House furniture	35
Clocks	30
Books	25
Earthenware of the commonest kind	55
Glassware of the cheapest kind	45
Cooking utensils, pots and kettles	53
Knives, forks, and spoons	45
Combs and brushes	30
Brooms	25
Common soap	20

	Cents.
Toilet soap, per pound	15

Can it be imagined that these taxes are imposed to aid the "workingman" to furnish his house? Suppose they did not exist, would it not be reasonable to think that the cost of furnishing would be less?

BUILDING HOME.

If the workingman can not own his cottage and the land on which it stands, the next best thing is to have possession of them at a low rental.

If the materials that enter into the construction of a house are taxed, the cost of the house will be increased, and the owner or landlord must charge a higher rent to secure a profit on his outlay.

Let the following list of duties in the present tariff be examined:

	Per cent.
Nails	100
Lumber	18
Common window-glass	60
Linseed oil	41
White lead	54
Wall-paper	25
Cement	20
Slates	25
Laths	9
Shingles	14

It is presuming too much on the credulity and ignorance of the people to suppose they will prefer a tax on these articles to a tax on whisky.

A MERCENARY PROPOSITION.

I feel half ashamed to make any answer to the proposition that this tax be transferred to the States. It is an argument that appeals to the lowest of all motives, and not to a sense of reason and justice It is an artful attempt to allure the people into the advocacy of the abolition of the Federal tax under the hope that by some process of legislative hocus pocus the proceeds of the tax will be turned into the State treasury. It is simply a naked hook thrown out to ignorant and unwary minnows.

Under the constitution of several of the States—Georgia is among them—the levy of taxes must be made ad valorem. You could not transplant the Federal method into that system. If it were possible to do so by any scheme or device whatsoever, the fact that the surrounding States might not adopt a similar policy or impose a corresponding rate of taxation would render the scheme an utter failure. With the tax in Tennessee at 10 cents per gallon and with no tax at all in Illinois and Kentucky, how could the Georgia manufacturer compete in the sale of his product taxed at 90 cents per gallon? Laws could not be framed to remedy the difficulty. Besides, to transfer the system to the States would not relieve the harshness and cruelty complained of; the collection would be made then by officers of the State, as they are made now by Federal officials who are citizens of the State, identified with the people and enjoying their confidence and sympathy. If it be said that the States would pass laws relieving the system of its rigor, the reply is, so may the General Government, and bills are in progress now to effect that result.

The interest of the people of the United States and of my own State in the repeal of the internal revenue is astonishingly small. The repeal will hurt one thousand where it helps one. The reduction of the tariff will help one thousand where it hurts one.

Free whisky will imprison more men than the internal-revenue laws.

Look over the entire field of taxation, of taxes direct and taxes indirect, and where will you find any so harmless and so avoidable? Look over the ranges of commodities for the supply of human wants, necessaries, luxuries, comforts, things useful and things dangerous in the use and noxious in the abuse, and where will you find one upon which you can impose a tax as easily borne and as little burdensome as a tax on whisky?

I speak of my own State—what applies to that will be true as to others. Of the 800,000 colored people in Georgia not one is benefited by the tariff, nor one hurt by the internal revenue. Of the 900,000 whites, half are women, not one hurt by the internal revenue; of the other half, males, one-half minors, not one hurt by internal revenue. Of the fraction of the population remaining, even the drinking men do not think themselves helped and do not regard cheap whisky as a boon to them.

Free whisky and the free use of it as a beverage, is a mere animal indulgence which only one-fifth of the race enjoys against the wishes and interests of four-fifths, to the sorrow of the dearest earthly ties of woman, wife, mother, children, sister, and friends.

With respect to the tax on tobacco, I would retain the tax on cigars and cigarettes. They are by no means necessaries—they are the indulgences of gentlemen and dudes. As a measure of compromise to effect a general reduction of the tariff, I would consent to remove the tax on tobacco in all other forms.

Another supposed argument that is made in favor of abolishing the internal-revenue taxes is that it is the only mode of reducing the surplus. The argument is given in a high-tariff journal in these words:

The lower the tariff the greater the amount of importation, and consequently the greater the amount of revenue flowing into the Treasury. These are facts that any school boy can understand, but it seems necessary to explain them over and over again.

So it would seem; and after the final explanation Congress and the people will still be unbelieving.

It is possible, as a matter of course, to make duties on all articles so high as to be nearly or quite prohibitory; and this would necessarily lessen revenues. If the tariff were entirely prohibitory, no revenue at all would be derived from it. On the other hand, it is easy to conceive of a point in low-tariff rates at which revenues would be much too small for the necessities of Government. Would any be absurd enough to hold that an average tariff of 2 per cent., for instance, would raise sufficient revenue for the Government?

The truth of the matter is that any increase in rates on commodities of large export must necessarily increase the revenues until the point of prohibition of imports is neared, when a reduction will begin. The fact that this point is not reached in the main commodities of export under the present tariff is shown by the increasing yearly receipts from that source. This being the case, then, a reduction in duties would necessarily reduce the revenue, provided such reduction were real and not pretended.

But this fact is shown by the tariff history of the country, which is conclusive on the point. Whenever Congress has desired to lessen the revenue, duties were decreased; and whenever it has been intended to enlarge the revenue, duties have been raised. This was the case during the war of 1812 and during the last war. More than the ordinary revenue was wanted, and tariff rates were raised and the additional revenue supplied. Again when the discovery of gold in California gave such an impetus to business that the revenue increased again there was a surplus. What was done then? According to the supposed argument I am answering, the duty should have been raised in order to reduce the revenue; but our lawmakers thought differently. They made a very material reduction in rates, and in consequence the revenue fell off from $63,000,000 in 1857 to $41,000,000 in 1858. The revenue for the last four years of the comparatively low Walker tariff—1854, 1855, 1856, and 1857—was $246,000,000. In the next four years of the still lower tariff of 1857 up to 1861 the revenue, with an increasing population, was only $182,000,000. That is to say, the low tariff of 1857 brought $64,000,000 less revenue in four years than the higher Walker tariff did in the preceding four years.

Then came the war, and there was a need of money. Did Congress lower the rate to increase the revenue? Not at all. It raised the rate, and although the Southern States imported nothing the duties collected for the four years from 1861 to 1865 amounted to $304,000,000. The States which adhered to the Union paid $122,000,000 more duties from 1861 to 1865 under a high tariff than did all the States from 1857 to 1861 under a low tariff.

Any party or faction which proposes to raise rates in order to reduce revenue, or insists that lowering rates at this time will increase revenue, is either willfully or ignorantly blind to the effects of the compromise tariff of 1833, the Walker tariff of 1846, the low tariff of 1857, and the war tariffs of 1861. It is very easy to understand why it is, in the face of these facts, that the writer who contends that lowering tariff rates will increase the surplus has to explain his explanation over and over again to a gainsaying and unbelieving people.

It is bad enough to make such an argument without facts to sustain it. It is audacious and presumptious when it is against facts.

I have touched upon the main objections to the internal-revenue taxes. In doing so I have felt as Hooker did when he spoke of "silly things," that "the very easiness with which they are controverted doth make them hard to be disputed about in a serious manner."

I have thus reviewed the tariff and the internal revenue—the two alternative methods of reduction. Said Patrick Henry, "I have no light by which my feet are guided except the lamp of experience." This light we have thrown upon the subject by several comparisons, based on experience or on principle—the concentrated extract of previous experience. I have compared our present with our past, and our own experience with the experience of other countries. I have compared Federal taxation with State taxation—the former greatly in excess; Federal services with State—the former greatly in defect; Federal tribute with Federal tax—the former greatly in excess.

I have compared the tariff of to-day, our present tariff of abominations, with the tariff of different periods of our history, showing that the tariff of 1790, prepared by Hamilton, the father of protection, compared with the present tariff of 1888, stands as one to three for a people then of three millions, now of sixty; for a people then scattered and young compared with a country now knit together by 120,000 miles of railroad, with telegraphs, newspapers, etc. And still we have "infant industries" a hundred years old, growing yearly more clamorous for the battle.

I have shown relative prosperity during the low-tariff period and the high—the former exceeding the latter in the country and in every State in aggregate wealth and in every detail.

Finally, I have compared our tariff with the tariff of other great powers with the astonishing result that it exceeds the combined tariffs of England, France, Germany, and Austria-Hungary.

I know no better way of understanding the subject than by such comparisons. If the protectionists will show us a better way I will follow it. Choose ye between—

Economy and extravagance;

Necessaries and whisky;

Tax and tribute.

Thus the two simple, well-chosen propositions of the President stand confirmed in the light of the closest investigation. Opposition to them is only possible by denying truisms; argument only by obscuring them.

I have now come to the last point I propose to discuss, the DUTY OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The Democratic party is a party of principle. These principles are deep-seated, grown out of a deep root, and bear appropriate fruit. They have had great expounders in the past, and will live to bless future generations. There are two great systems of thought and opinion in this country which contend for the mastery. Of these the Democratic, in my judgment, is bound to ultimate triumph, because it asserts the rights of the people to be superior to those of any privileged class. It is time now for the distinct assertion of Democratic principles, the hearty maintenance of them, and the redemption of Democratic pledges. The reign of the opposing principle has been long enough, and has already gone far towards converting the country into a plutocracy, one of the worst forms of the government of the few; not an aristocracy, but a government based on Mammon, "the least erected spirit that fell."

The high-tariff policy has ever been that of the Tory party in politics—the friend of class legislation and of privileges as distinguished from equality and general law—the nominal protector of the masses, but the real protector of the least deserving few, the monopolists. Our whole system of government is threatened by this tendency. Have we not manhood to preserve the principles which our fathers conquered for us and bequeathed to us?

In the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, a remarkable incident occurred. I quote the following from John Fiske's account of it:

It was suggested that palliatives and half measures would be far more likely to find favor with the people than any thorough-going reform, when Washington suddenly interposed with a brief but immortal speech, which ought to be emblazoned in letters of gold on the wall of every American deliberative assembly. He exclaimed in tones unwontedly solemn: "It is too probable that no plan we propose will be adopted. Perhaps another dreadful conflict is to be sustained. If to please the people we offer what we ourselves disapprove, how can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which all the wise and honest can repair; the event is in the hand of God."

This outburst of noble eloquence carried conviction to every one. It was a most wholesome tonic; it braced up the convention to high resolves. From that moment the mood in which they worked caught something from the glorious spirit of Washington.

The President has proposed a policy which is worthy of our ardent support, and I think that the response from all sections of the country shows that the people have caught something of its spirit.

We should return to a right policy, propose what is worthy of acceptance, and, if defeated, go to the country upon it. We should concentrate on chief issues, carry our standard high, and adopt a policy which would make victory mean the emancipation of the people from artificial burdens.

The real difficulty lies in the fact that we represent a diffused interest as against one that is concentrated—an unarmed and unorganized mass of people as against a band of armed and organized brigands. Suffrage, which has been relied on as a protection, of itself has not remedied the evil. Bribery, deceit, and the toad at Eve's ear have been persistently used to maintain and to accelerate existing evils and bad tendencies. Is there no possibility of a combination of virtue and public interest as against vice and self-interest? People who will not take the trouble and the risk involved in righting their wrongs are unfit for freedom. When we consider the varied difficulties and the concentrated opposition to reform, the direct force and bribery, the deception and evasions getting possession of the Democratic ranks, the catch-words, the bribes, the purchase of the press, the means and opportunities of deception, and the appeals to ignorance and prejudice, the wonder is that reform should ever take place. Our principal resource is to show the truth, plainly and clearly, rather than to follow up all the possible errors of the opposing system.

As a means to Democratic triumph organization is necessary. Organization includes leadership. We have tried and trusted leaders who deserve our confidence. Mr. Cleveland, in the executive chair, has demonstrated his right to our cordial and enthusiastic confidence and support. He utters no uncertain sound. His manhood has been tested, like that of Andrew Jackson, and has stood the test.

It is not to be concealed that the President has taken great risks in the interest of the people. A mere hum-drum policy would have excited no friction or antagonism; but he has made a clear-cut issue in the true interest of the country, to which he appeals in its own behalf. He is the true hero of reform. The long run of increasing expenditures, the reign of corruption, the rings and cliques, the Credit Mobilier, the railroad frauds, and a thousand other disgraceful things were not his or ours. They were the legacy of another régime, which he was called upon to reform. How he has performed this duty let the Pennsylvania resolution tell.

The following is the text of the resolution adopted by the Pennsylvania Democratic State committee at the recent meeting:

Resolved, That this committee cordially and emphatically indorse the administration of President Cleveland. It has been thoroughly true to the best interests of the Republic. The peace and prosperity of the country is largely due to its wise and benign policy with respect to both foreign and domestic matters. It has reformed the civil service, abolished useless offices, reduced the cost of government, restored many millions of acres of land to the public domain, effected a large reduction of the public debt, prevented the importation of foreign paupers under contract, and has wisely and consistently endeavored to effect a reduction of the surplus in the Treasury and to lighten the burden of taxation borne by the mass of the people. The line of policy laid down in the last annual message of the President for the revision and reduction of the war tariff especially commends itself to us as a sure guaranty of prosperity to all classes of producers and of that genuine and honest protection to labor so long pretended but never vouchsafed by the monopolistic legislation of the so-called Republican party. We therefore avow without hesitation or qualification our unshaken confidence in the wisdom, courage, and patriotism of President Cleveland, and earnestly and hopefully recommend and urge his re-election to the great office which he has so acceptably filled.

Personal confidence in Cleveland contributed largely to his election. The same confidence—greatly re-enforced by experience—will triumphantly re-elect him. His re-election is of immense consequence to the country, and he should be upheld bravely and fully. There are those who would betray him with a kiss, and who already point him out as a victim because of his unshrinking adherence to Democratic principles. There are those who have commended themselves to Democratic distrust. There are those who are false. There are those who believe that monopoly is best for the public interests. These and all such are impediments in the way of Democratic triumph. All true and loyal Democrats can but look with distrust on those who persistently oppose the principles and policy of the party, insist upon the violation of its pledges and consider themselves humiliated, forsooth, unless a small minority be permitted to rule the majority—the most undemocratic of all procedure. This faction has the power to do the party, its principles, and the country far more harm within the party than it would be possible for them to do without. The want of allegiance to the organization tends to the destruction of its principles.

The efforts to Republicanize the Democratic party prevent an authoritative declaration of its principles.

The issue is now made up, and the people are eager for information. It must be discussed boldly and thoroughly. Our policy must be vigorous and aggressive, for we are the complainants. All the monopolists ask, all that they demand, is the maintenance of the status quo of the present system. We must reach the people and call out the reserves, relying not on partisan services but on the convictions of the people. The President has boldly taken position at the head of the Democratic forces, and a vigorous campaign must show the strength and the resources of protection. Its legions of sharp-shooters, infantry, cavalry, and artillery must be assailed behind their intrenchments, not of cotton-bags, but of money-bags, in which they are especially strong. They can pay for anything they want and buy all that is purchasable, but there is no decree of Omnipotence that makes money-bags stronger than a great people aroused by great and long-continued wrong and outrage to the assertion of their rights. When bad men conspire, good men must combine.

Responsible party positions should be given not as a mere compliment to the undeserving, but to true and representative men, so that the party will neither be unrepresented nor misrepresented. The people should be cautioned to beware not less of the wolves than of the foxes.

When they understand the whole truth of the situation, the reaction will be tremendous. The deceived will remember the deceivers—the betrayed will not forget the betrayers.

Cleveland was elected in 1884, and his chances for 1888 are redoubled. The "bloody shirt" as a political issue has little life left. It may be waved in air by a partisan press, and dashed around and about by politicians, "like street dogs worrying a dying cat," but it will excite little interest as a vital issue. There is no alarm now either in political or business circles. The utmost confidence exists in Cleveland's honesty and ability.

A new act of emancipation is needed, freeing more whites than the Lincoln proclamation freed of blacks, and setting the blacks—far more numerous now—wholly free. Moreover, and best of all, this will be a bloodless victory of the ballot, not of the bullet—a victory of peace, not of war, which, when once inaugurated, will be permanent—promotive of the harmony of the sections and the brotherhood of classes, and heralding "peace on earth, good will to men."

Could we bring the country back to the sound doctrine that labor should not be pauperized by charity, and that monoply was not to be fostered by tribute; could we restore to capitalists and manufacturers a manly sense of independence and self reliance; could we lift that noble army of honest toilers, those untold millions who never get protection, from the bondage they are under to support special classes; could we place labor where in the nature of things it might stand, giving and receiving equal benefits; could we by the crushing power of public reprobation drive out of decent recognition that man or set of men who claim the right to levy tribute upon another man's industry to support his own; could we say to all parts of the earth that we are one in the blood of a common civilization, and all countries are one in the common wealth of God, and that we come to them upon the wings of our noble ships bearing the endless and varied bounty that God has given us to exchange with them, then we might boast of a Republic that asked nothing but peace—that is the oppressor of none, but the emancipator of all.

Mr. DOLPH Mr. President, early in the session I took occasion to discuss briefly the question of the surplus revenues, and to call the attention of the Senate to certain objects of urgent importance and of national concern for which, in my judgment, provision should be made before the present sources of revenue were cut off. I am still of the opinion that the safe, wise, and statesmanlike way to deal with the existing surplus and surplus revenues would be to use them as far as necessary for the speedy completion of the works in progress and other needed works, for the improvement of rivers and harbors; for coast defenses and similar purposes; and the continued liquidation of the public debt. But this is not likely to be done, and the only alternative offered is the reduction of the revenues. I had been disposed, until it became apparent by the policy of the Administration, as well as by the legislation proposed by the majority of the House, that every leading industry of the Pacific Coast was threatened with destruction, to leave the discussion of the manner in which this should be done to those better qualified by long familiarity with the subject and by legislative experience to discuss it.

Ever since the President's message was made public there has been a well-founded alarm among the people of the State I have the honor in part to represent, and every where on thePacific Coast, at what they believe to be the threatened destruction of many of their industrial interests, involving business and financial ruin to them and distress to the laboring and industrial classes. I am frank to say that I keenly share in this feeling of apprehension. The wool-growers, lumbermen, miners, fruit raisers, farmers, the labor organizations, and the Patrons of Husbandry have petitioned, remonstrated, and memorialized Congress against the removal of the protection against the cheap labor of Europe and Asia they now enjoy, and have called upon their Representatives in Congress to endeavor to prevent the destruction of their interests. To-day I voice their protests.

The Senate can not originate a revenue bill. Under the Constitution, whether wisely or not, is intrusted to the popular branch of Congress the power and duty of originating all revenue laws. The Democratic party has controlled the House of Representatives for ten out of the last twelve years, and the only reduction of taxes made during the time was by the Republican party during the two years it was in control of both Houses of Congress.

The Democratic party controls the House. It has the Administration. It came into power under a pledge to reduce taxation. One entire Congress and more than three months of another has elapsed since the present Administration came into power, and no plan for the reduction of taxation has been submitted to the Senate.

One way to decrease the surplus is to make appropriations for proper and necessary national purposes, but whenever an increase of appropriations is proposed it is denounced at once as extravagant by those who are determined to force their free-trade doctrines upon Congress.

THE ADMINISTRATION PLAN.

At last we have a plan which, if the press and rumor are to be believed, was incubated in the Executive Mansion and the Treasury Department and hatched in secret conclave by the political majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. I hold in my hand a bill entitled "A bill to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue." The title is a misnomer. It should be "A bill to destroy American industries." It comes to us without any mark to show where it originated or who is its author—"Nobody's Child"—and before the American people are through with it no one will be found willing to own its paternity.

This bill is understood to embody the views of the Administration. It is apparent that it has not been framed on any rational principle. The whole structure of the bill shows that it has been drawn with a view to securing votes for the measure in the South. This was necessary. The present Administration came into power by the votes of the solid South. The Democratic party controls the House of Representatives to-day by the aid of the solid South. The hope for a continuation of a Democratic administration is in the South, and so when the Administration endeavors to force a tariff policy upon the country it is necessarily a Southern policy. Sugar is to be protected by a continuation of a protective duty to please Louisiana, while wool and lumber and the products of other great industries of the States from which there is no hope of securing Democratic votes in the electoral college are to be placed on the free-list.

When the Democratic majority in the House formulates a plan for the reduction of the revenues, sugar is touched lightly and the Louisiana sugar-planters are conciliated; oranges are excepted, when plums and prunes and other fruits are placed upon the free-list, to please the orange-growers of Florida; the tariff on coal is retained to conciliate West Virginia, and, if possible, to stay the growth of protective sentiment in that State. Coverings for cotton and cotton ties, which are simply hoop-iron prepared at little cost for use in baling cotton, are placed upon the free-list, while hoop-iron hoops for barrels, tubs, buckets, etc., in the North are left to bear the burden of taxation.

FREE WOOL.

The great industry of the Pacific Coast which would the most directly and disastrously feel the effect of the adoption by Congress of the policy of the Administration for the reduction of the revenue would be the wool-growing industry.

California is the leading wool-growing State of the Union, and Oregon is fast taking rank beside her. Every portion of Oregon is adapted to wool-growing, and considerable portions which are well suited to this industry are poorly adapted to the raising of grain. Eastern Oregon is producing an excellent quality of clothing wool. I am informed that during the last season there was shipped from The Dalles and from Arlington, a point on the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's road 50 miles further up the valley, and intermediate points, 7,500,000 pounds of wool.

In 1875 there were in California 4,683,200 and in Oregon 643,400 sheep; in 1887 there were in California 6,069,698 and in Oregon 2,593,029 sheep—an increase in Oregon in twelve years of over 400 per cent.

The number of sheep in Nevada in 1875 was 19,000; the number in 1887 was 674.486. The number in Washington Territory in 1887 was 555,439; and the total number on the Pacific Coast in 1887 was 9,892,652. In California and Oregon alone there are 8,656,727 sheep—nearly one-fifth of the whole number in all the States and Territories, which is 44,759,314.

These figures are significant, showing at a glance the importance of the wool-growing interest to those States and the magnitude of the danger which threatens it.

The farmers of the Pacific Coast are thoroughly aroused upon this question. They believe that a wrong was done them by the reduction of the duty upon wool in 1883, a wrong by which their profits upon wool were unjustly reduced for the benefit of the wool-growers in foreign countries. They have not realized the promised reduction in the price of clothing, and they have not forgotten that while the reduction of the tariff on imported wools by the act of 1883 amounted to only 3½ cents per pound, no sooner had the act taken effect than the price of wool declined 5 cents per pound in the United States, and the farmers of this country lost on their very first wool crop under the new tariff $15,000,000. The decrease of the tariff resulted in an enormous increase of importation, and the result has been to crowd out a like amount of domestic wool, to drive out of the field American wool-growers, and to greatly cripple the industry. Our experience under the act of 1883 points with unerring certainty to the effect of the removal of all duties upon foreign wool. The wool industry in the United States is doomed to total destruction whenever foreign wool is admitted free of duty.

Australia with her 80,000,000 sheep, with her 3,000,000 square miles of territory and 3,000,000 inhabitants, with her abundant pasturage, cheap lands, and large flocks, which by reason of the mildness of the climate require but little care, with cheap labor and consequent cheap wool, and South Africa and the South American countries with similar advantages, will drive the American wool-grower to the wall and supplant the American product in the markets of the United States. Let no one be deceived. Free wool means that the wool industry of the United States is to be sacrificed for the product of the cheap labor of foreign countries, and that the millions of men employed in growing American wool shall be deprived of their labor to furnish employment to the wool-growers and herders upon the plains of Australia, the ranges of South Africa, and the pampas of South America.

In an address delivered by Hon. William Lawrence, of Ohio, before the Farmers' National Congress at Chicago November 11, 1887, I find the necessity for protection to American wool growing and manufacturing interests admirably stated. I quote at length from it. Judge Lawrence says:

American manufacturers can, under proper fostering influences and after a brief space of time, produce substantially all the woolen and worsted goods we require. The skill which fabricates our present product is capable of all necessary expansion. And in the not far distant future, with commercial treaties with other American Republics, Brazil, Japan, and some other nations, and with the much-needed increase of the American mercantile marine, our manufacturers can become exporters of their fabrics, and take that high position in the commerce of the world for which American resources, enterprise, skill, and industry so eminently qualify them. If we are true to ourselves, the day will soon dawn when we will no longer be dependents on foreign supplies. Thus the question is answered, what may the American wool interest become?

What are the fostering influences requisite to enable American wool growers and manufacturers to supply all the wool and woolen and worsted goods we need, and in due time to enable our people to become exporters of these?

I answer unhesitatingly, that chief among them is protective legislation, which will exclude the foreign product so far and so fast as we can supply what we need. Our true policy is, that Americans shall patronize and give employment to American rather than to foreign producers, and thereby secure employment for idle hands; give American wages for American services, enlarge our resources, and with them our own abundance, and no longer be dependent for the clothes we wear on foreign capital, labor, and skill. I will not discuss the general policy of a protective tariff. That is not involved in the question whether we should give to American farmers the privilege of supplying all the wool we need. Our lands are here and can not be removed; they must be rendered available in every possible form, or so far as they are not, they are idle and unproductive. Our capital is already invested, and our labor is here awaiting employment. The question is not whether we shall build up new industries generally, or create new plants—it is now whether we shall utilize the plant we have in land, and in order to do this, increase our plants of woolen and worsted manufactures.

And now I address myself to the question, Why should we demand protective legislation? This is an inquiry to which there are several answers.

We can not supply American wants with American wool, or woolen or worsted goods, without protection. We will be driven from these industries by foreign competition. This may be proved by the opinions of those who have studied the subject, and by the logic of facts.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, in his recent report on wool, says: "It is idle to talk about raising sheep in Europe, or in this country, to compete with South Africa or the Platte country or Australia. Our sheep-farming must eventually be confined to small flocks of improved breeds, raised on farms where they require little or no extra labor. It has already come to this in Europe and in the Eastern and Middle States, where lands are valuable, and will finally prevail in the West as the large ranches are divided up and settled. The conditions are entirely different in South Africa, Australia, and South America, where laborers are at least semi-barbarians or peons, and the immense plains of cheap lands and torrid climate seem better adapted to sheep raising than other industries." That is, without an adequate protective tariff, wool growing will not be remunerative, and so as an industry will perish. And in the same report he tells us that even under the present wool tariff of 1883 "it can safely be predicted that * * * there may be little or no gain in numbers [of sheep], if not an actual loss in the near future."

Another thoroughly well-informed expert says: "In this country, where wages are high and the necessaries of life and social conditions so widely different from the Old World, it is evident that competition without protection is impossible. Italy has her sheep attended by shepherds at 2 cents per day, their only food, black bread soaked in oil; India, Turkey, Persia, Russia, wages and modes of living on about the same scale; South America, Cape of Good Hope, and Australia, but one step higher. As the natives in most of these countries attend the flocks, they require but little clothing, and they get but a mere pittance, barely sufficient to sustain life."

The logic of facts proves that without adequate protection we can not render wool-growing remunerative here. In Australia, South America, and other countries "no provision is necessary for food and shelter in the winter season other than that provided by the bounty of nature." They furnish an extent of territory practically unlimited with lands almost without cost; they have immense flocks of sheep, they can increase their number almost without limit, and supply the world with an abundance of every class and grade of wool. They can furnish wool at prices so low that they can defy competition and annihilate every flock in the United States, unless we shall be saved by protection. The report of the Tariff Commission shows that in 1882 Buenos Ayres unwashed clothing—equal to Ohio and Pennsylvania X wool—was quoted at 13.5 cents per pound, with cost of transportation to Boston 3.152 cents per pound. The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shows that under the tariff act of 1864 Buenos Ayrean wools "could be bought at the Rio de la Plata under 12 cents per pound, and come in under the 3-cents duty."

The reduction of our wool produce by the act of 1883 has increased the American demand for foreign wool, and but for this South American clothing wool could be produced for 10 cents per pound and laid down in Boston for less than 15 cents. Such wools can not profitably be produced in our older States unwashed for less than about 30 cents per pound. The history of our own wool tariff and wool production shows that without adequate protection annihilation awaits our wool industry. Prior to the act of March 2, 1867, Congress had failed to provide adequate protection to the wool industry. When the tariff bill of 1828 was under consideration in the Senate the illustrious and far-seeing statesman, Thomas H. Benton, proposed to insert a clause laying a protective duty of 10 per cent. per annum on wool, until it should amount to 50 per cent. ad valorem, and 5 per cent. afterward, until it should amount to 70 per cent.—a higher average rate of duty than has ever yet been enacted by Congress, and that, too, at a time when the expense and delay of ocean transportation were so great as in themselves to give American wool-growers advantages and protection which no longer exist. His wisdom did not prevail. The result was that the wool industry languished for a long period. An accurate statistician has said: "In 1810, when the first census of products of industry was taken, the quantity of wool produced in the United States was returned at from thirteen to fourteen million pounds."

In 1812 Mr. Tench Coxe, of Philadelphia, a trustworthy authority, computed it to be from twenty to twenty-two million pounds. During the last four census years the number of sheep and production of wool were as follows:

Years.	Number of sheep.	Pounds of wool.
1850	21,723,220	52,516,959
1860	22,471,275	60,264,913
1870	28,477,591	100,102,387

It will be seen that the increase in the number of sheep in the decade from 1850 to 1860 was only 748,055, equivalent to 3½ per cent. Then came the first and only just, sufficient, and, for the time it was in force, effectual tariff act of March 2, 1867.

Under the operation of this law the wool industry prospered. The increase in the number of sheep from 1860 to 1870 amounted to 6,606,675, or 27 per cent.; from 1870 to 1880 the increase in number was 12,287,949, or about 44 per cent.; and in 1884 our sheep numbered 50,360,243. Our wool product increased faster than our sheep; that is, "the average weight of fleece rose from 2½ and 3½ pounds to 5 and 5½ pounds [of washed wool], according to location." Thus the wool industry, for the first time in our history, grew rapidly, was prosperous, and remunerative under the act of March 2, 1867, and up to act of March 3, 1883. * * *

The effect of this act has been to make wool production unprofitable by reducing the price; to reduce the number of our sheep and of our wool products, thereby to encourage and increase the importation of foreign wools, and give American patronage to foreign producers instead of our own. It has reduced our sheep, 5,867,312 in number, when, on the basis of increase under the tariff of 1867, there should have been an increase of 6,000,000, making a loss equal to about 13,000,000 sheep, and a loss in clip of wool of 48,000,000 pounds, worth $14,400,000. Thus the wool-growers have lost by decrease of flocks in reduced wool product $14,400,000, and in price of wool they produced in 1887 at least $26,000,000. And we are correctly told that under the tariff act of 1883 there is "in the near future" to be a continued and actual growing loss in number. The imports of wool in 1882 were 67,861,744; in 1887 they were 114,038,030, when they should have been reduced to 40,000,000, and under proper protection might have been less.

Induced by the reduction of the duties by the act of 1883, there were imported into the United States during the year ending June 30, 1886, 107,910,549 pounds of wool of the value of $13,794,213, from which duties to the amount of $5,126,108 were received. During the same period there were imported into the United States manufactures of wool of the value of $40,536,509, upon which duties to the amount of $27,278,528 were paid. The effect of the reduction of the tariff on wool in 1883 on the production in the United States will further appear from an inspection of the following:

Statement showing the quantities of raw wool produced in each of the principal and all other wool-producing countries of the world.

Countries of production.	Quantities produced.
	Pounds.
North America:
United States (1884)	307,588,000
British North American provinces (1884)	4,409,000
South America:
Argentine Republic (exports 1885)	283,047,000
Uruguay (exports 1884)	59,084,000
Asia and Australasia:
Australasia (exports 1885–'86)	455,470,000
British East Indies (exports 1885–'86)	23,126,000
Turkey, Asiatic, and Persia (estimated)	13,228,000
Africa:
Cape Colony (exports 1885)	29,299,000
Natal (exports 1885)	17,306,000
All other countries	88,185,000
Total production	1,983,396,000

This table should be read in connection with the statement of Judge Lawrence that the imports of wool in 1887 were 114,038,030 pounds, an amount considerably more than one-third as large as the entire production of the United States.

To show from whence the competition comes which our wool-growers have to meet and the scramble which will take place for the wool markets of the United States if wool is placed upon the free-list, I append hereto:

A statement showing the kinds of raw wool, by countries of production and of immediate shipment, imported into the three ports, New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Countries of production.	Countries of immediate shipment.	Class 1, clothing wools.	Class 2, combing wools.	Class 3, carpet wools.	Total.

FREE LUMBER.

Another important interest of the Pacific Coast threatened by the Administration policy is the manufacture of lumber. By the Mills bill timber used for spars, timber hewn and sawed, timber squared, unmanufactured wood, sawed boards, etc., hubs for wheels, etc., staves of wood, pickets and palings, laths, shingles, and clapboards are placed on the free-list, to secure a paltry reduction of the revenue derived from duties, which might have been secured by a further reduction of less than 2 per cent. of the present duty on sugar.

In the magnificent forests of Western Oregon and Washington the people of the State I have the honor in part to represent, and the people of our neighboring Territory have an almost inexhaustible mine of wealth which, if not destroyed by ruinous competition with the cheap labor and practically unlimited timber supply of the British provinces, will for many years to come provide profitable employment to thousands of our citizens.

It has been estimated that in Washington Territory there are 35,000,000 acres of land, not including the inaccessible and valueless mountain tops, and that of this 20,000,000 acres is timbered land. A large proportion of Western Oregon is covered with magnificent forests of fir, cedar, pine, and other valuable timber trees. The governor of Washington Territory, in his annual report for 1887, places the annual capacity of the saw-mills of Washington Territory at 645,440,000 feet, and estimates the number of men engaged in the lumber industry in that Territory at 4,964. The product of these mills is shipped mainly to San Francisco, but a large amount of lumber is shipped to foreign countries.

The following is a statement of the shipments from Puget Sound alone to foreign countries for the year 1886:

Destination.	No.	Feet.	Destination.	No.	Feet.
Sydney	32	25,082,342	Hong-Kong	2	1,210,000

Townsville	3	2,192,558
New Caledonia	3	1,075,250	Total		103,102,241

There was also shipped during the same year to American Atlantic ports as follows:

	Feet.
Boston, 3 cargoes of lumber, aggregating	2,576,432
New York, 289 spars, equal to	300,000
Bath, 323 spars, equal to	200,000
Total	3,076,432

A large lumbering business is carried on on the Oregon coast, principally on the Columbia River and Coos Bay, but I have not the figures before me to show the amount of the product or the number of men employed. It is safe to say that the interest in Oregon approximates in importance that of Washington Territory, and the products of our mills supply in part the same markets. I find the effect of the removal of the duties from lumber upon the timber interests of the Northwest so admirably stated in the Sunday Oregonian for March 4 that I quote the article:

HOW IT WILL AFFECT THE TIMBER INTEREST.

It is believed that if the proposition to put lumber on the free-list should be carried out it will demoralize utterly the timber interest of Oregon and Washington Territory. Its effect will be to add the vast forests of British Columbia to the general Pacific coast timber resource and this, while it can not cheapen lumber in the coast markets for years to come, must reduce the value of timber lands in this country. Remote lands having a prospective value based upon the probable demands of the next ten or twenty years will, by this enormous accession to the available supply, be rendered practically worthless. Thus, without at this time gaining any sort of benefit in cheaper lumber, the country will be damaged by an immediate and serious depreciation in an important property interest. It would be a mistake to suppose that the loss resulting from this depreciation would fall chiefly on land-grabbers, or even upon men of wealth. For every large holder of timber lands there are fifty small holders. These are chiefly settlers whose timber is their only available capital, held as a certain resource and treasured as a thing "sure to increase in value." To this large and exceptionally worthy class the depreciation which must follow if the scheme of the Democrats in Congress succeeds will come as a positive misfortune.

Besides the loss to holders of timber lands, the milling business, on the Columbia River especially, is likely to suffer demoralization through the destruction of the direct lumber trade with the States east of the Rocky Mountains. This trade is only possible under the advantages afforded by the protective tariff. Remove the tariff and Canadian lumber will flood the markets of the Western States at prices with which our manufacturers, under the disadvantage of long distance, can not possibly meet.

I submit a copy of one of the numerous petitions, received by the Pacific coast delegation in Congress against the removal of the duty on lumber. This one is from 613 citizens of Tacoma, Wash., and presents in concise and unequivocal language the reasons why the duty should be retained:

To the honorable the Members of and Delegates to the Congress of the United States from Washington Territory and the Pacific States:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Tacoma, Wash., most earnestly unite in this memorial, asking you to use your influence and votes against the abolishment or reduction of the present tariff on lumber.

In the face of the many and powerful reasons against any change in the tariff, so far as the Pacific Coast is concerned, this question can not by any possibility be considered a party issue. The lumber interest may be considered, and is emphatically, the most important manufacturing interest on the shores of the Pacific.

The capital invested is enormous, and, there being but few manufactures here that require the protection of a tariff, this principal industry of the coast is well entitled to an equal protection at the hands of a National Congress with that given to the many special industries and manufactures located in the Eastern States to secure them against ruinous competition with low-priced foreign labor.

The State of California, the great market for the lumber product of this coast, pays more in custom duties for the support of the General Government, in proportion to her population, than any other State, with the exception of New York.

The prices of lumber on this coast are now and have been for years low as compared with the prices in other parts of the Union.

In case lumber were put upon the free-list the competition in its production on this coast would come from British Columbia, where there are numerous sawmills already established, with extensive forests of good timber. Freights from British Columbia to our California markets are as low as from Puget Sound; hence the competition would be direct and ruinous, while the difference in freights from Alaskan ports would practically give British Columbia a monopoly, as far as Alaskan lumber is concerned, were the duty to be taken off.

Another point on which all political parties are agreed upon on this coast is that of the exclusion of Chinese labor. And we most truthfully represent unto you, honorable Members and Delegates, that the manufacture of lumber in British Columbia is being largely carried on by Chinese labor. Therefore, the abrogation of the duty on lumber would be to bring our lumber directly into competition with the above class of labor, and to that extent overthrow the results and exertions of our Senators and Representatives in Congress in obtaining the exclusion from our country of Chinese laborers.

The protection of our forests can not be alleged as a reason for the reduction or abolishment of the duty on lumber, as not one-hundredth part of the forest lands of California, Oregon, or Washington Territory has yet been touched, and in the immense forests of Alaska practically no lumbering has been done, and it will only be after the lapse of many generations that any material decrease will be noticed in the forests of the coast.

Further than this, the pine forests of Washington Territory and Oregon, as well as the redwood forests of California, are reproductive, a new and rapid growth of the same species of trees springing up immediately in the place of those cut down for the market.

We want you to most distinctly bear in mind, that it is not the manufacturers of lumber alone who would suffer from the reduction of the tariff, but many of the other industries and much of the business of this and other cities of Puget Sound, for as the lumber business is the largest interest of the section, any blow struck at that will reach all other branches of business which are dependent upon the great interests of Puget Sound for their support. It would also lessen the wages of the laboring portion of our community, the bulk of which are directly engaged in the lumber manufacture.

We therefore respectfully request our Representatives at Washington, that they will use their utmost efforts to prevent any reduction in the present tariff on manufactured lumber.

TACOMA, WASH., December, 1887.

The following, quoted from a communication recently received from a manufacturer of lumber in New York, presents concisely and forcibly from the standpoint of an Eastern manufacturer the arguments against free lumber:

First. Everything necessary to produce lumber in Canada is at least 25 per cent. cheaper than in the United States.

Second. Three hundred million dollars and one million men are engaged in the business, and a tariff reduction, if made, would be a direct blow at both the labor and capital therein represented.

Third. The average value of lumber to the consumer may be placed at, say, $20 per thousand. The present duty of $2 per thousand is therefore only 10 per cent., and as probably nine-tenths of the people who use lumber are people above the laboring classes the duty is not in any sense a burden upon the community.

Fourth. The Canadian lumber mills being situated nearer the Eastern States than the mills of the producing pine regions of the United States, they have an advantage in the item of freights of at least one-half of the present duty; and if such duty were removed, it would give to the Canadians control of the markets of the Eastern States, whither their product is most largely imported, so that the present rate of duty is absolutely necessary in order that Western pine lumber may be shipped to Eastern markets.

Fifth. Careful estimates by practical lumbermen show that there is enough standing timber in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin to last twenty years, thus showing the Government's forestry bulletins to be entirely erroneous.

Sixth. There can not possibly be any scarcity of lumber for a century after every tree has been cut in Michigan and Wisconsin, for the reason that there are larger tracts of yellow pine and other timber, suitable for building purposes, in the Southern States than ever existed of white pine in the Northern States. This can all be used where white pine is now used; and the duty on lumber should be retained, so that the Southern States may have the benefit of Northern capital to develop this vast industry, which will not be done for years if Canadian lumber is admitted free.

Seventh. Consider the difference it will make to the States having these large tracts of yellow pine—Pennsylvania, Virginia, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, and North and South Carolina—whether they are developed or left comparatively untouched, as they certainly will be for years if Canadian lumber comes in free of duty.

THE FRUIT INDUSTRY THREATENED.

There is greater wealth in the vast wine and raisin vineyards which dot the fruitful valleys and the foot-hills of its mountain ranges and in the thousands of square miles of orchards in California than ever was taken or ever will be taken from her gold mines. The following statement of the product of her orchards and vineyards for the year 1887 will show the importance which this industry has already attained:

Fruit-raising in Oregon is in its infancy, but it has already become an important industry, and with continued protection promises to become extensive and profitable. Our climate and soil are adapted to fruit-raising, and all the fruits of the temperate zones are raised in profusion and in the greatest perfection. The yield and the quality are unsurpassed in any other portion of the world.

The danger which threatens this great industry, with others of the Pacific Coast, I find thus stated in the editorial columns of the San Francisco Bulletin, speaking of the Mills bill:

The scheme of revenue reform, so called, is clearly revenue reform from a Southern point of view. The staples in which the South is interested are not disturbed. Coal and iron ore are treated with infinite tenderness. This is for the benefit of the two Virginias and Alabama. There is not much interference with the rice of South Carolina, or the cotton fabrics of Georgia. Comparatively speaking there are but few sheep raised in the South, with the exception of Texas. Wool has, therefore, to go.

In these facts the leading idea of the bill may be discovered. It was framed to benefit one group of States at the expense of the other larger and more populous group. It is the new crossing of the Potomac, but this time it is supposed with New York and Indiana as allies. California suffers more than any other State in the Union, because her interests are more varied. Reading the bill, it is easy now to understand the ironical remark of MILLS, the chairman of the committee, a day or two ago, that they were doing all they could to transfer this State to the Democratic column. A point is sought to be made on the fact that the duty on raisins has only been reduced 25 per cent., that is, from 2 cents to 1½ cents per pound. But raisins are not the only products of California that need protection just now. As we read the synopsis that has been furnished by the telegraph fresh fruits of all kinds, likewise plums, prunes, and figs are on the free-list. Prunes especially are becoming one of our most important products. Beans are also uncovered, likewise beeswax; and we think, from the terminology, olive oil; and of our minerals, borax, quicksilver, and salt. Lumber is on the free-list, and also wool. Several of our rising industries are viciously struck at, such as that of glass.

The foreign states that are to be benefited by the proposed measure may be roughly stated as follows: Great Britain, at the expense of Pennsylvania and several Northern States, as respects steel, woolens, and other important fabrics; Australia and the Argentine Confederation in the matter of wool, at the expense of California, Ohio, and several of the Western States; Peru and Chili, over California in beans; France and Germany, over California in prunes; Spain, Mexico, and the Levant in raisins, figs, and fresh fruits, and Italy in olive oil. In a general way it may be said that if this bill should become a law, there are many industries in California, now promising and flourishing, which will not be able to pay for labor more than from 25 cents to 40 cents per day, and if they can not get it on these terms, will have to close out and leave the field free to our foreign competitors. It is not stretching things too much to say that this scheme of Democratic reform, so called, is likely to cause just as much dismay in the North as the advance of Lee's army on Gettysburgh. Certainly it is calculated to cause more widespread injury than any single victory of an invading army.

REDUCTION OF THE DUTY ON LEAD.

Another interest of the North Pacific, threatened by the proposed tariff revision, is the production of lead. Under the present tariff lead ore and lead dross is subject to a duty of 1½ cents a pound, lead in pigs and bars 2 cents a pound, lead in sheets, pipe, or shot 3 cents a pound. It is proposed to reduce the duty upon lead ore and lead dross to three-fourths of 1 cent a pound, on lead in pigs and bars to 1¼ cents a pound, and on lead in sheets, pipes, or shot to 2¼ cents a pound. This industry is just now assuming great importance in the Northwest by reason of the discovery and opening of extensive silver mines in the Cœur d'Alene mining regions, the ore of which contains a large proportion of lead. I have received numerous protests against the reduction of the duty, including a memorial from the Portland Board of Trade.

In a newspaper report of the proceedings of the board I find the following statement of the necessity for a protective duty:

Mr. B. Goldsmith said that foreign countries should not be allowed to drive American lead from the markets of the world. The main lead-producing countries of Europe are Spain, England, and Germany. The duty is 2 cents per pound. The price of lead in New York is about 4¼ cents per pound. Lead miners in Europe earn on an average 40 cents a day. The freight from Europe to New York is $3 to $5 a ton. Lead miners in America earn $3 to $3.50 per day. Freight on base bullion and lead from Idaho, Montana, and Colorado is $15 to $18 a ton. It would be destruction to the mining interests of the North Pacific coast if the duty on lead is repealed. Such an act would close three-fourths of the mines now operated. It would throw out of employment thousands of men directly engaged in the mining industry and thousands indirectly interested.

Mr. Goldsmith is chairman of the Democratic State central committee of Oregon.

THE LEADING INDUSTRIES OF THE PACIFIC COAST TO BE DESTROYED TO SECURE CONTINUED PROTECTION TO LOUISIANA.

And this destruction of American industries, this threatened blow at the prosperity of the Pacific coast, this attempt to deprive the people of my State who are engaged in the honorable calling of stock-raising and wool-growing, and in manufacture of lumber from our magnificent forests, is for the purpose of protecting the owners of a few sugar plantations in Louisiana, who, instead of sharing the profits of their protected industries with the men who plant and hoe the cane and manufacture the sugar, when the laborers upon their plantations strike for better wages, hush their remonstrances and crush every organized effort to obtain their rights by the use of State militia sent with alacrity at their call.

An examination of what the American people have done to protect the sugar industries in Louisiana and the utter failure to build up the industry by a protective policy, in the light of the recommendations of the late and present Secretaries of the Treasury and of the President, will be interesting. I present tables taken from official sources showing the importations of sugar and molasses, the duties paid upon them, and the production and consumption of these articles in the United States:

From the foregoing tables it appears that the production of sugar and molasses in the United States during the years 1861–'62 and 1885–'86 was as follows:

State.	1861–'62.	1885–'86.	Increase or decrease.
SUGAR.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Louisiana	528,321,500	286,626,486	Decrease, 241,695,014

Total	539,830,500	302,754,486	Decrease, 237,076,014
MOLASSES.	Gallons.	Gallons.	Gallons.
Louisiana	34,216,000	17,863,732	Decrease, 16,352,268

Total	37,718,000	21,508,732	Decrease, 16,209,268

The duty paid on imported sugar for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was $56,507,493.37; and the total revenue collected upon sugar alone from 1851 to 1887 was $959,501,261.66.

The amount of sugar consumed in the United States during the year ending June 30, 1886, was as follows:

	Tons (2,240 pounds).
Imported cane-sugar	1,162,600
Domestic manufacture from imported molasses	72,613
Total imported	1,235,213
Domestic product of cane-sugar in Louisiana	127,958
Of cane-sugar in other Southern States	7,200
Of maple-sugar	18,000
Of beet-sugar	754
Total domestic product consumed in the United States	153,912
Total consumption, foreign and domestic product	1,389,125

Consumption per capita, 53.8 pounds.

From which it appears that the domestic manufacture was less than 10 per cent. of the entire consumption. After thirty-five years of faithful effort to build up the industry in the United States, less than 10 per cent. of the amount of sugar consumed in the United States is of domestic production, and that is mainly produced in one State of the Union. We have been told for years, and we are still told, that we are just upon the eve of building up a great beet-sugar industry. I hope it is so. I believe that with our soil and climate it is possible, and I would foster that industry in the manner advocated by the Senator from Ohio, by a bounty on the production of sugar which would be sufficient to protect the industry and prove no unnecessary burden upon the people.

The amount of sugar consumed in the United States during the year ending June 30, 1886, as I have shown, was 1,389,125 tons of 2,240 pounds. The total quantity of cane-sugar produced in the world during the year 1884–'85 is estimated at 6,550,000,000 pounds. Reducing this to tons of 2,240 pounds, we have as the world's production of cane-sugar 2,924,107 tons. Adding to the above estimate of cane-sugar produced in the world during 1884–'85 the estimate of production of beet-sugar in Europe during 1886–'87, which is 2,580,000, and the approximate amount of sugar production of the world is shown to be:

	Tons.
Cane-sugar	2,924,107
Beet-sugar	2,580,000
Total	5,504,107

It appears, therefore, if these figures are to be relied upon, that the United States consumes more than one-fourth of all the sugar produced in the world, and produces less than 10 per cent. of the amount consumed.

SHALL ENGLAND CONQUER THE OREGON TERRITORY BY FREE TRADE?

The present conspiracy against the material interests of the Pacific coast reminds me of the remarkable utterances of an English statesman, Mr. Fox, nearly forty-three years ago, at Covent Garden Theater, London, April 9, 1845, in discussing the Oregon controversy, during President Polk's administration, when the rallying cry for political parties was "54° 40′ or fight." I ask the Secretary to read this remarkable prediction of Mr. Fox.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HISCOCK in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Quarrel about this! Why, we might just as well be invited by Peel and Polk to fight about mountains in the moon.

But let men have something to do with it; let those who have found no preferable home go there, and see what effect they can produce upon the best portions of the soil; as their numbers increase and their exertions tell, it will soon become more valuable. And when man has occupied it, when industry has driven its car of peaceful conquest around the borders of that vast land, when towns have arisen and cities appeared with their thronging numbers; when the Rocky Mountains are tunneled, and rail and canal have united the Atlantic and Pacific; when the waters of the Columbia swarm with steam-boats—why, then will be the time to talk of the Oregon territory. Then, without a regiment or line-of-battle ship, without bombarding any town whatever, free trade will conquer the Oregon territory for us or and will conquer the United State for us also, as far as it is desirable either for us or for them that there should be any conquest whatever in the case. Free trade will establish there all the insignia of conquest. When their products come here, and those of our industry return, there will be scarcely a laborer upon the pine forest that he is clearing but will wear upon his back, to his very shirt, the livery of Manchester. The knife with which he carves his game will have the mark of Sheffield upon its blade as a testimony of our supremacy. Every handkerchief waved upon the banks of the Missouri will be the waving of an English banner from Spitalfields. Throughout the country there will be marks of our skill and greatness, and tribute paid for us received not by warriors or governors, not coming directly into the national treasury, but flowing into the pockets of the industrious and toiling poor, refreshing trade, and enriching those who pursue it, giving them an imperial heritage beyond the wide Atlantic. Why, they will be conquered, for they will work for us; and what can the conquered do more for their masters? They will grow corn for us, they will grind it, and send us the flour; they will fatten pigs for us upon the peaches of their large wooded grounds; they will send us whatever they can produce that we want, and without asking us to put our hand in our pocket in order, by taxation, to pay a governor there for quarreling with their representatives, or soldiery to bayonet their multitudes. There is nothing upon earth worthier the name of empire than this; this is a nobler kind of dominion, less degrading both for the one party and for the other, less debasing than any sovereignty that was ever won by armies, and being so won, reluctantly swayed by scepters.

Mr. DOLPH. This passage has heretofore appeared to be a piece of brilliant oratory, the offspring of a vivid imagination. It now, in view of the recommendations of a Democratic Administration and the action of a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, seems almost like the voice of prophecy, and it begins to look as if the Cobden Club, re-enforced by the Administration, is about to succeed in conquering Oregon, destroying her wool interest, and bringing to pass the event predicted by Fox, when there will be scarcely a laborer in Oregon, not only in the pine forests that he is clearing, but in the valleys and on the hillsides he is tilling, but will wear on his back to his very shirt the costly livery of Manchester, and that to be paid for in wheat at 60 cents per bushel laid down in Liverpool.

In connection with this remarkable speech the comments of the leading newspapers in Great Britain upon the President's message are instructive, showing the estimate which was placed upon the message in England and the views of the English press as to the effect which his policy would have, if adopted by Congress, upon the industries of Great Britain. I have selected the following from a pamphlet entitled "British Comments on the President's Message;" and while I have not verified them by comparison with the original publications, I have no doubt they are correct.

BRITISH COMMENTS ON THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The London Spectator says that the message has "struck a blow at American protection."

The London Saturday Review says that the message "deals with a question which is as interesting to Englishmen as Americans," and it adds: "President Cleveland has devoted himself entirely to the tariff. It is impossible to recast this without touching directly the pockets of every citizen of the United States, and indirectly influencing the commercial interests of the world." It also says that in America the President's policy "means free trade." Its exact words are, "The President and the Democratic leaders have finally decided that they have nothing to gain by keeping measure any longer with the protectionists. They have, from whatever motive, resolved to adopt a free-trade policy."

The London Times says: "President Cleveland has addressed to the Federal Legislature a powerful and uncompromising argument in favor of repealing the heavy protective duties levied under the existing tariff." It adds: "As was to be expected, the protectionists have taken the alarm, and, as our correspondent at Philadelphia informs us, they are organizing for a determined resistance. They are no doubt right in believing that, whatever may be said of preserving the essence of the protective system and of ignoring free trade, the tariff can not be reduced to the strict proportions of a revenue corresponding to the limited and diminishing necessities of the Federal Government without admitting a great flood of foreign competition. No one would venture to propose the repeal of the internal imposts chargeable upon spirits, beer, and tobacco, and therefore the necessary reductions of taxation must be carried out exclusively in the customs department. It is calculated that to give effect to Mr. Cleveland's policy duties to the amount of some £16,000,000 a year, about two-fifths of the entire customs revenue, must be surrendered. This operation may not establish free trade in the strict sense of the term, but it will to a great extent make trade free."

The London Statist, an organ of English banking interests, says: "Mr. Cleveland shows clearly that a sweeping reduction of the tariff is inevitable." It adds, however: "The message, nevertheless, has had a depressing effect upon the stock markets. There is hardly a single industry in the United States that is not interested in maintaining protective duties."

The London Post says: "We shall be much mistaken if the effect of this state communication will not be to strengthen considerably the case of free-traders in all parts of the world. It will be regarded as a step in the right direction by all who believe in the soundness of free-trade principles."

The London Standard says: "When the inevitable consequences of adherence to a protectionist tariff are set forth by a man in Mr. Cleveland's position in the language which he has used, free trade becomes at once a living issue."

The London Globe says: "The President, it is true, does not call his new departure by that ugly name; on the contrary, he waxes indignant at the supposition that he has come over to free trade. But to American ears the whole message must be redolent of Cobdenism in a slightly modified form. * * * This remarkable utterance will be certain to exercise an absolutely paramount influence on the next Presidential election. Party names and party ties are thrown into hotch-potch. The governing issue at the contest will lie between protection and free trade."

The London Daily News says: "The President's message is expected to make tariff reform the principal question in the Presidential campaign next year, and there is certainly none upon which the American people have stronger reasons for making up their minds. * * * The stone now set rolling will not stop until it has broken the idol of protection in pieces."

The Glasgow Herald says: "President Cleveland does not avow himself to be, and evidently does not regard himself as a free-trader. Yet whether Mr. Cleveland is in the right or in the wrong he can not help adopting free-trade arguments and bolstering them up with free-trade illustrations. Take, for example, his argument against the wool tariff, that the farming class lose vastly more by the increased prices of clothes than they gain from the enhanced price of wool. This reads like an extract from some old speech of Mr. Bright's."

The People's Journal, published at Dundee, says: "The change in the American fiscal policy will be beneficial to this country, and the prospect of it has diffused fresh hope throughout business circles in the city. The tariff reform which the President recommends goes as far, at least, as the abolition or reduction of the duties on raw materials. Should Congress give effect to this proposal its immediate result would be an enormous stimulus to English industry. Iron, though a product of manufacture, is in one sense a raw material, and the removal of the duties on iron would stimulate the iron industry in this country. The abolition of the duty on wool, which the President mentions, would also probably lead to a great export of wool to America and a considerable rise in the price of that commodity. The first effect of the adoption of the President's policy would be a great increase in our trade with the United States."

The Haddingtonshire (Scotland) Courier says of the message: "It is not the foreigner alone who pays for the blessing of protection. The President of the United States is not satisfied with a system that leads to such results, and he recommends a revision of the tariff, with a view of allowing those raw materials that now pay a heavy duty to enter American ports free. This is a great step toward free trade."

The Scotsman says: "It may be admitted that large reductions in the duties on imported manufactured goods would produce great distress in many parts of the country," meaning the United States, and adds: "The free importation of iron, coal, and wool would be a great boon to British producers. * * * If it were accompanied with reductions in the tariff upon cotton, woolen, and other manufactures the artisans of this country would derive a marked benefit from it. If once the United States finds herself on the road to free trade she will hardly know where to stop."

The London Iron and Steel Trades Journal says: "The facts set forth in the President's message, though by no means new, are now brought so prominently under the notice of the American Congress and of American citizens that a violent stimulus must be given to the party which advocates entire freedom of trade."

The London Iron says: "The message of President Cleveland to the United States Congress is the preliminary to a movement which, we trust, will gain in strength."

The London Ironmonger says: "Dealing with the message as it stands, it would certainly seem to indicate a greater leaning towards free-trade principles on the part of the United States Cabinet than has been observable hitherto."

In two leading articles the London Colliery Guardian for December 16 says: "No event of greater magnitude has occurred in the iron, steel, and mining industries for a long time past than the proposal which is now made to effect a radical change in the fiscal policy of the United States. America has been of immense value as a market to the trade of this country. The effect which, on iron and steel making, the bare possibility even of the admittance of raw material free of duty, together with reductions in the duties on some descriptions of iron and steel, has produced upon our exchanges is a portent in itself. The Scotch warrant-holders took greater advantage of the occurrence than even the probabilities authorized. If President Cleveland should be able to carry out his plan for admission into America free of duty one of the first effects which would be produced on the English iron trade would be the transference of much of the enormous stocks of pig in the Scotch and Cleveland markets to United States ports. Shipments of hematites from Scotland and from the west coast of England would also increase. The iron-ore mines of Lancashire and West Cumberland would be certain to do a greatly enlarged trade with the United States."

The same paper for January 6, in an article on "The London Coal Trade of 1887," says: "President Cleveland, in his address to the American Congress, has laid open a very fair field in connection with the export trade, and if, with the import duties of last year, we were able to send consignments of coal and iron to America, it is only reasonable to suppose that if the President's suggestion is adopted and the duties removed, we may find a far larger opening in the American continent than ever has been known before."

In the same issue of the Colliery Guardian, in an article on "The American Iron Trade," we find the following observations: "One circumstance which appears to check the development of new business is the announcement of a free-trade policy in what we may fairly term the famous message submitted to Congress a few weeks since by President Cleveland. Hitherto the American iron trade has possessed the advantage—real or supposed—of a protectionist régime; and, of course, a departure from a protectionist policy—or even a threatened departure—is calculated to exercise a disturbing influence on current business. American metallurgy has reposed so long upon extreme protectionist ideas that the President's message has fallen upon it with something of the effect of a thunderclap, and has created a widespread feeling of uneasiness and alarm."

In its annual summary of the principal events of 1887 the London Times refers to two American events. One is the fisheries dispute, and the other is the President's message. Concerning the latter it says: "The President's condemnation of the existing tariff is not based theoretically on free-trade grounds, but on the practical argument that it is monstrous to extract from the pockets of the community taxes to the amount of many millions not required for the ordinary business of government. Nevertheless, both protectionists and free-traders perceive that, if Mr. Cleveland's policy be carried out, a great advance will be made toward free trade."

In an article on "The Coal Trade in 1887 and its Prospects for 1888," the London Times says: "If President Cleveland's tariff reforms are carried, English goods and iron and steel largely will go to the States in greatly increased porportions."

WHAT DOES TARIFF FOR REVENUE ONLY MEAN?

The Mills bill, with the exceptions made in the interest of Southern industries, is evidently designed to be in the direction of "tariff for revenue only," and it will be profitable to ascertain what that term means as used by the Administration party.

If it be supposed by any one that a tariff for revenue only, as advocated by the opponents of the protective system, means only a tariff which produces a revenue not in excess of the ordinary requirements of the Government, it is a mistake. No party in this country advocates, or has ever advocated, a tariff which would produce a revenue larger than was needed for the legitimate purposes of the Government.

It is true that at the present time, owing to the fact that the balance of our interest-bearing public debt is not payable at the option of the Government, and that the House of Representatives has failed to agree upon a plan for reduction of revenues, our revenues derived from duties on imports, from direct taxation, and from other sources is in excess of the present requirements of the Government, but this has been so only since the 3 per cent. bonds were paid off. All that is claimed by protectionists is that the revenue necessary for the support of the Government shall be, in part, raised by duties upon imports, and that those duties shall be so laid as to afford incidental protection to such home industries as are brought by the importation of foreign merchandise into competition with foreign capital and foreign labor.

When the condition of the Treasury will admit of it, they say that articles of necessity produced abroad, which we can not successfully produce at home, with such incidental protection as the tariff affords, should be admitted free of duty. Among such articles are tea, coffee, and similar articles of general use now admitted free of duty. This is a protective tariff, not one to produce an excess of revenue, but one no greater than is necessary to produce a revenue sufficient for the economical conduct of the Government, levied with discrimination upon articles of foreign production which come in competition with those things which we manufacture and produce ourselves. On the other hand, I do not understand that what is meant by free trade is that the custom-houses shall be abandoned and that no duties shall be laid upon any imported articles. There are few persons, and those I think impracticable theorists, who advocate such a doctrine.

The advocates for a tariff for revenue only do not propose to repeal the tariff laws. They propose to remodel them upon a different principle, without reference to protection of home industries. Their theory is, that a duty levied upon an article which we do not produce—coffee, for instance—is only a tax, and it is a matter of indifference whether that tax is reached by adding to it the price of an imported article or by direct taxation; that if a million dollars is raised by a direct tax the people will have a million dollars less to buy with, while if it is raised by duty upon imported articles the articles upon which it is laid costs a million dollars more than they would but for the duty. They contend, also, that when the duty is laid upon an article manufactured in the United States the cost of the imported article is not only increased, but the cost of all such articles manufactured at home is also increased. Hence we find the ablest member of the cabinet of President Cleveland, Secretary Manning, reaffirming the doctrine of Adam Smith on the question and advocating the repeal of the duty on wool and other articles which come in direct competition with the producers of raw material and with manufactures in the United States, and recommending the retention of the duty on sugar, on the ground that there is not a sufficient amount of sugar raised in the United States as compared with the amount consumed to affect the price, and so nothing is paid by the people on account of the tax on sugar, except the duties which go into the Treasury.

To show that tariff for revenue only means a tariff levied upon articles which do not come in competition with articles produced at home, instead of upon articles which do come in such competition, I quote the following from the last report of Secretary Manning:

As nothing in the ordinary course of business is imported unless the price here of domestic as well as the imported article is higher by the amount of duty and the cost of sea transit than the price abroad, the preference of the tax-payer for duties upon articles not produced in the United States is justified by the fact that such duties cost him no more than the Treasury of his country gets.

And again:

The true ground of choice is that among all articles thus consumed within our own borders some are better suited for an equitable taxation than others. They are universally consumed, like sugar, or easily identified, like coffee, or their consumption may be safely impeded, like distilled spirits or fermented liquors, or tobacco.

And again:

Our own sugar crop is so very small a part of the total amount of sugar we consume that sugar ranks next to articles wholly produced abroad, like tea and coffee, in suitability for taxation on the ground that its consumption is universal, that the tax is easily and cheaply collected, that the increased price paid by the consumer is an unconsidered trifle, and that what is taken from the tax-payer goes into the tax-payer's treasury, not in a few private bank accounts.

And again:

I respectfully recommend to Congress that they confer upon the wage-earners of the United States the boon of untaxed clothing, and in order thereto the immediate passage of an act simply and solely placing raw wool upon the free-list.

The President's recent message follows in the line of his former Secretary, and advocates the levying of the duties upon articles which do not come in competition with American products, and says, speaking of the tariff laws, "These laws, as their primary and plain effect, raise the price to consumers of all articles imported and subject to duty, by precisely the sum paid for such duties;" a doctrine, by the way, long since completely and thoroughly exploded and shown to be false.

Again he says:

This reference to the operation of our tariff laws is not made by way of instruction, but in order that we may be constantly reminded of the manner in which they impose a burden upon those who consume domestic products as well as those who consume imported articles and thus create a tax upon all our people.

Again he says:

When the number of farmers engaged in wool-raising is compared with all the farmers in the country, and the small proportion they bear to our population is considered, when it is made apparent that, in the case of a large part of those who own sheep, the benefit of the present tariff on wool is illusory, * * * reasons are suggested why the removal or reduction of this duty should be included in a revision of our tariff laws.

And again:

The radical reduction of the duties imposed upon raw material used in manufactures, or its free importation, is of course an important factor in any effort to reduce the price of these necessaries.

HOW SHOULD THE REVENUES BE REDUCED?

The reduction of the revenues under the protective policy should be made in such a manner as not to destroy our manufacturing industries or to disturb unnecessarily the business interests of the country. Instead of placing upon the free-list articles which come in direct competition with our great domestic industries, as is proposed by the Mills bill, if there are articles now subject to duty which are not produced in the United States they should be placed on the free-list. If time or circumstances have rendered a revision and readjustment of the duties upon importations which compete with domestic products necessary, it should be done with care and by the friends of the present system.

When this is done, in my judgment a further reduction should be obtained by a removal or reduction of the duties upon those imports which, while they come into competition with home industries, so largely exceed the domestic production as to make protection of the industry of less consequence to the people than protection to other larger industries. I would therefore, for the same reason that Secretary Manning selected sugar as a proper import from which to raise revenue—namely, that "our own crop of sugar is so very small a part of the total amount of sugar we consume that sugar ranks next to articles wholly produced abroad"—select sugar as one article upon which the duties should be decreased in order to obtain the necessary reduction of revenue. I am not in favor of repealing the

TAX ON SPIRITS.

From the time of Adam Smith, perhaps long before his day, all political economists have agreed that the heaviest taxes should be imposed on those commodities the consumption of which is especially prejudicial to the interests of the people, and most governments have acted upon this principle. To it we owe the existence in the United States of the tobacco tax and tax on spirits and fermented liquor. The tax on these articles is the source of a large portion of our revenue. The argument in favor of such taxes is, first, that if the tax should decrease the consumption of these articles, instead of being a detriment to the country and to individuals, it would be a benefit, promoting the physical, moral, and social condition of the people and increasing their capacity for production; and, second, all who choose to abstain from the use of taxed articles can do so without injury, the articles not being necessaries of life, and that the tax is therefore voluntarily assumed by whoever pays it. It does not seem necessary to enlarge upon this argument. The truth is generally admitted, and, with the exception of a portion of the temperance people, who I believe are wrong in their theory in regard to the matter, and possibly the manufacturers, no one in asking for the repeal of the tax on spirits and fermented liquors used as a beverage.

I do not believe that the repeal of the tax would be acceptable to the people of the United States generally, and I can not myself consent to such a repeal for the purpose of saving the duties upon sugar, an article of prime necessity and of universal and every-day use, and the production of which time and experience have demonstrated can not be stimulated to any considerable proportions.

As to the tax upon tobacco, I believe that ought to be retained also; but for the sake of agreeing upon some basis of reduction, I am disposed to consent to repeal the tax.

PROTECTION TO AMERICAN LABORERS.

What would a tariff for revenue only—that is, a tariff laid only upon sugar, tea, coffee, and articles which do not come in competition with American products—do for this country? It would remove protection from our manufacturing interests and bring the cheap labor of the world into competition with the laboring population of the United States, and as quickly as the waters of the sea seek their level when disturbed by a tide would the wages of the laboring classes in Europe and in the United States find a level. First would come suspension and ruin of our manufacturing establishments and suffering and want to our laboring population, and if the policy was not quickly reversed our manufacturing industries, if they ever arose from the ruin, would arise only when labor was as cheap in the United States as in England.

In the political economy of Adam Smith and his disciples—the tariff-for-revenue-only advocates—man as a laborer has the same position as any other machine through which productive force is exerted. They are oblivious to the boundary lines of countries, and recognize no right or duty of a government by legislation to secure to its own laboring men employment and fair wages by excluding the products of the labor of other countries. In no country of the world does the condition of the laboring man at all favorably compare with his condition in the United States, and at no period in the history of the United States has his condition improved with the rapidity it has during the existence of the present protective tariff. He who strikes down the protection the laboring man enjoys against the cheap labor of Europe and Asia strikes at the prosperity, happiness, intelligence, and independence of the masses of the American people, and thereby at the prosperity of the country and the existence of republican institutions.

The senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who spent the last recess of Congress in Europe, and by personal observation and inquiry learned the rate of wages in England and upon the Continent, tells us that in Italy women work in the government lace factory for from 8 to 12 cents a day; that in the cotton mills near Naples they receive 20 cents a day, while the men work for 40 cents; that in the silk mills the women receive 20 cents a day, the men from 40 to 50 cents, and that the farming is mostly done by women at from 16 to 20 cents a day; that in Belgium "the women make the land blossom like a rose at daily wages from 20 to 25 cents," and that skilled women in the lace factories at Brussels earn but 20 cents a day, and that from 40 to 50 cents a day was regarded as satisfactory wages in the cotton mills; and that in the iron and steel works $4 a week would furnish an ample supply of common laborers; that the "average annual earnings of able-bodied men in Germany will not exceed $115, and of women $85," while the agricultural laborers and women employed in outdoor work earn still less; that in England 80,000 women are working in cotton mills at Manchester for from 30 to 35 cents a day, and that 2 shillings, and in favored localities 2 shillings and 6 pence, a day is the highest wages paid to common men laborers, while hundreds of thousands can not get work at all; that in Scotland skilled workmen are paid from 3 shillings to 7 shillings a day, the large majority not over 4 shillings; coal miners from $5.59 a week to $5.80 a week; iron workers from $5.35 to $5.59 a week; and common laborers from 54 to 62 cents a day; that in Ireland the very best of house servants could be obtained for $1 a week. Flax breakers asked about $4 a week, hacklers about the same, spinners and weavers $2 to $2.50. The women at work on the farms, he was told by good authority, were glad of 20 cents a day. He says:

Of the countries I visited the wages in Switzerland and Italy were the lowest, Germany next, then Belgium, then France, while those in England were highest.

The Democratic doctrine of a tariff for revenue only, among other false theories, assumes that the great desideratum is the privilege of buying where you can buy cheapest. If we all at all times had an unfailing supply of the means with which to purchase, and it needed no exertion of our own to supply our wants, this would be so. But the truth is, the great mass of the people live upon the proceeds of their daily labor, and no matter how abundant and cheap the necessaries of life are, as soon as they are out of employment their means of purchasing is gone. Unless they can market their labor daily they can not buy at any price. During the commercial crisis of 1872 crowds of unemployed men assembled in our cities demanding work and clamoring for bread. The riots of Pittsburgh, Hornellsville, Chicago, and San Francisco were not on account of the cost of living. Bread was quite as cheap then as it is now. The trouble was not that the necessities of life were too dear, but that there was no sufficient demand for labor. When labor is in demand at remunerative prices the laboring man is enabled to supply himself with the necessaries of life with the labor of his hands.

It is evident, therefore, that the poor man is not benefited by the cheapening to him of the necessaries of life if that is done by giving the labor, which is his only means of support, to the cheaper Chinese and European laborers beyond the seas, but that he is benefited by the creation of a diversity of industries by which continuous and remunerative employment is provided for him. Labor is the source of all wealth. It is estimated that 90 per cent. of the value of all manufactured articles is the result of the labor expended upon them. When by diversified industries labor is furnished for every member of a society or people, so that all can be profitably employed, the wealth of that people must be constantly increasing; but when some are unemployed, consumers and not producers of wealth, just to that extent the prosperity of the country is retarded. So sensible are the laboring men of the fact, that their prosperity depends upon the certainty of employment at remunerative wages, that on the Pacific coast they early cried out against the immigration of Chinese laborers into this country, and the laboring men of the United States now unite in demanding, not only restriction of the coming of Chinese laborers to our shores, but the prevention of the importation of contract labor from Europe.

If the labor of this country can not stand the competition of the Chinese upon the Pacific Coast, and a few thousand imported Italian laborers upon the Atlantic Coast, how could it stand the competition of 404,000,000 of Chinese, 40,000,000 of Japanese, the 60,000,000 of the population of India, and the pauper millions of Europe, under a free-trade policy?

There never was a greater fallacy than the one being so persistently advocated by the free-traders, and which was presented by the late Secretary of the Treasury, that the greater efficiency of our laborers, and the consequently low labor cost of our agricultural and manufactured products, enables us to compete successfully with cheap labor of other countries. This theory assumes that as soon as the artisan, mechanic, or laborer of England or Ireland sets foot on the shores of America and becomes an American laborer, his labor becomes at once so productive that the cost of the product of his labor is largely reduced.

It is no doubt true that as the laborer becomes more intelligent, and is better fed, he will accomplish more in a given time; but so far as manufacturers are concerned, there is nothing to show that there is any considerable difference between the efficiency of American laborers and laborers in England. It is probable that upon the great prairies of the West, and other wheat-growing regions of the United States, owing not so much to the superiority of our laborers as to the richness of the soil and cheapness of land, agricultural products are raised with less labor cost than in European countries; but everywhere in the West this advantage is more than counterbalanced by the great distance which our agricultural products have to be transported to market, and consequently larger proportion of the value of the products at the locality where they are consumed, which is required to pay the cost of transportation.

Such arguments show the straits to which our opponents are driven to avoid the damaging fact clearly established by the history of every civilized country upon the face of the globe—that free trade means the free competition of the cheap labor of one country with the well-paid laborer of another, and a leveling down of the inequality of wages and interest on capital.

COMPETITION AMONG DOMESTIC MANUFACTURERS SUFFICIENT TO SECURE LOWEST PRICE CONSISTENT WITH FAIR WAGES TO THE LABORER.

It is claimed that the American manufacturers are enabled by a protective tariff to make excessive profits. The proposition, to my mind, is absurd. Can it be that in a nation of 60,000,000 of people noted for their resistless energy, their enterprise and intelligence, with millions of unemployed capital deposited in the savings banks and other depositories, and money worth but 5 per cent. per annum, any branch of manufactures would long be allowed to remain in the hands of existing manufacturers if they were making undue profits? No. Whenever any particular industry is found to be sufficiently profitable under existing conditions of the protective tariff and fair wages to American labor to justify the investment of capital in it, thousands of American citizens with the necessary capital stand ready to enter the lists and compete for the profits. Competition among ourselves is quite sufficient to force the profits of every manufacturing industry and every other industry down to the lowest point at which it can be carried on by American labor fairly remunerated. And such has been our experience. Protection to our industries from the ruinous competition of European countries has enabled American manufactures to be started, and straightway competition has forced down the price until many of the manufactured articles can be bought much cheaper to-day than before the protective duties were imposed on the foreign importation. I can not do better than to quote from the recent speech of the senior Senator from Maine on this subject. He says:

But, says the President, the tariff raises the prices to consumers by precisely the sums paid for such duties, or, in other words, a duty is a tax paid by the purchaser, and yet he may examine the entire list of the industries of this country, encouraged and sustained by the protective tariff, and not one can be found justifying his proposition, except sugar, and that only because up to now, for climatic reasons, competition has not done its perfect work. I assert the very contrary, that even "the present vicious, inequitable, and illogical" tariff laws have decreased to the consumer the prices of all the products of protected industries, other than sugar, by more than 25 per cent. since they have been in force, and if I had time could bring forward to its support hundreds of unimpeachable witnesses.

Under the encouragement of our tariff, that is, a duty of about 58 per cent., the manufacture of glass has increased enormously in this country, employing thousands of men at good wages, and yet you can buy a foot of plate-glass to-day for $1 which cost $2.50 in 1860.

In 1860 salt was free; the price at Chicago was $2 a barrel. In 1861 a duty of 6 cents a hundred was laid—later on 24 cents a hundred—and in 1880 it was selling in Chicago for 75 cents a barrel, and now in Michigan for 60 cents.

WORSTED CLOTHS

In 1860 there were 3 mills in the country, wages low, business poor, production small. We encouraged it with a heavy duty, and in 1883 we were running 5,000 looms, employing 75,000 workmen, consuming 50,000,000 pounds of wool, producing 15,000,000 yards annually, with a capital of $20,000,000. During this time worsted cloths declined in price from 35 to 40 per cent. In 1883 the duty was reduced; by a vicious construction of the law a greater reduction still was made; now one-third of our looms are idle. In 1883 we imported a little less than $500,000 worth of these goods, last year nearly $5,000,000. If the President succeeds in inducing Congress to still further reduce, all of our mills will close, we shall once more import all we need from England, and the prices will go back to those of 1860.

POTTERY.

In 1860 pottery carried a revenue duty of 24 per cent. The business was insignificant, the wages low, only two or three thousand people employed. The Morrill tariff act levied a duty of [40 per cent., subsequently increased to 55, and to-day we make pottery in every State in the Union except Florida, employ an immense force of help, pay wages higher than in 1860, and yet as much can be bought now for $2.50 as could be then for $4.

COTTON GOODS.

The duty on some of the cheaper lines of cotton goods is nearly as great as the price of the fabric, and yet they were never furnished to the people as cheaply as now. They are retailing in my city at a lower price than in Manchester, England

SILK.

Silk manufacture in this country is almost entirely due to the Morrill tariff act, which laid a duty of over 50 per cent. In 1860 only 4,000 workmen were engaged in the business. To-day 40,000 men and women are employed; capital invested, $17,000,000; annual pay-roll, $9,000,000; product valued at $50,000,000. In New Jersey alone in 1886 the production of the silk looms was worth $28,000,000, employed 20,000 people, paying them annually nearly $7,000,000.

How about the prices? I give the decline as shown by the price lists of 1865 and 1882:

	Per cent.
Machine twist	56
Fine silks and scarfs	55
Serges and twilled silks	62
Handkerchiefs	62
Ribbons	54
Laces	50
Dress goods	30 to 35

Take soda-ash. We use it in enormous quantities in the manufacture of glass, soap, and for bleaching purposes. Six years ago we imported all we used and paid $48 a ton. A duty was laid on it of one-fourth cent a pound. Six hundred thousand dollars of English capital was induced to come to Syracuse, unite with an equal amount there, erect an immense factory, which I had the pleasure of visiting a short time since. The product of the mill was 150 tons daily, requiring for its production 300 tons of lime rock, 300 tons of salt, 300 tons of coal, and 5 tons of ammonia; all, while in the earth, of little value, 90 per cent. of the worth of the manufactured product being labor. This concern employs directly 750 men; wages average $1.75 a day, while the English wages in the same business average a little less than a dollar. How about the price? During the first quarter of their operations in 1884 the price fell to $45 a ton; the second quarter to $36, while in the last invoice I saw, only a month or two since, it was a shade less than $30.

But why pursue this further? Ten thousand such witnesses might be summoned and testify as clearly and convincingly as these, and then the free-trader, with the President of the United States championing his cause, would still insist that a duty was a tax paid by the consumer. Well, Mr. President, why is it not, and how does a protective tariff decrease the price to consumers?

The worsted manufacture will illustrate it. We were purchasing all of our goods in England; there the price was determined, not here. Of course the highest possible was fixed. We imposed a heavy duty on the cloths, and for a brief period prices strengthened, but encouraged by this protection capital emerged from the banks, bonds were converted into money, worsted mills were built all over the North until $20,000,000 were invested. Then we established the market price, not England. Competition at home became a powerful factor in its determination. The mills were thoroughly reorganized, economy became a science, the inventive genius of the country was called upon for new and improved machinery; it responded generously, as it always does here, the product was doubled with the same power, and the prices continually fell, while the wages of the operatives increased.

THE FARMER BENEFITED BY PROTECTION.

Protection to home industries is quite as important to the farmer as to the manufacturer. This is denied by the free-traders and a persistent effort is made to make the producers of raw material think that protection of home industries works to their disadvantage and to the advantage of the manufacturing classes, and there is much absurd talk about producers and consumers, just as if one class produced and another consumed, and every citizen was not of necessity a consumer of the product of the labor of others, and all should be, if they are not, producers. It is not difficult for one who will candidly examine the question to see that the farmers of the country need not only direct protection for food products by duties upon such articles produced abroad, but the indirect protection, which is afforded by the imposition of duties upon imported manufactured articles. The foreign demand for our agricultural products is limited. It is estimated that 92 per cent. of such products are consumed at home and only 8 per cent. exported.

The bulk of our corn and wheat and other food products is consumed at home by our own citizens engaged in the diversified industries called into existence and kept alive by the policy of protection which creates employment for our people.

If we had free trade with the Canadian provinces the farmers of that country, with cheaper labor than we have, and without the restriction upon Chinese and pauper labor which we have enacted, and which we hope will be increased, would undersell our farmers in our own markets, and the wheat and other agricultural products of British Columbia, Manitoba, and the other Canadian provinces would come in direct and disastrous competition with our wheat. With the great increase of wheat production in Russia caused by the introduction of machinery and new methods of farming, and the successful cultivation and rapidly increasing production of wheat in India under the powerful stimulus of the construction by the Government of new lines of transportation and the opening up of vast regions adapted to wheat cultivation, and by the policy of Great Britain by which the manufacturing industries of India have been destroyed and the whole population driven to the cultivation of the soil to wring from it the means of supporting an expensive government with a standing army and to pay interest to England upon a large public debt, it is not unlikely that the United States may yet find the present tariff on wheat a protection not only against the wheat of the Canadian provinces, but against that of Russia and British India raised by the wretchedly housed, clothed, and fed laborers of Russia and the ryots of India.

The same thing is true in regard to all the producers of raw materials. Our coal mines along the Atlantic Slope, and in California, Oregon, and Washington Territory, have to compete with the mines of Nova Scotia and British Columbia; our lumber manufacturers in Michigan, Minnesota, Oregon, and Washington Territory with the lumber manufacturers of the Dominion of Canada with their cheap labor and with vast forests of timber just beginning to be utilized as they are made accessible by new lines of transportation, and our wool-growers with the wool of Canada, Europe, Australia, and South America. Nor is the protection for agricultural products by duty upon foreign imports the only benefit which has been extended by the Government to the farmer and producers of raw material. The Republican party gave them the homestead law by which the settlement of the national domain was stimulated and farms offered to every citizen, and the Government sells the mineral and timber lands at nominal prices. Large sums are appropriated for the improvement of the navigation of the water ways of the country for the purpose of cheapening rates of transportation by bringing transportation by rail into competition with water transportation. The construction of new lines of railroads has been aided by the Government for the purpose of affording additional means of transportation. The Agricultural Bureau is maintained for the purpose of diffusing information on the subject of agriculture and introducing new and improved varieties of cereals and other agricultural products. Lands have been granted for the establishment and maintenance of agricultural colleges, and money appropriated for agricultural experimental stations.

RECIPROCITY IN TRADE A FALLACY.

There never was a greater fallacy than the argument so frequently used against the protection system, that there is reciprocity in trade and that if the people of the United States refuse to buy England's surplus manufactured cheap-labor products, she will refuse to buy our surplus agricultural products.

If it were true that the United States or the people of the United States do buy of England, or that England or the people of England buy of the United States, then such a thing as refusal by one nation to purchase of the other might occur, unless there were reciprocal purchases. But this is not true as to England and the United States, or as to any other country. The people of the United States do buy merchandise abroad, but they purchase from citizens and not from governments. When a merchant in New York desires to purchase goods abroad he does not stop to inquire what country takes the most of our exports; no question of reciprocity or even of patriotism controls him. He is governed by the universal law of mercantile transactions, his interest. He buys where he can buy the cheapest, that is, where he can obtain the most and best of the article desired for the least money. The coffee merchant will, therefore, as he has done for years, buy his coffee of citizens of Brazil, notwithstanding our imports from Brazil are seven or eight times as great as our exports to that country. Neither is imported merchandise paid for in exports. It is paid for in gold, the medium of exchange between nations.

When the wheat merchant of Liverpool desires a cargo of wheat he does not stop to consider whether the United States is importing largely from England or whether the balance of trade between Russia and England is in favor of Russia or England, or the fact that India is largely indebted to the citizens of London, and he is governed by no sentiment of patriotism or regard for national prosperity. He deals in wheat to make a profit, and that depends in part upon the price he pays for it, and he, too, is governed by the universal law of mercantile affairs—he buys where he he can buy cheapest and sells where he can obtain the best price. It is so evident that the character and amount of trade between nations as well as between individuals are not determined by what is called reciprocity, but by the laws of supply and demand which regulate the buying and selling price, that proof seems hardly necessary, but if proof is required it is abundant.

The theory that for every import from any one country there must be a corresponding export to that country, or even that for every import from all countries there must be a corresponding export, unless, indeed, you include in exports gold and silver and evidences of debt, is false. The official trade reports of England show that for thirty years, without a single exception, her imports have exceeded her exports. The figures for the last ten years, as taken from the trade reports printed by order of Parliament, are as follows: From 1875 to 1884 the total imports were £3,913,458,389, and the total exports were £2,776,564,775; an excess of imports over exports for the period named of £1,136,893,614, or $5,502,565,091.

During the same period the imports from France were £414,531,173; the exports were £278,694,446; an excess of imports over exports of £135,836,727, or $658,771,078.

These annual reports also show a large balance of trade against England during the period aforesaid in favor of Sweden and Norway, Spain, Russia, China, Egypt, Peru, and other countries.

The same disparity will appear by an examination of our own trade reports, or those of any other nation, no matter on which side the balance of trade may be. It will not appear that there is necessarily any fixed relation between the amount of exports and imports to or from any country. In our own case there are two instances so marked that they are worthy of notice.

In the report of the commission appointed under the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884, "to ascertain and report upon the best modes of securing more intimate international and commercial relations between the United States and the several countries of Central and South America," I find the following statement:

The records of the Treasury Department show a direct commerce between the United States and sixty-six nations. Of these Great Britain has 38.90 per cent. of our entire commerce; Germany has 8.92 per cent.; France, 8.62 per cent.; Canada, 5.87 per cent.; and Cuba, 4.84 per cent. Brazil comes sixth in the list, having 4.18 per cent., or nearly half as much as France, but unfortunately our commerce with Brazil is very largely in favor of that country, the imports exceeding the exports nearly 700 per cent.

Of our entire exports only 1.19 per cent. go to Brazil, while she furnishes 7.53 per cent. of our entire imports. We import more from Brazil than from any other nation except England, France, Germany, and Cuba; but in the list of nations to which we export she stands number twelve.

Our trade with Brazil is greater than that with any of the South American countries, but in the last twenty years the balance against us has reached the enormous sum of $579,000,000. The imports during that time have been $724,000,000, and the exports only $145,000,000.

TRADE IN COFFEE.

Of coffee alone we buy annually nearly 400,000,000 pounds, of the value varying with the market price from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000. In addition to this we take annually about $8,000,000 worth of crude rubber, $5,000,000 worth of raw sugar, nearly $2,000,000 worth of hides, and about $1,000,000 worth of miscellaneous merchandise.

Our total annual imports from Brazil average nearly $50,000,000 of the raw product of her soil. On the other hand, as has been stated, our exports to that country are comparatively small, being from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 annually, and consisting mostly of provisions.

Nearly all of the manufactured articles imported into Brazil come from France and England.

* * * * * * *

The balance of her trade with the United States annually averages about $40,000,000 in favor of Brazil, while in her commerce with England the balance is invariably on the other side.

From a table showing the exports to Brazil from the United States, Great Britain, and France, it appears that for twenty years, from 1863 to 1882, inclusive, the United States exported to that country merchandise to the value of $138,190,807, and that Great Britain during the same period exported merchandise to the value of $629,002,274; and that during a period of twenty years, from 1865 to 1884, inclusive, the United States imported from Brazil merchandise to the value of $724,014,250, and exported to that country $145,994,246, being an excess of imports over exports of $579,020,004.

Under the reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands, admitting sugar free of duty, our imports from the Hawaiian Islands amounted during the ten years ending June 30, 1886, to $61,100,471, while our exports to the islands for the same period amounted to only $25,991,270—an excess of imports over exports of $35,109,201.

These figures prove the utter fallacy of the proposition that in order to sell our surplus products to England, or to any other country, we must buy of her or that country. The truth is that we might admit free of duty into the United States the manufactures of England, destroy our own industries, and stop our factories and drive the portion of our people now engaged in manufactures to farming to swell our surplus agricultural products, and England would buy no more wheat abroad than was needed to feed her people, and no more cotton than would be required for her cotton manufactures, and would buy that of India if by the labor of Indian ryots it could be produced cheaper than in the United States. And on the other hand, if we should increase the duties until not a dollar's worth of England's cheap labor products could enter the United States, England would continue to buy our wheat and cotton just so long as she could buy cheaper of us than of Russia and India, and no longer.

THE CAUSE OF THE DECLINE IN THE FOREIGN WHEAT MARKET.

For the purpose of showing the value of our exports of wheat, flour, and cotton, and their relative value as compared with our total exports, I have compiled from the reports of our foreign trade a statement of the total value of the exports of those articles for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1886, and June 30, 1887, which is as follows:

Total exports for the years ending June 30, 1886, and June 30, 1887.

	1887.	1886.	Increase.
Total domestic exports	$703,022,923	$665,964,529	$37,058,394
Foreign manufacture	13,160,288	13,560,301	.....
Agricultural products	523,073,774	486,134,753	36,939,019
Gold and silver	13,287,351	10,353,168	.....
Exports of wheat and flour	142,666,563	88,705,670	.....
Exports of cotton	206,222,057	205,085,642	.....
Total	348,888,620	293,791,312	.....

The value of our exports of wheat, flour, and cotton for the year ending June 30, 1887, was very nearly one-half of the total value of our domestic exports, and about two-thirds of the value of all our agricultural exports. When, therefore, the advocates of a tariff for revenue only tell us if our manufacturers can not compete with the cheap labor of Europe they should turn their attention to agriculture, they mean that they should go to raising wheat and cotton for export. As this contingency may happen if a sufficient number of people engaged in farming can be deceived and made to believe that the tariff which protects domestic manufactures is beneficial only to those engaged in manufacturing, I have thought it worth while to endeavor to ascertain what market we should have for a large increased surplus of these products, what competition they would meet, and what price they would probably command.

As I have already shown, reciprocity in trade is a fallacy. We might buy all our manufactured articles abroad and it would not increase our foreign market for breadstuffs, and if it did increase the foreign market for cotton it would be only to the extent that our domestic manufactures are destroyed. I find that the area of land in cultivation for wheat has increased since 1874 50 per cent. There are considerable tracts of wheat land yet to be brought under cultivation, but not the amount claimed by the free-trade advocates.

From 1826 to 1855 the average annual exportation of wheat was less than 9,000,000 bushels.

The following table, taken from the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1886, shows the exportation of wheat, and flour in its equivalent of wheat, by decennial periods from 1831 to 1880, and by years from 1881 to 1886:

From the foregoing it appears that while neither the acreage nor the yield of wheat in the United States has increased since 1880, the price per bushel as well as the total value of the crop has decreased. That the value of the export of wheat and flour has decreased from $212,745,742 in 1881 to $88,705,670 in 1886, and that the price of wheat dropped from $1.25 a bushel in 1879–'80 to 87 cents a bushel in 1885–'86. And it is with this prospect for a foreign market the farmers are told that it would be better for the home market for agricultural products created by those engaged in manufactures to be destroyed and for the laborers engaged in manufacturing industries to go to farming to help swell the surplus wheat product to pay for English merchandise.

WHEAT PRODUCTION IN BRITISH INDIA.

Judge Bonham, a citizen of Oregon, is consul-general of the United States at Calcutta. He was appointed by President Cleveland, and is a life-long Democrat. He is a man of business experience and of mature judgment, and is not given to extravagant speech. In No. 84 of the series of reports from the United States consuls, published by the State Department in September last, I find a report from him upon agriculture in British India. The portion relating to wheat production is of so much importance to the farmers in this country and of such special interest to the people of Oregon that I am constrained to quote it in full:

WHEAT.

From what I consider reliable information, I conclude that the area devoted to wheat in British India for the year under review was about 27,392,742 acres, and the total yield 288,938,996 bushels, or an average of 10.5 bushels per acre. The quality of Indian wheat as compared with that of our Pacific coast, with which I am familiar, is, I think, materially inferior to the latter. The Indian grain is not so large or plump or fair-colored as the wheat of our Western States. I know that the bread made from Indian wheat flour, which I have used here, is of darker color and inferior in quality to that made from American flour.

I am advised, however, that the Indian wheat which is exported to Europe is mixed and ground with wheat of a superior quality, by which process a fair marketable grade of flour is obtained.

The method of cultivating the soil and harvesting and thrashing wheat in this country is, in the main, the same as it was centuries ago; and from the conservative disposition and caste prejudices of the native ryot (farmer) there seems to be great difficulty in inducing him to invest in modern agricultural implements, or to do anything differently from the way his father and his father's father did before him, and, in fact, there is not, owing to the extreme cheapness of agricultural labor, the necessity for improved and labor-saving agricultural implements and machinery in this country which exists in the United States and many other countries. Here the tiller of the soil leases a little patch of ground consisting ordinarily of about 5 to 10 acres, and with his rude plow, often little better than a forked stick with an iron point, he hitches on to his small pair of bullocks and scratches over his patch, which he sows by hand and covers with a bamboo harrow or drag constructed like a ladder and dragged crosswise. He reaps his grain with an old-fashioned sickle, and tramps it out with cattle, and winnows it by pouring it through the air when there is a sufficient breeze, or, if not, he creates the breeze with a rude kind of hand fan.

And yet, with all his simple and primitive methods, I am compelled to admit that the Indian farmer can, in my judgment, successfully compete with those of the United States in the production of wheat. Strange as it may seem to many, the mystery is solved when you take into consideration the fact that the Indian farmer's entire farming outfit represents a capital of not more than $40 or $50, and his hired help (if he should require any) can and does work, feed, and clothe himself, according to the Indian fashion, for an average throughout the wheat-growing provinces, on about $2.50 per month.

The native day laborer in India, either at farming or other unskilled employment, does not seem ambitious to get rich or even financially independent. Of his wages, as above stated, I would judge that he expends about $2.40 for food, consisting principally of rice and dall, and occasionally some fish, and the balance, I would conclude from observation, is invested in clothing and incidentals. This condition of things when there is a failure of crops, as sometimes occurs from extreme drought, results in those great famines of India which occasionally occur, in which many thousands of these poor creatures die from starvation.

The following table shows the total exports of wheat from India for the past nineteen years, and will, for convenient reference, be of interest as showing the entire history of wheat production in India so far as it has become an article of export:

1885–'86	109,983	12,101,963	17,083,501	77,288,993

I have referred thus fully to the subject of the production and exportation of wheat and flour from India and the other countries named, for the reason that I have observed—especially in the Pacific States, in view of the low prices which have ruled in wheat for several years past—an increasing anxiety with our farmers at home to learn the causes of the reduced market value of this important cereal, as well as the future outlook for its further profitable production. Some of my predecessors in this office have claimed in former reports on this subject that the United States had nothing to fear from India as a competitor in the production of wheat. I do not so view the subject. It is claimed that India is to-day second only to the United States in the quantity of wheat produced, and I believe that such is the fact.

And furthermore, there is no doubt, I think, that wheat-growing in India is yet in its infancy, and that its further development depends principally upon the means of transportation to the sea-board. British India has already in operation over 12,000 miles of railway, and during the past five years the average annual rate of the construction of new road has been 662 miles.

The Government of Great Britain is not content with being the great public carrier of the world, but she seems of late years to be possessed of a laudable ambition to produce her own breadstuffs as well, and I fear (however unpleasant it may be to contemplate the fact) that with the cheap native labor of India and the constantly growing facilities for transportation, we shall find her a formidable competitor as a producer of the "staff of life."

It should also further be borne in mind that the surplus wheat of India is now carried to Europe in steam-ships through the Suez Canal in three or four weeks, instead of going, as formerly, in sail-vessels around the Cape, involving a voyage of three or four months and often material damage to the cargo from weevil.

The facts stated in this report fully justify the views of Judge Bonham, that India is to become a formidable competitor with the United States in the wheat markets of Europe, and in my judgment explain the cause of the decline of wheat in Europe in recent years. The table showing the aggregate imports of wheat and flour into the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland from the several countries named is especially instructive. It shows that while the imports into Great Britain, although somewhat fluctuating, have not materially increased since 1881–'82, the imports from Russia have increased from 4,089,308 centals in 1881–'82 to 11,986,350 centals in 1885–'86; the imports from India have increased from 7,337,924 centals in 1881–'82 to 12,101,963 centals in 1885–'86, and that the imports from other countries, not including the United States, have increased from 12,229,230 centals in 1881–'82 to 17,083,501 centals in 1885–'86; while the imports from the United States have decreased from 43,776,662 centals in 1881–'82 to 36,007,187 centals in 1885–'86, and that the export of wheat from India has increased from 299,385 centals in 1867–'68 to 21,060,519 centals or 35,100,865 bushels in 1885–'86, a period of nineteen years. These figures show that we are already engaged in a ruinous competition with Russia and India, which must continue to grow greater as the production of wheat in those countries increases to crowd the American product out of the European markets; and yet the free-traders tell us to let our home markets go, buy our manufactures in England, and raise more wheat.

Protection to industry by creating a diversity of employment and increasing the number of those who are not engaged in farming, but must depend upon the farmer for the means of subsistence, gives him a steady remunerative market for breadstuffs and creates a market for crops which can not be profitably exported. The foreign market for our wheat is mainly created by England, and is growing every year more uncertain and unsatisfactory. The amount of our corn and wheat required by England depends in the first place upon the crops of Europe, which usually supply from two-thirds to three-fourths of what is needed; then upon the yield in Russia and India; so that the American farmer first takes the chances of his own harvest, and then of a scarcity in Europe, and in late years the further chance of having the price of wheat fixed by the competition of Russian and Indian wheat. And still free-traders assert that the true principle is to buy where you can buy the cheapest, and say that if our manufacturing industries can not successfully compete with cheap capital, organized industries, and pauper labor of England, our people should turn their attention to something else—that is, to farming—destroy our home markets, and lead our farmers to depend upon a foreign market for the sale of their surplus products.

They propose that we shall increase our exports to pay for our increased imports, and in endeavoring to do so that our farmers shall enter the field in competition with the miserable ryots of India, who live on a few cents a day. If it were proposed to import into the United States several millions of the Indian ryots or of Chinese for agricultural laborers, to enable us to compete with India in producing wheat, every white laborer in the United States could see that American labor was threatened. How does the case differ when it is proposed to drive several millions of American laborers from the manufactures into agriculture and then to force them into competition with the Indian ryots by increasing our surplus wheat crop, which we will be compelled to get rid of by underselling Indian wheat?

THE NEW SOUTH.

We have just listened to a speech from the junior Senator from Georgia which would have been quite radical enough to have satisfied the most ultra free-trade sentiments of South Carolina in 1832. The Senator seems oblivious to the wonderful awakening of the industries of the South in recent years, and to the development and industrial progress of the South for the future which it foretells. The manufacture at home of the great staple production of the South, which is growing with such rapidity as to attract attention everywhere, and by which the cost of transportation and the profits of manufacturing are saved to the people of the South, is but one out of many industries which, under the stimulus of our present revenue system, are springing up everywhere in the Southern States, and which the Senator would destroy. His speech is in marked contrast to the speech of his colleague upon the same subject, to which I recently listened with so much interest. If the cotton mills in the United States were to be closed by such a reduction in the duties upon cotton fabrics as is proposed by the Mills bill, or by a more radical application of the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only, how would the prosperity of the South be affected? Where would she market her raw cotton and what price would it command?

The total cotton crop of the United States for the year ending August 31, 1887, was 6,513,623 bales; average weight of bales for year, 486.02 pounds. The total yield in the United States for the following years was—

1886–'87	6,513,623	1879–'80	5,757,397
1885–'86	6,550,215	1878–'79	5,073,531
1884–'85	5,669,021	1877–'78	4,811,265
1883–'84	5,714,052	1876–'77	4,485,423
1882–'83	6,992,234	1875–'76	4,669,288
1881–'82	5,435,845	1874–'75	3,832,991
1880–'81	6,589,329

The total import of cotton into Great Britain in 1886 was as follows:

American	2,902,120
Brazilian	196,700
Egyptian	256,800
West Indian, etc	56,390
East Indian	529,760
Total	3,941,770

The total movement of cotton in Europe in 1886 was as follows imported:

American	4,417,570
Brazilian	223,960
Egyptian	419,870
West Indian, etc	124,050
East Indian	1,332,550
Total	6,518,000

The increase of the production of cotton in the United States and other countries, and the relative growth of each, will appear from the following statement:

Year.	Crops in United States.	Other countries.	Total crop.
1866–'67	2,230,000	2,178,000	4,408,000
1876–'77	4,933,000	1,897,000	6,830,000
1886–'87	7,450,000	2,300,000	9,750,000

The above amounts are calculated in bales of 400 pounds.

From these tables it will appear that an increase of less than 35 per cent. in the production of cotton in the United States would give us a surplus equal to the entire consumption in Europe, and suggests ruinous competition with Indian, Brazilian, and Egyptian cotton.

In Latham, Alexander & Co.'s (New York) "Cotton Movement and Fluctuations" for 1887 the general industrial awakening in the South as regards cotton manufactures is shown by the following table, giving the number of mills, spindles, looms, and consumption of cotton in pounds in the Southern States during the year 1887, together with the number in 1879 and 1880, as appears by the Tenth Census:

States.	Number of mills.	Number of spindles.	Number of looms.	Consumption, in pounds.
Virginia	11	58,649	1,826	7,698,294
North Carolina	75	206,172	4,393	30,593,517
South Carolina	31	217,161	4,663	44,518,017
Georgia	53	349,277	7,954	57,856,883
Florida	1	816	.....	85,500
Alabama	17	69,308	1,272	11,446,995
Mississippi	7	39,748	928	6,215,495
Louisiana	2	27,000	750	4,299,967
Texas	1	2,108	40	90,000
Arkansas	2	3,200	30	686,520
Tennessee	28	90,793	1,820	14,724,935
Missouri	1	7,000	150	1,056,000
Kentucky	3	28,300	563	3,908,881
Total in 1887	232	1,000,132	24,389	183,201,004
Census 1879–'80	164	561,360	12,329	87,610,889

Besides the foregoing they state that they have reports of thirty mills, containing 111,498 spindles and 1,345 looms, not in operation during the year, and direct returns with regard to projects which have progressed to a greater or less extent which, when completed, will add 177,000 spindles and 5,048 looms.

In a table in the same work the consumption of cotton in the United States in 1866–'67, North and South, was stated to have been, in bales of 400 pounds each: North, 746,000; South 76,000; and in 1886–'87, to have been: North, 1,972,000; and South, 451,000 bales. From which it will appear that the consumption of cotton in the South in twenty years has increased almost 600 per cent., and to-day is over three-fifths as large as the consumption in the North was in 1867; while the increase of consumption in the North during the same period has been but 264 per cent. Should the consumption of both North and South for the next twenty years increase in the same ratio, the South will, at the end of that period, consume about 2,700,000 bales, and the North about 5,200,000 bales, or a total of 9,700,000 bales, an amount greater than the cotton crop of the United States for last year.

The cotton crop of the United States in 1866–'67 was 2,228,987 bales. If for the next twenty years the production should increase in the same ratio as during the last twenty years the annual crop would amount to over 19,000,000 bales, leaving still 50 per cent. of the crop for export. Whether the South has capacity for an indefinite increase of the production of cotton, or whether the demand for cotton productions will be such in the future as to stimulate both the production and manufacture of cotton as it has stimulated it in the past, I am not prepared to say; but all indications point to a greater relative increase of the business of cotton manufacturing in the South than in the North, or in Europe, and I should not be at all surprised if in the next twenty years the consumption of cotton in the South equals that in the North, unless, indeed, the business of the country shall be demoralized by the reversal of the policy by which our present prosperity has been secured.

What will happen when in all the principal towns of the cotton-growing States factories are erected and spindles and looms operated by intelligent laborers transforming the raw cotton into cotton fabrics for home consumption and the foreign trade? Cotton, if not king, will be master of the situation in the South. Laborers on the sugar plantations of Louisiana to-day, who are intelligent enough to contend by associated action for better wages, will then demand protection against the pauper labor of Europe, and the Democratic party of the South will go to protection or the interest to be protected will leave that party.

ENGLAND AND HER DEPENDENCIES.

The great industries of the leading European nations have been built up by the protective policy, and the most prosperous nations to-day are those which protect their own capital and labor from undue competition with the capital and labor of other countries. The free-trade theory of Great Britain has not been adopted by the European countries and is not put in practice by England herself.

The total revenue of Great Britain from customs duties for the year 1886 was $99,086,435. The population of the United Kingdom in 1881 as shown by the census was 35,246,633. The per cent. of increase of population for the preceding decade was 6.33 per cent. Estimating the increase of the population for the five years from 1881 to 1886 at the same rate, and the population of the United Kingdom in 1886 appears to have been 36,262,188, and the revenue from duties on imports to have been $2.456 per capita.

The Secretary of the Treasury states in his annual report for the year 1887 that the amount of revenue the United States derived from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was $217,286,893.13. Our population in 1880, according to the census, was 50,155,783. The per cent. of increase of population for the preceding decade was 30.8 per cent. The estimated population of the United States in 1887, the year for which the amount of revenue from customs duties is given above, estimating the increase at the same rate as during the preceding decade, would be 60,676,588, which would make the amount of revenue derived from duties upon imports 3.58 per capita.

I should but repeat what is familiar to all to recount the gradual adoption by England of the present prevailing economic theories in that country. She owes her industrial greatness to persistent adherence for a long series of years to the national policy. Her iron manufactures were protected by successive tariffs for nearly two-thirds of a century, until they could undersell all others in the European markets. By stringent protective measures she developed the skill of her people and succeeded in securing the investment of capital in cotton manufactures until she can, with her cheap labor, compete with her cotton fabrics in America and India, manufacturing them from the raw material imported from those countries.

By an act of Parliament passed in 1337 she forbade, under heavy penalties, the penalty for the fourth offense being death, the exportation of wool and the importation of woolen goods. And under this heroic remedy against foreign competition woolens became the great English staple.

Having reached a point where she is obliged, in order to keep her starving millions employed, to seek a market in every country in the world, and to sacrifice her agricultural interests to her manufacturing industries, a point where the admission of raw material free of duty is to her interest, she removes duties upon these articles. It is but fair to state, however, that there is a strong and growing sentiment in Great Britain in favor of a return to a protective tariff. Her dependencies, where they have a discretion in the matter, are not slow to repudiate free-trade theories and seek industrial independence. Ireland and India do not possess autonomy, and both illustrate the ruinous effect of her free-trade policy when applied to a nation inferior to her in capital and skill. She extended her commercial policy to British India as she does in all cases where her dependencies have no power to set up barriers against it, and the extensive manufactures of India were well-nigh annihilated, her flourishing factories dwindled away, and by the general lowering of import duties in 1813 on articles the products and manufactures of Great Britain were completely ruined, her commercial activity destroyed, and her people left with an impoverished agriculture and a lifeless trade, unemployed and reduced to absolute wretchedness.

The forced increased production of wheat and cotton caused by the destruction of her other industries, on account of her large indebtedness to Europe, and the low price of wheat consequent upon the increased yield, add but little to her prosperity. The profits go to England and the laborers engaged in its production continue to live on, scantily clothed, miserably fed, ignorant and wretched, and without hope of improving their condition. To support the English Government and to pay British troops in India she laid upon the already impoverished people the most oppressive land-taxes. To increase her revenue beyond what could be realized by the most oppressive taxation she created a monopoly to set up government distilleries and supply alcoholic drinks to licensed dealers; and in a country where before its conquest by the English, the people were noted for their abstinence from spirituous liquors and other intoxicating beverages, drunkenness and its consequent crime and wretchedness has spread over the land. She has persisted in preventing an international agreement for the remonetization of silver, and thus causes the continuation of the depression of the industries of India consequent upon the fall of that metal after the country had been flooded with it by English merchants.

If you would have a still more striking illustration of the working of this theory, go to downtrodden, starving Ireland. Behold her wretched people living in hovels, eking out a miserable existence amidst squalor and poverty, and inquire the cause of it. It will be found in the commercial tyranny of Great Britain. Every attempt of Ireland to better her condition has been thwarted by her commercial masters. The confiscation of her ancient estates has been succeeded by treatment still more cruel and unjust. The English people have applied to Ireland their peculiar commercial theories; Ireland has been made a market for British manufactures, and all her manufacturing industries have been sacrificed. One great industry after another was destroyed by repressive legislation. She was forbidden to export cattle, and the great industry was broken up; sheep-farming and manufacturing of woolens were interrupted; her manufacturing interests were destroyed, and her population forced back upon her impoverished soil. After the union the restrictions were removed, but it was too late. English manufactures were firmly established; great masses of capital were invested in manufactures with trained artisans; impoverished Ireland could not compete with her and build up her ruined industries, and never can until she is permitted to restrict the importation of British goods.

Ireland, with her landlords in England, with her poverty of all those industries which make a nation wealthy and a country prosperous, with an impoverished and overtaxed soil, with a poor, oppressed, and betrayed people, is an example of what any nation must become when she becomes only a cultivator of the soil and pays tribute to other countries for all her manufactures. England seeks to make the United States, so far as her manufacturing interests are concerned, a dependency of her own, and such would be the practical effect of the admission free of duty of the products of the labor of her starving millions. The Australian colonies possess autonomy, which enables them to protect themselves against free trade. They have given free trade a fair trial, and have now adopted protection as the national creed. It is the avowed principle of the liberal progressive party, and the colonies are rapidly attaining industrial independence. The Dominion of Canada adopted a protective tariff in 1879. They call it the national policy. I had the pleasure during his recent stay in this city to make the acquaintance of Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, minister of finance of the Dominion of Canada. Our conversation turned upon the finances and industrial interests of the Dominion, and led to his sending me a copy of his budget speech to the Dominion Parliament for 1887. In it he discusses what he terms the national policy. I am sure I need make no apology for quoting at length from such a source.

This speech contains a very interesting discussion, and I will ask the Secretary to relieve me by reading a portion of it.

The Secretary read as follows:

It will be recollected that, under a comparatively low tariff, Canada enjoyed a very marked degree of prosperity during the first seven years of confederation, but it must not be forgotten that during that period the industries of Canada enjoyed the great protection which arose from the dislocation of the labor market in the great republic to the south of us, and which placed us in a very different position to that which at a very early period afterwards we occupied. When that change came, and when the languishing industries of Canada embarrassed the finance minister of that day; when, instead of large surpluses, large deficits succeeded year after year, the opposition urged upon that honorable gentleman that he should reconsider the position and that he should endeavor to give increased protection to the industries of Canada which would prevent them from thus languishing and from being destroyed. We were not successful, I will not say in leading the honorable gentleman himself to the conclusion that that would be a sound policy, for I have some reason to believe that he had many and strong misgivings on that question, but, at all events, we were not able to change the policy of the gentlemen who then ruled the destinies of Canada. As is well known, that became the great issue at the subsequent general election of 1878, and the conservative party, being returned to power, pledged to foster and promote the industries of Canada as far as they were able, brought down a policy through the hands of my honored predecessor, Sir Leonard Tilley, whose absence from this house I am sure gentlemen on both sides all deplore; and I have no hesitation in saying that the success of that policy, thus propounded and matured from time to time, has been such as to command the support and confidence of a large portion of the people of this country down to the present day. As I have said before, with ample material under my hand to show by contrast the great advantage that resulted from the adoption of that policy, I do not propose to take that course on the present occasion. The elaborate statements made by Sir Leonard Tilley, and the exhaustive statement made by my honorable friend who occupied the position of minister of finance a year ago, I think, render it entirely unnecessary that I should occupy the time of the house in going over the same ground. But I must be permitted to draw the attention of the house for a single moment to the change that has taken place in the opinions of the great political economists of the day on this question, as an abstract question of political economy.

No person who has carefully watched the progress of public events and public opinion can fail to know that a very great and marked change has taken place in all countries, I may say, in relation to this question. In the United States of America they hold, with the strongest tenacity they, perhaps, have ever held, to the principle of protection. In England, where it was a heresy to intimate anything of that kind a few years ago, even at the period to which I am referring, a great and marked change in public opinion has taken place. Professor Sidgewick, a learned Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and professor of moral philosophy in that great university, and the gentleman who read, at the meeting of the British Association in 1886, a paper on political economy, has published a work in which opinions, that would have been denounced as utterly fallacious and heretical at that time, have been boldly propounded as the soundest and truest principles of political economy. But, sir, I do not intend to occupy the attention of the house in recounting, as I could, the numberless evidences that we have of a change of public sentiment on that subject. The committee appointed by the Imperial Parliament to consider the question of the depression of trade, has, of course, adhered to the general line of the free-trade policy that has so long prevailed in that country; but it is equally worthy of note that statesmen of the first rank, that men occupying high and commanding positions in public affairs in England, have as unhesitatingly committed themselves, in the minority report, to the strongest opinion in favor of what is termed fair trade, or fair protection to British industry. I am precluded, however, I am happy to say, from the necessity of going into this question as a question of political economy, or of reasoning it out in the abstract, for another and a very important reason. Since the last session of this Parliament, as is well known, the honorable gentleman who, with such distinguished ability, leads Her Majesty's loyal opposition in this house, has, in the presence of the great electorate of Canada, announced his entire conversion to the principle that we have so long maintained from this side of the house. The re-election of that honorable gentleman to the position of leader of that great party in this house and in this country, is viewed with uniform satisfaction on this side of the house for two reasons: First, because of the honorable gentleman's evident qualifications for that distinguished post; secondly, because we regard his re-election to that high position as an affirmation by honorable gentlemen opposite that at last the time has come when this country may congratulate itself upon the fact that the great capitalists of Canada who are interested in developing the resources of the country can put their capital into these great Canadian industries without any fear of disturbance arising from a change of administration. Under these circumstances I feel it would be wasting the time of the house, and perhaps more than wasting the time of the house, for me to do more than express the gratification I feel that the time has come when we are all as one upon this great and important question, and when the only issue can be how best to carry out and how best to make the principle successful that has commended itself so entirely to the satisfaction of the great body of the people of this country.

* * * * * * *

Now, sir, I may say that I recognize the fact that under the protective policy that we have adopted, and which, as we know beyond peradventure, the country most heartily approves and indorses, the great stimulus that has been given to Canadian industries has enabled them largely to overtake the consuming power of the country. We know that the result has been that which we all apprehended it would be, a fall in prices, and that the people of this country would enjoy as the result of that development of our industry by a protective policy, an opportunity of obtaining everything that they required as cheaply as they would if that policy had never been put into operation.

* * * * * * *

But, sir, I may ask the house for a single moment, to what do we owe that condition of progress and prosperity upon which we are all able to congratulate ourselves at this moment? I am quite certain that the answer will be found in the words "national policy." It is the national policy which has lifted Canada out of the position that it occupied a few years ago; it is the national policy that has enabled it to pass through what otherwise would have been a period of great depression without seriously feeling it; it is the national policy that had vivified every industry in this country, that has furnished employment for Canadian hands on Canadian soil, that has kept the money of the country within the country, and that has diffused prosperity from one end of this country to the other. But, sir, I drew attention to the fact that production had to a considerable extent overtaken consumption, and that the necessity was imposed on the Government of endeavoring to find outlets for the industries of Canada by extending and developing our trade with other countries. I referred to the efforts we are making in connection with lines of steam communication, but I omitted on that occasion to refer to the fact that the sanction which was obtained from this house to establish a line of steam communication with France has, as you know, sir, not been successful up to the present moment. But I am glad to be able to say that the appropriation placed by Parliament at the service of the Government for that purpose is about to be utilized, and that a strong French company are preparing to put on a line of steamers between France and Canada that I have no doubt will render that effort on our part as successful as the others.

Now, sir, I intend to invite the attention of the house to a new field for the development of the national policy. We have applied it to the great cotton industry; we have applied it to the woolen industry; we have applied it to innumerable industries all over Canada, and with marvelous success.

THE IRON INDUSTRY.

But, sir, there is a field, perhaps the most important, still untrodden; there is a field still unoccupied that presents greater possibilities and greater opportunities than any other for developing Canadian industry, and it lies at the very root and foundation of the national policy in all countries where it has been adopted. I refer to the iron industry. I say, sir, that while we have adopted the national policy with reference to other industries, while we have taken a leaf out of the book of our great neighbors to the south of us—and we are always delighted to avail ourselves of their experience in order to benefit ourselves—while we have adopted to a certain extent their policy in reference to other great industries, in relation to this, the greatest industry of all in this country and in all countries where iron and coal are found to abound, we have neglected up to the present hour to do justice to this great Canadian industry.

* * * * * * *

I need not tell this house that the most extreme protection that ever was adopted in any country in the world was adopted in England in connection with the manufacture of iron. England not only imposed high duties on iron coming in from abroad, but when it was discovered how coal could be used instead of charcoal and the manufacture of the steam engine was brought into play, it actually prohibited the workmen who were acquainted with those processes from leaving the country, in order to retain the industry within their own borders.

* * * * * * *

Of course England, when she became, under the most rigid and determined system of protection ever adopted in any country in the world, so advanced as to outdistance all other countries to such an extent that she thought she could adopt the principles of free trade, she adopted those principles; and she adopted them under the delusion, propounded by Mr. Cobden and sincerely believed in by that distinguished man, but proved by the result to be utterly fallacious, that if England, with her advanced position of mistress of the industrial arts of the world, adopted the policy of free trade all other countries would be obliged to follow in her wake. And what is the result? It is that, instead of following in her wake, France and Germany and all these countries have held fast by the national policy of protecting their own industries, and the consequence is that they are at this moment in a position to paralyze to a large extent the industries of England with all her advantages of iron and coal in close proximity. By their protective policy they are developing and advancing their industries in a way that England finds herself incapable of keeping up with, and the result is that Belgium and Germany are keen competitors on English soil with the great English industries.

* * * * * * *

It is not only a national policy, but it is a rational policy. It is a policy that is national because it is rapidly making Canada a nation; it is a rational policy because the very foundation of reason is in a government, a parliament, a country furnishing employment to the mass of the industrial people.

* * * * * * *

Mr. DOLPH. Great Britain is taking a great interest in this country. She has undertaken to instruct us in political economy. The Cobden Club, composed of the manufacturers of Great Britain and members of Parliament, have undertaken to educate us up to the idea that our true material interests would be promoted by admitting English manufactures free of duty. To this end it is stated they established branches of the organization in New York and Chicago, and probably elsewhere. They have purchased or subsidized newspapers; they have flooded the country with free-trade literature, and sought to control our elections in the interest of free trade.

She is interested in increasing her market here for the products of her manufactures. She is interested in breaking down our domestic manufactures so that she can have a monopoly of the market and charge her own prices for her wares. She has to buy food largely abroad for her manufacturing population, and is therefore interested in driving our population to cultivate the soil, so that competition will reduce the price and she can buy cheaply what she needs. Under our present tariff a large percentage of the duties is paid by foreign countries, and England is anxious to get rid of this payment. I suggest whether the Cobden Club had not better turn its attention first to the Dominion of Canada, and convert the Canadians from their heresy of a national policy before they undertake to enlighten us.

THE PROSPERITY OF THIS COUNTRY DUE TO PROTECTION.

Mr. President, there is one more test to which I wish to subject the free-trade or tariff-for-revenue-only doctrine of the Administration, and that is the test of our own experience.

It would seem that after more than a century of experience the question, of the true policy of this country in regard to duties upon imports should have been settled, or at least should be capable of solution, by reference to the history of our tariff legislation and its effects upon our material prosperity. No matter how reasonable a theory in political economy may appear, if when put to a practical test it is proved to be false and does not produce results in accordance with the theory, it necessarily follows that it must be wrong and is valueless. Experience may be a dear school-master, but it is a good one.

The power to impose duties upon imports is conferred upon Congress by that provision of the Constitution empowering Congress to regulate commerce with foreign countries, between the States, and with the Indian tribes. In the preamble of the first tariff act, signed by President Washington, July 4, 1789, it was alleged that the imposition of duties on imported merchandise was necessary "for the payment of the debts of the United States and the encouragement and protection of manufactures," and it was never contended upon the part of any party until 1824 that Congress, under this power to regulate commerce, might not levy duties to protect American industries. From the adoption of the Constitution until the passage of the tariff act of 1816 some seventeen tariff bills were passed, but the tariff was so small as to afford little or no protection to American industries. After the close of the war of 1812 there came a series of hard years. Business was prostrated, and as a consequence employment was scarce and wages low. Discontent prevailed, and American industries demanded protection from Congress. The duties on imports were increased by the tariff of 1816, and a protective tariff adopted in 1824 and strengthened in 1828. The effect was magical; business revived, new industries were started, labor was in demand, wages were good, the towns and country equally felt the beneficial influence of the tariff, the mechanic and farmer were equally prospered. The national Treasury was overflowing, and the question then was, as it now is, how to reduce the surplus.

The South, being without manufactures, now seeing the benefits derived by the New England States from their protected industries, changed its attitude toward the tariff, and South Carolina attempted to nullify the law and prevent the collection of customs duties in her ports.

In 1832, at the demand of the South, protection was again stricken down by the enactment of a law reducing the tariff horizontally upon a sliding scale, running through a series of years. Prosperity was immediately checked, manufacturing establishments failed, money became stringent, times grew harder and harder each year, until the greatest commercial crash this country ever experienced came in 1837. The country was poverty-stricken, want and suffering came upon the people, flour sold for $2.50 a barrel, and laborers worked for 30 cents a day.

In 1840 the Whig party came into power pledged to re-enact a protective tariff, and in 1842 a protective tariff was re-enacted, which, as if by magic, infused new life-blood into manufacturing, commercial, and agricultural industries, and revived business of all kinds.

In 1844 the Democrats carried the Presidential election, deluding the voters of Pennsylvania into the belief that they would not disturb the protective tariff. The campaign cry in that State was "Polk and Dallas and the tariff of 1842." Again the South demanded a repeal of the protective tariff, and the act of 1846 was passed in the Senate by the vote of Vice-President Dallas, the Senate being a tie without his vote. By this act the manufacturing industries of the country received a severe blow, money again became stringent, and the Treasury was depleted. The country did not feel the worst effects of this law for several years on account of the discovery of gold in California and the large production of precious metals in the United States, which furnished the means to pay the balance of foreign trade against us; but the crash came in 1857, which involved manufactures, agriculture, labor, and capital in one common disaster. Once more the policy of protection came to the front in 1861, and from that time to this has been perpetuated in this country. How shall I describe the progress of this country under the present tariff? From an almost purely agricultural country, dependent upon foreign nations for manufactures, we have become one of the most important manufacturing countries on the globe. In population, in wealth, in the development of our resources, in the increase of our agricultural products and the products of our mines and our forests, our growth has been without parallel in history. The improvement of the condition of our laboring classes has been equally marked.

By the census of 1860 it appeared that the value of all the property in the United States was $14,000,000,000. This, as has been said, was the net result of the labor and savings of the people of the United States from the time of the first settlement of the country down to 1860. It represented the fruit of the toil of two hundred and fifty years. At the end of twenty years under a tariff which protected and encouraged the business of the country the total value of the property of the United States, according to the census of 1880, had increased over threefold and amounted to $44,000,000,000; and this astonishing result was obtained notwithstanding thousands of millions of dollars had been wasted in the prosecution of a protracted and costly civil war.

Is the career of prosperity to be checked? Is the great conspiracy against the prosperity of the people to succeed? Is the policy which has caused this wonderful growth of our material interests during the last twenty-five years, which has developed our industries and made us a great manufacturing nation, covered the continent with a network of railroads, converted the American wilderness into a productive country, given a diversified employment to our people and a home market for 92 per cent. of our agricultural productions, to be reversed and our factories and mills closed, our manufacturing industries destroyed, our mines left unworked, and our home market destroyed to benefit England, to create a market for her manufactures and the labor for her people? I have yet too much faith in the intelligence of the American Congress to believe it is possible.

If the necessary reduction of the revenues is left to the friends of protection, so that our manufacturing industries are not destroyed, the prosperity of the country will continue; but if the policy of the Administration prevails, nothing but disaster awaits us.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to give notice that on Thursday next, after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall ask to be allowed to submit some remarks on this resolution.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 8th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 158) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the trustees of the Porter Academy certain property in the city of Charleston, S. C.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 10th instant, approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 451) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt; and Joint resolution (S. R. 4) providing for the disposition of undistributed copies of the Rebellion Records and other public documents.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7938) to enlarge, improve, and make repairs upon the United States court-house and post-office building in Atlanta, Ga., and to appropriate money therefor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 60) directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States, and to report to Congress.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. WADE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HISCOCK in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said joint resolution disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TELLER, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. WALTHALL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INQUESTS UNDER NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

Mr. GEORGE submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill (S. 1516) to provide for inquests under national authority, heretofore reported; which were ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done I hope the Chair will lay before the Senate the bills received from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 7938) to enlarge, improve, and make repairs upon the United States court-house and post-office building in Atlanta, Ga., and to appropriate money therefor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. BROWN. On the 4th of January I had the honor to introduce a resolution on the subject of the repeal of the internal-revenue laws, on which I submitted some remarks, and on the conclusion of my remarks the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] asked that the resolution lie upon the table, as he desired to be heard upon it. It remained there for some time, when he called it up and made a speech of an hour or so on the tariff question. I shall ask now to be permitted to call up my own resolution on Wednesday morning at the conclusion of the routine morning business, as I desire to reply to some remarks made in opposition to it by the Senator from Kentucky in the speech to which I refer, and also to discuss generally the tariff question.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Before putting that motion the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 977) to regulate the importation of foreign merchandise and to secure uniformity in the classification and valuation thereof, and for other purposes. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 13, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 12th day of March, 1888.

William E. Purcell, of Dakota, to be attorney of the United States for the Territory of Dakota, vice John E. Carland, appointed to the office of associate justice in that Territory.

NOMINATION WITHDRAWN.

The nomination of William Porter, which was sent to the Senate on the 5th of January last, was withdrawn.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 12, 1888.

SOLICITOR OF TREASURY.

Charles S. Cary, of New York, to be Solicitor of the Treasury.

ARMY CHAPLAIN.

Rev. John F. Dolphin, of Minnesota, to be post-chaplain in the Army.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 12, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JONES, for ten days.

To Mr. HIESTAND, for one week, on account of important business.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Union Calendar, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. 7938) to enlarge, improve, and make repairs upon the United States court-house and post-office building in Atlanta, Ga., and to appropriate money therefor.

Mr. RANDALL. Has this bill been before a committee?

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Yes, sir; it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enlarge, improve, and make repairs upon the United States court-house and post-office building in Atlanta, Ga.; and said enlargements and improvements and repairs to be made upon plans and specifications under and by direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes named in the preceding section the sum of $120,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND. I have not objected to the consideration of this bill; but if the House is going to consider this and all such bills, I hope it will give them due consideration and not pass them nem. con. I want to discuss this question myself.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. When it had been read in part—

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, said: Unless some gentleman desires to hear the recommendations from the Treasury Department, from the Attorney-General, and from Mr. West, the Chief Post-Office Inspector, I see no necessity for reading them.

Mr. BLAND. I think we had better hear the report read.

The Clerk continued the reading of the report (by Mr. DIBBLE), which, in full, is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3314) for the enlargement, improvement, and repairing of the United States court-house and post-office building at Atlanta, Ga., have had the same under consideration, and report by substitute, and ask that the original bill lie on the table.

The present building was erected under an act passed in 1873. The city of Atlanta furnished a lot worth $50,000, and a building was then erected which was deemed adequate for the needs of the public business. Since that time the population has increased twofold. Atlanta is the capital of the State and has a population of 70,000.

The building is used as a post-office, internal-revenue office, custom-house, division headquarters for post-office inspector for six States, railway mail service, also used for United States circuit and district courts, and nearly all of these departments of the Government have to rent rooms in other parts of the city, as the accommodations in the building are insufficient.

The increase of the postal service will be shown as follows:

Increase in the business of the Post-Office Department, which handled for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874, 916,816 pieces of mail matter; for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, 9,944,671 pieces of mail matter, showing an increase of 8,982,855 pieces of mail matter. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1875, the Atlanta post-office handled 154,234 pounds of second-class mail matter. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, the Atlanta post-office handled 1,201,892 pounds of second-class mail matter, showing an increase of 1,047,658 pounds of second-class mail matter. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1875, the Atlanta post-office handled through the registered department 3,993 letters and parcels. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, this office handled through the registered department 16,847 letters and parcels, showing an increase of 12,854 letters and parcels. The gross postal receipts of the Atlanta post-office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874, was $45,066.05. The gross postal receipts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, was $112,329.28, showing an increase in the gross postal receipts of $67,263.23.

For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, the amount of domestic money-orders issued by the Atlanta post-office was $198,873.47. Amount paid on domestic money-orders was $750,278.95. The amount of international money-orders issued was $12,112.97. Amount paid on international money orders was $2,363.83. Amount of postal-notes issued was $25,621.91. Amount paid on postal-notes was $55,484.36. There was deposited by various postmasters in the Atlanta post-office $1,051,756.14.

We herewith submit letters from the officials of the Post-Office Department of the Government showing that the capacity of the building should be increased to accommodate this part of the Government service.

"[From the Postmaster-General.]

"POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE CHIEF CLERK,
"Washington, D. C., February 9, 1888.

"SIR: By direction of the Postmaster-General I transmit herewith for your use in connection with the bill introduced to enlarge the public buildings at Atlanta, Ga., letters from Hon. H. R. Harris, Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and William A. West, Chief Post-Office Inspector, showing the crowded condition of the building at the present time as regards room for the transaction of the postal business.

"Very respectfully,

"JOS. ROY, Chief Clerk.

"Hon. JOHN D. STEWART, M. C."

"POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF CHIEF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
"Washington, D. C., February 7, 1888.

"DEAR SIR: In answer to your verbal request for information as to rooms in the Government building at Atlanta, Ga., for use of the division inspector and his clerk stationed at that place, I have the honor to inform you that the room assigned to the inspector is entirely too small, and that unless we can get additional room we will be forced to rent quarters from private individuals.

"In connection with this matter I respectfully call your attention to the inclosed letter from Inspector Simpson.

"I have repeatedly applied to the Treasury Department for additional room, but so far without success.

"Very respectfully,

"W. A. WEST, Chief Inspector.

"Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
"Postmaster-General."

"POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
"Washington, D. C., February 8, 1888.

"SIR: In response to a request personally made by Mr. Roy, the chief clerk of the Department, I have the honor to inform you that in order to carry out the policy originated by your predecessor, and sanctioned by an act of Congress, of creating three agencies for the distribution of postal-cards and stamped envelopes to post-offices in the Southern, Western, and Northwestern portions of the country, in addition to the principal agencies already existing at the places where the cards and envelopes are manufactured, it will be necessary to have, in the post-office building at Atlanta, Ga., where it is proposed to establish one of these agencies, a very much greater amount of office room than, it seems, can be now afforded. Not only this, but the additional room needed should be as nearly as possible connected with that now used for the dispatch of private mail matter, so that the cards and envelopes may be given greater security in their storage, and may be registered and mailed without materially disturbing the ordinary office methods of distribution.

"A short account of the operations of the agency at Chicago, which has already been established under the policy above referred to, may be found on pages 25 to 27 of the last annual report of this office.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"H. R. HARRIS,
"Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

"Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
"Postmaster-General."

"[From the Supervising Architect, Treasury Department.]

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 7, 1888.

"SIR: I am informed that the Attorney-General and the Postmaster-General have recommended an appropriation for the enlargement of the United States court-house and post-office at Atlanta, Ga., and I have been requested to state my views with reference thereto. From representations made by the custodian of the building I am led to believe that it is totally inadequate for the proper transaction of the public business, and would suggest, if it is the desire of Congress to enlarge it, that an appropriation be made for repairing and altering the same, including an addition thereto, in order that sufficient accommodations be thus supplied for some time to come. The sum of $120,000 will be sufficient for this purpose.

"Respectfully, yours,

"WILL A. FRERET,
"Supervising Architect."

The circuit and district courts for the northern district of Georgia are held in Atlanta, and one of the heaviest dockets to be found anywhere in the United States is found in this district. Your committee herewith submits a letter from the Attorney-General, Hon. A. H. Garland, urging that the capacity of the building be increased at once:

"[From the Department of Justice.]

"WASHINGTON, February 7, 1888.

"SIR: The Department is reliably informed that the accommodations for officers of the United States courts and officers of the different branches of the Government at Atlanta, Ga., are insufficient for the transaction of public business. I am convinced of the necessity of early action to relieve the Government of the embarrassment in consequence of the fact, and would therefore urge early action in appropriating money for an extension of the Government building at that place sufficient in amount to procure ample quarters for the Government officers.

"Very respectfully,

"A. H. GARLAND,
"Attorney-General.

"The SPEAKER House of Representatives."

From the above it will be seen that not only is it an absolute necessity that this building be enlarged to accommodate the public service, but in addition to this the Post-Office Department propose to establish a subagency at Atlanta for the distribution of postal-cards and stamped envelopes for the South and Southwest as soon as suitable room can be obtained for that purpose.

The internal-revenue service, the railway mail service, and post-office inspection service all demand more room at Atlanta.

Atlanta is a growing city and the wants of the public service in the various departments are likely to increase. We therefore recommend the adoption of the substitute here submitted.

Mr. KERR. I ask the gentleman from Georgia how large a portion of these buildings is used by the internal-revenue office at this time?

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. It uses a part of the third floor, including three rooms and a room in the basement; and, in addition, a part of a hall, where there is no fire and no means of heating, is the place where the clerks write their communications.

Mr. KERR. I desire to ask the gentleman another question. Would these buildings be needed if the internal-revenue system were abolished?

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Oh, yes; by all manner of means. We need two jury rooms and consultation rooms of United States courts; and we need additional rooms as a place of deposit, which the Post-Office Department requires for keeping envelopes and postal-cards.

Mr. BLAND. When we consider the number of bills introduced in this House and pending here and the very great pressure there is to bring them before the House and place them upon their passage, some of them with merit and some without any at all, it is a very ungracious task for any single member of this House to stand up here and object to the consideration of the whole of them. But it is wholly impossible for any member to ascertain whether there is merit in a bill or not until it is discussed and understood. While I do not desire to be placed in the position of being the only member of this House to stand up here and object to the consideration of these bills, I do intend when the House gives its consent to the consideration of a bill it shall be considered, and considered in such a manner as that the action of the House upon it shall be intelligent, whatever action that may be.

I introduced a bill some time ago having for its object to establish some system with regard to these public buildings that we might not be tied up here with this sort of thing as we are to-day and have been during this session. In the first place, over one hundred and fifty members introduced these bills, and every one is interested, as a matter of course, in getting his particular bill through. They are tied up in a system of "I aid you and you aid me," by which, if all these bills are to get through, not less than thirty millions of dollars will be taken from the Treasury at this one session. And when we adjourn and return to our constituents we will find, in all probability, that instead of reducing the revenues and reducing taxation we have simply emptied the Treasury, wasted the public money, and done away with all excuse for reducing the taxes of this Government.

Now, sir, the bill that I introduced and to which I have referred provided that where one of the Departments of the Government certified to the House that there was no public building in a given place by which that Department could carry on properly its business——

Mr. OWEN. I rise to a question of order. I ask if the gentleman from Missouri proposes to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. I have not objected to the consideration of the bill, but I have stated that when it came up for consideration I want it considered so that we may not have these public-building bills rushed through, one on this side of the House and one on the other, by preconcerted agreement, without discussion and without understanding. That is what I object to.

It seems that in this case the Attorney-General has certified there is not adequate room for the courts in this place. Whether this appropriation is too much or too little I do not know. It is impossible to tell whether this sum of $120,000 is sufficient or more than sufficient.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. There has been a careful estimate made.

Mr. BLAND. It is provided in the bill I have introduced that when the Department seeks to have an appropriation made for a building in which to carry on the business of that Department and to have a building erected for United States courts or for other purposes, that request should come from the Department accompanied by the necessary information.

I hope that the bill upon that subject which I introduced, or some other bill, will be reported here in a few days, so that this scene may stop and that this system of log-rolling by which these bills are put through here shall cease. Otherwise, in a short time we shall be engaged in another system of log-rolling by which taxes are to be kept upon the people of this country. One gentleman in his district has a little tobacco, and another a little whisky; one a little iron, and another a little lead; one a little something else, and another a little wool; and they will combine and log-roll for those interests in their districts, thus keeping taxation upon the people and making another log-rolling system necessary to get the money out of the Treasury as soon as it gets in. I say that it is time to call a halt in this House upon this system of legislation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FIRE-PROOF BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5639) for erecting a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass., one fire-proof carpenters' and stocking shop. The plan, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for said building complete the sum of $75,000.

For the purposes of this act the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The report (by Mr. DIBBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 5639, providing for the erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory at Springfield, Mass., makes the following report:

The necessity for the erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory is fully disclosed in the letter of the Secretary of War inclosing a copy of a report on the subject from the Chief of Ordnance, which letter and report are annexed to and made a part of this report.

Your committee concur in said report, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

"WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 26, 1888.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23d instant, requesting that a report be made on House bill 5639, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to provide for erection of a fire-proof workshop at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass. In reply I beg to inclose a copy of a report on the subject, dated the 24th instant, from the Chief of Ordnance, who submits an estimate and drawings for a new building at the National Armory for stocking and carpenter shops, and recommends an appropriation of $75,000 for the purpose.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
"Secretary of War.

"Hon. SAMUEL DIBBLE,
"Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
"House of Representatives."

"ORDNANCE OFFICE, Washington, January 24, 1888.

"Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, with an estimate and drawings for a new building at the National Armory, Springfield, Mass., for stocking and carpenter shops.

"The old shops used for these purposes are an addition to the original machine-shop built nearly fifty years ago, and from the nature of the wood-work carried on in them are a menace to the whole structure. The erection of a fire-proof building is, therefore, not only a necessity, but is demanded by the advance made in all departments of labor since these old buildings were put up. Modern ideas require more room, more light, more conveniences for workmen, more facilities for handling material, more security for fine machinery, more economy of space in the arrangement of shops and their connection with each other. The old shops are worn out, are of the cheapest order of work buildings, and not a credit to the United States. These buildings have served their time and should be followed by workshops such as are to be found in all our manufacturing centers. This appropriation of $75,000 is therefore recommended.

"The aggregate is made up as follows:

Masonry work	$29,000
Iron work	32,000
Wood work	9,700
Glass and glazing	700
Paints and painting	200
Roofing	3,000
Drains and pavements	400
Total	75,000

"S. V. BENÉT,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in connection with this bill. I do not wish to object to its consideration, but I want to reserve a question of order on the bill.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I have no objection to the question of order being reserved.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to stating the question of order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not mean to say that this is not a proper bill or that the proposed building ought not to be erected, but my point is this——

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose the right to object will not be exhausted by the gentleman's statement.

Mr. ROCKWELL. It never is exhausted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this bill?

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection to hearing the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care to be heard if the gentleman from Kentucky desires to object.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think that under the rules this bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and I make the point that if it is to be discussed at all, it should be discussed in Committee of the Whole and be subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is for unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole and consider the bill at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to going into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL]?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I trust the gentleman from Missouri will not object. A bill from the other side of the House has just been considered.

Mr. BLAND. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be accused of unfairness by that side of the House, and therefore I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his objection.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, the gentleman from Missouri is not sincere when he lectures the House. When he has a chance to object and block this legislation he does not do it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, that statement is wholly gratuitous, and it is not in the line usually followed by the gentleman from Illinois upon this floor, for I have always regarded him as a fair man. When I state that I withdraw the objection because I do not want to be accused of unfairness by his side of the House, it certainly comes with a very bad grace from him to charge me with insincerity. I know that I am as sincere as he is, and when he says otherwise he makes a statement that is not true and that is entirely uncalled for.

Mr. CANNON. What have I said that you say is not true?

Mr. BLAND. I say that when you say that my sincerity is not as great as yours, it is not true.

Mr. CANNON. I said that you could stop these bills by objecting, and that you did not do it.

Mr. BLAND. I could stop them by objecting, but I do not wish to stop them in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL]? The Chair understood the gentleman from Georgia to raise a point of order, and if he insists upon it, that is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the Chair will hear me a moment he may have a different opinion about it. I have no objection to the consideration of this bill. I desire to raise a point of order in reference to the appropriation contained in the bill, nothing more.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Let that be done while the bill is being considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already decided that the point of order is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know whether, if the House now enters upon the consideration of this bill, I shall be precluded from raising afterwards the question of order upon a particular provision of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] raises the point of order that this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Chair misunderstands the gentleman from Georgia. I have not raised that question. If the Chair will hear me for a minute, I think I can make the matter clear. I am not objecting to the consideration of the bill, but there is a part of the bill which is subject to a point of order, in my judgment. I desire to make the point of order on that part of the bill when it shall be reached in the consideration of it. If that point of order shall be sustained, it need not retard the consideration of the bill at all.

The object I had in rising was, by calling the attention of the Chair to the matter now, to avoid being precluded from raising the point at the appropriate time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state the proposition.

Mr. LONG. I understand the gentleman from Georgia does not object to the consideration of this bill. On the contrary, he wishes it considered. He simply wants to reserve the right to make a point of order upon a provision of the bill when it comes to be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not ascertain the point of order until it is raised. The Chair will again put the question: Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of this bill and considering it now in the House?

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the House should enter upon the consideration of this bill, will it be competent to raise a question of order on any part of the bill when it is reached?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would depend entirely upon the kind of question of order which might be raised.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, if the Chair will allow me, I will illustrate so as to make my inquiry, I think, very plain. This bill embraces authority for the erection of a public building—a provision which, under the rules, is entirely within the province of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The bill likewise contains an appropriation of money, and under the rules such appropriations belong to the Committee on Appropriations. The information I now desire is whether, if the House agrees to consider this bill, I shall thereby be precluded from raising a question of order on that part of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that if the House should agree now to consider this proposition, all questions of jurisdiction are thereby waived. The Chair will not undertake to decide any question of order until it comes up. The question is upon the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I demand the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

BRIDGE ACROSS NOXUBEE RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. BANKHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. 8343) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot-passenger bridge across the Noxubee River, at or near Gainesville, in the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CATTARAUGUS AND ALLEGANY RESERVATIONS, NEW YORK.

Mr. PEEL (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8346) to regulate leases of lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, in New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF NAVAL REPORT.

Mr. MORROW introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, with the necessary illustrations, 3,000 copies of the report of a board of naval engineers on the experiments which the Navy Department was enabled, through the courtesy of J. M. Forbes, esq., owner of the yacht Shearwater, to make, for the purpose of determining the efficiency of a sectional marine boiler; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the House, 500 for the use of the Senate, and 1,500 for distribution by the Navy Department.

DEBT OF CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BIGGS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8347) to provide for settlement of the debt of the Central Pacific Railroad Company growing out of issues of bonds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 1225, REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SYMES introduced a bill (H. R. 8348) to amend section 1225, Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TERMS OF COURT IN COLORADO.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8349) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for terms of court in Colorado;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LAND OFFICE AT TRINIDAD, COLO.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8350) to establish a land office at Trinidad, Colo.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICE IN COLORADO.

Mr. SYMES also introduced a bill (H. R. 8351) to establish an additional land office in Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROAD FROM TITUSVILLE, ETC.

Mr. DOUGHERTY introduced a bill (H. R. 8352) granting aid in the construction of a railroad from the town of Titusville, Brevard County, Florida, to the Bight of Canaveral, with a branch to Banana River, in said county and State; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS HILLSBOROUGH RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. DOUGHERTY also introduced a bill (H. R. 8353) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Hillsborough River, at a point in the town of New Smyrna, in the county of Volusia, and State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HALIFAX RIVER BRIDGE AND STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. DOUGHERTY also introduced a bill (H. R. 8354) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a pile bridge over the Halifax River at Daytona, Volusia County, Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. DOUGHERTY also introduced a bill (H. R. 8355) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the St. John's River, between De Land Landing and Lake Monroe, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF DAVID RYAN.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 8356) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan against the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SERVICE-PENSION BILL.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, also presented the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS
PER DIEM RATED SERVICE-PENSION ASSOCIATION,
No. 84 Nassau street (Room 34),
New York, March 8, 1888.

SIR: At the national convention of the Per Diem Rated Service-Pension Association, held at Irving Hall, in this city, on March 1, 1888, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the ex-Union soldiers, sailors, and marines in convention assembled, representing the veterans in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia of the United States of America, the large majority of whom are also members of the Grand Army of the Republic, unanimously indorse the per diem rated service-pension bill No. 1537, as presented in the Senate, and No. 5662, as presented in the House; and we hereby petition our Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for and pass this measure, which is the only bill that has been presented granting equal justice to all, feeling assured of the approval by the President, the constitutional Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the president of this association and attested by the secretary, be forwarded to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate from the several States and Territories, and to the President of the United States.

CHARLES A. WELLS,
President Per Diem Rated Service-Pension Association.

Attest:

J. A. JOEL, Secretary.

Hon. JEHU BAKER,
Member of Congress.

LARD.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, presented the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the prohibition of the sale of any compound as pure lard, and requiring any such compound to be sold under its true name; and that said committee be instructed to report herein by bill or otherwise.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. ROWELL introduced a bill (H. R. 8357) granting arrears of pensions to certain pensioners; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

Mr. GEST introduced a bill (H. R. 8358) for the erection of a public building at Rock Island, Ill.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MONMOUTH, ILL.

Mr. GEST also introduced a bill (H. R. 8359) for the erection of a public building at Monmouth, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS TRUSTS.

Mr. OWEN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following joint resolution (H. Res. 132); which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Manufactures, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas the existence of business combinations, known as trusts, for the purpose of controlling the production and price of raw and manufactured commodities, is an injustice to labor and a conspiracy against the consumer; and

Whereas the anthracite-coal and Standard-Oil and other alleged business combines, which are not subject to national legislation except in their interstate movements, being creatures of the States and under their control; and

Whereas it is alleged that the owners of certain industries whose productions are protected by the tariff have formed such business combines: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the formation of such a business combination by the owners of an industry fostered by the Government is a violation of good faith, and tends to defeat the results sought to be obtained by the fostering act of the Government, and justifies the repeal of the protective tariff in every such case.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a commission of five men whose duty it shall be, upon evidence furnished which creates a reasonable presumption that a trust, pool, syndicate, or combination by whatever name known has been organized for the purpose or does in fact control the production or price of any article on the tariff schedule, to make an investigation into the management of such industry as far as it relates to control of production or price of its merchandise, and report the same to Congress on the first Monday of next December. The commission shall conduct its investigations at such place or places as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. The commission shall have power to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer. As compensation for their services in the investigations and time spent in traveling, the members of the commission shall receive per diem the daily rating of pay given Representatives in Congress. For the purpose of this investigation the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

ARREARS.

Mr. HOVEY (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8360) to grant arrears in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, IOWA.

Mr. KERR introduced a bill (H. R. 8361) amending the act of July 20, 1882, dividing the State of Iowa into two judicial districts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PORTRAIT OF GENERAL JAMES WILKINSON.

Mr. CARUTH introduced a bill (H. R. 8362) to provide for the purchase of a portrait of General James Wilkinson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. FINLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8363) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Postmaster-General to extend the mail service in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved August 3, 1882; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair this bill should be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. FINLEY. I move its reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, my attention was not called at the moment to the title of the bill which has just been referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I ask that the title be again reported.

The title of the bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that this bill properly went to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; but on motion of the gentleman from Kentucky it was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Does the gentleman from Georgia move to reconsider?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do. I move to reconsider the vote referring the bill to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Manifestly, under the rule, this should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing at all intricate about this bill. It simply meets one of the objections to the postal laws and regulations as at present in force. Under the act of August 3, 1882, the Postmaster-General is authorized to cut off and curtail the service. This amendment simply provides that where he sees fit to cut off the head of the route, after it has been contracted for and sublet, and it becomes necessary for the contractor to go to the point where it is proposed to be sublet, that he shall be allowed 4 cents a mile as necessary expenses for his traveling each way. That is all it does.

Mr. BLOUNT. Under the very statement of the gentleman himself obviously this proposition should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It is one which deals with legislation in reference to mail contracts; and you had just as well take away every other subject from that committee as this one. It seems to me if the rules are correct they had better be observed; and I can not see with what propriety this bill should go to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider, and it was decided in the affirmative; there being, on a division—ayes 69, noes 64.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move to refer this bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF IMPORTED LIQUORS FOR DUTIES.

Mr. DINGLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8364) to provide that the payment of duties on imported, distilled, or fermented liquors shall not be held to authorize their sale contrary to State laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF ARBITRATION.

Mr. LONG submitted a resolution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, concerning an international court of arbitration; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
In the year 1888.

Resolution concerning an international court of arbitration.

Resolved, That the senate and house of representatives in General Court assembled, approve of the efforts being made relating to the ultimate ratification of treaties which shall provide for the settlement by arbitration of any difference or disputes arising between the governments of Great Britain or other civilized nations and the United States, which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency, and thereby providing for the settlement of all international difficulties which may arise without resorting to cruel methods of war and bloodshed.

SENATE, February 23, 1888.

Adopted.
Sent down for concurrence.

E. HERBERT CLAPP, Clerk.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 28, 1888.

Adopted in concurrence.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

A true copy.
Attest:

E. HERBERT CLAPP,
Clerk Senate.

SALARY OF THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR.

Mr. LONG also introduced a bill (H. R 8365) fixing the salary of the Commissioner of Labor at $5,000 per annum; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF HISTORICAL INDIAN PAINTINGS.

Mr. CHIPMAN introduced the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the propriety of purchasing from the administratrix of the late John M. Stanley the historical paintings by the said John M. Stanley now in the custody of the Smithsonian Institution.

PORT OF ENTRY SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. CUTCHEON introduced a bill (H. R. 8366) to amend section 2599 of the Revised Statutes of the United States making Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan, a port of entry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

STATE REGULATION OF RAILROADS.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (H. R. 8367) to provide in certain cases for the regulation of railway companies chartered by the United States by the several States and Territories in which the railways of such companies run and are operated; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HASTINGS AND DAKOTA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MACDONALD introduced a bill (H. R. 8368) to forfeit the lands granted to the Hastings and Dakota Railroad Company, in the State of Minnesota, and for the relief of settlers upon the same and certain purchasers thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ON OFFICIAL BONDS.

Mr. RICE introduced a bill (H. R. 8369) to limit the time in which action may be brought by the United States upon the bonds of public officers, their sureties or legal representatives; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. HOOKER introduced a bill (H. R. 8370) to remove obstructions to the free navigation of the navigable waters of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Habors, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WALKER introduced the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, instructed to apportion to the members of the Fiftieth Congress all books which have not yet been apportioned, including all the volumes of the second edition of Wharton's Digest, notwithstanding the resolution of the House of March 2, 1887.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. DOCKERY submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That on and after Tuesday, March 27, 1888, the hour for the daily meeting of the House shall be 11 o'clock a. m., until otherwise ordered.

TELEGRAPHIC FACILITIES.

Mr. DOCKERY also submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, or a subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to investigate and ascertain whether legislation is needed to prevent a monopoly of telegraphic facilities, and to protect the people of the United States from unreasonable charges for telegraphic services.

To carry out the intent of this resolution the said committee, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to send for and examine persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, and to employ a stenographer; and the expenses of such investigation, not to exceed $1,500, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House in the manner now provided by law.

INDEMNITY SCHOOL LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. LAIRD introduced a bill (H. R. 8371) to allow the State of Nebraska to select indemnity school lands from any unoccupied public lands of said State; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WINNEBAGO RESERVATION, IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. DORSEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8372) authorizing the sale of a portion of the Winnebago reservation, in Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONVICT-MADE GOODS.

Mr. BUCHANAN introduced a bill (H. R. 8373) in relation to convict-made goods; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Labor, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL SERVICE TO SOUTH AMERICA, ETC.

Mr. MERRIMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 8374) to provide more efficient mail service between the United States and South and Central America and the West Indies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF CUSTODIANS AND JANITORS.

Mr. TRACEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8375) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to expend $60,000 for pay of custodians and janitors for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TAXES ON DISTILLED SPIRITS, ETC.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. 8376) to abolish special taxes on distilled spirits and other articles subject to internal-revenue taxes at the place where such goods are delivered by the carrier to the vendee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WEST WASHINGTON LIGHTING, ETC., COMPANY.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, (by request), also introduced a bill (H. R. 8377) to incorporate the West Washington Lighting, Heating, Motor, and Power Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS introduced a bill (H. R. 8378) to grant pensions for service in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS also introduced a bill (H. R. 8379) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war," approved January 29, 1887; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION AT COLUMBUS, OHIO.

R. 8381) to amend section 6 of the act approved March 1, 1887, entitled "An act to organize the hospital corps of the Army of the United States, to define its duty, and fix its pay;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL EXPOSITION, COLORED RACE.

Mr. KELLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8382) to encourage the holding of a national industrial exposition of the arts, mechanics, and products of the colored race throughout the United States of America, to be held in the years 1888 and 1889; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORT DUTIES AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. RANDALL introduced a bill (H. R. 8383) to reduce and equalize duties on imports, to reduce internal-revenue taxes, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC-BUILDING BILLS.

Mr. DIBBLE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the third Tuesdays in April, May, and June next, after the hour for consideration of bills reported from committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings, and that during the time so set apart no dilatory motion shall be sustained by the Chair except, at and after 5 o'clock p. m., the motion to adjourn; and not more than thirty minutes shall be consumed in debate on any bill, including debate on questions of order, of which time fifteen minutes shall be controlled in favor of the bill by the committee and fifteen minutes by those opposing the bill.

WIDENING OF B STREET.

Mr. HEMPHILL introduced a bill (H. R. 8384) to authorize the widening of B street southeast, in the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. HEMPHILL also introduced a bill (H. R. 8385) to amend an act giving the approval of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

DECLARATIONS OF PENSION CLAIMANTS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill (H. R. 8386) authorizing the declarations of pension claimants to be made before notaries public; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF DIRECT TAX.

Mr. CASWELL offered a resolution fixing the time for the consideration of the bill (S. 139) providing for refunding the direct tax of 1861; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

PENITENTIARY IN UTAH.

Mr. CAINE introduced a bill (H. R. 8387) extending the limit of the appropriation for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, introduced a bill (H. R. 8388) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Florida or Seminole Indian war of 1835 to 1842, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO COLORED UNITED STATES SOLDIERS.

Mr. BAKER, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a petition signed by 151 of my constituents, asking for the erection of a monument to the colored soldiers of the Union. In courtesy to so many good citizens, I request that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition, which was referred to the Committee on the Library, is as follows:

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives from Illinois in the Congress of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners are informed that Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts, has introduced a bill in the Senate providing for the erection at Washington of a monument to the colored United States soldiers who fell in defense of the Union.

Your petitioners respectfully beg your consideration of the advisability of amending said bill so as to change the proposed location of said monument from Washington to the city of Alton, Ill., for the following reasons:

1. In this city of Alton, Ill., on the 7th day of November, 1837, was made the first armed resistance to the encroachment of the slave power in America, and here the first martyr to the cause of universal liberty lies buried.

2. For fifty years the grave of Elijah P. Lovejoy has been the Mecca of the colored people in America, and the erection of a national monument here would satisfy their sense of poetic justice.

3. This location in the heart of the Mississippi Valley would be geographically as well as politically appropriate; the commanding bluffs of Alton overlook the confluence of the two great rivers of the continent, and they also mark the old border line between freedom and slavery, now happily obliterated.

To these considerations we invite your earnest attention, and your petitioners will ever pray.

ALTON, ILL., February 23, 1888.

REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTION IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a petition of New York merchants and steam-ship companies.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, before unanimous consent is given for the printing of these matters in the RECORD I would like to know what they are.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. This is a very brief petition. It relates to the removal of a rock which obstructs the navigation of the East River.

There was no objection, and the petition, which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable House of Representatives, Washington, D. C:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, interested in the safe navigation of the East River, in the State of New York, do hereby respectfully petition your honorable body to make a sufficient appropriation during the present session for the prompt removal of a ledge of rock situated in the said East River between Broome and Twenty-third streets, which is extremely dangerous to life and property.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES LANDS.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 8389) for the relief of the settlers upon the lands on the Des Moines River above the Raccoon Forks, in the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PATENTS.

Mr. WARNER introduced a bill (H. R. 8390) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to patents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

BRANCH SOLDIERS' HOME IN INDIANA.

Mr. STEELE introduced a bill (H. R. 8391) to authorize the location of a branch home for volunteer disabled soldiers in Grant County, Indiana, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PARKER introduced a concurrent resolution providing for the turning over and distribution of certain documents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE introduced a bill (H. R. 8392) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service, approved August 4, 1886;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. RICHARDSON offered a resolution to pay the clerk of the special committee appointed to investigate the Government Printing Office the usual pay of session clerks; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

NATIONAL AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a petition numerously signed by citizens of Fulton County, Ohio, asking for national aid to common schools. I ask unanimous consent that the petition be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition, which was referred to the Committee on Education, is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Delta, county of Fulton, State of Ohio, believing that the prosperity and perpetuity of all free institutions depend upon the intelligence and virtue of the people; that ignorance exists to an alarming degree, and endangers the general welfare of the Republic: We therefore earnestly pray for the enactment of a law which shall authorize the appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States for temporary aid in the establishment and maintenance of free public schools, and for such other remedial legislation as is necessary, to the end that the number of illiterates in the country, now exceeding six million persons ten years of age and over, shall be reduced to a minimum.

AGRICULTURE.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to present for reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads resolutions of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture in favor of a reduction of postal rates on seeds, plants, etc., and also on agricultural and horticultural reports. I ask unanimous consent that these resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The document is as follows:

Whereas the United States Postal Association are endeavoring to secure a reduction of postal rates on fourth-class matter, especially on seeds, plants, bulbs, scions, etc.; also a reissue of fractional currency for use in the mails, the abolishment of postal-notes, etc.: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture, That we approve of these efforts, and appeal to our Senators and Representatives in Congress for their efforts in support of these measures, and also approve their action looking to a reduction of postage on agricultural and horticultural reports.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution, attested by the president and secretary of the board, be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives.

I hereby certify that the foregoing preamble and resolutions were regularly adopted February 1, 1888, at the annual meeting of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture, held at Trenton, N. J.

E. BENNYT, President.
Attest: FRANKLIN DYE, Secretary.

IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a question of privilege and report back with a favorable recommendation, from the Committee on Public Lands, the joint resolution S. R. 60, a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 60) directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States, and to report to Congress.

Whereas a large portion of the unoccupied public lands of the United States is located in what is known as the arid region, and now utilized only for grazing purposes, but much of which, by means of irrigation, may be rendered as fertile and productive as any land in the world, capable of supporting a large population, thereby adding to the national wealth and prosperity; and

Whereas all the water flowing during the summer months in many streams of the Rocky Mountains, upon which the husbandman of the plains and the mountain valleys chiefly depends for moisture for his crops, has been appropriated and is used for the irrigation of lands contiguous thereto, whereby a comparatively small area has been reclaimed; and

Whereas there are many natural depressions near the sources and along the courses of these streams which may be converted into reservoirs for the storage of the surplus water which during the winter and spring season flows through the streams, from which reservoirs the water there stored can be drawn and conducted through properly constructed canals at the proper season, thus bringing large areas of land into cultivation and making desirable much of the public lands for which there is now no demand: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, be, and he is hereby, directed to make an examination of that portion of the arid region of the United States where agriculture is carried on by means of irrigation, as to the natural advantages for the storage of water for irrigating purposes, with the practicability of constructing reservoirs, together with the capacity of the streams and the cost of construction and capacity of reservoirs, and such other facts as bear on the question of storage of water for irrigating purposes; and that he be further directed to report to Congress as soon as practicable the result of such investigation.

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred Senate joint resolution No. 60, entitled "Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States and to report to Congress," have considered the same, and recommend its adoption.

Mr. PAYSON. This resolution is reported back under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is in doubt whether this is a privileged question, and will ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. PAYSON. It is clearly privileged under the rule.

Several MEMBERS. No objection.

Mr. PAYSON. I move that the joint resolution be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDEMNITY FOR SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. MCRAE. I am directed by the Committee on the Public Lands to present the resolution which I send to the desk, setting apart a day for the consideration of the bill named.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday, March 14, 1888, after the morning hour for the consideration of bills, be set apart for the consideration of House bill No. 6897, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to relieve purchasers of, and to indemnify certain States for, swamp and overflowed lands erroneously disposed of by the United States; not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or prior orders; and if not disposed of on that day, then Wednesday of each subsequent week shall be set apart and substituted therefor until the said bill shall be disposed of by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. MCCREARY. I object.

Mr. MCRAE. If the objection is made on account of the day proposed, I will modify the resolution so as to name Thursday, March 15.

Mr. MCCREARY. That day has been assigned to business of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MILLS. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution. If there be no objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred accordingly.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, by a rule of the House of Representatives all petitions are presented by members through the box placed in front of the Clerk's desk and referred to the committee having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the particular petition. The only way of presenting a petition and securing a hearing for it is, therefore, primarily in the committee to which it is referred. There is no rule by which a petition can be heard in the House and be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or can, indeed, have a hearing from any quarter except on the part of the committee to which it is referred.

On the 7th day of March, the present month——

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to object; but I would like to know whether this is a privileged matter.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman will find out that it is before I get through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not heard enough yet to understand the nature of the question which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is seeking to present.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not yet stated his proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. On the 7th day of the present month I presented the petition of Nonpareil, of Wayne, and of Etna Lodges of Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of Allegheny, of Pittsburgh, and of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, with representations therein concerning tariff legislation or proposed tariff legislation. These petitions emanated from those lodges, which had respectively assembled in their lodge rooms, discussed the matters therein set forth, passed resolutions with the representations therein contained; and those petitions were forwarded to me to present to this House. Doubtless many of my colleagues have done the same thing. Petitions have been presented here from manufacturers, from manufacturing associations, from granges, from various organizations throughout the country, as well as from individuals.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I raise the point that the gentleman is not stating any question of privilege.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman will not estop me from stating my question of privilege. I claim——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know whether I shall "estop" the gentleman or not; but I raise the question of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I claim to be quite as competent a judge of a question of privilege as the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have the right to raise the question of order, and I do raise the question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no doubt the gentleman from Pennsylvania needs the assistance of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. He shall always have it in a cause as righteous as this is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not stated any question of privilege, but under the pretense of stating a question of privilege he is stating what is not a question of privilege.

Mr. BAYNE. If I am permitted to proceed, I will state not only a question of privilege, but a question of the very highest privilege, and a question of privilege which should command the support of every member of this body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. BAYNE. As I was stating, these petitions were referred and presented to their appropriate committees, and in this case they were referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Under Article I of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States it is declared that Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or respecting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. Now, having received these petitions, recognizing as I do the right of the people when they peaceably assemble to present their grievances to the Government to be heard; having referred these petitions to the Committee on Ways and Means of this body, by which we assumed they would be heard, I felt no particular concern whatever for these petitioners, but as I saw it stated in the newspapers throughout the country, going out not only by the Associated Press organizations but by special correspondents all over the country, that a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means had not only denied a hearing to persons concerned in tariff legislation, but had denied the right to have the petitions presented and referred to them read before that committee—I saw it stated in the newspapers that a motion was made by a member of that committee that the petitions referred to it should be read, and that a majority of that committee voted "no" and decided they should not be read—I insist upon it, that is a denial of the right of petition. It is an emphatic denial of the right of petition, for if these petitions can not be heard in the body of the House, can not be read and presented to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and they can not be heard by that committee of Ways and Means, by whom then shall they have the right to be heard?

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Not now, but in a moment I will allow you.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to the point of order that the gentleman is not stating any question of privilege.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to state my question of privilege.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. This is simply a false pretense; there is no question of privilege in it.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not care to reply if the gentleman from Kentucky has to depend on that kind of argument to sustain himself.

Mr. DAVIS. I insist the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order in charging any member of this House with false pretense when stating a solemn question of privilege in reference to the right of petition on the part of the people.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has raised the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not stating any question of privilege.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the point of order will not be decided until I have had an opportunity at least to state what my proposition is. I have summarized my question of privilege in the shape of a resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the question of order if he desires to be heard.

Mr. BAYNE. Before saying anything on the point of order I wish the Clerk to read the resolution I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is currently stated in the newspapers throughout the country that the Committee on Ways and Means, by a majority, has not only refused oral hearings to the producers, manufacturers, and workingmen of the country, but has denied to them also the right to have read before that committee their printed or written petitions in relation to the proposed changes of the tariff laws; and

Whereas the right of petition is a sacred constitutional right of the people; and

Whereas it has so long been the practice of the committees of the Senate and of the House of Representatives to freely grant opportunities to be heard by persons and interests affected by proposed legislation: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and it is hereby, instructed to make thorough inquiry respecting the foregoing allegations and to report the facts, with such amendment of the rules of the House as may be necessary to assure to the people the full enjoyment of their constitutional right to be heard by petition or otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kentucky. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is clearly stated in the written resolution read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has heard the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. What did the Chair state?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order, but if the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to discuss the point the Chair will hear him.

Mr. BAYNE. I do desire to be heard. I desire to say in reference to the point of order that if the right of petition to the House of Representatives, a constitutional right guarantied to the people of the United States, is not a question of the highest privilege, then I do not know what is a question of privilege.

Even the reference, Mr. Speaker, of a simple bill to a committee presents a question of privilege. It has been held over and over again that everything pertaining to the dignity or the safety of the proceedings of the House of Representatives is a question of privilege. If it be not a question of privilege to ascertain the views of petitioners to the House of Representatives and the Senate, when that right is guarantied by the Constitution of the United States, then I fail to comprehend what constitutes a question of privilege in the sense that that term is used in the rules.

Mr. ADAMS. May I be allowed to make a suggestion on the point of order and nothing else? Suppose I introduce a bill here, whether public or private—if private it goes to the petition-box—and suppose the Clerk takes that bill and destroys it, puts it in the fire, I ask whether that proceeding involves a question of privilege? I believe it does. Suppose it be a public bill, and the Clerk does precisely the same thing, is that not a question of the highest privilege? Now, suppose the private bill, having been deposited in the memorial-box, goes into the hands of a chairman of a committee of this House, who destroys it or puts it in a pigeon-hole, or locks it up, or hides it from the committee having charge of it, does not his action in regard to the matter present a question of privilege for the consideration of this House?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But that is not the question presented here, and that was the reason I used the expression, "a false pretense," in this case, because it was not a question of that character. Here is simply a resolution of inquiry directed to the Committee on Rules to inquire as to what change, if any, shall be necessary. That is confessedly a resolution of inquiry, and shows on its face that it is nothing else than such a resolution, and as such is not privileged under any circumstances, but when introduced in the regular manner simply goes, under the rules of the House, to that committee without debate.

Mr. BAYNE. The only question is that of order. It is a question as to whether or not it presents a question of privilege. It is not a resolution of inquiry, but an appeal to the House for relief.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There is just where the gentleman is mistaken. It is not an appeal to the House; it is an appeal to the established methods of obtaining information on a resolution of inquiry, by reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BAYNE. It is a petition for relief, a resolution seeking relief. The object I have in view is that my constituents may petition Congress, and when they do that they shall be heard. That is the object and the only object I have in view.

Mr. BLAND. The farmers of this country have been petitioning Congress for years, and they have not had any relief yet.

Mr. BAYNE. And I desire this question to be laid before the whole House, for every member of the House is equally interested with me and my constituents in securing relief.

Mr. BLAND. We have petitions from the farmers all over the West to be relieved from mortgages amounting to hundreds of millions upon their property, but they have not got any relief yet.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the House may well consider this proposition upon another ground than that which has been presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. The House in making an investigation preliminary to a change of law, whenever such a law affects the business public or the private interests of the community, is obliged to make use of instrumentalities, and the chief of these instrumentalities is the committees composed of its own members. Therefore the House must have the right to regulate the action of its committees; and there may be a proceeding on the part of its committees of such a character as to demand the attention of the House.

If it be true, as has been alleged, that a committee of this House in preparing a bill, every line of which seriously affects the industries of this country, has so behaved as to show the House that the investigation which this body desired to make has not been made, surely it must be a question of privilege for this House to inquire into it. If it so be that a bill has been prepared secretly, after three months of time have been consumed, without any action on the part of the committee as a whole; and when that bill, thus secretly prepared—by interviews with favored persons, and as the effect of such interviews, and of the knowledge of the parties who prepared it—if upon presentation of that bill all hearings have been refused to the community——

Mr. SCOTT (interrupting). I rise to a question of order.

Mr. REED (continuing)—which is interested in it, and to every individual of it that hearing has been refused, not only to manufacturers engaged in business, but also to the workingmen who demanded a hearing, because their daily wages are affected——

Mr. SCOTT. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will desist.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to inquire whether any member of this House has the right to rise in his seat and make charges against a committee of this House under the plea that he rises to a question of privilege; or whether he has the right, as a member of that committee, to get up here in this House and furnish to the House information as to what has occurred in that committee [derisive laughter on the Republican side], and before the committee has reported upon the bill?

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can carry to his seat, when he occupies it, the certain consolation that any charge, even though hypothetically made, if false, will only recoil upon him who has made the charge.

Mr. BAYNE. And I assume that responsibility here.

Mr. REED. But this will not recoil. I put it hypothetically. I have revealed none of the secrets of the committee, because very few of them have been confided to the charge of the minority. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I rise to a question of order. I ask if this is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state he desired to hear the gentleman from Maine on the point of order.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. CRISP. Has the Chair heard from the gentleman on that point of order?

Mr. REED. The Chair has not heard from him entirely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine will proceed in order.

Mr. REED. I think I am doing so. I am laying the foundation of fact or supposition on which my argument is to be based.

Mr. CRISP. I merely wish to make the point, and do so in perfect good faith, that we owe it to each other in this House that we conform to the rules.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. CRISP. And if the gentleman has a question of order to discuss he owes it to the Speaker and to the House and to himself in presenting it not to go outside of the question and suggest something which he may know as a committeeman or something he may have heard.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Georgia will hear consecutively what I have to say he will, I think, as a good parliamentarian, acknowledge that I am perfectly in order.

Mr. CRISP. The only trouble about it is that the Chair has said he is ready to rule. The only question is whether the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a privileged resolution or not.

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. CRISP. The Chair now states he is ready to decide the question, and the gentleman from Maine, I respectfully submit——

Mr. HOUK. I do not understand that the Chair can close the discussion on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state he has the right to close the discussion on the point of order when he thinks it has proceeded far enough.

Mr. REED. If, as I was about to remark when I was interrupted, in addition to refusing oral hearing, that committee should be so misguided—I am only stating it hypothetically—should be so misguided as to deliberately resolve that not only would they have no oral hearings, but while they would graciously permit the mails of the country to bring letters to them, those letters representing business interests and workingmen's interests should not be read by the clerk for the information of the committee, but should take the usual chances of the waste-basket which communications addressed to members of Congress in print, owing to the pressure from all quarters, are likely to take—now, if such should be the state of facts, and the House should be of opinion that that was not a method of investigation which they desired and thought useful, and if the committee persisted in such course, will it be said that it is not a question of privilege for the House to direct, in so vital a matter, the proceedings of its creature, whose sole purpose of existence is to intelligently carry out its will?

Mr. MILLS. The charge made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] on loose newspaper statements floating around the country and the charge made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] in a hypothetical way are both intended to convey a false statement to the House. I am not permitted by the rules of this House to state what occurred in the committee, and I will not attempt to respond to hypothetical statements, misleading to the House and intended to leave the inference on the minds of gentlemen that the petitions of any citizens of this country have not been treated with respect by any committee of this House. If the charge is made in a manly, direct, frank, open manner, I will respond to it in the way in which it ought to be responded to, but I do not care to respond to a statement that is utterly false and without any truth. I am not, however, at all astonished at the performance of to-day.

It has been assumed by some gentlemen that no persons are needed to be consulted before committees of this House as to the character of its legislation except trusts, combinations, and pools. When we hear talk of people who are petitioning to be heard before the Ways and Means Committee, the reference being to the business interest, the manufacturers and the tax-receiving interest, they do not pretend that the great body of the people of the country who bear the burdens of taxation, who have these taxes to pay, most exorbitant in their exactions, are entitled to come to the doors of these committees and be received and heard. It is only the business interest.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. MILLS. Let the gentleman maintain his soul in patience.

Mr. REED. I am going to.

Mr. MILLS. I doubt it. It is only those interests that are demanding to be heard by the Committee on Ways and Means, and who insist that we shall be compelled to retard our business that their petitions may be heard, so as to defeat the wishes of the people of this country.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to know what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is speaking upon. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not speaking to the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The same point of order that was made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is now renewed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON]. The debate has dilated beyond the point of order which was originally made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and which the Chair is now ready to decide and proposes to decide. The resolution introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]——

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. [Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state respectfully to the House that he has the privilege, under the rules, of selecting his own time for deciding points of order; he has now heard gentlemen on both sides. He has heard them sufficiently to make the point intelligible to his own mind at least. The resolution introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers in the first place to an alleged refusal on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means to allow oral hearings. That is not within the purview of a question of privilege here. It is a matter entirely within the province of the committee. Next, the resolution recites that certain persons have been denied the opportunity to have read before that committee their printed or written petitions in relation to proposed changes in the tariff laws. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] takes the high constitutional ground that the right of petition has been thus invaded by this action of the Committee on Ways and Means. The right of petition is not abridged by the mode of reception of these petitions prescribed by our House rules; nor is it abridged by any denial of which the Chair is aware. That has already been decided. How, then, is the right of petition abridged? By the action of this Committee of Ways and Means in this alleged denial of the reading of the petitions? What has this committee done; and how can the House take control of this committee matter so as to regulate it either as to the mode of hearing, oral or written, or otherwise? The committee has the right within itself to control it. It is not alleged that any member of the committee or of this House has been refused access to these petitions or that information in regard to their contents has been in any manner restricted. It is not a question of privilege to take that business from the committee. If it were done the committee—in fact all committees thus circumstanced—would be so crippled as to be practically useless.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BAYNE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to lay the appeal on the table, will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] withdraws the demand for the yeas and nays; the ayes have it, and the appeal is laid on the table.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADDITIONAL LABORERS IN THE FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution authorizing the Doorkeeper of the House to employ additional laborers in the folding-room; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors which I think is privileged, and for which they ask immediate consideration. I ask to have the report read.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to send to the House of Representatives any information not contained in the Engineer's Report, and which has been sent to the War Department since January 1, 1887, in regard to the detailed plans and estimates for the permanent improvement of the Arkansas River, between Little Rock, Ark., and Fort Gibson, in the Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this resolution at this time?

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to have considered at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be authorized to have printed for the use of said committee such documents and papers as it may deem necessary in connection with the subjects considered by said committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman should fix some limit.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] can designate any reasonable limit which can be readily observed I shall not object. This resolution was passed by the last Congress and greatly promoted the convenience of the committee, and I have never heard any objection to it. Our committee is charged with the consideration of all matters involving expenditures in connection with the post-offices throughout the United States; then there are questions in regard to the classification and rearrangement of the pay of postmasters, and there are other questions running in various directions which I can scarcely enumerate. The whole object of this resolution is simply that the statements coming to us in regard to these matters may be printed, so as to be properly considered by us.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAIL PAGES.

Mr. COMPTON, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to provide in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for two annual mail pages, who shall be paid an annual salary of $900 each.

UNLAWFUL GRAZING ON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for House bill No. 4922 a bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 4922 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

FUGITIVES FROM JUSTICE IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. ROGERS also, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary, as a substitute for House bill No. 6163 a bill (H. R. 8394) authorizing United States marshals to arrest offenders and fugitives from justice in the Indian Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is business of the Committee on the District of Columbia; and the bill coming over from the last District day as unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia. The pending question is on the demand for the previous question on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read the third time.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with instructions to amend as follows:

In section 1, line 36, after the word "road" and before the word "said," insert the words: "Provided, however, That before the corporation hereby created shall have the right to construct the street railroad mentioned in this act the written consent of three-fourths of the owners of the property abutting on the streets, roads, and avenues along or upon which the proposed street railway is to be constructed shall be obtained and filed in the office of the District commissioners, who shall cause the same to be recorded in a book which shall be subject to inspection by the public."

And in same section, in line 39, strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

And in line 43, same section, strike out the word "actual" and in lieu thereof insert "just and reasonable;" and after the word "of" and before the word "such," in same line, insert the word "constructing."

In section 1 strike out, in lines 87 and 88, the following words, "upon the main line of said road," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of constructing the lines of street railroad hereby authorized."

Amend said section further by striking out all after the word "act," in line 90, to and including all of line 91, and 92 to and including the word "date" in said line.

In section 2, in line 19, strike out the words "50 per cent," and in lieu thereof insert the words "the whole amount;" and strike out all of line 20, same section, after the word "paid," where it first occurs in said line, including all of line 21, and the words "may require," in line 22.

And further amend section 2 by inserting, after the word "Columbia" and before the word "the," in line 49, the words: "Provided, however, That beginning at half past 6 o'clock a. m. and until half past 8 a. m. a car shall start from the termini of said road every ten minutes, and from 4 p. m. to 7 p. m. the like number of cars shall be started and run over said line."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon this motion. This House, as an abstract proposition, is desperately in love with "the people"——

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether this question is debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill being now on its passage, and the previous question not having been ordered, debate is in order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, in every other city, so far as I know, where street railroads are constructed the permission of the abutting land-owners or a majority of them is required to be obtained. In this case it appears they are not even to be consulted. It may be that they make no objection; I have no information on that point. It is suggested to me that they are all to be stockholders.

Another thing. It is known to every member of this House that the rate of fare on the several roads of the District of Columbia is at least 33 per cent. too high. While in the construction of these roads little, if any, more that 50 per cent. of the capital was paid in, yet they are declaring such large dividends that the stock is worth more than double its par value. Now, I understand if this road is needed at all, it is needed because there are passengers to carry. If there are a sufficient number of passengers to carry to justify the granting of the charter and the building of the proposed roads, a reasonable rate should be charged and no more; and since the experience in the District of Columbia has demonstrated that a five-cent fare is excessive, I insist that it is reasonable to require those constructing new roads to reduce the rate and fix one somewhat commensurate with the service rendered. If the road is not needed here, and this is simply to boom real estate or with a view to holding on to the franchise until there comes a time when the road is needed, then the charter should not be granted. In regard to the fare that may be collected, I propose to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so that eight tickets will be sold for a quarter instead of six, leaving the cash fare what it is now, at 5 cents.

Another thing. The bill, as it stands, provides that in determining when the corporation may be required to submit to a reduction of the fare charged, the estimate shall be based upon the actual cost of this road. Now, the actual cost may be what these gentlemen may be pleased to make it. I move to strike out "actual" and insert "just and reasonable," because if this road is constructed by a credit mobilier they may fix the cost at what they please. It should be therefore not upon the actual cost, but upon the just and reasonable cost of constructing such road.

I want to call the attention of the House to another thing, and I do it in order that members may be advised touching the thing we are asked to do. The stockholders are by the terms of this bill required to pay only 50 per cent. of the amount subscribed for, the balance to be paid when called for by the board of directors—a provision which is after the old formula. Now, I submit to this House, if there is anything definitely settled in the public mind it is that the amount of capital stock which a corporation may properly issue should be limited to the amount necessary to construct the contemplated road or improvement, since upon no greater sum should the corporation be permitted to declare dividends. And this for the obvious reason that to allow the issue of a greater amount of stock, as seems to be proposed in this case, is to authorize the corporation to charge increased rates of fare in order to declare dividends on capital not invested and upon what is worse than watered stock. Here 50 per cent. is required to be paid in, doubtless because it is thought to be enough to construct the road, and yet 50 per cent. additional stock is to be issued. This is an evil everywhere denounced, and we may, in this instance at least, prevent it. If this corporation needs the whole amount to construct the road, the whole amount should be paid in. If it needs only half the amount, the issuance of the additional stock is wrong. Hence I have sought to amend the bill so as to require that they shall pay, not merely 50 per cent. of the stock, but that they shall pay the entire amount subscribed.

I repeat, if the road is needed (and it is not) the capital subscribed should be sufficient in amount to construct it, and if it is not needed, and this overissue of stock is permitted, the result will be that this company will follow in the train of other corporations organized in the country for merely speculative purposes—stock gambling. And I maintain that it is clearly the duty of this House to guard against any such thing, and it is with that view that I offer the amendment to compel the payment in full of the stock subscribed.

It is provided they shall have three years in which to build the road and its branches—the main line in one year and the branches within two years thereafter. If the road is a public necessity, and only on that ground do we grant the charter, I say to this House it will be constructed in a year. If it is not a public necessity, I do not think the charter should be granted at all. If this road with its branches is needed for any other purpose than to boom real-estate speculations it will be built speedily; and if it is not needed this House ought not to permit a corporation to usurp the right of way and hold it until the growth of the country gives it value.

I propose to insert an amendment, by the terms of which the road shall be constructed in one year. Why not? If it is needed it could and should be built within the time fixed by the proposed amendment, and if it is not needed, we have no right to charter a company, giving it the privilege of taking possession of and keeping these highways until the growth and prosperity of the city shall enable them to speculate in the charter-rights conferred by the terms of this bill.

Now, one other matter, and then such action as the House sees proper to take in this connection may be taken, so far as I am concerned. There is no provision that this corporation shall run even one car a day over this right of way which you propose to grant. The construction of the road is supposed to be in the interest of the public, and for the accommodation of those who walk to and from their homes and desire an opportunity to ride. It is provided by the bill that they shall run their cars on such schedule time as the directors of the company may provide, by and with the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia. Sir, if there are any persons to travel on this road they will travel in the early morning and late in the afternoon, going to and returning from their daily occupation. But these gentlemen who own this valuable franchise will not run cars except at such hours as will be profitable to themselves, unless they are required to do so by the provisions of their charter.

I offer an amendment which provides that the convenience and comfort of the traveling public shall be consulted, so that persons going to their daily labor in the morning, or returning from it in the evening, shall have cars provided sufficient in number and running at hours suitable for their accommodation, so they can ride if they so desire, and in case a suitable number of cars are not thus provided the charter shall be subject to forfeiture. I ask, then, if it is not the right and duty of the House to regulate this; or shall we allow this company to take charge of the highway by virtue of an act of Congress and hold possession of it until such time as it suits their own convenience, within one to three years, to build the road, and when built that they shall consult their own pleasure and pockets in the matter of serving the public, both as to the number of cars to be used and the time of running, or shall the public interest and convenience be the test, and the duties of this corporation be prescribed in the charter granting these important rights and privileges? I repeat, these are matters that ought to be carefully considered; and I have moved to recommit the bill in order that it may fairly respond to the just requirements of the people of the city of Washington and District of Columbia.

The amendments I have proposed are simply to put a check on the tightening folds of the anaconda which now holds such a grip upon this city, and to call a halt in the matter of exacting from the traveling public from thirty to a hundred per cent. more than is just.

The reason I did not offer these amendments when the bill was under consideration was because, unfortunately, I was not in my seat the part of the afternoon it was before the House. I only ask that if this bill is to pass, these provisions be inserted, which are in the interest of all classes of people, and are at least in the line of what is justly required of these corporations by the people from whom this grant of charter power proceeds. The amendments are just and reasonable in themselves, and I hope they will be adopted. I ask my friend from South Carolina if there are any of these amendments that he is satisfied to accept?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I would not object to the insertion of the words "just and reasonable" instead of "actual," because I think that amendment very proper, with the idea of making the men pay for what they get.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is the gentleman willing to allow a vote on the other amendments?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No; this bill has been very thoroughly considered by the committee, and there is nothing in the amendments that the committee think desirable to incorporate in the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I understand that there can be but one motion of this character.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I have a right to offer an amendment to the motion to recommit.

Mr. RYAN. That has been always held in order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. This is a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the instructions by adding, after the word "time," in line 2 of section 6:

"Provided, That before said company can use any bridge over Rock Creek, which bridge had been or may hereafter be constructed by the United States and the District of Columbia, the said company shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, for the equal use and benefit of the United States and the District of Columbia, 50 per cent. of any and all sums that have been, or may hereafter be expended in the construction of any such bridge by the said United States and the District of Columbia, or either of them."

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a disposition on the part of some gentlemen to put into this bill provisions that I have never known to be embodied in any bill ever passed by Congress for the incorporation of a railroad company. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has submitted a motion that this bill shall be recommitted to the committee after the whole bill has been carefully worked over by the committee, after the subcommittee who had charge of it had matured it and reported it to the full committee, who made a number of amendments, and it has been fully considered by the House, and amended in some respects.

I have no objection in the world, and if I had I would have no right to object to any fair amendment to any portion of the bill when it is pending in the House for consideration.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will the gentleman indicate what amendment suggested by me is not proper and just and equitable?

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will be patient, I am coming to that. My position is that the whole thing has been thoroughly sifted by the House, after having been reported upon by the committee, who made a careful examination of the whole subject; and I hope the House will not recommit the bill, for I prefer that the House shall either decide that they will or will not pass it, one way or the other, and get rid of it. It is a matter of no possible concern to me, any more than it is to any other gentleman who desires to see the business of this District properly attended to and that the people of the District shall have the same rights that are accorded to people in every other city of its size in the country.

If this House is not satisfied with this bill I hope they will vote to kill it, and not choose to recommit it to the committee and have us waste our entire time on one bill which deserves no more consideration than many others.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] desires the bill recommitted for a number of reasons. The first is that three-fourths of all the people along the line shall sign a paper authorizing the construction of this road.

Now, in the first place, not only three-fourths of the people but every single one of them along that route has already signed a paper asking the House to pass the present bill. Therefore, I say it is nonsense to send it back to the committee in order to get three-fourths of the people living along the route to do what all of them have already done.

In the second place, I do not see why a man who lives in a particular part of the city and owns a lot there shall have it in his power to say whether the people who live on the other side of him shall have the privilege of going to and from their property.

The gentleman from Ohio is very anxious about a provision that cars shall be placed on this road. Who ever heard of men putting in perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars in the construction of a railway and then not putting on cars? That I think needs no reply.

But I ask, why does the gentleman seek to put the interests of those who live beyond the line of this railroad in the hands of those who live on this side? because, according to his proposition this should not become a law until three-fourths of the people along the line signed a paper asking Congress to pass it. I think we have the right to say that people shall be enabled to go from one part of the city to another whether or not it suits the property-holders along the route on which the railway is to be built. I have no objection to consulting the people so situated, but I am not in favor of putting it in their power to say whether or not the improvements shall be made. Yet that will be the effect of the amendment if adopted.

In the next place, the gentleman wishes to have some amendment adopted as to fare. He wants that these people shall get eight tickets for a quarter instead of six. Everybody knows that these outlying railroads do not pay for a long time, and it is unjust to these people who are to put their money in this road to require them to do what other people in similar circumstances are not required to do.

This bill provides for the exact limit of the capital of the stock. It is to be limited to the actual cost of the road; or, if the gentleman prefers, the just and reasonable cost of the road. When the profits of the road in any one year reach 8 per cent. on the capital, then the commissioners are to reduce the fare so that the profits of the road shall not exceed 8 per cent. But there is no provision that if the profits do not reach 8 per cent. anybody will make up the deficiency to those people. They are not to go beyond that, but they may go as much below it as the income of the road falls below 8 per cent. of the investment.

There is another thing which the gentleman from Ohio wants to do. He wants all of these people to pay in the whole of their capital before they begin the construction of their railway.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then what is it the gentleman wants?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The proposition is that a certain per cent. of the amount of capital subscribed shall be paid at intervals of thirty days until the whole amount subscribed is paid up.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to its being stated that they shall pay every dollar by the time the road is completed. But it is not fair to compel people to pay the whole of the money before that is done; some of them are people of limited means and can not do it. But I would have no objection to the amendment if the effect of it would be as I have stated.

The gentleman says this railroad is not to be completed until three years.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. A part in three years and another part in one year.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not think the gentleman so said. If he did it is all right. I will read to the House what the bill provides:

The work upon the main line of the said road shall be commenced within ninety days, and the same shall be completed within one year from the date of the passage of this act.

That is as to the main line. As to the branches, this provision is made:

And the work upon the branch line thereof shall be commenced within one year and completed within two years from the said date.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Making it three years altogether.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think that is a reasonable proposition. If the House does not agree to it, let them strike it out. But I say, do not recommit the bill so as to compel us to go over all the work again.

The gentleman from Ohio says there is no requirement as to what cars shall be put on this road. There is a requirement that they shall run a schedule of cars such as shall be found necessary, and such as shall be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, three gentleman who are appointed because of their ability and intelligence to supervise the affairs of this District.

I think it is perfectly safe to leave it in their hands to make such provision for the schedule as will meet the wants of the people of this District. Now, therefore, I say, Mr. Speaker, that I trust this House will not recommit this bill. We have spent almost one day on it, and it is not worth the time of this House to go all over the bills that are reported here from the District Committee, or from any other committee, and then, at the end, to send them back to the committee and have to do the whole work over again. I trust that the House will either vote for this bill or vote against it and have an end of the matter.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am more than willing that gentlemen interested in a line of railroad shall construct it, but the grant of the right of eminent domain proceeds upon the theory that it is made in the interest of the people and not merely in the interest of those who accept such grants. Their profit is supposed to be incidental.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman [Mr. HEMPHILL] for a moment to some of the points suggested by him and see whether I am right or whether he is right. He says that these men are certain to put a sufficient number of cars upon the road without a provision in the charter requiring it to be done, and that because they will have invested their money and built the road. Every man here, it would seem, must know that this corporation will run cars only in case they find it profitable to do so, and that they will run as few cars as they can get along with and at the least cost, doing only what is necessary to save their franchise. But the road is supposed to be constructed in the interest of the public, and because there is a public necessity for it, and not for the convenience and in the interest of these incorporators. But I confess it seems that the public interest, if in fact they have any in this venture, is of a secondary consideration. What else does the gentleman say? He says that the rate of fare should not be reduced as proposed in my amendment. And why not? Because the public will suffer? Oh, no; but because the gentlemen who are interested in the line will not derive a profit from their investment for some time.

He ought, I think, to know, and if he does not I think the rest of us do, that the profit which they expect from the construction of this road is not in the dividends to be declared from the earnings of the road, for there exists no public necessity for the building of such a road; but the money is to be made by trading in the surplus stock and the sale of lots along the route, and I ask him, as a conscientious legislator, whether he believes there should be granted by the general public, whose agents we are, the high powers and privileges contained in this charter, to aid in booming a mere speculative venture in lands? He knows, or certainly it would seem he has reason to believe, that the road is not to be built for the revenue to be derived from the sale of tickets or the carriage of passengers or in response to any public need.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will say distinctly and positively that I know no such thing. So far as I know, this road stands in that respect exactly in the same position as any other road.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not complaining of the position of my friend, but I submit that if I start to build a street railroad out into a sparsely settled neighborhood where there are no people, or very few to travel upon it, every sensible man will have reason to believe that there must be some reason for constructing the road aside from the profit to be derived from the carriage of passengers. These gentlemen will get their profit over and over again from the sale of property along the route, and we are asked to place the National Government in the attitude of engaging in aid of a mere speculative land-boom in the neighborhood of Washington, while ostensibly responding to a public demand.

Let this road be built when the comfort and convenience of the community requires it; when there are passengers to patronize it, and a company is formed which will respond to the public needs under a charter that will properly guard all interests affected, and not until then.

Mr. HEMPHILL. How are these gentlemen going to improve their property out there unless they get people to ride on the road?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. They will undoubtedly get people to ride; that is, the very few there are in that quarter.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then will not the road accommodate those people?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What I complain of is that you are asking the exercise of the power of eminent domain to take the highway for this railroad before it is needed by the public. The fact that the few citizens who reside in that neighborhood might ride does not suggest even a public necessity for this road.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not ask it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Twenty men are asking it and ten thousand are opposing it because it is not needed; and you, by this bill, fix the rate of fare with reference to the condition of things which it is hoped may exist hereafter, and not with reference to the present condition. What I insist upon is that this road ought not to be built until it is required by the public, and then, in the light of our experience with the roads already constructed, the rates should be fixed to correspond with the public exigency, and that exigency will demand that eight tickets be sold in packages for 25 cents.

The gentleman says also that poor people who subscribe for this stock may not be able to pay for it if the capital is required to be paid in too suddenly.

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir; I did not say that. I am not a man to try to make capital by talking here about the poor people of this country, or the rich either.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, I will strike out the word "poor." He said that a good many in moderate circumstances might subscribe and who might not be able to pay promptly. Mr. Speaker, I pity the brethren who subscribe to this stock with the hope of deriving great profit from it, unless they are in with the real-estate syndicate.

Now, I say to my friend that what I urge here is what has been advocated in the abstract on this floor ever since I have been here. First, that these railroads should collect only the money necessary for the construction and necessary equipment of their lines, and should charge only such rates of fare as would enable them to pay reasonable dividends upon the cost of construction and maintenance. What else? That the representatives of the people should grant the right of eminent domain only where it is for the interest of the people, not merely of the incorporators, to grant it. And who would think, except for the purpose of developing that region—a mere speculative venture—who would think of suggesting for any other reason the construction of a railroad in the quarter here proposed? Nobody. Latterly the practice has been to sell the rights to the highest bidder—to the man or men who will pay most for them and give the greatest accommodation to the public.

Mr. Speaker, every time "labor" is spoken of here, every time "the people" are referred to, we jump clear out of our seats; that is the abstract; but in the concrete, when the question is presented of granting away the people's rights or hedging them about with proper legal provisions, we are as mute as mice. I submit to my honored friend who is in charge of this bill that the instructions I submit contain no provision which he ought not to accept. He says that everybody along the line of this proposed railway consents to its construction. If they all consent why is objection made to requiring the assent of three-fourths of them?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Simply because it is nonsence to send the bill back to the committee in order to get three-fourths of the people to do what they have all done. That is very plain.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It will not do any harm, and beyond that the amendment can be inserted here.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We are not here to encumber bills with provisions which simply "will not do any harm."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Every city in the Union, as I understand, requires this. Why should we fail to make such a requirement?

Mr. BREWER. Does the gentleman mean to make the assertion that every city in the Union requires the consent of two-thirds of the property-holders along the proposed line of a street railway?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is the fact in my own city, and it is the fact everywhere, so far as my knowledge extends.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is very limited.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It may be, but it is broad enough to prevent me from mouthing in the abstract about "the people," and yet betraying their interests in the concrete.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I did not understand the gentleman's last remark. I would like to have him repeat it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman said—sotto voce, but loud enough for me to hear—that my knowledge was "very limited"——

Mr. HEMPHILL. And what was your reply?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I said it might be limited, but was broad enough to prevent me from mouthing in favor of "the people" here in the abstract, and yet betraying their interests in the concrete when it comes to a practical application of my knowledge.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I must say I do not understand the gentleman's remark.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I yield for a moment to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], so as to insert after the word "accommodated," in line 46, page 7 of the bill, the words "with seats."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I accept that amendment as a modification of the instructions I have proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposed instructions of the gentleman from Ohio will be modified accordingly.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not want to take up further time in this debate; but as to the remark made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], I did not comprehend it at first. If he means to say I am here "mouthing" about the people's cause at one time and betraying them at another he asserts that which is not true. I do not know whether it was the gentleman's intention to refer to me.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I did not speak about what the gentleman had done or failed to do.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, if the gentleman says he did not allude to me, that ends the matter.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I said what I did not do.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, I have nothing to say about what you do; I take care of myself. I say this, Mr. Speaker, that so far as this bill is concerned, it is exactly what I think fair and proper. Whether it suits other persons is something for which I can not be responsible. My judgment is that it is a fair and proper bill—such a bill as I was willing to report to the House upon my responsibility as a member, and ask the House to pass. If the majority here sees fit to do anything else, that is a matter I can not control. But I do trust the bill will either be passed or killed—not referred back in order that it may either be slaughtered in the committee with needless conditions, or may consume the time of the House in the future with its consideration. I now call the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, rose.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. In reply to my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], I would like to state that city railroads, so far as I know—and I speak especially of the city of which I happen to be a Representative—are incorporated by acts of the Legislature, just as this company seeks to be incorporated by an act of Congress. Now, I do not know what remonstrances may have been filed against chartering this road. All I have to say is that according to my observation the charter granted by a State Legislature gives the right to the parties incorporated to organize a street railroad company and to build a city railroad.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am aware of that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman stated that the construction of these roads required the consent of a certain number of citizens.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That depends upon the law or upon the provisions of the charter. I was simply asking to have inserted in this charter a provision which would require that those persons who live along the line of this proposed road shall be consulted in regard to its construction.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That is another question. I wish only to add that the building of street railroads in the city of Washington has been of great advantage not only to the citizens residing here, but to strangers visiting the city. I do not see why the gentleman from Ohio should desire to impose extremely stringent conditions upon persons who may choose to invest their capital in the building of a street railway.

The road here proposed will evidently tend to the convenience of the people and the improvement of the city. The gentleman knows that without the street railroads he could not conveniently travel to and from his residence, unless he has a private conveyance of his own, as I hope he has.

There is a public desire to have railroads built in the northwestern part of this city. I care not who may be enriched by affording these conveniences to the public.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I agree with my friend as to the necessity for the construction of these roads. But the necessity for a road is one thing; the terms upon which it shall be chartered are quite another.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman has proposed, I believe, to restrict the rate of charges for passengers on this road so that eight tickets shall be furnished for 25 cents. Sir, this road will probably struggle for years under great difficulties. It takes time for population to grow so as to make a road of this kind profitable. The gentleman knows that very well. I hope that this bill will pass as reported from the committee. I favor the construction of railroads in this city in all directions, and we should not by needlessly harsh conditions discourage the investment of capital in these enterprises by those who are willing to risk it in this way.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the previous question on the motion to recommit with instructions and the amendment thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask for a separate vote on my amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 38.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not object to the amendment going with the motion to recommit.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then let the amendment be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 144, not voting 112; as follows:

So the motion to recommit was disagreed to.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced:

On all political questions for this day:

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. YARDLEY.

Mr. MCCLAMMY with Mr. MOFFITT.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WOODBURN.

Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. WHITE, of New York.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, with Mr. MCKINLEY, on this vote.

On all political questions until further notice:

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. LYNCH with Mr. HIESTAND.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. JONES with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. GOFF with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. DE LANO.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. JOHN R. BROWN.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. MAFFETT.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. HUDD with Mr. CLARK.

Mr. PHELAN with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. MCCULLOGH.

Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. FITCH, until March 13, 1888.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HEMPHILL demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 132.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth not voting in favor thereof.

Mr. SOWDEN moved that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 41.

Mr. SOWDEN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. SOWDEN.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Let us have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been refused.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We can have the yeas and nays by unanimous consent.

Mr. WISE. I object.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 123, noes 40.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Ohio has called my attention to a verbal amendment, and I would like to ask unanimous consent to strike out, in line 20, page 2 of the bill, the words "the west side of;" so that it will read:

Thence running along Columbia road to Woodley road, etc.

This bill required the road to be run along one side of the highway, which the committee thought it ought not to do, upon the representation of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that amendment will be concurred in, and inserted.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

COMPILATION OF DISTRICT LAWS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 8309) to secure for the District of Columbia a compilation of the laws of said District; and I ask that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from its further consideration, and that the House now consider it.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the supreme court of the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint three persons, learned in the law, as commissioners to compile, arrange, and classify, with a proper index, all statutes and parts of statutes in force in the said District, including the acts of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, and relating to all such matters as would properly come within the scope of a civil and criminal code; and the said court shall have power to fill any vacancies occurring in said commission.

SEC. 2. That each of the said commissioners shall receive for his services such sum, not exceeding $1,500, as said court shall deem reasonable; said sum to be paid upon the completion of the work and the approval thereof in writing by the court; which sums, together with the reasonable costs incurred by the commission for clerical assistance and incidental expenses, not exceeding the sum of $1,000, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, one-half to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners shall report such compilation to the next session of Congress, if practicable.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOCATION OF AN ALLEY, WASHINGTON.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I call up now the bill (H. R. 5373) to change the location of a certain alley in the city of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to vacate and convey to the owner of lots 14 and 15, in square 895, in the city of Washington, the alley, 15 feet wide, running east and west, between said lots: Provided, That the said owner shall appropriate to the public use as an alley an equal area of ground from the southern part of lot 15 in the square aforesaid.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF ANATOMICAL SCIENCE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now call up the bill (H. R. 5042) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any public officer or officers, whether directors, trustees, superintendents, wardens, keepers, or managers, having lawful charge of, or control over, any hospital, prison, almshouse, jail, morgue, or asylum within the District of Columbia, may, with the approval of the health officer of said District, deliver to the duly authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the said District of Columbia the bodies of such deceased persons as are required to be buried at the public expense, said bodies to be distributed among the several colleges equitably, the number assigned to each being apportioned to that of its students: Provided, however, That if the deceased person, during his last illness, of his own accord, requested to be buried; or if within forty-eight hours after his death any person claiming to be, and satisfying the health officer that he is, a relative by blood or marriage, or friend of the deceased, asks to have the body buried; or if such deceased person was a stranger or traveler who suddenly died, the body shall not be so delivered, but shall be buried.

SEC. 2. That every person who shall have been duly authorized by the faculty of any medical college in the District of Columbia to receive such dead bodies, shall, before so receiving them, give to the health officer of the said District a bond in the sum of $200, with surety satisfactory to said health officer, and conditioned that each dead body shall be used only for the promotion of anatomical and surgical knowledge within the said District of Columbia, and that after having been so used the remains thereof shall be decently buried; and whosoever shall use such body or bodies for any purpose other than that aforesaid, or shall remove the same beyond the limits of the District of Columbia, and whoever shall sell or buy such body or bodies, or in any way traffic in the same, or who shall disturb or remove bodies from graves in which they have been buried, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term not less than two nor more than three years, at hard labor, in the jail of said District.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Was not a similar bill to this enacted in the last session of Congress and vetoed by the President?

Mr. HEMPHILL. A similar bill was vetoed, and the President pointed out certain objections which have been met in this bill. This has been carefully prepared by the committee in view of the objections urged to the former bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. What provision does this contain that was not contained in the bill passed in the last session?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It specifies who shall give the certificate as to death and what particular person shall receive the body. It is very particular in its terms. If necessary, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] who submitted the report can explain the bill more thoroughly to the gentleman.

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the reading of the report. I presume that there is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is.

The report (by Mr. ATKINSON) was read, as follows:

A bill similar to this was favorably reported in the Forty-ninth Congress, the report thereon, which is hereby adopted, being as follows:

"The object of the bill is twofold: first and chiefly, to provide sufficient dissecting material for the medical colleges of the District of Columbia; and, secondly and indirectly, to afford better protection to the graves of the dead from desecration.

"There are now several flourishing medical schools in Washington well established, and one or more of them of long standing. It is known to all that such institutions can not be carried on or proper training for the practice of medicine and surgery be given without ample experience in the dissection of the human cadaver. This fact is recognized and approved by all, and yet public opinion as strongly approves and demands stringent laws for the punishment of the desecration of graves in order to procure the necessary dissecting material. Hence the laws of the District are very severe, and properly so, against the crime of grave-robbing. With such laws in operation and such necessities for the schools of medicine, the authorities of the District are compelled either to wink at this offense or seriously to cripple, if not to destroy, the efficiency and success of these schools. Furthermore, the heads of these institutions, professors, and students of science, are compelled to supply their admitted necessities by confederating with and employing professional grave-robbers, and constantly to incur the risk of detection and criminal prosecution; and it being known in a community that the trade of resurrecting bodies for dissection is a common one, kindred and friends are frequently tortured with anxiety lest the hand of the resurrectionist shall remove the bodies of their dead.

"This bill is intended to relieve from such fears, to do away with the necessity or temptation for violating the laws, and at the same time in an open and legal way to provide the requisite dissecting material for the study and advancement of anatomical science in the District. A careful comparison with the statutes of some of the States shows its provisions to be prudently and aptly framed, and intended to accomplish the purpose in view in a manner as little repelient to public sentiment and sensibility as practicable."

The bill so favorably reported in the Forty-ninth Congress passed the Senate and House of Representatives, and was afterwards vetoed, the President assigning as his objections thereto—

1. That the officers who were given the power of disposing of dead bodies were not definitely designated.

2. That the medical colleges were not required to give bond for the proper use of the dead bodies to be given them, and for the burial of the remains after dissection.

This bill has been so drawn as to correct the objectionable features that induced the President's veto; and for the above reasons your committee return said bill, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is this bill open for amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I move to amend the bill in the seventeenth line, on page 3, by striking out the words "less than two nor;" so that it will read:

Shall on conviction be imprisoned for a term of not more than three years at hard labor, etc.

My impression, Mr. Speaker, is that where a minimum punishment is inserted in a statute juries rarely convict. My observation gained by some years' experience is that a statute is stronger without the minimum penalty than with it.

Mr. ATKINSON. There is no objection to the amendment as I understand it.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. TAULBEE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 1, after the word "however," in line 13, and insert the words "that such deceased person shall have consented to such disposal of his or her remains."

Mr. ATKINSON. I take it, sir, that the amendment is objectionable, and that its effect will be to defeat the purposes of the bill. It is believed to be necessary that a bill of this character should be passed in this District.

There are here four medical colleges, each of which has a considerable class, and each of them is expected to teach its students anatomy. In fact it is impossible for a man to acquire a knowledge of medicine without a knowledge of anatomy, and it is impossible to teach anatomy without the dissection of the dead body; and a certain number of bodies are necessary to accommodate and supply the medical colleges of this District. I apprehend that if only those are dissected who before death declare that their bodies may be so disposed of, the small number who are likely to make such declarations will effectually defeat the objects of this bill, and this I understand to be the purport of the amendment of the gentleman.

The bill provides that only those who die in almshouses, in prisons, and in other public institutions here may be dissected, under the authority of the health officer; and their bodies can not be given for this purpose if they are claimed by any friend or any relation; and the bodies of those who die, being strangers or travelers here, can not be given over to the medical colleges for this purpose. I take it these restrictions are sufficient.

Without this supply of material for the medical colleges, grave-robbing will continue precisely as it has gone on in this city and its environs for perhaps half a century. And I need not say to gentlemen that it is one of the most detestable of all crimes. The only remedy that has ever been found for this crime is to give to the medical colleges sufficient material to instruct their students in anatomy, as they are bound to do.

It is true it will be said that only the poor will be placed upon the anatomists' tables in the colleges. But it is the poor that are by far most concerned in the passage of such legislation as this. The rich can always obtain the services of skillful and experienced physicians. Not so the poor. They must take such services as they can obtain; and they can only secure the services of the younger members of the profession or perhaps dispensary physicians. While we owe a duty to the poor and should see that their bodies are not improperly used, yet we owe a greater duty to the living poor than we do to the dead; and it concerns the living that all members of the medical profession shall be well educated and have a competent knowledge of anatomy.

This is no new legislation. In 1832 the British anatomical act was passed, and since that time in many States of the Union acts similar to this have been passed by the Legislatures, giving to the medical colleges the bodies of those who die in public institutions and are unclaimed. In my own State of Pennsylvania we have had a law similar to this for a number of years. In the State of New York they have the same law. And I take it the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] should not insist upon his amendment, because its effect will be to defeat the purposes of the bill and graves will continue to be desecrated as they have heretofore been desecrated in every locality where medical colleges have existed until there is by law a sufficient supply of anatomical material furnished.

Mr. TAULBEE rose.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Before the gentleman from Kentucky proceeds I would like to have the section read as it is proposed to be amended.

The section as proposed to be amended by the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. TAULBEE was read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill proposing, on the authority of the health officer, to give to the medical colleges of this District the bodies of all deceased persons who have died in any of the jails, morgues, prisons, or asylums of this District, unless it shall appear that such persons during their lifetime requested to be buried after they died. The amendment which I have offered, if adopted, will have the effect to change this bill so that only the bodies of such persons shall be delivered to these medical colleges as have consented to such delivery during their lifetime.

The gentleman who has preceded me in opposing this amendment has justly said that its object was to defeat the main purpose of this bill.

Mr. ATKINSON. I said that would be its effect.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is the object and that would be the effect. I believe that the purpose of the bill ought to be defeated and that effect ought to be consummated.

This bill proposes virtually to give all the bodies of the poor people who die in any of these institutions to the medical colleges. Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree that in order to advance the science of anatomy, it is almost indispensable that the bodies of deceased persons be used by medical colleges. But the object of promoting this science could be better facilitated by a bill which would provide for the disposition among medical colleges of the bodies of persons who have died of such diseases as were not common in a country, thus giving the medical fraternity a better understanding of the diseases to which we are subject.

I can not conceive of a law which would carry more terror to the hearts of the poor people of this country than the one now under consideration. I have had the misfortune myself to be poor all my life, and it would only require a short chain of unimportant circumstances to subject me to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. This bill provides for the disposing of the bodies of poor persons or persons buried at the public expense. Would that include members of Congress who are buried at the public expense?

Mr. TAULBEE. I think it would.

Mr. CANNON. Why not?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not believe the people of this country would have so serious objections to this bill if it was confined to members of Congress. I do not believe its operation would be so objectionable should its application be limited to members of Congress. I say this in all seriousness. There is no absolute punishment in this bill to any person except what little grief or remorse its operation might cause the friends of the unfortunates to whom it applies; and as a general thing members of Congress or persons possessed of such intelligence as they ought to possess would, perhaps, find less fault with this bill than would the persons and families and friends upon whose heads it is proposed to be visited.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in the history of the world as it is given to us in the Bible we find but very few of those who have died concerning whom it is said that they were admitted into the paradise of God. Among those notable few is Lazarus, and if he had lived in this generation and had died in the District of Columbia, this bill would have been made applicable to him; and I hold up his character before this House as a model for them, and one that they would do well to emulate. I can not conceive of a bill more objectionable than this in the line in which it tends. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] spoke of the desecration of graves in this District, concerning which there has been much said in the newspapers recently. I have read those accounts with some interest, and I deplore the hard-heartedness and the criminal purpose with which that work is carried on. But here is a bill which proposes to pervert from a sacred purpose the potter's field of this District, although we may reasonably conclude that from that field on the great day of the resurrection we shall see as bright characters rise as from the cemeteries in which the hands of wealthy friends have laid their dead.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do you think it will make any difference in the resurrection whether the fellow has been dissected here or not? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not suppose it will; but that is not a question with which we are dealing. The main objection to be urged to this bill is that the persons to whom it is made applicable are of necessity classed by the bill as of a lower order of being than those who are exempted from its provisions. The simple fact of a man being indigent and dying poor, or dying away from his home and friends, is no reason why his remains should be desecrated by a public law, or that the professors of medical colleges should have a right to exhibit his remains in a medical museum.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will call his attention to the fact that we have guarded against that. If he will look at line 18 of the bill he will see this provision: "or if such deceased person was a stranger or traveler who suddenly died, the body shall not be so delivered, but shall be buried."

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. WEAVER. I would like to have the gentleman address himself to that part of the bill which provides for the giving away of the bodies of the poor. As I understand it, this is a bill which provides to turn over the bodies of the poor and the unfortunate and the insane to the dissecting colleges. Now, if the object of the bill is simply to promote a knowledge of anatomy, why limit this provision to the bodies of the poor? Why not turn over the bodies of all the dead, or a specimen or two from each class, so that the medical men may discover what difference in the anatomy of individuals has been produced by different methods of living? Why confine it to the poor, I ask? Let us have the rich as well as the poor. Let their bodies be "equitably distributed" among the colleges as well as the bodies of the poor. [Laughter.] Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to promote litigation, because it requires the bodies to be "distributed equitably" among the different colleges. As that requirement is made with reference to the bodies of the poor, I think there should be no discrimination between classes, but the provision should apply to the rich and to the medium livers, as well as to the poor. Let us have the influence of the different modes of living demonstrated upon the bodies of persons who die in the District of Columbia, and let members of Congress come in for their share of the "equitable distribution." [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I answer that question in the affirmative. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I understood that we were discussing this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and I supposed that when we began to discuss it by sections we were under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it is being considered in the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. As in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is placed upon the House Calendar and is being considered like any other bill in the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. This does not come out of my time, I suppose. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has twenty-nine minutes left.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. MCADOO. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether there are any distinguishing marks by which the body of a poor person can be distinguished from that of a rich person. In other words, if, under this bill, a body should be taken up for the purpose of anatomical research, would it be possible to tell whether it was the body of a poor person or of a millionaire?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think it would be.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it must be very evident to any one who has thought upon this subject that the object of this bill is to throw around the bodies of persons who during their lifetime are wealthy and influential a more ample protection from dissection after death than is afforded to the bodies of the poorer classes.

Mr. NUTTING. Is not the gentleman aware that in many cases persons of means, education, and refinement have consented, and even requested, that after death their bodies be used for the purpose of promoting the interests of science? Does not the gentleman know that fact?

Mr. TAULBEE. Most assuredly.

Mr. NUTTING. Then if that is the truth what does the gentleman's argument go for?

Mr. TAULBEE. My argument goes to this effect: If my amendment be adopted it gives to the poor people of this country the same protection as to the rich. Why should not the same law apply to each?

If the body of a rich man can not be had for these purposes except by virtue of his consent, I ask the gentleman to give me some reason why the body of a poor person is not entitled to the same protection?

Mr. ROWELL. I would be glad to have some gentleman point out any line in the bill which speaks of "the body of a poor person."

Mr. WEAVER. The bill speaks of persons "buried at public expense."

Mr. ROWELL. That is another question.

Mr. NUTTING. This bill provides, as the gentleman from Kentucky will see if he examines it, that when any person makes a request not to have his body disposed of in this way, that request shall be observed.

Mr. SOWDEN. What protection would that be in a case, for instance, of death by paralysis?

Mr. NUTTING. I concede that where the bill provides that such consent be given in the person's "last illness," the provision is wrong. The request, if made at any time, should be respected.

Mr. SOWDEN. How would consent be obtained in the case of a lunatic dying in an asylum?

Mr. NUTTING. The gentleman, if he knows the law—and I presume he does—knows that a lunatic can not be regarded as giving consent to anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. The portion of the bill which makes it especially applicable to poor people is that provision which confines its operation to the bodies of persons who may be buried at the public expense. Now, what does that mean? If a person dies in the District of Columbia without leaving relatives or friends, but possessed of property, the body of such person is not buried at the public expense; the property left by the person is ample protection against the operation of this bill. The funeral expenses are paid out of the decedent's estate. It is clear from an examination of this bill that its provisions are confined—I will not say there is a subtle effort in that direction, but that is the hidden effect—to such persons as have been so unfortunate in this life as not to have accumulated enough property to pay for their burial.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman think it against public policy that bodies should be dissected in medical colleges?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not. I have not said that, nor do I think I have said anything that would justify an inference of that kind. But I say, if this bill be passed, it should be made applicable alike to the rich and the poor.

A MEMBER. It is.

Mr. CANNON. Why does not the gentleman from Kentucky offer his amendment?

Mr. TAULBEE. I have offered it; it has been read twice from the desk; and if the gentleman did not hear it I am perfectly willing to yield now that it may be read again in my time. I want him to understand it because I expect him to vote with me.

The object of government, as I understand, is to protect the weak against the strong.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have the gentleman's amendment read again.

Several MEMBERS. Let it be read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly, let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 1, after the word "however," in line 13, and insert the following:

"That such deceased person shall have consented to such disposition of his or her remains."

Mr. BLAND. Will not the gentleman yield for an amendment including all persons, so that the body of any person who has not requested that he be buried decently may be put on the dissecting table?

Mr. TAULBEE. I think my amendment ought to be read for the gentleman again; I believe he does not understand it.

Mr. BLAND. My only object is that all be put on an equality. Let it be understood that the body of every man who does not request otherwise shall be liable to be disposed of for purposes of dissection.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman can offer an amendment of that kind. My amendment has no such object and will not produce any such effect. I do not understand that the wealthy people of the country, the strong and the powerful, are in such great need of legislation as are the poor people. Whether there be a scarcity of money or any of the necessities of life, you will find as a matter of fact the wealthy people are always amply able to provide for themselves; but the sufferings which our citizens undergo you will find in the main are confined to the poor people of the country. And I am surprised that a committee of this House should offer such an indignity to the poor people in this country as is attempted to be included in this bill. [Applause.] They will regard it as an insult to them and the class to which they unfortunately belong.

I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read as a part of my remarks Senate Executive Document 131 of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I herewith return Senate bill No. 349, entitled "An act for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves," without my approval.

The purpose of this bill is to permit the delivery of certain dead bodies to the medical colleges located in the District of Columbia for dissection.

Such disposition of the bodies of unknown and pauper dead is only excused by the necessity of acquiring by this means proper and useful anatomical knowledge, and the laws by which it is permitted should, in deference to a decent and universal sentiment, carefully guard against abuse and needless offense.

The measure under consideration does not, with sufficient care, specify and limit the officers and the parties who it is proposed to invest with discretion in the disposition of dead bodies remaining in the institutions and places mentioned in the bill. The second section indicates an intention to prevent the use of said bodies for any other purpose than the promotion of anatomical and surgical knowledge within the District of Columbia, and to secure, after such use, the decent burial of the remains. It declares that a bond shall be given providing for the performance of these conditions. But instead of exacting the bond from the medical colleges, to which alone, by the terms of the first section, the bodies are to be delivered, such bond is required of "every physician or surgeon before receiving such dead body."

The bill also provides that a relative by blood or marriage, or a friend, may, within forty-eight hours after death, demand that any body be buried, upon satisfying "the authorities" of the relationship claimed to the deceased.

The "authorities" to be thus satisfied should be clearly defined; and the determination of a question so important should be left with those only who will perform this duty with proper care and consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 26, 1886.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I would like to offer a substitute.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will not object if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. It will not take long.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am willing, then, to let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including the word "existence," in the eleventh line of the first section, and insert: "That the bodies of all doctors and medical students dying in the District of Columbia shall be delivered to the duly authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the said District of Columbia."

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am told the doctrine is taught in the Bible that it is a very difficult matter for a rich man to get into the kingdom of heaven. I am inclined to believe all of the Bible. And if they are resting under the decrees of the Judge of the Universe, I wish some gentleman would get up on this floor and give some good reason why they should be exempted from the provisions of this bill. [Applause and laughter.] I do not see why it is, why the bodies of rich men should have any more protection than those of men who are unfortunate enough to be in the District of Columbia and die without the possession of any money. It has been suggested by some that the object of this bill, on the part of some of the members of this House, was to terrorize their constituents and keep them away from the city of Washington importuning them to secure offices for them; that the only way they could keep them away was by threatening them if they came to Washington and should die away from home without money their bodies would be given to the medical colleges. [Laughter.]

I believe that such a bill would bring about a result as great as if it were to declare that it was a penitentiary offense to apply to the Government for an office. It would be a good thing, and especially for the Republicans, if they should succeed in electing their President next November. [Laughter and applause.]

Several MEMBERS. And they probably will.

Mr. TAULBEE. If a curse like that should befall the country I would advise the inhabitants of the city of Washington to take their effects and move somewhere else, for they would be eaten out of house and home. [Laughter and applause.]

If this bill is passed the members who will succeed themselves in the Fifty-first Congress and are in harmony with the Administration will be amply protected.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am glad to see the gentleman in pleading for the protection of the dead bodies of paupers seems to be pleading in behalf of his own party. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for an amendment?

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the amendment be read in my time.

The Clerk read the following amendment (by Mr. GROSVENOR):

Add to the first section:

"And provided further, That if such deceased person was an honorably-discharged soldier or sailor, or member of the Marine Corps of the United States, and such fact is known or is brought to the knowledge of the officer or person having charge of the institution in which such person died, then such body shall not be delivered to any medical college until due notice of the death of such person has been given to some Grand Army post in the District of Columbia, and reasonable time given to such post to claim such remains for burial by such post."

Mr. TAULBEE. I accept that amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "however," in the thirteenth line, first section, insert: "That such body shall not be so delivered in less than sixty hours from the time of death."

Mr. TAULBEE. I accept that amendment, too. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio on my right more forcibly presents one of the objections that might be urged to this bill in its original form.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. MCADOO. I offer the amendment I send up.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a point of order. How many amendments can be pending at the same time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. These amendments are regarded as being read in the time of the gentleman from Kentucky to be offered hereafter and voted upon in their regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. Well, Mr. Speaker, is it not in order for me to accept the amendments, and have them considered as a part of my own?

Mr. WEAVER. And as a part of your remarks? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes; and as a part of my remarks to go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that some of the amendments do not harmonize and are not consistent with each other.

Mr. WEAVER. That does not matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to accept the consistent ones. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. How are these amendments to be voted upon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will see that the amendments come properly before the House in their order.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment proposed by Mr. MCADOO was read, as follows:

Amend the first section of the bill so that it will read:
"Be it enacted, etc., That the bodies of deceased persons shall be distributed among the several colleges equitably, the number assigned to each being proportioned to that of its students."

Mr. TAULBEE. I will accept that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not five minutes to yield.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I will do the best I can and yield him the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLAND. Would it be in order to lay the whole bill upon the dissecting table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas now has the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I want to move an amendment; to strike out all after the enacting clause of this bill and amend it so that it will read:

That whoever shall sell or buy the body or bodies of a deceased person or persons, or in any way traffic in the same, or who shall disturb or remove bodies from graves in which they have been buried, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term not less than two nor more than three years at hard labor in the jail of said District.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is not germane to my amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I offer that amendment for a vote of the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two and five-eighths minutes of his time. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire now to occupy that time in submitting a motion to lay this bill and the amendments on the table.

Mr. GROUT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, permit me one word. I wish to say that I think it very unfair to lay a bill that has been reported by a committee after such a tirade against it, and with no opportunity for a reply on the part of the committee, upon the table. This is a bill—if the House will indulge me for a moment—that once passed the House and Senate and was vetoed by the President on account of some peculiarities in the form of the bill. We have passed the bill once——

Mr. TAULBEE. Then let us not do it again.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And we are simply reporting now a bill in an unobjectionable form that was once passed by the House.

Mr. WEAVER. When?

Mr. HEMPHILL. During the last Congress.

Mr. TAULBEE. That was passed by the House without a quorum or a division, and the bill was not understood.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman is mistaken in that. This bill was understood, and was considered in the House. It was discussed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] and other gentlemen.

Mr. TAULBEE. As I remember, the only discussion was that Mr. BENNETT rose after the bill was passed, and expressed his objections to the manner of its passage.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I think it very unbecoming in the gentleman to make a motion to lay the bill on the table. After the harangue with which he has occupied the attention of the House, a reply on the part of the committee ought to be permitted.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the House refuses to lay the bill on the table the gentleman can then be heard.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I am not asking to be heard myself; but the committee should be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has moved to lay the bill and amendments on the table, which motion is not debatable.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 75.

Mr. GROUT. I call for tellers.

Mr. BLAND. I understand the committee desire to be heard.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That is the only purpose we have; and if after the committee have been heard the House then chooses to vote down the bill, all right.

Mr. TAULBEE. How much time do you want?

Mr. SOWDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be given twenty minutes.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I object to the gentleman taking the business of the committee out of our own hands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point that no quorum voted.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am quite sure——

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it in order for me to ask unanimous consent at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was asked and refused.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to ask unanimous consent on a different question.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point that no quorum voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and fifty-seven members voted. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints Mr. HEMPHILL and Mr. TAULBEE.

Before the count by tellers was completed,

Mr. SOWDEN demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That demand can not be made while the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the demand for the yeas and nays is in order.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Not while the House is dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that it is in order.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 27, noes 129.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. BLAND. I renew the request for unanimous consent that the committee be heard on the bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. What time does the committee want?

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn. This matter can come up next District day.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I should much prefer to have it disposed of now. If we are to have a chance to discuss the bill we want to do it, and if not we want that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] makes a privileged motion—the motion to adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment disagreed to by the House to the joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. TELLER, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. WALTHALL.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to—ayes 94, noes 48.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. VOORHEES presented two petitions, numerously signed by ex-Union soldiers, citizens of Switzerland County, Indiana, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present a petition of officers and members of the standing committee on temperance, appointed by the Indiana Yearly Meeting of the religious Society of Friends, numbering about twenty thousand, and residing in Eastern Indiana and Western Ohio, representing that the exportation of alcoholic beverages to other countries, and especially to Africa and the Pacific islands, has already in the past and necessarily will in the future, if not checked, produce incalculable ills and misery among those ignorant people, and largely counteract the humane efforts of Christian missionaries, and, further, that the constitutional power of Congress over commerce with foreign nations devolves upon that body a serious responsibility if this destructive business is continued. The petitioners, therefore, earnestly ask Congress to adopt such measures as will effectually and promptly put a stop to this traffic. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I also present a communication, signed by the president and secretary of the Board of Trade of Terre Haute, and a large number of our most prominent and influential business men residing in the city of Terre Haute, Ind., praying that an appropriation be made for the purpose of establishing in the city of Terre Haute a Government experimental station and farm for the development of the sugar industry. I presume the communication should be sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I move its reference to that committee, and call their attention to its importance. It is full of valuable suggestions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO presented the petition of W. D. Chipley, president of the municipality of Pensacola, Fla., praying for the passage of a bill to construct a macadamized road between the city of Pensacola and the national cemetery, near Barrancas, in the State of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 115) to increase the pension of Thomas F. Townsend;

A bill (H. R. 863) granting a pension to Malinda Vest;

A bill (H. R. 771) granting a pension to A. B. VanCleve;

A bill (H. R. 2218) to increase pension of James A. Buck;

A bill (H. R. 2514) granting a pension to J. Miller Raub;

A bill (H. R. 2517) granting a pension to Isaiah J. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Miss Capitola V. Harsh, daughter of Daniel Harsh;

A bill (S. 2151) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia Hillyer;

A bill (S. 1435) granting a pension to Emil Schattle; and

A bill (H. R. 806) for the relief of Mary Morford.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary J. McGregor, praying for a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2331) granting a pension to Mary J. McGregor; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 345) for the relief of Wilson W. Brown, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 481) for the relief of Stephen M. Honeycutt, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1596) in relation to oaths in pension and other cases;

A bill (S. 1626) to amend the act of March 3, 1877, entitled "An act amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have, since its termination, enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled;"

A bill (S. 1258) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Waters;

A bill (H. R. 628) granting a pension to Juliette Stone;

A bill (S. 1144) granting a pension to Frances H. L. Prescott;

A bill (S. 2073) granting a pension to Margaret Blades;

A bill (S. 2124) granting a pension to John Bush; and

A bill (S. 2157) granting increase of pension to Theodore F. Casamer.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1529) to amend paragraph 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1495) granting a pension to Mrs. Cora McGee, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Linsley, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1468) granting a pension to John Stiles; and

A bill (S. 2158) granting increase of pension to Dwight Toogood.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the committee were discharged from their further consideration:

The petition of Albert L. du Puget, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for such relief as the circumstances of his case may justify;

The petition of John B. Wolff, praying for payment of pension due Capt. A. W. Hicks, of the Mississippi River fleet;

The petition of George Steph, praying to be allowed a pension; and

The petition of Mrs. Nancy R. Gould, praying to be allowed additional pension for helpless and dependent daughter.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am directed by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to report a resolution, which I suppose should properly go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries be, and is hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers, subpœna witnesses, and employ a stenographer, in the prosecution of the inquiry now in progress by said committee to determine whether the plan of improvement proposed by Senate bill 742 shall be substituted for or be made supplemental to the method of improvement now being carried on by the Mississippi River Commission; and that the expenses of the same shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred, under the rules, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2333) granting a pension to George W. Fogle; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2334) granting a pension to Mary J. Byrd; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 2335) to incorporate the National Temperance Home of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2336) granting a pension to Mary A. Fletcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2337) for the relief of Maria N. Abbey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (by request), introduced a bill (S. 2338) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 2339) granting a pension to George H. McKee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2340) granting a pension to James Mallon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 2341) for the relief of Thomas Chambers, of Mackinaw Island, Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2342) for the relief of Thomas Seely; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2343) granting a pension to Mrs. Myra Freeman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 2345) authorizing the construction of bridges across the Cape Fear River, Black River, and the Northeast River, in the State of North Carolina; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CONDITION OF THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the order of morning business is closed.

Mr. HALE. I wish to call up the resolution offered by me some time since in relation to the condition of the civil service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. HALE December 11, 1887, as follows:

Whereas sections 11 and 14 of "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, provide as follows:

"SEC. 11. That no Senator, or Representative, or Territorial Delegate of the Congress, or Senator, Representative, or Delegate elect, or any officer or employé of either of said Houses, and no executive, judicial, military, or naval officer of the United States, and no clerk or employé of any department, branch, or bureau of the executive, judicial, or military, or naval service of the United States, shall, directly or indirectly, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever, from any officer, clerk, or employé of the United States, or any department, branch, or bureau thereof, or from any person receiving any salary or compensation from moneys derived from the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 14. That no officer, clerk, or other person in the service of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, give or hand over to any other officer, clerk, or person in the service of the United States, or to any Senator or member of the House of Representatives, or Territorial Delegate, any money or other valuable thing on account of or to be applied to the promotion of any political object whatever."

And whereas the spirit of said act has been interpreted by the President and by the Commissioners of the Civil Service Commission charged with its execution as forbidding all officers of the General Government from offensively participating in political conventions and elections, the President, in his order addressed to the heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government dated July 14, 1886, setting forth his reasons for the same, as follows:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 14, 1886.

"To the Heads of the Departments in the service of the General Government:

"I deem this a proper time to especially warn all subordinates in the several Departments and all office-holders under the General Government against the use of their official positions in attempts to control political movements in their localities. Office-holders are the agents of the people—not their masters. Not only is their time and labor due to the Government, but they should scrupulously avoid in their political action, as well as in the discharge of their official duty, offending by a display of obtrusive partisanship their neighbors who have relations with them as public officials. They should also constantly remember that their party friends from whom they have received preferment have not invested them with the power of arbitrarily managing their political affairs. They have no right as office-holders to dictate the political action of their party associates or to throttle freedom of action within party lines by methods and practices which pervert every useful and justifiable purpose of party organization.

"The influence of Federal office-holders should not be felt in the manipulation of political primary meetings and nominating conventions. The use by these officials of their positions to compass their selection as delegates to political conventions is indecent and unfair, and proper regard for the proprieties and requirements of official place will also prevent their assuming the active conduct of political campaigns. Individual interests and activity in political affairs are by no means condemned. Office-holders are neither disfranchised nor forbidden the exercise of political privileges, but their privileges are not enlarged, nor is their duty to party increased to pernicious activity by office-holding. A just discrimination in this regard between the things a citizen may properly do and the purposes for which a public office should not be used is easy, in the light of a correct appreciation of the relation between the people and those intrusted with official place and a consideration of the necessity under our form of government of political action free from official coercion. You are requested to communicate the substance of these views to those for whose guidance they are intended.

"GROVER CLEVELAND."

And Commissioner Oberly, in his letter to the Illinois Democratic Association, dated September 29, 1887, interpreting the statute as follows:

"Now, does it not follow that officers, clerks, and other persons in the service of the United States, who are organized for political purposes, and who by initiation fees, dues, and contributions defray the expenses of this organization, are violating sections 11 and 14 of the civil-service act? They are giving—they are handing over—to officers, clerks, or other persons in the service of the United States, and these persons, acting as officers of the association, as the representatives of the associated officers, clerks, and other persons in the service of the United States, are receiving money for political purposes, money to be applied to the promotion of political objects."

And whereas it is alleged that, notwithstanding the provisions of said act, and notwithstanding the interpretation placed upon the same by the authorities as above quoted, numerous Federal officers, appointed by the present Administration, have unduly and offensively exhibited a pernicious activity both in nominating conventions and in the elections following: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of seven Senators, be, and the same is hereby, constituted and appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine fully into the present condition of the civil service in all branches of the Government, to ascertain whether the appointments in said service have been based upon merit and qualifications or have been distributed as partisan favors; and further to fully examine and report as to the offensive participation of officers and employés of the General Government in political conventions and elections.

Said committee is hereby authorized to employ a clerk and stenographer, and shall have the power to administer oaths, send for persons and papers; to sit in Washington or such other places as may be necessary, and to conduct its investigations through subcommittees, the expenses of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and a full report of its proceedings shall be made to the Senate at as early a day as is practicable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment to come in just before the words "Therefore, Resolved."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And whereas Rutherford B. Hayes, President of the United States, did on June 22, 1877, issue the following order, to wit:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 22, 1877.

"SIR: I desire to call your attention to the following paragraph in a letter addressed by me to the Secretary of the Treasury on the conduct to be observed by the officers of the General Government in relation to elections:

"'No officer should be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns. Their right to vote and to express their views on public questions, either orally or through the press, is not denied, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties. No assessment for political purposes on officers or subordinates should be allowed.'

"This rule is applicable to every Department of the civil service. It should be understood by every officer of the General Government that he is expected to conform his conduct to its requirements.

"Very respectfully,

"R. B. HAYES.

"To the POSTMASTER-GENERAL."

And whereas it is alleged that, notwithstanding said Executive order, numerous Federal officials appointed by his and the subsequent Republican administrations have unduly and offensively exhibited pernicious partisan activity both in the nominating conventions and subsequent elections as managers of political organizations and delegates to conventions, including the Presidential elections in 1880 and 1884.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. To make that amendment complete, I also move in the fifth line of the resolution, after the word "service," to insert the words "since the passage of the said civil-service act," and to add to the first paragraph of the resolution the words "since the date of said Executive order of President Hayes and the passage of said civil-service law of January 16, 1883."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, these various amendments will be treated as one, the question recurring, will the Senate agree to the same?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the resolution which is now before the Senate is one that was offered by me earlier in the session. I have delayed calling it up at the request of the Senator from Missouri, who has been very much busied with the many duties that fall upon him and had not prepared his amendment until to-day.

I have no objection to the Senator investigating, with a committee appointed for that particular purpose, the old subject-matter, going back ten or twelve or more years, which his amendment covers; but I do not desire the purpose which I have in view, of a distinct and legitimate examination as to what is going on now in the civil service of the Government, to be embarrassed by any other examination. I am seeking in the resolution which has been read to the Senate a distinct object—the investigation of what is going on to-day, as I believe, and as was alleged in many quarters.

Therefore I do not, for one, consent to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I am not opposed to that investigation. If he desires it, let it go on distinctively by itself.

I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment. I do not desire to discuss it further now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the resolution of the Senator from Maine recites the civil-service law of January 16, 1883, and sundry other things, and then proposes an investigation of the civil service. It is manifest to all Senators who have studied this question that the order of President Hayes in 1877 had the same force and effect practically as the civil-service law. It was an Executive order, which he had just as much authority to issue then as the President has now.

The civil-service act was passed on the 16th of January, 1883. That was during a Republican administration, and prior to the election of 1884, the last Presidential election. The object of my amendment is simply to extend the investigation of the committee in regard to the civil service to the beginning of the civil-service order issued by President Hayes, and then from the passage of the civil-service law of 1883.

It will not increase the labors of the committee. It will give the Senate and the country a full, fair, and thorough insight into the administration of the civil-service law by a Republican administration and its administration by a Democratic administration, and then the country can judge of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish simply to say that I can not see the propriety of an amendment which goes merely into the past. The question of the present observance or violation of law is the only practical question for the country. What has gone on in the past has been dealt with and considered.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is a violation of the etiquette and propriety of the Senate. I do not believe there can be found in a Senate resolution or enactment the designation of a President by party description, and the Senate passing a resolution that certain Republican administrations or Democratic administrations should be investigated. The sense of propriety of the Senate has always rejected that kind of nomenclature in its legislation and resolutions. For both these reasons I object to the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] inquires of me whether the Senator from Missouri desires to plead an offset. I should like to hear what the Senator from Missouri has to say.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, not an offset. More than an equivalent—not an offset.

Mr. DAWES. What is it?

Mr. COCKRELL. More than an equivalent. Admitting that the insinuations of the resolution of the Senator from Maine may be true, there have been a thousand-fold more than a counterbalance and equivalent rendered against them by the preceding administrations.

Mr. DAWES. Is that a justification, Mr. President? Is that the justification the Senator from Missouri proposes to plead? He says he does not propose to plead on offset. Then it is a justification, and the justification is, somebody else has been just as bad as this reform Administration, or, in other words, this reform Administration is no better than that which came before.

Mr. HOAR. In either case it is a plea of guilty.

Mr. COCKRELL. We do not want any justification.

Mr. DAWES. Then let it be.

Mr. COCKRELL. The present Administration speaks for itself and can take care of itself before the people, and needs no vindication at the hands of a Republican Senate or any other legislative body.

Mr. DAWES. But it seems to be apprehensive.

Mr. COCKRELL. We simply want the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and that is not what is desired upon the opposite side.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is resisting just exactly that thing. He is not willing to stand on the merits, but desires to go after something else that will bolster up that which on the merits will fail. That seems to be it. If the Administration is desirous of standing on its merits, the best way is to ascertain what its merits are, and not where the merits of somebody else lie. If it is to be a set-off, if it is to be a justification, if it is to plead user or custom, say so; but if it is to go on the merits, that is just what the resolution proposes and just what the amendment tries to avoid.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is fear of the result which excites the opposition. I anticipated as much. All that I ask in the world is that the country may see Administrations side by side and draw their conclusions from comparisons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I do not see him here. He, I presume, would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when Mr. FRYE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent, and is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BOWEN. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. CAMERON. I understand that my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has been transferred to my colleague [Mr. QUAY], who is absent. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore can not vote.

Mr. KENNA. Since announcing my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] I find that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is absent without a pair. I therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bate,	Eustis,	Harris,	Turpie,
Beck,	Faulkner,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Blackburn,	George,	Kenna,	Vest,
Call,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Gray,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—29.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Allison,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Blair,	Farwell,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Davis,	Manderson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—23.

Berry,	Daniel,	Hearst,	Quay,
Blodgett,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Brown,	Frye,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gorman,	Payne,	Stanford.
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the committee be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine suggests that the committee provided for by the resolution be appointed by the Chair. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 4601) to amend the naval record of Nickolas Leuschen, Peter Leuschen, and Loth Possum;

A bill (H. R. 5373) to change the location of a certain alley in the city of Washington;

A bill (H. R. 5617) to provide for the leasing of premises for the Washington city post-office;

A bill (H. R. 8309) to secure for the District of Columbia a compilation of the laws of said District; and

A bill (H. R. 6591) for the relief of S. Dillinger & Sons.

ENROLLMENT OF CIRCUIT-COURT JURISDICTION ACT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 783) to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question in reference to this bill. It purports to be a bill to "correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1875." When the act of March 3, 1887, was up for discussion I called attention to what I then thought and what I still think were certain inconsistencies in it. It became a law, however. Now, what I wish to know of the Senator having charge of this bill, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], is whether this bill, which seems to be entitled "to correct the enrollment of an act" passed a year ago, conforms to the act as passed, and, if so, in what respects? It is merely claimed that the act as passed on the 3d of March, 1887, was incorrectly enrolled and inaccurately published on the statute-book, and, if so, then in what respects was the act incorrectly enrolled or inaccurately published?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Oregon, I will state that the purpose of this bill is solely to conform the text of the act of March 3, 1887, to that of the bill which passed the two Houses of Congress. In the enrollment of the bill in the House of Representatives twenty-five mistakes were made, four of them in spelling, two by changing words, two by omitting the article "a," fifteen in punctuation, and two in the structure of the bill—that is, by changing paragraphs.

As I have stated, the purpose of the bill is solely to conform the act of March 3, 1887, to the text of the bill as it passed the two Houses.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Senator point out in the statute what the mistakes are. He says the statute as published is incorrect. We want to know before we consent to any changes what the mistakes are.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would be somewhat difficult for me to do so from the bill. If the Senator has the law before him I can point them out.

Mr. TELLER. I have got the statute.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the Committee on the Judiciary were very careful to have this bill in form exactly corresponding with the bill of last year as it passed the two Houses of Congress, and we have made no change whatever in it, except to restore the text to the exact form of the bill as it passed the two Houses.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was it incorrectly enrolled?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It was incorrectly enrolled in the other House.

Mr. MITCHELL. By what process has the Senator and the Judiciary Committee arrived at their conclusion as to the mistakes made?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We went to the papers on file in the Secretary's office and compared those papers with the act as it appears in the statutes of the last Congress, and found a number of mistakes that are corrected by the text of the pending bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. The act as enrolled, then, is the same as published in the statute-book?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the act of March 3, 1887, regulating the practice of the Federal courts and the transfer of cases from the State to the Federal courts, has twenty-five mistakes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have stated that there were twenty-five mistakes in the enrollment.

Mr. MITCHELL. And also in the published act?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have already stated in answer to the Senator that the act as published in the Statutes at Large corresponds with the enrolled bill. It was from the enrolled bill that the act was printed in the Statutes at Large. Now, as I have said, the greater number of these mistakes were in punctuation, but there were some four in spelling and two where words were changed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Were there any that changed the law at all in reference to the transfer of cases from State to Federal courts?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, nothing of that. The sole purpose is to restore the text of that act so that it will correspond with the bill passed by the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me we are entitled to know when this bill is brought here what the change is in the statute as published. The statute as published is understood to be the law of the land. Under that the courts have already made various rulings, and rights have been acquired and established under the act, as I know. It has been a subject of immense controversy in the United States courts, and now when it is sought to change it and give it some new interpretation, or to bring in a new bill, I think we are entitled to know exactly what changes are made. I think the Senator should give us line by line, and tell us what the changes are, not in spelling or in orthography or in punctuation, but give us the facts and let us know what is going to be this new law. The other one did not come up to expectation or promise.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that perfectly well, and while it would take some time——

Mr. TELLER. Never mind. This is an important question. We had better take time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The mistakes in the matter of words. If the Senator has the bill before him he will find on page 3, line 50, that the word "if," where it occurs in that line, was enrolled and is printed in the act "of." The next word that was changed was on page 10, line 10. The word "and" was changed to "or."

Mr. MITCHELL. What section is that in?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is on the last page of the bill, section 5. On page 2, line 25, and in lines 26, 27, and 28, the word "controversy" was changed to "controversary."

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I was about to ask the Senator from Iowa whether he would not save time by explaining to gentlemen who care to know the changes made, and call up the bill for passage afterwards. As he knows very well, I expected to occupy the floor this morning, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who wishes to hear me, is going away to-morrow. Therefore, I should be glad to go on now and have the pending bill laid aside.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator having charge of the bill to let it lie over. It is a very important matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If there is objection of that kind, I shall not interpose to prevent the other order of the Senate from proceeding.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to observe that this is a bill relating to a very important matter. The Senate is simply asked to do on the faith of three members of the Judiciary Committee, its chairman [Mr. EDMUNDS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], who carefully compared the bill passed last year, what in every other statute is done on the faith of the clerk of the Enrolling Committee of the House of Representatives or of the Senate, that there is no change in the bill. The person who had charge of the enrollment of this bill in the House made a lot of mistakes in spelling, in punctuation, and in one or two cases in the position of sentences. This bill was so printed, and it covered the Congress of the United States with disgrace when the lawyers of the country came to look at it. Now, this subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate have examined personally in regard to this bill what in the case of every other bill that has passed through Congress would be trusted to the clerk of some committee, and Senators refuse to trust to a careful examination, when in every other case, and when in regard to this bill when it was passed, it was trusted to an enrolling clerk.

Mr. MITCHELL. A word in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. I suggest that the circumstances are entirely different. This act of March 3, 1887, has been on the statute-book now for over a year. The courts have been proceeding under it and have been transferring cases from State to Federal courts under that statute and sending them back from the Federal courts to the State courts under that statute. Adjudications have occurred under it. And yet we are told here to-day by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate that that statute as published to the world, and under which the courts have been operating for one year, has at least twenty-five mistakes; that the act as passed actually by the Congress of the United States, and which received the sanction of the President of the United States, is different from the act which has actually been published in twenty-five particulars. The fact appears by admission all around that that act as enrolled and actually published and promulgated to the courts and the world on the statute book of the country contains twenty-five errors.

Under that statute I say adjudications are being made and have been made, cases have been transferred from State to Federal courts and retransferred from Federal to State courts, and now it is proposed to make these corrections. I assume, of course, that the Senate is willing to trust the Senator from Iowa alone, or the Senator from Mississippi, or the Senator from Vermont who had charge of this bill, and I suppose it is proper the bill should pass just as reported; but what I am trying to get at is, in what essential particular the act as published and under which the courts have been operating for the past year is different from the act as it was actually passed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As I said, I have no disposition to push this bill upon Senators who claim that they can not understand it. I have made exactly the statement that they will find borne out by their examination; but if Senators want time to take up this bill and compare it with the text of the act as printed in the Statutes at Large of the last Congress, I have no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no doubt, as far as I am concerned individually, that the mistakes have occurred just as stated, and that the correction should be made; but I think it is important to the people of this country and to the courts of this country to be advised of the fact that they have been operating under a published law which has twenty-five mistakes in it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. They are advised already by the statement I have made that there are twenty-five mistakes, the larger number of them consisting in punctuation; but if the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Colorado want time to compare the text of this bill with the language as it is published in the Statutes at Large, of the last Congress, I shall not object. I am perfectly willing that they shall be entirely satisfied.

Mr. STEWART. I should like a little time. Besides, I would suggest that there is in the original bill a very ambiguous clause about which the courts are very much divided, and I want to see whether that is remedied by the corrections in this bill or whether the bill may not be amended to avoid the difficulty.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Of course, the Senator from Nevada can satisfy himself by the comparison. It was not the purpose of the Committee on the Judiciary to involve any new matter in this bill in any respect whatever, but simply, as I have already stated, to cause it to be conformed to the text of the bill as it passed the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. TELLER. What we want to find out and what we are entitled to find out is whether this is new legislation in effect. The bill as it has gone on the statute-book must be presumed to be the law of the land. Under that the courts have settled rights of vast magnitude.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Colorado need not importune me any farther. I have already said that if he wants time to compare the text of this bill with the text of the act of March 3, 1887, I have no objection to allowing the bill to go over in order that he may make that comparison. What more does he want?

Mr. BECK. I hope that will be done.

Mr. TELLER. I have a word to say. At the last session when this bill was up we were told by the Judiciary Committee that it practically did not change the practice in the United States courts with reference to the transfer of cases. Every United States court has been in confusion from that day to this over the question; and now if changing the punctuation, as it very likely does, changes the present interpretation or construction of the statute, we are entitled to know it. That is all I want to know.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have already said the Senator shall have abundant time to ascertain that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa consenting, the bill goes over until to-morrow.

NOTES AND COIN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. BECK. I now ask that the bill on which I desire to address the Senate be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator indicate the bill he desires to speak upon?

Mr. BECK. Senate bill No. 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 8) to provide for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and the issue of coin certificates in lieu of gold and silver certificates, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill will be regarded as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, let the bill be read at length and published in the RECORD. I may have occasion to quote parts of it in the course of my remarks.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to provide for the retirement of United States legal-tender and national-bank notes of small denominations, and the issue of coin certificates in lieu of gold and silver certificates, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no United States note shall be issued of a denomination less than $10 nor more than $500, and the denominations higher than $50 shall not exceed in value one-fourth of the value of the total amount outstanding at any time, and not more than one-fourth in value of the amount of circulation issued to national banks outstanding at any time shall be of a less denomination than $10, and no national-bank note hereafter issued shall be of a higher denomination than $100. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to make the changes in the denominations of the legal-tender notes and national-bank notes needed to comply with the provisions of this act, whenever said notes are received at the Treasury for any purpose.

SEC. 2. That in all issues of certificates hereafter, coin certificates shall be substituted for silver certificates and gold certificates, wherever either is authorized to be issued under existing laws; and all gold and silver certificates now outstanding shall be retired, when they are received for any purpose at the Treasury or any subtreasury of the United States, and coin certificates of the denominations hereby provided for, issued in their stead; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue coin certificates in such denominations, not exceeding $20, as he sees fit, on all the surplus gold and silver coin and gold bullion held at any time by the United States in excess of $100,000,000 of gold coin, and pay out the same in discharge of all the obligations of the United States, except such as have been heretofore made payable expressly in gold and silver coin.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons may deposit gold or silver coin of the United States in the sum of $10 or any multiple thereof, with the Treasurer of the United States, or with any assistant treasurer, at any United States subtreasury, and demand coin certificates of like amount therefor. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer of the United States, upon the receipt of said money or of any original certificate of deposit issued by the United States assistant treasurer at any United States subtreasury, stating that there has been deposited therein by any person or corporation, gold coin or standard silver dollars of the United States in the sum of $10 or any multiple thereof, to order payment of a like amount in coin certificates, at the counter of any United States depository designated by the depositor, in such denominations as he may request in writing, of not less than $1 or not more than $500, subject to the limitations hereinafter provided, which shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin, at the option of the United States; and all the certificates hereby authorized, when received at the Treasury in any form or for any purpose, shall be reissued, or new certificates of the same denomination substituted for such as are returned because of being mutilated or defaced, as now provided by law in regard to the notes of the United States. No coin certificates shall be issued of a denomination greater than $500, and at least two-thirds in value of such certificates outstanding at any time shall be of denominations not exceeding $50.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a sufficient number of coin certificates of the various denominations hereby authorized, to be prepared and distributed among the United States depositories, to enable them to comply with the provisions of this act; and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable him to prepare and distribute said certificates.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect ninety days after its passage, except as to the $50,000 appropriated in section 4; and as to that appropriation, it shall take effect on the passage of this act, and said sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. BECK. It is a well-known fact that the former policy of this country was to maintain both its gold and silver coin at par with each other, and as full legal tender in payment of all obligations. Before 1873 there was no distinction made between the metals when coined. The United States had always treated them both alike. My proposition now is to restore that equality, by issuing certificates payable in coin on the deposit of either gold or silver coin in the Treasury or in any subtreasury of the United States, and that the right shall be given to any man who may demand it to obtain coin certificates thereon, the option remaining with the Government to redeem the certificates in whatever coin it may be most convenient for us to pay when redemption is demanded. Believing that until that is done we will have constant troubles about different kinds of currency; bondholders and bankers contending, as they have always done, that silver and the certificates based on it are only subsidiary and token money, I urge the passage of this bill

I offered the substance of it as an amendment to an appropriation bill in the last Congress; it was properly ruled out of order as being legislation on an appropriation bill; therefore I offered it as an independent measure now and had it referred to the Committee on Finance. On last Tuesday a bare majority of that committee reported against it. I gave notice when the report was made that I would call it up to-day and endeavor to push it to a vote. Whether I can or not in the face of another bill, which is in charge of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], may be doubtful. After that notice was given I took part in a discussion on the so-called dependent pension bill, in which I thought it was proper for me to state my reasons for opposing the passage of a measure which involved hundreds of millions of dollars and perhaps increased taxation for forty years; and in giving my objections to many of the provisions of it in the course of that speech—for I was led into it by interrogatories—I presented to the Senate the questions of taxation which would have to be considered in connection with it. I stated the results that were growing out of our present tariff system by the development of trusts and combinations, when competition was excluded by law, as I thought fairly, going from one proposition to another, following first the questions asked by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], then questions asked by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], and then those asked by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. The debate took quite a wide range. Matters growing out of that debate will require my attention for awhile before I call attention to the bill I have now laid before the Senate, therefore Senators must bear with me while I discuss matters somewhat foreign to the measure I specially desire to advocate.

While showing in my speech on the pension bill how we were handicapped in the trade of the world by the cheap silver bullion coined in India I said among other things that the act demonetizing silver in 1873 was passed so secretly that even the President and several other distinguished gentlemen whom I named knew nothing about it. I will read now what I then said:

And that was all said to be done in order to protect the American laborer; he was told that he should accept payment in nothing but gold coin, while the poor, ignorant people of India were willing to take silver. What brought about this condition of things? The Senator from Ohio is more responsible for it than anybody else. The record shows it. When Congress undertook to strike down our silver coinage at the dictation of England, and when Germany and England and the United States combined and struck it down secretly, so secretly that General Grant, who was then President, did not know it, though he signed the bill; Mr. Blaine, the then Speaker of the House, did not know it; Mr. Garfield did not know it; Mr. KELLEY, who had charge of the bill, did not know it—not one of the Argus-eyed reporters found it out. He is responsible for it. Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, was chairman of the conference that settled it on the part of the House, and Mr. SHERMAN was chairman on the part of the Senate. They knew it.

These remarks seem to have offended the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Before entering on the discussion of that let me get all the questions I propose to notice now before the Senate. A resolution was introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] some time ago bearing upon the silver question, which, after he addressed the Senate, was laid over at my request, because I announced then that I desired to be heard in regard to it. I propose to speak to that resolution also at this time. All of these matters are pertinent to and bear upon each other. Before speaking of the controversy between the Senator from Ohio and myself I will ask that Senate joint resolution No. 30, introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] January 11, entitled "Joint resolution relating to international coinage," may be read and be considered as pending.

It reads as follows:

Whereas unsuccessful efforts have, on several occasions, been made by the United States to secure the co-operation of European governments in establishing such a fixed ratio of value between the precious metals as would permit their free coinage and circulation in the commercial countries of the world; and

Whereas the President of the United States, under authority conferred upon him by acts of Congress, recently designated Mr. Edward Atkinson, a citizen of the United States, to visit commercial centers of Europe in order to ascertain the feasibility of establishing by international arrangements a common ratio of value between gold and silver, who, after making the investigation required by his appointment, reported among other conclusions the following:

"First. There is no prospect of any change in the present monetary system of the European states which can modify or influence the financial policy of the United States at the present time.

"Second. There are no indications of any change in the policy of the financial authorities of the several states visited by me which warrant any expectation that the subject of a bimetallic treaty for a common legal tender coupled with the free coinage of silver will be seriously considered at the present time by them:" Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no further effort can properly be made by the United States to obtain the co-operation of European governments in establishing a common ratio of value between silver and gold as money, and the policy of the United States in the coinage of the precious metals should not be influenced by the action, present or prospective, of any foreign government or governments in reference to the relative values of gold and silver as money.

The Senator left out a very important part of the report of Mr. Atkinson in his recital, namely, his third conclusion, in which he says:

There is no indication that the subject of bimetallism has received any intelligent or material consideration outside of a small circle in each country named as a probable or possible remedy for the existence of existing depression in trade.

I deny that the facts stated in that conclusion are true, and propose to give my reasons for saying so.

Not desiring to interrupt the business of the Senate, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] held the floor at the time when the Senator from Ohio responded to what I said in regard to the secrecy with which the act of 1873 was passed, I announced when his speech was concluded that I would when this bill was up, or at an early day, give to the Senate the reasons I had for making the statement I did in regard to the act of 1873 demonetizing silver being passed through so secretly that the gentlemen I named did not know it. The Senator from Ohio, after quoting what I said, proceeded to remark:

Mr. President, I would not even have regarded this as worthy of notice, as I knew the Senator from Kentucky was under some excitement, but that he uses the word "secretly," intimates that this was done entirely under cover, by some pretense or other, and that I was responsible, selecting me although I had had no connection with the debate in regard to this pension bill.

The Senator from Ohio forgets that while I was discussing questions with the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from New Hampshire, he not only took part in that debate, but for a column or two, as the RECORD will show, endeavored to deny very many of the statements I had made, how successfully it is not for me to say. The first suggestion he made was this:

If trusts only arise out of the tariff, how comes it that there are whisky trusts and some other trusts of that kind in this country, the most formidable and horrible in the country?

And he followed it up by denying that the tariff had anything to do with trusts or that any protected industries had formed trusts; and when I read from authentic reports, as I considered them relative to trusts, in regard to steel rails, copper, sugar-refineries, and other matters, he still continued to deny the truth of what I said. The RECORD shows that he was taking a very prominent part in that debate, notwithstanding he said he had nothing whatever to do with it. Coming to the point at issue between us, I said silver was demonetized secretly, and that the President did not know it; that the Speaker of the House did not know it, and that the distinguished gentlemen I named did not know it. When I prove that to be true, it is all that it is needed for me to prove in order to justify the remark I made. When the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] denied what I had said, I stated that I would read, as I shall now do, what Judge KELLEY, who was the chairman in charge of the bill at the first session, said in regard to it. He had advocated some change in the coinage at a former session of Congress. He had discovered that he was wrong, and was not willing to support the measure. When he afterwards stated his position on the floor of the House of Representatives in regard to it he said—I quote from his speech:

In 1872, when I made the remarks which were cited by those gentlemen, and which have been frequently quoted in both Houses, and always with an air as much as to say that to convict this man of the crime of having been instructed by the logic of events would forever settle this momentous question—

He had evidently changed his opinion in regard to it before its passage. He adds—we were not using coin, and no gentleman in either House appears to have appreciated the scope and magnitude of the silver question or to have given it special study. Hence the bill—and I wish gentlemen to know what that bill was; it was a bill to reorganize the mints, not to revise the coin money of the country, but to reorganize the mints, and it was passed without allusion in debate to the question of the retention or abandonment of the standard silver dollar. The then Speaker of the House, now a distinguished member of the Senate, and Hon. Mr. VOORHEES, of Indiana, who is also a member of that body, were then members of this House, and during the last Congress this colloquy occurred between them. It was, I think, denied by Mr. VOORHEES that members of the House knew that the bill proposed to demonetize the silver dollar, and to sustain his view he said to the ex-Speaker: "Did you know it, sir?" "No," said Senator Blaine, "did you?" "No," replied Senator VOORHEES.

I was chairman of the committee that reported the original bill, and I aver on my honor that I did not know the fact that it proposed to drop the standard dollar, and did not learn that it had done it for eighteen months after the passage of the substitution offered by Mr. Hooper, when I disputed the fact. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield], who now leads this side of the House, was then, as now, an attentive and already a distinguished member of the House; yet when in joint debate before the people of Ohio in October, 1877, the question arose as to who was responsible for its demonetization, he frankly said he did not know that such a provision was in the bill when it passed the House. I state this the more freely in his absence because I informed him that I intended to do so; and he replied, "It is the case; I did make that statement, and it is true."

Nor did the President who signed the bill know that it abolished legal-tender standard silver dollars, for in his letter to Mr. Cowdrey of October 6, 1873, cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Warner], he said:

"Silver will gradually take the place of this currency, and, further, will become the standard of values, which will be hoarded in a small way. I estimate that this will consume from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 in time of this species of our circulating medium. * * * I confess to a desire to see a limited hoarding of money. It insures a firm foundation in time of need. But I want to see the hoarding of something that has a standard value the world over. Silver has this."

The last clause was the language of President Grant writing to a friend nearly nine months after he had signed the bill. Therefore I insist that I have even now made good every word I said, through the mouth of Mr. KELLEY, and have shown that Mr. Blaine did not know of the passage of the bill, that General Grant did not know it, Mr. Garfield did not know it, and Mr. KELLEY did not know it, and that not one of the Argus-eyed reporters found it out. That is true, as the papers that they reported for every day will show. I have gone to the files in Mr. Spofford's office and examined them, and not one of them referred to it, not one of them suspected it, not one of them alluded to it, that I could discover.

But I was saved a great deal of trouble by a witness that I knew nothing about, or at least did not think of at the time, who was a member of the Senate then. I refer to the very intelligent Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], whose State was more interested than any other; he was here vigilant, attentive, in looking after the interests of his people. He was in the Senate when that bill of 1873 passed, and after the Senator from Ohio found fault with the fact that I said it was done so secretly that it was not known by any of the leading gentlemen I named, and, as I insist, is proved by Mr. KELLEY, the Senator from Nevada rose in his place in this body the other day in the presence of the Senator from Ohio, and, after quoting what the Senator from Ohio had said about my remarks, proceeded to remark:

I was in the Senate at the time that bill was passed, and in the course of his remarks the Senator from Ohio alluded to that fact. I think it would be well for every member of Congress if he could plead that he was entirely ignorant of that transaction. I do not believe that it is to the credit of any man to have knowingly done what was then done.

And again he said:

In view of this, and notwithstanding the enormous contraction which was necessary, at the time the rebellion failed and peace was declared, to spread the currency then existing all over the country, the South as well as the North; notwithstanding the enormous contraction subsequently required in reaching specie payments; notwithstanding we had agreed to pay the bonds in coin, the bondholders were not satisfied; they demanded payment in gold alone. Is it possible that any Senator who ever occupied a seat in this Chamber would have openly declared that it was his purpose to take from the people the right to pay these bonds in silver as well as gold? Will any Senator say that the bondholder was not sufficiently favored by increasing the value of his bonds more than 50 per cent. by the acts which had been passed before the world was robbed of more than half of its circulating medium by the demonetization of silver? Is it possible that any Senator now lives who will attempt to justify the act of February 12, 1873? I feel that the fact that I was in this Chamber when that act passed requires from me an apology.

Let the Senator from Ohio answer the Senator from Nevada, if he can. The language used by that Senator is infinitely stronger and reflects with far greater severity on the men who passed that bill than anything I said, so that I feel relieved from all responsibility. Still I think I was justified the other day when, not finding the Senator in his seat, I said:

I will say, however, so that the Senator from Ohio can see it in the RECORD, that after I read to him the speeches of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], in regard to how that act was doctored, and the speech of the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], and the speech made by Mr. Howe in the Senate, in which he said—I will only read two lines: "Mr. President, I do not regard the demonetization of silver as an attempt to wrench from the people more than they agreed to pay. That is not the crime of which I accuse the act of 1873. I charge it with guilt compared with which the robbery of two hundred millions is venial"—

Mr. Howe was a member of the Senate at the time the act was passed—and after I read to him what has been said by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and other gentlemen, I think he will be content to say that my expressions were very mild in regard to the secrecy with which that measure was pushed through Congress.

Returning to the speech of the Senator from Nevada, he said:

As to the history of the bill of which I have been speaking, I think I am safe in saying that the Senate passed it in ignorance of its contents or effect; that nobody knew its effect; that nobody knew that one-half of the world's money was to be put out of existence; that the creditor class was to be vastly benefited; that the prosperity of the world was to be checked by the measure which the Senator from Ohio declared was "debated for three long sessions, considered line by line, and precept by precept."

There was at that time in the civilized world twenty-five thousand millions of indebtedness, and that indebtedness was by contract payable in either gold or silver, and I do not believe that any Senator here thought he was becoming a party to a new contract by which that vast sum should be paid in gold alone.

Again the Senator from Nevada said:

I have examined this discussion and there was no debate in regard to the discontinuance of the coinage of the silver dollar. The bill was an elaborate one to codify the mint laws. There was no discussion whatever in regard to coins of any kind. The discussion was as to other matters, the salaries of officers, etc.

Again he said:

If the daylight of which the Senator from Ohio speaks had been let in upon the designs of the bondholders of Europe and America, the silver dollar would never have been demonetized. No man in either House of Congress would have sought the bad eminence which he would have attained by voting for the act of February 12, 1873.

The Senator from Nevada also showed that two years afterwards President Grant sent a special message to Congress, in January, 1875, on the day he signed the specie resumption act, which proved that he was utterly ignorant of the fact that silver had been demonetized by the act of 1873. Listen to his recommendation two years after the passage of the bill in question:

In fact, to carry out the first section of the act, another mint becomes necessary. With the present facilities for coinage it would take a period probably beyond that fixed by law for final specie resumption to coin the silver necessary to transact the business of the country.

There are now smelting furnaces for extracting the silver and gold from the ores brought from the mountain territories in Chicago, St. Louis, and Omaha—three in the former city—and as much of the change required will be wanted in the Mississippi Valley States, and as the metals to be coined come from west of those States, and, as I understand, the charges for transportation of bullion from either of the cities named to the mint in Philadelphia, or to New York City, amount to $4 for each $1,000 worth, with an equal expense for transportation back, it would seem a fair argument in favor of adopting one or more of those cities as the place or places for the establishment of new coining facilities.

The increased mints were supposed to be necessary to coin silver. Then the Senator from Nevada very properly asked:

Did the Executive understand when he made this recommendation that silver had been demonetized? Did the light of day in which the Senator from Ohio alleges the bill was passed reach and illuminate the Executive Mansion?

I might well rest my defense on the speech made by a Republican Senator representing the State of Nevada, whose silver interests were greater and whose people had more at stake in 1873 than those of any other State; but I said that I would refer to other authorities. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], a very distinguished member of this body, and formerly a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, made a very elaborate speech upon the subject in 1878, three or four years after the bill was passed. Mr. ALLISON said, among other things:

But when the secret history of this bill of 1873 comes to be told, it will disclose the fact that the House of Representatives intended to coin both gold and silver, and intended to place both metals upon the French relation instead of on our own, which was the true scientific position with reference to this subject in 1873, but that the bill afterward was doctored, if I may use that term, and I use it in no offensive sense, of course——

Mr. Sargent interrupted him, and asked him what he meant by the word "doctored."

Mr. ALLISON said:

I said I used the word in no offensive sense. It was changed after discussion, and the dollar of 420 grains was substituted for it. I have here, if the Senator from California doubts what I say, the report of Mr. Ruggles.

And, by the way, Mr. Ruggles cuts a very important figure in this matter, as I will show before we get through with it. He was the exponent of the views of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York. Mr. ALLISON insists that the original intention of the promoters of the bill of 1873 was that both gold and silver should be coined again. I doubt that. I read again from the Senator from Iowa, which answers another part of the speech of the Senator from Ohio, who says silver never cut any figure in our coinage:

I can not understand why it is that this objection has been made so strenuously and so continuously. We had nothing but a silver currency until 1834 practically. The debts of the Revolution and the debts of the war of 1812 were paid almost exclusively in silver coin, because we overvalued silver and undervalued gold; the latter disappeared and left us only silver. We not only made our own silver dollars and half-dollars and all fractional silver a full legal tender, but we made all the silver coins then current in the world's commerce legal tender in our country. From 1792 up to 1827, and again by the legislation of 1834, silver coins of Mexico and the South American states and of France and Spain were made a full legal tender in this country, and some of them continued to be a full legal tender until 1857. Therefore for nearly seventy years of our country's history we not only had a legal tender of our own silver, but the silver of other nations was a full legal tender in our country.

Yet Senators say silver has played but an insignificant part in the great work of distributing the products of our country, and in our exchanges; and they triumphantly say there were only eight millions of silver dollars coined at our mint from 1792 to 1873. We had of full-coined silver money more than a hundred millions coined at our mint between those periods, I think $140,000,000, and we had all the silver of the world made legal tender in addition. Mr. Moore, the Director of the Mint at Philadelphia, stated in his report of 1832 that there were only $500,000 of gold money in the United States, and that all the rest was silver. Yet we have the insignificant pretense made here day by day that silver has never played a prominent part in the history of our money.

I will now refer to what Senator Howe, who was in the Senate at the time, said in regard to it and repeated over and over again in the course of his speech. He was then Senator from Wisconsin, afterwards Postmaster-General, and a member of the commission that was subsequently sent to Europe to negotiate in regard to coinage.

Sir, we have no authority for saying that 412½ grains of silver are worth intrinsically less than 25.8 grains of gold.

This speech was made in 1878, when the remonetization act was being discussed.

The former, I grant, brings less in the English and in the German markets than the latter, because England and Germany both proscribe silver and patronize gold. The silver brings less in our own markets. We have transmuted both into commodities, and accordingly we value both as we value our wheat, according to what they will bring in other markets. We can not regulate the price of either metal in foreign markets; we can regulate the price of both in our own markets. Restore both to the rank of money, and while they remain money they will have precisely the same authority. If you wish to send either abroad it will go not as money but as a commodity, and you will always naturally send whichever is most capable in the market to which you remit.

Mr. President, I do not regard the demonetization of silver as an attempt to wrench from the people more than they agreed to pay. That is not the crime of which I accuse the act of 1873. I charge it with guilt compared with which the robbery of two hundred millions is venial.

* * * * * * *

The stock of coin in the whole western world was estimated in 1870 at $3,700,000,000. Of that sum $1,275,000,000 were estimated to be in silver.

About that time the conspiracy seems to have been formed to withdraw from that circulation the silver in it; that is, nearly one-third of the whole stock. But when you expel one dollar of coin from the circulating medium you compel the retirement of all bank issues based upon it, and you shrink the value of commodities measured by it.

I shall not detain the Senate by narrating the growth of this conspiracy. A large part of Europe is already in it. France, it is said, joined it since this debate commenced. The practical question before us is, shall the United States become a party to it? For one, I decline.

Sir, this is not contraction; this is strangulation. This is not a question of heaping burdens upon the labor and enterprise of the people. It is an attempt to paralyze that labor and that enterprise. It is not a proposition to add 10 per cent. to the obligation of the public debt. It is a deliberate effort to blast 33 per cent. of the ability of the people to pay the debt.

I might add other quotations from him even stronger than those I have read, but I do not care to take the time. I will read this, however:

But after all we are asked, why not put into the silver dollar the present commodity value of the gold dollar?

That has long been one of the favorite cries of the Senator from Ohio, both as Secretary of the Treasury and as a Senator in Congress, and his followers have continued to repeat the cry.

I answer, for many and most commanding reasons. First, debts, public and private, are contracted aggregating thousands of millions. Each dollar is payable by 412½ grains of silver. You have no right to compel the delivery of 440 or 454 grains for each dollar. That is filching; only a few hundred millions, to be sure, but it is filching.

Secondly. Putting in that quantity of silver would make the measure a felo de se. The great object I aim at is to restore silver to that standard by which you measure the labor and the products of the world and to that medium by which you exchange the products of the world, and therefore I ask you to coin it into money once more. You say—yes, if you are allowed to put more into a dollar than can be procured for a dollar. Who does not see that silver can not be coined upon such terms? Daily we are told by the opponents of the bill that when the coinage act of 1873 was passed silver dollars were not coined because 412½ grains could not be afforded for a dollar. This nation and other nations denounced silver as money, and it fell in the market. Now you generously offer to restore it at 454 grains to the dollar. When silver was money we could not get 412½ grains for a dollar in gold; we demonetized it; we can now buy, you say, 454 grains for a gold dollar.

So you will consent to remonetize silver at that rate? Suppose once more all existing contracts for dollars were, instead, contracts for so many bushels of grain; that grain had in 1873 been recognized by commercial nations to include both barley and wheat, and both had commanded substantially the same price in the markets. Suppose then we had degrainetized barley; had enacted that it should not be deliverable on grain contracts. Of course the demand for barley would thereby greatly diminish; its price would decline. As the demand for wheat would correspondingly increase, its price would rise. Suppose we had watched the rise of wheat and the fall of barley until two bushels of the latter would only buy one of the former. Suppose there came to us then, as there would be sure to come, a cry like that we hear now: "The world can not produce the wheat to fill our grain contracts; barley is abundant, and for it there is little use. In the name of mercy regrainetize barley." Can any one who knows the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance conceive that he would respond to such a demand, "Yes, we will permit you to deliver barley for grain once more, provided you will deliver two bushels for one?"

No one has ever answered in a plainer or clearer way the objection of the Senator from Ohio that there is not now silver enough put into the standard silver dollar. It is the dollar which we and all our creditors agreed should be the dollar in all our obligations. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], the present President of the Senate, also made a speech. It will be seen that I am not alone in speaking of the act of 1873 having been secretly passed. The Senator from Kansas on this floor on the 15th of February, 1878, said:

But there is strong evidence that the destruction of the legal-tender power of silver was the culmination of a scheme long entertained by the holders of the public debt of this country, devised by them for the purpose of appreciating the value of their investments, regardless of the ruin and desolation which it would bring upon the laboring and productive classes of the nation.

Have I said anything stronger than that?

In a report made to the Senate June 9, 1868, to accompany a "bill in relation to the coinage of gold and silver," Mr. Sherman, now Secretary of the Treasury, said:

"The single standard of gold is an American idea, yielded reluctantly by France and other countries where silver is the chief standard of value."

Mr. INGALLS proceeds:

No statement emanating from authority so respectable could well be more devoid of truth. The original American idea was a single standard of silver. Gold was an innovation, and in my judgment a grave mistake. The assertion of Senator SHERMAN that the single gold standard was an "American idea" is so singularly incorrect that it seems almost like a premeditated preliminary to the fatal error of 1873.

There were other things said by that Senator, and said very well, that I have not time to read. There is one thing that perhaps I ought to read for his benefit now, which I hope when some other issues come up he will bear in mind. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] said:

We cannot disguise the truth that we are on the verge of an impending revolution.

THE OLD ISSUES ARE DEAD.

The people are arraying themselves upon one side or the other of a portentous contest. On one side is capital, formidably intrenched in privilege, arrogant from continued triumph, conservative, tenacious of old theories, demanding new concessions, enriched by domestic levy and foreign commerce, and struggling to adjust all values to its own standard. On the other is labor, asking for employment, striving to develop domestic industries, battling with the forces of nature, and subduing the wilderness; labor, starving and sullen in cities, resolutely determined to overthrow a system under which the rich are growing richer and the poor are growing poorer; a system which gives to a Vanderbilt the possession of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice and condemns the poor to a poverty which has no refuge from starvation but the prison or the grave.

He goes on to show that the remonetization of silver was an indispensable prerequisite to the restoration of the prosperity of the country, and he was right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend, that the Chair may lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 977.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, so that the Senator from Kentucky may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be informally laid aside. The Chair hears no objection. The bill of the Senator from Kentucky remains before the Senate, on which he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BECK. I thank the Senate for its courtesy.

A few more words which may well be considered in the struggle in regard to taxation that is coming in the near future. I read from the Senator from Kansas:

If the bonds of this Government—

He had shown that the holders were all demanding that they should be paid in gold alone, although, according to the contract, silver was by law an equal factor with gold in their payment.

If the bonds of this Government are paid they will be paid by the labor of the country, and not by its capital. They are exempt from taxation and bear none of the burdens of society.

The alliance between the West and the South upon all matters affecting their material welfare hereafter is inevitable. Their interests are mutual and identical. With the removal of the causes of political dissension that have so long separated them, they must coalesce, and united they will be invincible. The valleys of the Mississippi and Missouri, with their tributaries, form an empire that must have a homogeneous population and a common destiny from the Yellowstone to the Gulf. These great communities have been alienated by factions that have estranged them only to prey upon them and to maintain political supremacy by their separation. Unfriendly legislation has imposed intolerable burdens upon their energies; invidious discriminations have been made against their products; unjust tariffs have repressed their industries.

I come now to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. The Senator from Indiana made a great speech on that occasion. The Senator from Ohio will perhaps have something to say about his remarks. Senator VOORHEES said:

The silver dollar is peculiarly the laboring-man's dollar, as far as he may desire specie. When specie payments were authorized before the war it was the favorite currency with the people, and it will be so again whenever a general circulation of coin is obtained, if that shall ever happen. Throughout all the financial panics that have assailed this country no man has been bold enough to raise his hand to strike it down; no man has ever dared to whisper of a contemplated assault upon it; and when the hour of its danger and destruction drew nigh, when the 12th day of February, 1873, approached, the day of doom to the American dollar, the dollar of our fathers, how silent was the work of the enemy! Not a sound, not a word, no note of warning to the American people that their favorite coin was about to be destroyed as money; that the greatest financial revolution of modern times was in contemplation and about to be accomplished against their highest and dearest rights! The tax-payers of the United States were no more notified or consulted on this momentous measure than the slaves on a southern plantation before the war, when their master made up his mind to increase their task or to change them from a corn to a cotton field. Never since the foundation of this Government has a law of such vital and tremendous import, or indeed of any importance at all, crawled into our statute-books so furtively and so noiselessly as this. Its enactment there was as completely unknown to the people, and indeed to four-fifths of Congress itself, as the presence of a burglar in a house at midnight is to its sleeping inmates.

I believe he was equally as forcible in his expressions as the Senator from Nevada was the other day, though not as personal:

This was rendered possible partly because the clandestine movement was so utterly unexpected, and partly from the nature of the bill in which it occurred. The silver dollar of American history was demonetized in an act entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States." The avowed and ostensible purpose of this act is set forth by Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint, in his recent work on Money and Legal Tender.

I might read from the speeches of other Senators; but the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] has broad shoulders, and the Senator from Ohio may, perhaps, like to make some complementary remarks in regard to the way he talked about the act of 1873. The Senator from Texas said:

The bankers, capitalists, bondholders, and syndicates of England and Germany and the other European states which have followed their lead in demonetizing silver, and who mainly hold and own or control the enormous indebtedness due by all the world to these great creditor nations, were the movers and prompters and promoters of the policy of degrading and demonetizing silver, of course for the purpose of magnifying and increasing the value and purchasing power of the gold which they exacted from debtors. The passage of the act of February 12, 1873, taking away the right of free coinage of silver, and the adoption of the Revised Statutes in June, 1874, by the Congress of the United States, taking away the legal-tender quality from the silver dollar, completed the demonetization of silver in this country and established the gold standard. No greater outrage was ever perpetrated under the forms of law than these enactments which demonetized silver.

The first, so artfully embodied in a long bill of sixty-seven sections, that General Grant, then President, who approved the bill, did not know of it, as is shown by his well-known letter to Mr. Cowdrey, written seven months afterward, which I will not read here because every Senator has seen it, and the last contained in the Revised Statutes, which were enacted in bulk upon the assurance of the revising committee that no new matter had been inserted. The subject had not been discussed before the people or by the press, had not been debated in Congress, had not been considered by the country, and the people, as well as the President who approved the bill, were utterly ignorant of what had been done for many months afterward. Had the people been aroused to a knowledge of the fact in time this effort to despoil them would have been overwhelmed with defeat. When England demonetized silver the American silver dollar was worth 103 cents in gold.

When Germany demonetized silver in 1871 the same dollar outvalued gold the same per cent., and when silver was fraudulently and surreptitiously demonetized in the United States in 1873 it outvalued gold to about the same extent. It was not demonetized because it was a cheap dollar or a dishonest dollar, as is alleged against it now, for it was worth more than gold. The great creditor nations, England and Germany, with the lesser European states which joined them in their policy, demonetized silver on a cold calculation that by destroying one-half of the world's money the other half would be greatly increased in value, and the creditor section of this Union, where the great national and other banks are, where the Government and other bonds, State, railway, municipal, and corporation, and four-fifths of the gold coin and other active banking capital of this country are found, demonetized silver in the United States in 1873 on exactly the same sort of calculation.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] took part in the controversy. I have skipped the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who were not very much milder in their form of expression than the others. I want to show the Senator from Ohio that my form of expression was mild compared with what several other Senators had said. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] said:

The creditor class, always powerful in affairs of state, controlled the legislation as well as the financial affairs of the world. The destruction of one-half of the money of the world would enhance the value of all of these securities. Is it very strange that the common people of all nations, deeply absorbed in their efforts to pay their interest and escape from their debts, did not interfere in the attempt to lessen all value except that of gold? Thus the demonetization in Germany did not call from that class a protest any more than the act of 1873 did from the people of the United States, who were busy in trying to save something from the wreck produced by overspeculation and overcredits, and were suffering from stagnation in business produced by a want of real money to carry on the legitimate business of the country and did not discover that silver was demonetized until months after it was done.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] was pretty emphatic in his remarks in regard to it. But perhaps I have read enough.

Mr. President, I submit that if there is any weight in human testimony and the testimony of Senators of the highest character, neither they nor the American people knew that silver coin was stricken down as it was by the act of 1873; and while the Senator from Ohio read what had been said in public and private reports—and he may read all sorts of reports as to how often the bills were printed, how many committees they were referred to, and what was done about them—he has failed to show, and he will always fail to show, that the American people or their representatives in either House knew that silver was stricken down by the act of 1873, or that any debate occurred on the bill that was passed to call their attention to it; the records will not enable him to do it. The statement of the Senator from Nevada on this floor the other day settles that. I have turned to the record. I was a member of the other House at that time.

I can prove, I think, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who was chairman of my Committee on Ways and Means at that time, that I was an ordinarily vigilant member in regard to public affairs. I did not know it, and never suspected it, and I have conversed with Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, who was then in the House, and he told me, and he has said over and over again in the House and elsewhere, that he had no suspicion that it was done. He has never been suspected of lack of vigilance. Of course it was known that the Comptroller of the Currency, the Director of the Mint, and their allies, foreign and domestic, were scheming to appreciate the value of the bonds, and of course the committee in Congress and those who were watching these questions knew that schemes for the demonetization of silver had been presented more than once, but had never met with any favor among the representatives of the people.

The record shows that early in April, 1872, the bill had been made a special order from day to day. Mr. Potter, of New York, was a member of the committee. The record shows that, while the coinage provisions were contained in the fifteenth and sixteenth sections, the House had only reached the ninth section when Mr. Potter developed the fact that there was a proposition in the bill, and there would be an effort to strike down silver coinage. As I said, the bill was the special order from day to day, yet as soon as Mr. Potter developed that fact, although he said he believed in gold and gold alone as the unit or standard of value, yet he was opposed to making any change in our coinage at that time, as the attention of the country had not been called to it, the House dropped even the consideration of the bill any further, and it lost its place. It never was called up from the 9th of April until the 27th of May, 1872. Both Houses of Congress had before that day agreed to adjourn on the 29th of May. Mr. Potter, of New York, had gone home. He was the member on the Democratic side who was watching it. He was on the committee and had avowed that he would not allow it to pass. Mr. Hooper, of Massachusetts, in Mr. Potter's absence, offered what he said was a substitute for the bill, and not the objectionable bill that Mr. Potter had advised against, though it turned out, as Mr. SHERMAN now proves, that his statement was untrue. Mr. Hooper came to Mr. Kerr, of Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, myself, and others, and he assured all of us, as Mr. HOLMAN will tell any one, and as I know, that his substitute was simply a bill regulating mints. Mr. Brooks was not willing to believe him. He said his colleague from New York, Mr. Potter, was gone. Here is the record. It is all recorded in less than half a page, as you will observe, in the Congressional Globe, part 5, second session Forty-second Congress.

Let it be remembered that this occurred within forty-eight hours of the final adjournment of the House for the session when motions to suspend the rules were in order, and everybody was trying to get bills through on suspension, Mr. Hooper tried to suspend the rules and pass the bill without reading it. That was objected to. Finally it was ordered to be read, and the Clerk "began reading it." That is all the record shows. Whether it was read in full or not, I do not care to say. Those who were there with whom I have conversed do not believe it was. But I care nothing about that. We all heard, or are presumed to have heard, an important bill read here half an hour ago in regard to the courts, and there was not a man in this Senate, unless the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] who knows what it meant. I venture to assert that there are not five Senators who can tell what that bill was that was read a half hour ago. Therefore I say I do not care whether the bill was read in the then confusion of the House or not. The record shows that Mr. Brooks said:

My colleague from Westchester district [Mr. Potter] stated the other day that this bill provided for the recoinage of more or less of the small currency of the country and the creation of a new currency.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is not the case with the bill as it now stands.—Congressional Globe, 1871–'72, part 5, page 3883.

That satisfied Mr. Brooks and corresponded with what Mr. Hooper had told many of us privately. Mr. Kerr was still partly dissatisfied, and Mr. HOLMAN, at his request as I recollect it, put the question to Mr. Hooper, who was standing in front of the desk:

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is taken upon suspending the rules and passing the bill, I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will explain the lead-
